> "That he (defendant) cannot prove said facts by any other witness. That he can procure the attendance of said witness, Len Taylor, at the next jury session of this court. That said testimony is material to defendant's defense. That the said witness is not absent by the consent or procurement of the defendant."

The county attorney in behalf of the state opposed the granting of the postponement of the trial on account of the absence of the witness Len Taylor, and in support of his opposition to such postponement filed an affidavit setting forth the diligence used by the county attorney to locate the said absent witness. A number of subpœnas were caused to be issued and placed in the hands of the sheriff of Navajo county and in the hands of the sheriffs of other counties of the state, and all of which have been returned not served because the witness could not be found. The county attorney in his affidavit denies that the witness would testify as contended by the defendant, and sets forth the substance of the facts the state alleges it can prove by the said witness in support of the charge, and alleges that the witness is not absent by the consent or procurement of the prosecution. Upon due consideration, the court denied the defendant's motion for a postponement of the trial. Such order is urged on this appeal as error.

[1, 2] The appellant in his brief complains that the court failed to admonish the jury as required by law upon a number of occasions when the jury retired from the court in charge of the bailiffs. The minutes of the court are silent upon this matter, but the question is raised for the first time on this appeal. This court must presume, the record being silent, that the trial court performed its duty, and will not inquire for the first time on appeal whether that duty has been violated; the record being silent with regard to the matter. The defendant was present at the trial and may have objected, and should have objected to any failure of the trial court to follow the prescribed procedure. We presume if defendant deemed his rights jeopardized by the alleged omission he would have timely objected, and if he saw and did not object, or failed to see any irregularity in the matter, he waived it, and cannot be heard to complain for the first time on appeal.

[3] The appellant depends upon Fertig v. State, 14 Ariz. 540, 133 Pac. 99, as supporting his proposed motion to set aside the information. In that case we had before us for consideration the sufficiency of a commitment to justify the county attorney filing an information based thereon. The commitment in question ordered the defendant held to answer a charge of "felony," and the information filed charged the commission by the defendant of rape. There we said:

> "The order of commitment may be for an entirely different offense from that charged in the complaint. The magistrate may hold defendant for 'any public offense' of which he has no jurisdiction to try and determine."

The commitment having recited that the defendant was held to answer the crime of felony, which was made to appear to the magistrate from the evidence adduced had been committed. The crime to answer which the accused is held must be determinable from the order committing the accused to answer. If, by an examination of the magistrate's order committing the accused to answer, the prosecuting attorney is able to definitely determine and exactly know the particular crime the accused has been held to answer, then it is the plain, simple duty of the prosecutor to prepare the information charging the accused with the commission of the offense for which the accused has been held to answer. In this case the magistrate examined the accused on a charge of rape, and from the evidence he became satisfied that the defendant is guilty "as charged" and held him to answer the "same." Could the prosecuting officer be mistaken as to what crime the magistrate believed had been committed for the commission of which the accused was held to answer? I think not. The crime for the commission of which the accused was held to answer was that charged in the complaint, and no other. Had the order of commitment declared that the magistrate believed from the evidence produced that a felony had been committed and thereupon ordered the accused held to answer the same, we would have then a parallel case with the Fertig Case. The prosecuting attorney must be credited with having some degree of understanding, and so credited when he took up the order of commitment and found that this accused was held to answer a charge proven to the satisfaction of the magistrate. He could not be mistaken as to the nature of the charge proven, because a casual reference to the complaint by which the charge is set forth, and which was the matter examined into, reveals certainly, definitely, and exactly that the charge was one of rape alleged to have been committed by the accused upon Eva Dick. Had the prosecuting attorney, by the information filed, charged the defendant with the commission of a felony other than violent rape, the information would have been subject to dismissal under the principle laid down in the Fertig Case.

The court correctly refused to permit the defendant to withdraw his plea of not guilty for the purpose of moving to set aside the information for the reasons and on the grounds urged.

[4-6] The refusal of the trial court to grant the defendant's application to postpone the trial of the cause until the next jury term of the court, because of the absence of Len Taylor, a witness, was asserted as a ground for a new trial, and properly so, under subdivision 4 of section 1105, Penal Code of Arizona 1913, to wit:

> "When a verdict has been rendered against the defendant the court shall, upon his application, grant a new trial, in the following cases: * * * (4) When the court has committed any material error, calculated or tending to injure the rights of the defendant."
> "When an action is called for trial, or at any time previous thereto, the court may, upon sufficient cause, direct the trial to be postponed to another day." Section 1012, Penal Code 1913.

The cause shown by the affidavit of the defendant for a postponement of the trial consisted of the showing that the defendant expected to prove by Len Taylor, the absent witness, the following circumstances, briefly stated, to wit: He expected Len Taylor to testify that defendant was introduced to Eva Dick as Charles Quayle, his true name; that Eva Dick, and two other persons, rode with the defendant in defendant's one-seated Ford automobile immediately following the first meeting and the introduction of the defendant to Eva Dick; that thereafter other rides with the like number of persons were had in the same automobile, and on each said occasion the time was at night after 8 o'clock, and on each of said occasions and rides the defendant drove the machine; that Eva Dick sat next to defendant, and another woman sat next to Eva Dick, and Len Taylor stood behind the seat; that on each of said occasions Eva Dick kissed and caressed the defendant a number of times while riding; that on the night of the 11th of September, 1915, the defendant, Eva Dick, Miss Shank, and Len Taylor started for a ride in the same machine, occupying about the same relative positions in the machine as above described; that after riding a little while some member of the party suggested going to a dance; this suggestion was acceptable, and they proceeded to the dance, and the party danced for a short time; that Eva Dick wore white stockings on that night at the dance. This is the substance of the testimony the defendant expected to prove by Len Taylor. He alleges that Len Taylor is a material witness, and that he is unable to prove the foregoing matters by any other witness, and that defendant will be able to have Len Taylor present at the next jury term of the court.

The court determined the issues raised by the motion and opposition thereto against the defendant's contention. The granting of a postponement of the trial is a matter within the sound legal discretion of the trial court, and, when the action of the court is brought into question on appeal, the ruling made will not be disturbed by an appellate court unless it is made to appear that such discretion has been abused, to the defendant's prejudice. The trial court reviewed its order refusing to postpone the trial of the cause, passing on the twelfth paragraph of defendant's motion for a new trial, and reaffirmed the former ruling made, "both upon the showing made at the time of the motion for the continuance, and the showing made at this time"—the time of ruling on the motion for a new trial.

In support of the motion for a new trial upon the ground of error in refusing a postponement of the trial, the defendant reasserted the materiality of Len Taylor's testimony, and excused his absence from the trial, as a further reason why the trial should have been postponed, that witness Len Taylor was absent because of threats made against him by Eva Dick at a conversation had on September 13, 1915, which fact was unknown to defendant until after the trial was finished. The affidavit of Len Taylor is presented in support of the motion, and bears date of April 1, 1916. The verdict was returned and recorded March 3, 1916. The motion for a new trial was filed April 3, 1916, and on the same day was denied. In his affidavit made before a notary public at Winslow, Navajo county, on said 1st day of April, Len Taylor states that he absented himself from the jurisdiction of the court for the reason of a conversation had with Eva Dick in the city of Winslow on the 13th day of September, 1916.

> "* * * And as a result of said conversation affiant left his home and the process of this court for the reason that affiant was threatened by the said Eva Dick during this last-mentioned conversation, and in order to protect himself from, and in order not to have himself implicated, as a defendant, in any wrongful criminal prosecution, he left the jurisdiction of this court in order that he could not be subpœnaed as a witness on behalf of the defendant in the above-entitled cause."

From this fact alone the court would have permitted the court's process abused by granting a postponement, and the fact is evident that the witness would have been absent at the next jury term of the court, and all future terms of the court until this cause was disposed of. He shows most clearly and unequivocally that his purpose was, and still is, to avoid the process of the court to the end that he will not be required to give testimony on the trial of this charge. Neither the state nor the accused can have the benefit of his testimony in this case at any time, is the matter made definite by this portion of his affidavit. The matter of the correctness of the order refusing to postpone the trial is cleared of all doubt by Len Taylor's purported affidavit in support of the motion for a new trial urged on that ground.

[7] The appellant contends that the evidence fails to sustain the conviction in the particular that the evidence fails to show resistance on the part of the prosecutrix which was overcome by the accused. The appellant does not contend that all evidence of resistance is wanting in the record, but seems to contend that the evidence is insufficient in this class of criminal cases to justify a conviction. He refers to Sowers v. Territory, 6 Okl. 436, 50 Pac. 257, as a portion of his argument.

The authorities treating criminal law subjects have for a long period of time treated rape as exceptional in the particulars of an examination into the sufficiency of the evidence to support a conviction, and in matters of procedure differing from the rules of procedure in ordinary criminal cases. As said in Sowers v. Territory, supra:

> "Sir Matthew Hale, in 1 Pleas of the Crown (Ed. 1778) p. 363, distinguishes this character of case and the procedure from other criminal cases, and lays down certain rules and admonitory advice that have been approved by the courts of every jurisdiction since that day. He says: 'It is true that rape is a most detestable crime, and therefore severely to be punished, with death; but it must be remembered that it is an accusation easily to be made, and hard to be proved, and harder to be defended by the party accused, though never so innocent.'"

He mentions some instances, and comments on them, and continues:

> "I only mention these instances that we may be more cautious upon trials of offenses of this nature, wherein the court and jury may with so much ease be imposed upon without great care and vigilance, the heinousness of the offense many times transporting the judge and the jury with so much indignation that they are hastily carried to the conviction of the person accused thereof, by the confident testimony, sometimes of malicious and false witnesses."

The information charges rape as defined by section 231, subd. 3, Penal Code 1913, as follows:

> "Rape is an act of sexual intercourse accomplished with a female, not the wife of the perpetrator, under either of the following circumstances: * * * (3) Where she resists, but her resistance is overcome by force or violence."

Section 233, Penal Code 1913, provides that:

> "The essential guilt of rape consists in the outrage to the person and feelings of the female. Any sexual penetration however slight, is sufficient to complete the crime."

The accused testified on the trial in his own behalf, and from his testimony and from all of the testimony in the case, the only circumstance urged as tending to contradict the claim made by the prosecutrix that she resisted the accused's assault, and that her resistance was maintained until overcome by force, is the circumstance that the prosecutrix persisted in her wish that the accused would marry her after the crime was committed and until she was informed that the accused was already married. The accused insisted on the trial, and yet insists on this appeal, that this prosecution is prompted by a motive for revenge for the broken promise of marriage and his inability to keep such promise because of his having a wife and family of two small children of which prosecutrix was not informed by him when she agreed to marry him.

The record contains no evidence of physical facts corroborating the story of the accused bearing on the matters of the alleged consent and nonresistance, but the story told by the prosecutrix of the force used by the accused to overcome, and which did overcome her resistance, is corroborated by the physical facts in evidence, and if such facts are true, and the jury's verdict brands them true, they are silent witnesses, which testify in such terms as may carry belief to a moral certainty and to the exclusion of any hypothesis other than the guilt of the accused. The very fact appearing that this girl was found trying to hide her shame, trying to get away from the publicity brought about by the prosecution of the accused on this charge, would not be proof or evidence tending to disprove her story of the outrage. While the evidence discloses that the prosecutrix said and did inconsistent things after the occurrence was past, she at no time told any person a different story of the manner and means used by the accused in accomplishing the outrage—from the story she told in the beginning of the prosecution and on the stand while testifying as a witness. The jury saw all of the witnesses, heard them testify, and had the opportunity to observe their manner while testifying and to observe many things which were or may have been convincing to a juror, but impossible of recording for the consideration of an appellate court. In the absence from the record of many of the things which a juror would have the opportunity to observe during the course of the trial, the testimony is yet convincing that the jury had ample evidence upon which to base a verdict of guilty.

The character of the evidence is such that a due regard for decency justifies us in omitting a review in detail from this opinion. Suffice it to say that the evidence amply sustains the verdict rendered.

[8] The appellant moved for a new trial, alleging as grounds therefor, among others, not heretofore discussed, that new evidence was discovered material to the defense, and because the witness "Len Taylor was caused to leave the jurisdiction of this court by threats of the prosecuting witness." In support of the motion for a new trial upon all questions, the appellant produced the affidavits of Len Taylor, Annie Durham, and C. E. Mullins. The affidavit of Len Taylor is not worthy of serious consideration by any court, for the reason the affidavit states that he is a resident of Winslow, Ariz., and absented himself because of fear of a criminal prosecution, and intimates nowhere that he will ever testify with regard to this matter. He does not obligate himself to appear and testify in the case at any time or at all. He sets forth certain matters alleged to be within his knowledge and swears they are true; but all of the matters set forth in his affidavit have been threshed over by other witnesses who testified, and they are not evidence newly discovered. If he should be induced to come forward and testify to the matters and things he says are within his knowledge, the effect of his testimony would be to contradict in some slight particulars the evidence given by some other witness. He mentions that the prosecuting witness stated to him on September 13, 1915, that "I am going to get Charlie Quayle for trying to have intercourse with me last night." This is in effect impeaching the statements of both the accused and prosecutrix.

The affidavit of Annie Durham was presented. She details a statement which she swears was made to her by the prosecutrix at a restaurant, relative to the prosecution of the case, as follows:

> "Anna, I was warned I had to do it, because Mr. Jordan told me that it would be perjury if I did not tell the same story I told before the justice of the peace, and he said he would prosecute me even if he did hate to do it. So I had to do what he told me. I know it put Quayle in bad, but I can't help it, because I don't want to get into any more trouble myself."

This witness testified in the case, referred in a general way to the same matter, stated that she had told the accused and his counsel about the conversation had with the prosecutrix, and certainly, in the circumstances, the statement detailed in the affidavit was made known, and is not evidence newly discovered within the rule authorizing a new trial, nor does it tend to show the former statements made of the matter were untrue.

The affidavit of C. F. Mullins details a statement alleged to have been made by the prosecutrix at San Diego, Cal., on the 25th day of March, 1916. The statement is a detail of the things the prosecutrix said she told Len Taylor on the Monday night after the assault. The effect is that she told Len Taylor what Miss O'Hearn had told prosecutrix could be done about a civil action against Quayle, with a request that Len Taylor would keep quiet about the matter. She stated further: That she did not know that Quayle could be imprisoned. That she tried to straighten the matter out several times, but the officers would not allow her to do so. They threatened to put her in jail if she did not prosecute the case. "They promised me new clothes if I would, and after this I thought I had better stick to my first story. If you can get this whole matter fixed up without getting me into trouble, I will do the right thing." Conceding that this impeaching affidavit was sufficient upon which to grant a new trial for any purpose, yet the affiant does not give his place of residence. The affidavit was made in San Diego, in the state of California, where he is presumed to reside. He does not state that he will testify to the facts stated either before the court or otherwise. If testified to, would a jury believe them? If they believed, would they therefrom disbelieve that this defendant ravished the girl in the manner she testified he did? She did not deny the truth of her first story.

The showing made by the affidavits produced is not sufficient to justify a court in vacating a verdict and granting a new trial, for the reason Annie Durham testified fully at the trial; Len Taylor evaded the process of the court to avoid testifying in behalf of the accused, and does not state in his affidavit that he will not do the same thing again; and Mullins is presumed to be in California and does not offer to testify. If they should all appear and testify to the matters they state are within their knowledge, the evidence given would be cumulative, contradictory, or impeaching in character, and it is not at all certain or probable that a different result would follow.

[9] The appellant contends that the venue was not proven. This contention is without merit. The appellant in his statement and testimony is very careful to show that the place where the only transaction between the accused and prosecutrix took place was within one-half mile of the Harvey House in the town of Winslow. Winslow is in Navajo county. Appellant is well acquainted in that vicinity from his long period of residence there. The girl was a stranger, had lived at Winslow about three weeks, and would not be as well informed of locality on a dark night as the accused would be. That a great distance was traveled after leaving the dance hall to the place of the crime, and from that place on the return to the Harvey House, as the prosecutrix testified, is not significant of any great distance from the place of the crime to the Harvey House. The distance traveled at night in a level country is no indication of the distance between the starting and stopping points. The evidence is ample from which to reasonably draw the inference that the crime was committed in Navajo county as alleged. The matter could have been readily established by the simple means of a few questions. It is an inexcusable neglect for the prosecution to omit direct proof of the venue in the trial of every criminal case, and trust to the uncertainty of the proof of facts from which the venue may be inferred; yet sometimes this occurs, and this is one of the times of its occurrence. The proof is in this record, and sustains the conviction.

The instructions complained of wrought no prejudice to the appellant's rights.

Upon the whole case, no reversible error in the pleadings or proceedings has been committed, and the accused has been awarded a fair and impartial trial. Consequently, I am of the opinion the judgment must be affirmed.

Affirmed.

McINTOSH et al. v. KNOX. (No. 2226.)

1. GARNISHMENT 🔑248 — WRONGFUL GARNISHMENT—LIABILITY.

The assignee of a judgment may recover damages for its wrongful garnishment in an action to which he is not a party without showing malice or suing on the attachment bond or under specific statutory authority.

2. GARNISHMENT 🔑248 — WRONGFUL GARNISHMENT—DAMAGES.

The assignee of a judgment may recover damages for the period a wrongful garnishment of it remained in force, although the judgment debtor on the day following such garnishment instituted interpleader proceedings and paid the money into court.

3. GARNISHMENT 🔑251 — WRONGFUL GARNISHMENT—DAMAGES.

The assignee of a judgment wrongfully garnished may recover attorney's fees paid in interpleader proceedings instituted by the garnished judgment debtor.

4. JUDGMENT 🔑735—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Where a judgment debtor instituted interpleader proceedings upon being garnished, but the right of a claimant to recover attorney's fees was not made an issue nor decided in such suit, the question is not rendered res judicata so as to prevent recovery of such fees in an action by the claimant for the wrongful garnishment of such judgment.

Appeal from District Court, Nye County; Mark R. Averill, Judge.

Action by C. H. McIntosh and H. R. Cooke, doing business as McIntosh & Cooke, against Charles E. Knox. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hugh H. Brown and J. H. Evans, both of Tonopah, for appellant. H. R. Cooke, of Tonopah, for respondents.

COLEMAN, J. Respondents brought suit in the district court of Nye county to recover damages for the wrongful attachment of a judgment which had been assigned to them, and for attorney's fees expended in procuring the release of the funds thus attached. Judgment was rendered in the lower court in favor of respondents as prayed, and from such judgment and an order denying a new trial this appeal is taken.

We will not undertake to state all of the details of the case, but such facts only as will be necessary to a full understanding of the questions involved. R. P. Dunlap brought suit in the District Court of the United States for the District of Nevada to recover judgment against the Montana-Tonopah Mining Company, of which Knox was president, for quite a large sum, and in due time recovered judgment. Thereafter the judgment was assigned by Dunlap to McIntosh & Cooke, who gave notice thereof to the judgment debtor, after which an appeal was taken by the company to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, which later affirmed the judgment of the lower court. McIntosh & Cooke again gave notice to the company of the assignment, which was brought to the attention of Knox, after which, and before the judgment was paid, Knox brought suit in the United States District Court to recover judgment against Dunlap, who left the state before personal service was made upon him, and attached the judgment theretofore assigned by Dunlap to McIntosh & Cooke by causing garnishment papers to be served upon the Montana-Tonopah Mining Company, of which Knox was still the president. The Montana-Tonopah Mining Company filed in the United States District Court its bill of interpleader, alleging the matters hereinbefore stated, and prayed for an order allowing it to pay the money over to the clerk of the court, to be awarded to the person or persons finally found by the court to be entitled to it. Such an order was made, and the money was paid accordingly. McIntosh & Cooke and Knox appeared in the interpleader proceedings and filed their answers to the bill. On final hearing, the court awarded the money to McIntosh & Cooke.

[1] The first contention made by counsel for appellant is that the court erred in rendering judgment in favor of the respondents for damages alleged to have been sustained by them by the wrongful garnishment of the judgment which had been assigned to them by Dunlap. On this point, counsel clearly state their theory in their brief, as follows:

> "Under the great weight of authority, an action for damages, for wrongful attachment, must be grounded upon one of the three following premises: (1) There must be malice or want of probable cause; or (2) the action must be on the attachment bond; or (3) there must be some specific statutory authorization for the action."

We think the point would be well taken in a suit for damages by a defendant in an action wherein the property attached belonged to the party sued, but such is not the case here. McIntosh & Cooke were not parties to the attachment suit, but were strangers to it. The rule of law applicable to the situation here is laid down as follows:

> "Where an officer levies a writ of attachment on the property of a stranger, attachment plaintiff is liable to the claimant of the ownership and right of possession thereof not only when he directed the wrongful levy, but also when he subsequently adopts or ratifies the officer's acts, independently of any bond, and jointly with the attaching officer." 4 Cyc. 764.

May, 1917, issue of Case and Comment, on page 1023, calls attention to the note to the case of Davies v. Thompson (L. R. A. 1917B, 395); but, as that volume is not yet in our library, we have not been able to avail ourselves of the note in question.

[2] But it is insisted that in view of the interpleader proceedings, which were instituted the day after the attachment suit was commenced, pursuant to which the money due under the judgment obtained by Dunlap was paid into court, the attachment proceedings were automatically terminated, and that they lost their force and effect, and consequently practically no damage was caused respondents by the conduct of appellant in instituting the attachment suit and in causing the levy thereunder. We cannot look at the matter in this light. In view of the departure from the state of Dunlap, no personal service of process was had upon him, and the jurisdiction of the court to inquire into the controversy depended upon the contention that property belonging to him was seized and held by the attachment proceedings. If it had been conceded by Knox in the main suit that the attachment had lost its efficacy, that case would have fallen, and the subsequent proceedings along with it; hence, it was of vital importance to Knox that the force and effect of the attachment proceedings be maintained, which he seems to have realized by his conduct in the interpleader suit. Consequently, we cannot escape the conclusion that in legal effect the attachment still held good.

There is one peculiar circumstance in this case. As we have said, the writ of attachment in Knox v. Dunlap was served December 30, 1912, and the bill of interpleader was filed in the federal court at Carson City the following day. Carson City is about nine hours' travel from Tonopah, where the office of the Montana-Tonopah Mining Company is situated, and where its attorney and secretary resided. Mail leaving Tonopah on the morning of December 31, 1912, would not have reached Carson City on that day until about 6 o'clock in the evening, after the office of the clerk of the United States District Court was closed. Hence the inference is that the bill of interpleader was mailed in Tonopah on or before the morning of December 30th, the very day the attachment was served in the suit of Knox v. Dunlap. In the light of these facts, we cannot escape the conclusion that the Montana-Tonopah Mining Company knew of the contemplated attachment in the suit of Knox v. Dunlap, and in anticipation thereof had caused to be prepared the bill of interpleader before the writ of attachment had been served. If Knox did not inspire this quick action, who did? Yet he insists that because of the interpleader proceedings he must be relieved from liability in the attachment suit. But, be this as it may, the attachment suit was in full force and effect during all of the time the interpleader suit was pending; and, had the interpleader suit been dismissed for any reason, the money was still tied up in the attachment suit, according to appellant's contention, as shown by the prayer in his answer in the interpleader suit.

It is contended that, if respondents are entitled to judgment in any amount, it should not be for the amount for which judgment was rendered in the lower court, for the reason that the delay of the federal court in rendering judgment in the interpleader proceedings was due to the neglect of counsel for respondents to file briefs, and that the judgment should be reduced in an amount equal to the interest for that period of delay. The trial court found that there was nothing in the evidence to justify this contention, and in view of the record we do not feel justified in holding that the conclusion thus reached was reversible error.

[3] The next question is: Did the trial court err by including in its judgment, as an element of damage, the sum of $600, paid by respondents as attorney's fees in the suit in the federal court? We think not. It was necessary to a protection of their rights that they appear and show their title to the judgment under the assignment. No money judgment was sought against the respondents in the suit in the federal court in which the money was attached, or in the interpleader action. While, so far as we are informed, the attachment statutes of all the states provide that the plaintiff in an attachment suit shall give a bond to indemnify the defendant against all damages in case it should be adjudged that the attachment proceedings are wrongfully instituted, none of such statutes specifically designates the attorney's fee incurred by the defendant in defending the attachment proceedings as an item of damage. Yet the great weight of authority holds that such an expense is an item of damage. 2 R. C. L. 909; Plymouth G. M. Co. v. U. S. Fidelity Co., 35 Mont. 23, 88 Pac. 567, 10 Ann. Cas. 951; Parish v. Van Arsdale, etc., Co., 92 Kan. 286, 140 Pac. 835, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 981; Balinsky v. Gross, 72 Misc. Rep. 7, 128 N. Y. Supp. 1062; Drake on Attachments (7th Ed.) § 175; Boatwright v. Stewart, 37 Ark. 623; Fry v. Estes, 52 Mo. App. 1; 6 C. J. 528, 529; 4 Cyc. 878.

This rule is not only sustained by the great weight of authority, but we think is founded on sound reason as well. Attachment proceedings are purely statutory in practically all of the states (2 R. C. L. p. 801), and are very different from an ordinary action at law to recover judgment for money due. It is a harsh remedy, and for that reason one who brings the action must pay the damage sustained by the adversary in case the proceedings are wrongfully instituted. In many cases the defendant in the proceedings cannot be adequately compensated for the damages sustained, and we think the courts are amply justified in holding that attorney's fees should be allowed the defendant in case of a wrongful attachment. It is clear that a stranger to a suit whose property is wrongfully attached may recover damages, as we have shown, and we see no reason why necessary attorney's fees incurred in procuring the release of property from a wrongful attachment should not be considered as an item of such damage. If it is an item of damage in the one case, why not in the other? He who levies upon the property of a stranger does so at his peril. Such stranger should be saved harmless, and this cannot be done unless he is reimbursed his outlay in procuring the release of his property. It is no doubt true that cases may arise where this rule may work a hardship, but that may be said of every rule.

[4] It is next contended that the question of attorney's fees is res adjudicata. We think not, under the circumstances. There was no pleading in the federal court wherein the question of attorney's fees was made an issue; and, if that matter might have been adjudicated under appropriate issues, no issue of that character having been involved, and the question not having been tried and the court not having undertaken to consider it, there is nothing upon which to sustain the contention. Gulling v. Washoe County Bank, 29 Nev. 259, 89 Pac. 26.

Perceiving no error in the record, it is ordered that the judgment appealed from be affirmed.

D. C. WHEELER, Inc., v. O'BRIEN BROS.

1. ANIMALS 🔑100(3)—UNLAWFUL GRAZING—SPECIAL DAMAGES—PLEADING.

Under allegations that defendants during month of March grazed sheep upon plaintiff's property, thereby injuring it for grazing purposes, damages may be based upon the land's value for grazing purposes during the lambing season, without such damages being specially pleaded, where the land was most useful for this purpose.

2. ANIMALS 🔑100(4)—UNLAWFUL GRAZING—EVIDENCE.

In damage action for unlawfully grazing sheep, defendants' testimony that plaintiff's sheep also grazed upon defendants' property to his damage held not to require a finding of damages for defendant.

Coleman, J., dissenting in part.

Appeal from District Court, Washoe County; Mark R. Averill, Judge.

Action by D. C. Wheeler, Incorporated, against O'Brien Bros. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

George Springmeyer, of Reno, for appellants. Le Roy F. Pike, of Reno, for respondent.

McCARRAN, C. J. This was an action for damages alleged to have been caused by the herding and grazing of 1,400 head of sheep upon a tract of land consisting of approximately 320 acres. The damage is alleged to have accrued inasmuch as "the land was thereby rendered almost valueless for grazing purposes for the year 1916 for any live stock."

The trial court found:

> "That on the 29th and 30th days of March, 1916, the defendants caused the said 1,400 head of sheep to be unlawfully herded and grazed upon the lands of the plaintiff."

As a result of this unlawful herding and grazing, the court found that the plaintiff was actually damaged in the sum of $200. The court in arriving at this sum did so by a process of reasoning which need scarcely be referred to, inasmuch as in our judgment the conclusion reached by which the court fixed the damages was correct, and the damages assessed were, as we view it, not excessive. On motion for a new trial, the court made an order that, if plaintiff would consent that the damages be reduced to $150, a new trial would be denied. To this the plaintiff consented. Appeal is from the judgment and from the order denying a new trial.

The record discloses that the tract in question, upon which the unlawful grazing is alleged to have taken place, was a wild, unreclaimed tract, used particularly by respondent, plaintiff in the court below, during the lambing season; and the record discloses that it was especially valuable for this purpose by reason of its character and location.

Appellants here complain that the court assessed special damages, inasmuch as it found that:

> "This land was more valuable, as shown by the evidence, for lambing than for grazing alone. It was worth possibly $50 for grazing only. The evidence was conclusive that the loss per sheep for lambing purposes was $1."

[1] It is the contention of appellants that inasmuch as the ad damnum allegation in the complaint makes no claim for special damages by reason of the loss of grasses, herbage, or browse growing on the lands, during the lambing season, or that no special damages were alleged to the plaintiff for being deprived of the use of the lands for lambing purposes, the court was unwarranted in making its finding and conclusion as it did. In this connection, appellants rely upon the rule that proof of special damages cannot be introduced unless such damages have been specially pleaded; and in this connection they assert that the trial court erroneously permitted evidence as to the special damages to plaintiff for being deprived of the use of lands for lambing purposes, and that following this evidence the court arrived at an erroneous conclusion.

The record discloses evidence going to establish that this tract of land had been generally used by respondent for the purpose of lambing a given number of sheep, and that the tract was especially adapted to this use.

We are referred to the rule which we believe to be one well recognized by authority, that if the damages sought to be recovered are those known as "special damages," that is, those of an unusual and extraordinary nature and not the common consequence of the wrong complained of or implied by law, it is necessary, in order to prevent surprise to the defendant, that the declaration state specifically and in detail the damages sought to be recovered.

The rule is not applicable to this case. The damage was alleged to have been wrought during the month of March, 1916, by the willful, malicious, wrongful, and unlawful herding and grazing of sheep upon the lands of plaintiff, thereby destroying, eating, and tramping out the grasses, herbage, and browse.

The general use to which the tract of land was put during that particular season of the year was established as being for lambing purposes. The tract of land in question might have been absolutely useless either to appellants or respondent, in so far as grazing would be concerned, at some other season of the year. The general use to which the land was applied was for grazing purposes during the lambing season. It was the fact, as determined, that the land was made useless for this purpose by the acts of appellants that constituted the basis for the damage. The general use to which the land was applied was a matter of proof, and if such disclosed, as it did, that the tract of land was generally used for lambing purposes, such evidence was, in our judgment, admissible under the pleadings. The damage accruing to respondent was the loss established as having been sustained by reason of the destruction of the herbage and grasses growing on the land during that season of the year when respondent looked to the tract to maintain a given number of sheep, namely, during the lambing season. It nowhere appears that the court, in arriving at the measure of damages, based the same upon anything other than the general value of the tract for grazing purposes during the period of the year within which its value for such purpose was especially established.

We are referred to the case of Risse v. Collins, 12 Idaho, 689, 87 Pac. 1006; but it will be observed that there the Supreme Court of Idaho adhered to a rule of general acceptation that the measure of damages in such cases should be the value of the crop at the time of the injury or destruction. In the case at bar, we are dealing with the value of herbage, grasses, and browse growing upon wild, uncultivated, and unreclaimed lands, at a special season of the year when by reason of the nature of the tract and its location it is generally used for a special purpose. So we deem it applicable to say here that the measure of damages in such cases is and should be the value of the pasturage upon such a tract of land, taking into consideration its location and general surroundings at a time in the year when by reason of its peculiar character it is valuable for a special purpose. The same rule might not apply at another or different season of the year, and, indeed, might not apply to other lands differently located.

The case of Herrin v. Sieben, 46 Mont. 226, 127 Pac. 823, affords no assistance in this case.

We are referred to the case of Pyramid Land & Stock Co. v. Pierce, 30 Nev. 237, 95 Pac. 210; but, inasmuch as the court in the matter at bar assessed no special damages, the rule there relied upon is not applicable here.

In the case of Jensen v. Pradere, 39 Nev. 466, 159 Pac. 54, a majority of this court held that in cases of this character, where the land was used for pasturage only, evidence of its reasonable value for such purposes would be proper. To this we might add that, if the evidence established that the use to which the land could be applied was limited to a special season of the year, as in this case during the lambing season, evidence as to the value of the land during such season and for such purpose would be proper.

There is evidence in the record, coming from competent witnesses, to the effect that damage done by appellants in herding and grazing their sheep over the particular tract of land at the particular season of the year would amount to $1,000. Another witness placed the damage at a dollar per head. The court in fixing the damages appears to have ignored all of this testimony, as well as all evidence tending to establish special damages.

[2] Appellants assign error to the action of the trial court because that tribunal found that the plaintiff did not cause any sheep to be herded or grazed upon the lands of defendants. In this respect, it may be noted that by way of cross-complaint appellants here had alleged damages accruing from the acts of respondent in herding sheep on the lands of appellants. It is the contention of appellants that evidence supporting this allegation was offered by them and not contradicted. Perhaps the strongest evidence supporting the allegation of appellants as to damages in this respect, if any evidence supported such allegation, is to be found in the record of the testimony of appellant Will O'Brien in which he relates that he saw sheep belonging to respondent on a certain 40-acre tract in section 19 which he claims to have had under lease at that time. The only attempt to fix the damage claimed by appellant appears in the following interrogatories and answers:

> "Q. How many sheep were there in that band? A. Well I don't know; of course they lamb close to a thousand head I should judge, up there, lambing time, you know. They split them up; may have been 600, may have been 700, I am not sure. Q. What was the damage done to the land you had under lease by the plaintiff's sheep grazing upon it in the manner you have stated? A. Well, I had the place along the ditch where I got water—$300, I believe. Q. What did you say the damages were? A. About $300, I guess. Q. How do you fix the damages? A. Well, according to the size of the band of sheep and the way that they had sued me. Q. You fix the damages on the same basis as the damages they claim? A. Yes, they figure $1,000 for my bunch that I had. Q. That is the only basis you have of fixing that $300? A. Well, they destroyed just as much of the browse where I was as I destroyed on them, if I was ever on that. Q. Assuming that you had been over? A. Yes, the same identical thing."

It is needless to say that from this record, uncertain and indefinite as it is on the question raised by the cross-complaint of appellants, the court had before it nothing in the way of facts upon which it could have found damages accruing. Hence we fail to discover error in the act of the trial court in determining as it did.

[3] Many of the errors complained of, pertaining to the admission of evidence over the objection of appellants, lose force by reason of the form of the objection; and we deem it not inappropriate to suggest that, in the light of the rule often asserted by this court, appellants cannot be heard to complain where the error relied upon was brought to the attention of the trial court only by an objection general in its nature. Robinson v. Imperial Silver Mining Co., 5 Nev. 44; Sharon v. Minnock, 6 Nev. 377; State v. Smith, 33 Nev. 438, 117 Pac. 19.

The judgment of the trial court is sustained.

It is so ordered.

SANDERS, J., concurs.

COLEMAN, J. I concur in the judgment of affirmance, but not in the views expressed in the opinion of the learned Chief Justice. I take the view that the contention of counsel for appellant as to special damage is correct; but since the attorney who tried the case in the lower court permitted some of the testimony complained of to be admitted in evidence without objection, and since the objections which were made to the rest of the evidence were on the ground that it was "irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial," and did not specify wherein it was irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, I am of the opinion that the point urged on this appeal cannot be considered. The court, in the case of Sigafus v. Porter, 84 Fed. at page 433, 28 C. C. A. at page 449, in considering this question said:

> "The stock objection 'incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial,' covers a multitude of sins. There is hardly an objectionable question but what can be classified under one or other of these heads. Sometimes the real nature of the objection is so plain that the general phrase will be quite sufficient to indicate it; indeed, it may be quite apparent without any statement of the grounds of objection at all. But there are many other objections which rest upon some particular theory of the case, or upon some single fact in proof, which a judge may readily forget in the course of a long and intricate trial. It is only fair in such cases to require counsel to state clearly to the trial judge on what ground it is that they object. Certainly, it is not fair to allow such a general dragnet as 'incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial' to be cast over every bit of evidence in the case which counsel would like to keep out, and then to permit counsel, upon careful analysis of the printed narrative of the trial, to formulate some specification of error not thought of at the time, and which, if seasonably called to the court's attention, might have been avoided or corrected."

COOK v. CITY OF SOCORRO et al.*

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑955(3)—BONDS—INVALIDITY—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where a municipal corporation has power to issue bonds upon a compliance with certain prerequisites, and the bonds are issued, they are prima facie valid obligations, and, as against a bona fide purchaser, the burden of proving want of performance of any of the prerequisites is upon the municipality, or the party attacking the validity of the bonds. Where a municipal corporation was incorporated under an act of the

*Rehearing denied August 25, 1917.

Legislature, which said act gave such corporations the power to issue bonds for the purchase or construction of waterworks upon certain conditions, and a subsequent act of the Legislature authorized municipal corporations to reincorporate under such later act and prescribed different conditions under which bonds for the construction or purchase of waterworks might be issued, and thereafter such municipal corporation issued its negotiable bonds for such purpose, the burden is upon the party attacking the validity of such bonds, where they have passed into the hands of innocent purchasers, to show, either that such city reincorporated under the later act, and that such bonds were not issued in compliance therewith, or that such bonds were not issued in conformity to the earlier act.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑194(6)—PLEADING 🔑416 — ORDER SUSTAINING DEMURRER—CORRECTION OF ERROR—CONSIDERATION OF ERROR.

Where a trial court inadvertently enters an order sustaining a demurrer to a pleading to which no demurrer has been filed, it is the duty of counsel to call the court's attention to the error so made, so that the same may be corrected, and where the record on appeal shows that an order was made by the trial court sustaining a demurrer to an answer to a counterclaim, where a demurrer was filed only to the reply, the appellate court will not consider an assignment of error based upon such order in so far as the answer to the counterclaim is concerned, where such mistake was not called to the attention of the trial court.

3. JUDGMENT 🔑94 — DEFAULT JUDGMENT—CONSTRUCTIVE SERVICE—INJUNCTION.

A plaintiff is not entitled to a default judgment against nonresident defendants, served only by constructive service, in an action instituted to have certain bonds issued by a municipality adjudged null and void, and to enjoin the municipality from levying a tax to pay the interest and principal thereof.

Appeal from District Court, Socorro County. Mechem, Judge.

Action for injunction by George E. Cook against the City of Socorro, James G. Fitch, and others, in which only defendants James G. Fitch and J. C. Mayer appeared and answered, with counterclaim. Judgment dismissing the suit and awarding the relief prayed for in their counterclaim, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

This action was instituted in the court below by George E. Cook, a resident and taxpayer of the city of Socorro, against the city of Socorro, James G. Fitch et al., to enjoin the payment of principal and interest on certain municipal water bonds issued by the city of Socorro on April 1, 1887. Of the defendants James G. Fitch and J. C. Mayer only appeared and answered. They also filed a counterclaim, in which they alleged that the present action was instituted by the plaintiff in collusion with the city of Socorro, and further alleged that the city was unlawfully misappropriating funds raised by taxation for the purpose of paying the principal and interest of such bonds, and an injunction was sought against the city, its officers and agents, to prevent it from continuing in its alleged misappropriation of the funds. Service was had on the other defendants, except the city of Socorro, by publication. Upon issue joined the case was tried by the court, which made certain findings of fact and conclusions of law, and thereupon entered its judgment dismissing said injunction suit and enjoining the city of Socorro and its officers and agents from diverting any of the funds raised for the payment of the principal and interest upon said water bonds. The facts upon which the injunction was sought by appellant may be briefly stated as follows: On April 1, 1887, the city of Socorro issued bonds bearing date of that day, to the amount of $30,000, in payment of the purchase price of a waterworks system for said city. Each bond was for the sum of $500, and was made payable to bearer 30 years after date with interest at 6 per cent. per annum. Each bond contained the following recital:

> "This bond is one of sixty, numbered from 1 to 60, inclusive, of like amount, tenor and date and is authorized by an act of the city council of Socorro, proposed on the 9th day of December, A. D. 1886. The said council being authorized by a vote of the legal voters of said city at a regular election at which the question of issuing the said bonds was duly voted upon. The result of said election being favorable to the issuing of said bonds in the amount of thirty thousand dollars on the terms and conditions herein set forth. The right to hold such election is vested in said city of Socorro by its articles of incorporation under and by virtue of the laws of the territory of New Mexico."

The bonds were signed by the mayor and under the word "countersigned" near the right-hand margin of the bond was the name of the city treasurer, signed as treasurer. Near the left hand appeared the words: "Attest, J. F. Towle, City Clerk." The city of Socorro was incorporated on January 17, 1882, under an act of the territorial Legislature approved February 11, 1880, entitled "An act for the incorporation of cities," and its legality as a municipal corporation was not legally questioned or denied for a period of more than two years. The act under which the city of Socorro was incorporated, being chapter 1 of the Laws of 1880, provided that before a city could issue bonds, the common council must be petitioned by three-fourths of the legal voters of said city, and the bonds, when issued, must be signed by the mayor and countersigned by the clerk of said city. The recitals in the bonds show that they were apparently issued under the provisions of chapter 39 of the Laws of 1884, which act does not require a petition to be presented before the bonds are issued, but requires an election to determine whether waterworks shall be constructed, and the court so found.

It appears from the evidence that for some time prior to the year 1902, the city of Socorro refused to pay interest on the bonds in question, and that during the said year 1902 one George Parker recovered two default judgments against the city of Socorro for unpaid interest on 34 of said water bonds. During the same year a peremptory writ of mandamus was issued by the district court of Socorro county against the mayor and city council of said city, compelling them to make certain levies of taxes to pay said judgments and unpaid interest coupons. This case was appealed to the Supreme Court, being reported in 12 N. M. 177, 76 Pac. 283, and in said appeal the question of the validity of the said bonds was raised by the said city, and it maintained that the waterworks bonds were void under chapter 39 of the Laws of 1884. The Supreme Court sustained the view taken by Mr. Fitch, who was the attorney for George Parker on said appeal, and held that the provisions of chapter 39, Laws 1884, did not relate or apply to the city of Socorro, but that said city derived all of its power and authority from the act of 1880. The Supreme Court, therefore, did not pass upon the validity of said bonds, because no question was raised in said suit as to their validity under the act of 1880. The city of Socorro has been paying interest on the waterworks bonds since the year 1902, and has paid judgments recovered against said city for unpaid coupons due prior to that time, under a peremptory writ of mandamus issued by the district court of Socorro county. The evidence fails to show that the 2 bonds involved in this suit were included in the 34 involved in the cases instituted by George Parker.

From the evidence introduced at the trial it appears that the records of the city of Socorro were destroyed by fire at some time after the year 1890. Appellants introduced no evidence showing the fact that the city did not reincorporate under the act of 1884, nor that the bonds were not legally issued under the act of February 11, 1880.

The court made certain findings of fact, in which it found that the bonds were issued by the city of Socorro under the power contained in chapter 39 of the Laws of 1884, but refused to find that the requirements of the act of February 11, 1880, had not been complied with. Among other findings the court made the following:

"(1) There is no evidence as to whether or not three-fourths of the legal voters of the city of Socorro petitioned the council of said city to contract the debt or loan for which said waterworks bonds were issued.

"(2) The court finds that there is no direct evidence as to whether or not an election was ever called or held to determine whether the city should abandon its organization under chapter 1. Laws 1880, and reorganize under chapter 39, Laws 1884. But there is evidence, and the court finds therefrom, that since the month of January, 1886, and from thence continually up to the date of the commencement of this suit, the city of Socorro has in fact been organized under and in accordance with the provisions of chapter 39, Laws of 1884, and has during all of said period maintained such organization, and has had in office a mayor, a board of aldermen, styled city council, a city treasurer, city clerk, city marshal, and city attorney, elected or appointed at the times and in the manner provided by said chapter 39, Laws of 1884, and amendments thereto, and that in the exercise of the duties of their respective offices and in the enforcement of the corporate powers of said city, the said city officers have proceeded in accordance with and been governed by the provisions of said chapter 39, Laws 1884; and the legality of said organization has not been legally denied or questioned for a period of more than 29 years prior to the commencement of this suit."

From the judgment dismissing the complaint and awarding defendants the relief prayed for in their cross-complaint, the appellant appeals.

M. C. Spicer, of Socorro, and Catron & Catron, of Santa Fé, for appellant. James G. Fitch, of Socorro, for appellees.

ROBERTS, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] The first proposition advanced by appellant upon which he relies for a reversal of the judgment of the court below is that the city of Socorro, on April 1, 1887, the date when the bonds in question were issued, acquired all of its power and authority to issue the municipal waterworks bonds under chapter 1 of the Laws of 1880, and that chapter 39 of the Laws of 1884 had no application to the city of Socorro, and that said city did not derive any authority from said act to issue the bonds in question. This argument is based upon the assumption that the city of Socorro did not reincorporate under the provisions of chapter 39 of the Laws of 1884 and continued to exist as a corporation under the act of 1880.

The appellant in the court below offered no evidence showing that the city did not reincorporate under the act of 1884. Neither did he offer evidence to show that the precedent acts required under the act of 1880 for the issuance of bonds for the construction or purchase of waterworks had not been complied with. Therefore the court properly upheld the validity of the bonds. It is a well-settled rule of law that where a municipal corporation has power to issue bonds upon a compliance with certain prerequisites, and the bonds are issued, they are prima facie valid obligations, and, as against a bona fide purchaser, the burden of proving want of performance of any of the prerequisites is upon the municipality. 21 Ency. of Law, p. 76. The evidence in this case shows that Mr. Fitch was a bona fide holder of the bonds which he owned, and there is no showing that the other defendants are not likewise bona fide holders. The burden was upon the appellant to establish the fact that the city of Socorro did not reincorporate under the act of 1884, because upon the face of the bond it appeared that the bond was issued under and by virtue of power conferred by said act, and it was shown in evidence that continuously from the time the bonds were issued in 1887 up to and including the time of the trial herein that the city of Socorro was pretending to be a city incorporated under said act, and, as such, exercising all powers and duties conferred upon it by this act. But it is not necessary for us to determine in this case under which of said acts the city of Socorro was incorporated and exercised the powers and functions of a municipal corporation at the time of the issuance of the bonds in question; for, if it be conceded that the necessary steps required on the part of the city to reincorporate under the act of 1884 had not been taken, and that the city continued as a corporation under the earlier act, it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that all the requirements of the act of 1880 had been complied with relative to the issuance of said bonds, nothing appearing on the face of the bonds to the contrary. It is well settled that the contracts of public corporations, formally executed, will, in the absence of proof to the contrary, be presumed to be valid and to have been made with due authority. In Abbott on Public Securities, at section 400, it is said:

> "Assuming the existence of authority to issue the securities in connection with the condition that they do not show upon their face facts sufficient to charge the holder with notice of their invalidity or of irregularities in their issue, the possession of negotiable securities then in due form establishes in favor of the holder a prima facie case in an action upon them, and throws the burden of proof upon the one attacking their validity in respect to ownership, bona fide holding, consideration, proper execution, notice, and existence of all conditions necessary to enable him to maintain the action. This rule does not dispense with all evidence but upon the production of the bonds or coupons and proof of authority to issue the plaintiff's case is established. The rule has been well stated in a leading text-book on Negotiable Instruments, in the following language: 'The mere possession of a negotiable instrument, produced in evidence by the indorsee, or by the assignee where no indorsement is necessary, imports prima facie that he acquired it bona fide for full value in the usual course of business before maturity, and without notice of any circumstances impeaching its validity, and that he is the owner thereof, entitled to recover the full amount against all prior parties. In other words, the production of the instrument and proof that it is genuine (where indeed such proof is necessary), prima facie establishes his case; and he may there rest it. Bills and notes payable to bearer do not, in this respect, differ from others, and the bearer is entitled to all the presumptions that apply to an indorsement in his favor. But the presumption of bona fide ownership does not apply where the instrument is not payable to bearer, unless it be indorsed specifically to holder, or in blank."

For cases discussing the question see Board of County Commissioners of Grear County v. Gregory, 15 Okl. 208, 81 Pac. 422; Flagg v. City of Palmyra, 33 Mo. 440; City of Quincy v. Warfield, 25 Ill. 317, 79 Am. Dec. 330; City of Gladstone v. Throop, 71 Fed. 341, 18 C. C. A. 61.

What we have already said disposes of appellant's second and third contentions, and in view of our conclusion here, it is not necessary to determine or pass upon the effect of the opinion by the territorial Supreme Court in the case of Territory ex rel. Parker v. Mayor, 12 N. M. 177, 76 Pac. 283, nor as to the effect of plea or res adjudicata interposed by the defendants.

[2] Appellant's sixth contention is that if the city of Socorro was reincorporated under the provisions of chapter 39, Laws of 1884, as maintained by appellees and as found by the court, the court erred in sustaining the demurrer to appellant's answer to appellees' counterclaim because the answer sets forth facts sufficient to constitute a proper defense to the water bonds. The record in this case shows that appellees filed an answer to appellant's complaint, and also a counterclaim in which they sought to enjoin and restrain the city from diverting or misappropriating funds in the city treasury, or which might thereafter be derived from the levy of the special tax, etc., for the purpose of paying the principal and interest on such bonds. In the counterclaim it was alleged that certain moneys had theretofore been raised by special tax, levied for the purpose of paying the principal and interest on the water bonds, and that such city had been using this money for other purposes. The counterclaim set up facts showing that appellees were entitled to the relief sought. Appellant filed a reply to defendants' answer, setting up certain new matter, and also an answer to the counterclaim. The record shows that appellees filed a demurrer to the reply, but does not show that any demurrer was filed to the answer to the counterclaim. On the 11th day of November, 1915, there was filed in the office of the clerk of the said court, an order sustaining appellees' demurrer. This order recites:

> "This case coming on for further hearing upon demurrers of defendants to certain portions of the plaintiff's reply and of the plaintiff's answer to the counterclaim, and the court having heard the arguments of counsel and being fully advised, it is ordered that the said demurrers of the defendants be and the same are hereby sustained."

Apparently, the court's attention was never called to the error in this order, if it be true that no demurrer was ever filed to the answer to the counterclaim. Where a trial court inadvertently enters an order sustaining a demurrer to a pleading to which no demurrer has been filed, it is the duty of counsel to call the court's attention to the error so made, so that the same may be corrected; and where the record on appeal shows that an order was made by the trial court sustaining a demurrer to an answer to a counterclaim, where a demurrer was filed only to the reply, the court will not consider an assignment of error based upon such order in so far as the answer to the counterclaim is concerned, where such mistake was not called to the attention of the trial court.

[3] The last point urged is that the court erred in denying plaintiff's motion to adjudge in default for failure to answer the city of Socorro, George Parker, and other owners and unknown owners of any water bonds of the city of Socorro issued April 1, 1887. Parker and the city of Socorro were made parties defendants and other owners of bonds whose names were unknown to plaintiff were designated as defendants, as "all other owners and unknown owners of any municipal bonds of the city of Socorro, state of New Mexico, issued April 1, 1887, payable to bearer, and known as water bonds of the city of Socorro." The city of Socorro was personally served, but failed to appear. Constructive service was had upon Parker and unknown owners. After the proofs were heard in the case and on the same day that the court found the entire issue of bonds to be legal, valid, and subsisting obligations of the city, appellant applied to the court for a default judgment against the city of Socorro, Parker, and unknown owners. The application was denied.

Appellant apparently does not contend that the court erred in overruling this motion, in so far as the city of Socorro is concerned, but contents himself by attempting to show that constructive service on the remaining bondholders was valid, and warranted a default judgment against them. No argument is required to demonstrate the unsoundness of this contention, further than to call attention to two decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. In the case of Town of Brooklyn v. Ætna Life Insurance Company, 99 U. S. 362, 57 L. Ed. 416, the plaintiff, the Life Insurance Company, instituted suit against the town of Brooklyn on certain interest coupons issued in the name of the town of Brooklyn, Ill. The town answered, and in its fifth plea, averred that, by a decree of the circuit court of Lee county, Ill., rendered November 14, 1873, in the action of the Town of Brooklyn and others against the Chicago & Rock River Railroad Company and others:

> "'It was ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said pretended bonds and coupons of the said town of Brooklyn, so issued to the said Chicago & Rock River Railroad Company, and registered as aforesaid in the office of the auditor of public accounts of Illinois, are void and in no wise obligatory on the said town of Brooklyn, and that the same be surrendered up by the parties holding the same to be canceled,' which decree it is averred is in full force and effect; that the said insurance company was made defendant in such suit with the other holders and owners of the bonds and coupons issued by the town, by the name and description of 'The unknown owners of certain bonds and coupons issued by Washington J. Griffin, the supervisor of the town of Brooklyn, Lee county, Illinois, to the Chicago & Rock River Railroad Company, purporting to be the bonds and coupons of said town of Brooklyn.'"

And it was further alleged that the said circuit court of Lee county then and there had jurisdiction of the person or parties defendant therein, by the issuing and return of process, and by proof of publication made as required by the statute of the state of Illinois in the case of nonresident defendants. In considering this plea the Supreme Court of the United States said:

> "The suit commenced and determined in the circuit court of Lee county was a proceeding wholly in presonam, against the holders and owners of bonds and coupons which had been issued in the name of the town, and delivered to the railroad company. Upon principle and authority, no decree therein rendered could bind any one not personally served with process, or who did not appear. It could not affect the rights of nonresident holders of bonds and coupons, proceeded against by constructive service. Such service, as to them, was ineffective for any purpose whatever. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565, and authorities there cited."

In the case of Township of Empire v. Darlington, 101 U. S. 87, 25 L. Ed. 878, the court held that a decree in an Illinois court, perpetually enjoining taxation to pay railroad aid bonds and declaring them void, did not conclude any bondholders proceeded against as "unknown owners and holders," who were not served with process and did not appear, nor bondholders residing in other states who were proceeded against only by constructive service. Hence we conclude that where a suit is commenced against the holders and owners of bonds and coupons which have been issued by a municipal corporation and delivered to the purchaser or purchasers a taxpayer cannot lawfully secure a default judgment against nonresident owners and holders of such bonds upon constructive service, adjudging said bonds to be invalid.

For the reasons stated the judgment of the trial court will be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑89 — MEETING OF BOARD OF TRUSTEES—NOTICE.

Notice of a special meeting of a city council or board of trustees of a town may be dispensed with, or its necessity waived, by the presence and consent of every one of those entitled to notice.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑109 — ORDINANCES—RECORD.

A statute requiring town ordinances to be recorded in an ordinance book is complied with by copying an ordinance on the typewriter and pasting the sheet of paper upon which it is copied in the ordinance book of such town in such manner as to become a permanent record.

3. INTOXICATING LIQUORS 🔑91 — LICENSE FEE—STATUTE.

Where the Legislature invests a municipality with power to license, regulate or prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquor, such municipality may impose a license fee in any amount, and the fee thus fixed is not open to review by the courts as to its reasonableness or unreasonableness or confiscatory nature.

4. STATUTES ⚿64(1)—PARTIAL UNCONSTITUTIONALITY—EFFECT.

A part of a law may be unconstitutional and the remainder of it valid, where the objectionable part may be properly separated from the other without impairing the force and effect of the portion which remains, and where the legislative purpose, as expressed in such valid portion, can be accomplished and given effect, independently of the void provision, and where if the entire act is taken into consideration it cannot be said that the enacting power would not have passed the portion retained had it known that the void provisions would fail.

5. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ⚿112—POWER OF TOWN PROHIBITING USE OF TABLES AND BLINDS.

The use of chairs and tables in a saloon or barroom may be prohibited by a municipality in this state, and likewise such municipality may, by ordinance, prohibit the use of blinds, curtains, or screens, and require a clear view from the street of the bar and room in which liquor is sold.

Appeal from District Court, McKinley County; Raynolds, Judge.

Action for injunction by John Schwartz and others against the Town of Gallup and others. Judgment for defendants dismissing the complaint, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

E. A. Martin, of Gallup, and E. W. Dobson, of Albuquerque, for appellants. Ove E. Overson and A. T. Hannett, both of Gallup, for appellees.

ROBERTS, J. Appellants, on the 10th day of June, 1916, were engaged in the retail liquor business in the town of Gallup, McKinley county, this state. On that date the board of town trustees of said town, at a special meeting enacted Ordinances Nos. 85 and 88. The second section of Ordinance 85, with which only we are concerned in this case, provided that on and after the 1st day of July, 1916, retail liquor dealers should pay the town of Gallup a license fee of $1,500 per annum, payable semiannually in advance. The last clause of this section further provided that all drug stores should be considered retail dealers under this section, when selling or offering for sale liquors as above provided, except under a doctor's prescription. Prior to the passage of this ordinance the license fee exacted from retail liquor dealers was $300 per annum.

Ordinance No. 88 required saloons to close at 12 o'clock midnight and to remain closed until 6 o'clock in the morning of any day, and to also close at 12 o'clock midnight of Saturday of one week and remain closed until 6 o'clock a. m. on the following Monday. The ordinance further prohibited any billiard or pool tables, chairs, tables, benches, or other furniture in any room where intoxicating liquor was sold. Winerooms were also prohibited, and likewise the use of curtains, screens, or other obstructions in the doors and windows in the lower story so that a clear and unobstructed view of the entire premises might be had from the outside. The ordinance further forbade the letting of any person into a saloon between the hour of 12 o'clock midnight Saturday night and the hour of 6 o'clock Monday morning following. Penalties were prescribed for violation of the ordinance.

On the 29th day of June, 1916, appellants filed in the district court of McKinley county their complaint, in which they sought an injunction against the town of Gallup, its officers, agents, and servants, from attempting to enforce the provisions of the two ordinances in question. In the complaint it was alleged that the appellants had been engaged in the retail liquor business in said town for some time, and had invested large sums of money in the purchase of furniture and fixtures, and had entered into contracts and leases for buildings in furtherance of their several businesses, that each and all were the holders of license of the United States government and of the state of New Mexico, authorizing them to engage in the liquor business, and that Ordinance No. 85, which fixed the license fee at $1,500, was unjust, unreasonable, oppressive, confiscatory, and prohibitive, and that such ordinance was an attempt to levy a tax upon said business in order to raise a revenue therefrom for the general purposes of said town. It was alleged that Ordinance No. 88 was discriminatory and a denial of equal protection of the law to retail liquor dealers in said town, and that under the provisions of said Ordinance No. 88 all retail liquor dealers doing business in said town were prohibited from having in their places of business any chairs, tables, pool tables, or other furniture, save and except the necessary bar and back bar, and were prohibited from having any screens, doors, curtains, or other obstructions in the front of their several places of business or in the windows or doors thereof; whereas, under the provisions of Ordinance No. 85, all drug stores within said town were, upon the payment of the license fee exacted from liquor dealers, permitted to conduct a retail liquor house without any restrictions as to tables, chairs, curtains, etc., so that an unjust and unfair discrimination existed under said ordinance between open saloons and secret tippling places under the guise of drug stores. The complaint set forth further grounds wherein it was claimed that said ordinances discriminated against saloon keepers and in favor of drug stores engaged in the sale of liquor.

It was further alleged that neither of said ordinances was passed at any regular meeting of the board of town trustees, but were pretended to have been passed at a special meeting held June 10, 1916, and that said ordinances were not properly passed, and that said meeting was not lawfully held, no notice having been given as required by the ordinance of said town.

Appellees interposed a demurrer to the complaint which was overruled by the court, whereupon they answered admitting the passage of the ordinance in question, and alleged that they were duly and legally enacted and denied the other material allegations of the complaint. Thereafter the record evidence, showing the enactment of the ordinances in question, was submitted to the court, and later the cause was set for hearing upon the merits. When the case was called for hearing appellees filed a motion for judgment on the ground that plaintiff's complaint set up no facts which entitled them to relief in equity. This motion was sustained by the court, and judgment was entered dismissing the complaint. From this judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

[1, 2] The first point urged by appellants is that Ordinances 85 and 88 were not lawfully adopted and passed by the board of trustees of the town of Gallup for two reasons: First, that Ordinance No. 4 of said town required that, whenever a special meeting of the board of trustees was deemed necessary, such meeting might be called by the chairman of the board and two members of the board, and that a written notice of the time and place of such meeting should be given to each and every member of the board, which notice was required to be served at least two hours previous to the time at which such special meeting was called to meet, which provisions were not complied with in calling and holding the special session at which said ordinances were enacted. The second point urged is that the ordinances in question were not recorded in the book which was kept for such purpose, but that said ordinances were merely pasted in at one end, and not recorded as required by the ordinance of said town.

There is no merit in either contention stated. Every member of the board of trustees and the president were present, consented to, and participated in the meeting. Notice of a special meeting of a city council or board of trustees of a town may be dispensed with, or its necessity waived, by the presence and consent of every one of those entitled to notice. Dillon on Municipal Corporations (5th Ed.) § 534. Many authorities are cited by the author in support of this proposition, and further discussion is unnecessary.

As to the second contention, it appears, and is not disputed by appellants, that the ordinances in question were typewritten on sheets of paper and pasted in a book kept for the purpose of recording the ordinances of said town. It is thus evident that the statute requiring town ordinances to be recorded has been complied with.

[3] The lower court held that, since the statutes of the state confer power upon the boards of trustees of towns "to license, regulate, or prohibit" the liquor traffic within the municipal boundaries, therefore the manner or extent to which the town authorities carried out this power was not subject to review by the courts as to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the enactment, or as to whether or not there had been any abuse of discretion or an arbitrary and oppressive use of the town's authority. Appellants contend that they were entitled to offer proof as to the unreasonable and confiscatory character of the ordinance, and if they succeeded in establishing such facts were entitled to judgment.

The statute under which these ordinances were enacted is found in chapter 28 of the Session Laws of 1915. This statute was originally subdivision 18 of section 3564, Code 1915, but was repealed and re-enacted, in so far as material to the issues in question, in 1915, as above stated. This statute gives to municipalities the power—> "to have the right to license, regulate, or prohibit the selling or giving away of any intoxicating, malt, vinous, mixed or fermented liquor, within the limits of the city or town, the license not to extend beyond the municipal year in which it shall be granted, and to determine the amount to be paid for such license."

Appellants cite many authorities holding that under a power conferred upon a municipality by the Legislature to "license or regulate" the sale of intoxicating liquors the courts will determine the question as to whether an ordinance enacted under such power is reasonable or unreasonable, and that in such cases the courts will hear proof as to the cost of issuing the licenses, the expense of police protection, and other increased expenses of the municipality or community caused by the traffic in intoxicating liquors and that under such a power granted it is not competent for a municipality to fix the license fee at such an amount as will result in prohibition of the traffic. Among the many authorities cited are the following: Ex parte J. D. Sikes, 102 Ala. 173, 15 South. 522, 24 L. R. A. 774, 775; McQuillin on Municipal Corporations, vol. 3, § 1002; Elk Point v. Vaughn, 1 Dak. 113, 46 N. W. 577; Perdue v. Ellis, 18 Ga. 586; Wiley v. Owens, 39 Ind. 429; Sweet v. City of Wabash, 41 Ind. 7; Town of Marion v. Chandler, 6 Ala. 899; Ex parte Burnett, 30 Ala. 461.

But it is to be observed that the power given to municipalities in this state is much broader and more comprehensive than the power granted to the municipalities which enacted the ordinances construed in the foregoing cases. Here the Legislature has seen fit and proper to delegate to municipal corporations the power to "license, regulate, or prohibit" altogether the traffic in intoxicating liquors in such municipalities. Concededly, had the Legislature of the state enacted a law which required retail liquor dealers in towns having a population that the town in question has to pay a license fee in the sum fixed by the ordinance in question, or in any other sum which it saw proper to exact, no question could be raised as to the confiscatory nature of such law or as to its reasonableness or unreasonableness. It has always been conceded by the courts and lawwriters, at least for many years, that the lawmaking power of the various states has plenary and unlimited control over the liquor business, and that this business, characterized by the courts and law writers as "hurtful to public morals, productive of disorder and injurious to the public," may be arbitrarily dealt with by the lawmaking power of the states or prohibited altogether. This being true, if the town board of Gallup had the power delegated to it by the state to enact the ordinances in question and was given unlimited and arbitrary control over the liquor business, then no question of the reasonableness or unreasonableness of an ordinance enacted under such power would be open to inquiry in the courts.

As the town board had the power, under the statute in question, to prohibit altogether the traffic in intoxicating liquors in such town, appellants cannot complain of the exercise by the town board of a right within the power delegated; in other words, the town having the power to license or prohibit, appellants cannot complain of the enactment of an ordinance fixing a license fee at any amount which the board may choose to exact, even though such fee may, as alleged, amount to total or partial prohibition.

The only statute similar to the one in question which we have been able to find which has been construed by the courts was chapter 24, Rev. St. Ill. 1884, providing for the incorporation of cities and towns. Subsection 46 in section 1 of article 5 of that chapter, in so far as material, read as follows:

> "To license, regulate and prohibit the selling or giving away of any intoxicating, malt, vinous, mixed or fermented liquor, the license not to extend beyond the municipal year in which it shall be granted, and to determine the amount to be paid for such license."

In the case of Dennehy v. City of Chicago, 120 Ill. 627, 12 N. E. 227, the same questions were raised as are here involved. The court said:

> "The amount charged for the license is not a tax, but a burden imposed as the price of a privilege which those controlling the municipality were at liberty to restrict as they pleased, or to deny altogether. People v. Thurber, 13 Ill. 554; East St. Louis v. Wehrung, 46 Ill. 392; East St. Louis v. Trustees, 102 Ill. 489 [40 Am. Rep. 606]. There can therefore be no question of adequacy or excessiveness of the amount charged. See, also, Tenney v. Lenz, 16 Wis. 566, and State v. Cassidy, 22 Minn. 312 [21 Am. Rep. 765]. As was said in Schwuchow v. City of Chicago, 68 Ill. 449: 'This business is, in principle, within the police power of the state, and restrictions which may rightfully be imposed upon it might be obnoxious as an illegal restraint of trade when applied to other pursuits.'"

In 23 Cyc. 149, it is said:

> "The Legislature of a state, having unlimited control over the liquor traffic, may, if it chooses to license the business, fix the amount of the license fee at any sum in its absolute discretion, and no one can complain that the amount so fixed is excessive or prohibitive; and the same rule applies in the case of a municipal corporation which by its character or a general statute possesses full control over the traffic. But if a municipality is given authority only to license the business, not to prohibit or suppress it altogether, its discretion as to the amount of the fee to be charged is limited, and an ordinance fixing such a fee as would be unreasonably great or practically prohibitory would be invalid."

Section 276 of Woollen & Thornton on Intoxicating Liquors reads as follows:

> "Power to prohibit includes power to license. It has been said that under the police power license fees may be imposed: (1) For regulation; (2) for revenue; (3) to give monopolies; (4) for prohibition. The fourth purpose is entirely admissible in the case of pursuits or indulgences which in their general effect are believed to be more harmful than beneficial to society, and that it is often found that prohibition of an occupation which excites or gratifies the vices or passions of large numbers of people is met by a resistance so steady and powerful as to render the law wholly ineffectual, when a heavy tax might lessen the evils and possibly in the end make the occupation unprofitable."
> "Where a municipal corporation has power to prohibit the doing of a thing, and also a power to license the same thing to be done, the license fee demanded by the ordinance for the doing of such thing is not a tax, but is a price paid for the privilege of doing such thing." McQuillin on Municipal Corporations, vol. 3, § 992.

Nothing would be gained by a further discussion of this point. The ordinance in question was within the power granted by the Legislature; hence it is not within the province of the courts to pass upon the questions raised by appellants.

[4] Relative to appellants' contention that the city council had not power to authorize the selling of intoxicating liquors by drug stores for purposes other than medicinal, mechanical, and scientific, it is sufficient to say that, even though this portion of the ordinance were null and void, it would not affect the remainder of the ordinance. A part of the law may be unconstitutional and the remainder of it valid, where the objectionable part may be properly separated from the other without impairing the force and effect of the portion which remains, and where the legislative purpose as expressed in such valid portion can be accomplished and given effect, independently of the void provisions, and where if the entire act is taken into consideration it cannot be said that the enacting power would not have passed the portion retained had it known that the void provisions must fail. State v. Brooken, 19 N. M. 404, 143 Pac. 479, L. R.

A. 1915B, 213, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 136. Further appellants concede that the provisions of this ordinance relative to the licensing of drug stores has been repealed by the board of trustees.

[5] Nor is there merit in the objection urged to the provisions of Ordinance 88, which required the removal of blinds, screens, etc., so that an unobstructed view might be had of the interior of the room wherein liquor is sold, and the provisions of the ordinance relative to hours of closing and prohibiting the maintaining of chairs, tables, pool tables, etc., inside of such room. In section 215, Woollen & Thornton on Intoxicating Liquors, it is said:

> "The use of chairs and tables in a barroom or saloon may be forbidden, and a municipality may adopt an ordinance to this effect."

While there is some divergence of opinion as to the validity of an ordinance requiring the removal from saloons of screens, etc., we are of the opinion that the better reasoned cases support the view that the municipality has the power to prohibit screens and curtains during business hours, and that such an ordinance is the valid and reasonable exercise of the power to regulate. Dillon on Municipal Corporations, § 674.

From the foregoing it follows that the trial court properly sustained the appellees' motion for judgment, and the case will therefore be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

KING v. OREGON SHORT LINE R. CO.

APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑753(1)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—ABSENCE FROM ABSTRACT.

Where the abstract on appeal contains no assignments of error and the complaint states a cause of action, questions discussed in appellant's brief will not be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3086, 3087.]

In Banc. Appeal from Circuit Court, Malheur County; Dalton Biggs, Judge.

Action by Arthur S. King against the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

This is an action brought to recover the value of a cow alleged to have been killed by the defendant's negligence. The action was brought originally in a justice court in Malheur county. The defendant took the case on appeal to the circuit court, where the case was tried de novo and a verdict was recovered by plaintiff for $75, interest, and costs. Defendant appeals from a judgment entered on this verdict.

Geo. H. Smith, of Salt Lake City, Utah, H. B. Thompson, of Pocatello, Idaho, and William E. Lees, of Ontario, Or., for appellant. Leslie J. Aker, of Ontario, Or., for respondent.

McCAMANT, J. Plaintiff calls attention to the absence of assignments of error in the abstract on appeal. Under the authority of Salene v. Isherwood, 74 Or. 35, 39, 144 Pac. 1175, and Dundas v. Grand View Land Co., 79 Or. 379, 380, 155 Pac. 365, this condition of the record precludes the consideration of the questions discussed in appellant's brief. We find that the complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

The judgment is affirmed.

NOBLE v. WATROUS, et al.

1. TAXATION 🔑421(9) — ASSESSMENT — DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.

2 Hill's Ann. Laws 1892, § 2774, providing that it should be sufficient to describe lands in all proceedings relative to assessing them for taxes by initial letters, abbreviations, and figures to designate the township, range, section, or part of a section, did not authorize the use of the exponents ^{2} and ^{4} to designate half and quarter sections, though thereunder the initial letters "N. E." would be accepted as the equivalent of northeast, "Sec." as section, and the figures ¼ as one-fourth.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑643(1)—SUPPLEMENTAL RECORD—FILING AFTER DECISION.

Leave to file a supplemental record to correct an error in the transcript on file will not be granted, after the case has been decided and a petition for rehearing has been filed, where it could not lead to any different determination of the appeal.

3. TAXATION 🔑788(3) — TAX DEED — PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF.

Under B. & C. Comp. § 3127, providing for the issuance of a deed to the purchaser at a tax sale, and that such deed shall be prima facie evidence of certain facts as to the assessment and sale, such presumptions of regularity attach only to a deed in favor of the purchaser, and do not attach in favor of a deed to an assignee of the certificate of sale.

4. TAXATION 🔑627—DELINQUENT TAX ROLL—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.

That a delinquent tax roll did not show whether the range in which the property lay was east or west was a fatal defect.

5. TAXATION 🔑656—TAX SALE—TIME OF SALE.

Under 2 Hill's Ann. Laws 1892, § 2814, requiring the warrant for the collection of delinquent taxes to be issued within 10 days after the first Monday in April, and to be returnable on the first Monday in July, section 2815, under which the warrant, when issued, had the force and effect of an execution, and section 278, under which the life of an execution, unless prolonged in some way, was 60 days, where a warrant was not issued until July 27th, and the sale did not take place until November 29th, the warrant was functus officio, and the sale thereunder was void.

Department 2. Appeal from Circuit Court, Washington County; Henry L. Benson, Judge.

On petition for rehearing. Petition denied.
For former opinion, see 163 Pac. 310.

Wood, Montague & Hunt, of Portland, and John M. Wall, of Hillsboro, for appellant. E. B. Tongue and Thomas H. Tongue, both of Hillsboro, for respondents.

McCAMANT, J. A petition for rehearing has been filed by the defendant Bacon, and we have re-examined the questions involved in this case. The petition calls our attention to the cases of Oregon Co. v. Umatilla County, 47 Or. 198, 81 Pac. 352, and Martin v. White, 53 Or. 319, 100 Pac. 290. In each of these cases the record shows an assessment in which quarter sections are undertaken to be indicated by the exponent ^{4}, and half sections by the exponent ^{2}. The former of these cases was an attack by writ of review upon an order of the county court of Umatilla county levying a tax on the property of plaintiff. On page 208 of the opinion the court suggested that the description was not as certain and definite as it should be, and that it was probably not sufficient to support a title acquired at a tax sale. In the case of Martin v. White the description was held to be insufficient on other grounds. Neither of these authorities tends to support the sufficiency of the descriptions referred to in the former opinion.

[1] Our attention is directed to section 2774 of Hill's Code, which was in force when the assessments were made on which the tax title is based. This section is as follows:

> "It shall be sufficient to describe lands, in all proceedings relative to assessing, advertising, or selling the same for taxes, by initial letters, abbreviations, and figures to designate the township, range, section, or part of a section, and also the number of the lots and blocks."

Under this statute the initial letters "N. E." may be accepted as the equivalent of northeast, and "Sec.," as a satisfactory abbreviation of section. It is not necessary to spell out one-fourth; the figures ¼ are a sufficient designation. This is as far as the statute goes. In his petition for a rehearing the defendant Bacon cites many authorities to sustain his contention that the description in question is sufficient. Atkins v. Hinman, 7 Ill. (2 Gilman) 437, is the only one of them which involved a description in which a quarter section was designated by the figure four. While the description in that case was upheld as sufficient, the attention of the court was not directed to this point; the attack being based on other grounds. We have found no case in which a court has squarely decided that such a description is sufficient. The text-books pronounce it fatally defective for purposes of assessment and taxation. For additional authorities to this effect see Keith v. Hayden, 26 Minn. 212, 2 N. W. 495; Turner v. Hand County, 11 S. D. 348, 77 N. W. 589; Stokes v. Allen, 15 S. D. 421, 89 N. W. 1023; Moran v. Thomas, 19 S. D. 469, 104 N. W. 212.

[2] The petition states that the original assessment roll for the year 1896 does not describe the property in the manner indicated in the opinion, and leave is asked to file a supplemental record here to correct the error in the transcript on file. It was held in State v. Jennings, 48 Or. 483, 494, 87 Pac. 524, 89 Pac. 421, that the record in this court cannot be corrected after the case has been decided and a petition for rehearing has been filed. The application for correction in that case was made by an appellant. If we shall assume that a different rule should apply in this case, inasmuch as the application is made by a respondent, the application should be denied, because it could not lead to any different determination of the appeal.

[3] When the property in question was sold for the payment of the 1896 taxes, the defendant Watrous was the purchaser. There was no deed issued to him, and the only deed which appears in the record is a deed executed to the defendant Bacon as his assignee after this suit was brought. The statute in force at that time made no provision for such a case. The only tax deed authorized by it was a deed in favor of the purchaser at the tax sale. It has been held that a tax deed issued in favor of a grantee not expressly entitled by the statute to receive it is void. Alexander v. Savage, 90 Ala. 383, 8 South. 93; Capehart v. McGahey, 132 Ala. 334, 31 South. 503; Sanders v. Ransom, 37 Fla. 457, 20 South. 530; Territory v. Perea, 6 N. M. 531, 30 Pac. 928. On the other hand, there is respectable authority that such a deed can issue. 1 Blackwell on Tax Titles (5th Ed.) 632; 37 Cyc. 1423. It is unnecessary in this case to determine the question of law arising on this conflict in the authorities. Under the statute in effect when the deed was made (B. & C. Code, § 3127) the presumptions as to regularity referred to in our former opinion can attach only to a deed in favor of the purchaser. This is the plain language of the statute, and we cannot extend its meaning by construction. Any statute which precludes a party from alleging and proving the truth should be strictly construed, and such construction is called for where, as in this case, a tax title is involved.

[4] In so far as the defendant Bacon relies on the sale for the taxes of 1896, there are no presumptions in his favor, and the burden devolved upon him to show a compliance with the statute in all respects. He has not sustained this burden. It appears affirmatively that the delinquent tax roll does not show whether the range in which the property lies is east or west. This has been held a fatal defect in description. Sears v. Murdock, 59 Or. 211, 213, 117 Pac. 305.

[5] Under section 2814 of Hill's Code, which was in force at the time, the warrant for the collection of delinquent taxes should have issued within 10 days after the first Monday in April, 1897, and should have been returnable on the first Monday in July, 1897. The warrant did not issue until July 27, 1897, and the sale did not take place until November 29, 1897. It has been held that the requirements of the statute as to the time of issuing and returning the warrant are matters of substance, and if the statute is not complied with in these respects the tax title must fail. Shimmin v. Inman, 26 Mo. 228; Pinkham v. Morang, 40 Me. 587; Jenkinson v. Auditor General, 104 Mich. 34, 62 N. W. 163.

Under section 2815 of Hill's Code, the warrant, when issued, had the force and effect of an execution. The life of an execution, unless prolonged in some way not involved here, was 60 days. Hill's Code, § 278. This court has held that a stricter compliance with the law is required in tax sales than in sales under execution. Walton v. Moore, 58 Or. 237, 240, 113 Pac. 58, 114 Pac. 105. It is clear that the warrant under which the property was sold was functus officio on the day of sale. 10 R. C. L. 1269.

The petition for rehearing admits that the designation of the half section by the exponent ^{2}, and the quarter section by the exponent ^{4}, appears in the tax roll for 1896 and in the certificate of sale issued in favor of the defendant Watrous. On all of these grounds we are clear that the tax title must fail.

The title of the defendant Bacon is attacked on still other grounds. There are no dollar marks in the tax roll for 1896. The value of the property is listed as 200 and the tax as 300. These figures are not qualified by decimal marks, or separated by lines, as in the judgment docket involved in De Lashmutt v. Sellwood, 10 Or. 319, 324. It has been held by the federal court for Oregon that this is a fatal defect. Tilton v. Oregon Road, 3 Sawy. 22, 24, Fed. Cas. No. 14,055. And the holding of the California court is to the same effect. Hurlbutt v. Butenop, 27 Cal. 50, 57; People v. San Francisco Union, 31 Cal. 132; Emeric v. Alvarado, 90 Cal. 444, 466-467, 27 Pac. 356. These decisions have been somewhat criticized, and it is not necessary in deciding this case to determine whether the principle they announce is the law. The title of the defendant Bacon is doubtful on this latter ground, and clearly bad on the other grounds above noted.

The petition for rehearing strongly emphasizes the circumstances alluded to in the concluding portion of our former opinion. The position of the defendant Bacon is indeed one of hardship, but it is the province of the court to declare the law. Under the law plaintiff is entitled to prevail, and we are obliged to enter a decree as outlined in our former opinion.

1. INJUNCTION ⇨35(2)—SUIT TO RESTRAIN TRESPASS—TITLE OR POSSESSION TO SUPPORT SUIT.

In a suit to enjoin trespass, prior possession of the premises constitutes prima facie evidence and affords sufficient strength of the plaintiff's title to entitle him to relief against a mere trespasser who entered without right.

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⇨151—APPROPRIATION—ABANDONMENT.

Under L. O. L. § 5136, declaring that ditches and mining flumes permanently affixed to the soil are real estate, provided that, when the owner shall cease to operate or exercise ownership for a period of five years, or shall remove from the state with the intent to change residence, and shall remain absent one year without using or exercising ownership, he shall be deemed to have lost all interest therein which was, impliedly, amended in respect to the period of limitation by L. O. L. § 6571, providing that the right to appropriate water may be lost by abandonment, and that by failure or neglect to use same for a period of two years such water shall revert to the public and be subject to other appropriation, but the question of abandonment shall be one of fact to be tried and determined as to the questions of fact, where there was no evidence to explain or excuse the delay of a mining corporation for more than two years to use its ditch or flume or water thereby conducted, the corporation had abandoned its appropriation, and its trustee in bankruptcy could convey no right to defendants, who in entering such property were trespassers upon the property of plaintiff, who was in actual possession after appropriation, and further trespasses by defendants will be enjoined.

Suit for injunction by the Camp Carson Mining & Power Company, Incorporated, against Miles Stephenson and another. From a decree dismissing the suit, the plaintiff appeals. Decree of lower court reversed, and decree entered for plaintiff.

This is a suit to enjoin trespasses upon real property. The complaint states, in effect, that the plaintiff, Camp Carson Mining & Power Company, is an Oregon corporation, and the owner and entitled to and in the possession of a group of placer mining claims, containing 1,440 acres of unpatented land, in Union county, Or., commonly known as the Camp Carson Mines, of which tract 290 acres are particularly described; that it is the owner of the right to use all the water of the Grande Ronde river, diverted at a point on the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 23 in township 6 south of range 36 east of the Willamette meridian, and conducted in a ditch and flume to a point near the center of section 15, in that township and range, where it is and for a long time has been used in operating mines; that the defendants, M. A. Stephenson and H. W. ReDell, in the fall of 1914 unlawfully tore down a house belonging to the plaintiff and converted the lumber to their own use; that on April 15, 1915, they unlawfully cut the dam, whereby the water was diverted from the river into the ditch and flume referred to, and converted the lumber in the flume to their own use; that they unlawfully cut a ditch across a road owned by the plaintiff, and threaten to continue such trespasses. The answer controverts the material averments of the complaint, and alleges, in effect, that the house referred to stood on their mining ground; that they were the owners of the ditch and flume mentioned, and had the legal right to intermeddle therewith and to remove the lumber therefrom; and that the ditch which interfered with the road was dug on their own mining land, and the excavation was covered with a bridge. The reply put in issue the allegations of new matter in the answer, whereupon the cause was tried, resulting in a decree dismissing the suit, and the plaintiff appeals.

Turner Oliver, of La Grande, for appellant.
J. D. Slater, of La Grande, for respondents.

MOORE, J. (after stating the facts as above). The evidence shows that on October 18, 1907, the Indiana Mining Company, an Oregon corporation, duly appropriated from the Grande Ronde river, at a point in the northwest corner of section 23 in township 6 south of range 36 east of the Willamette meridian, about 600 inches of water, miners' measurement, which was conducted northwesterly by means of a ditch and flume and used in section 9 of that township and range in operating a quartz mill on land known as the Golden Star mine. The Grande Ronde Milling & Power Company, an Oregon corporation, on January 29, 1910, and March 4th of that year, filed amended notices of location of mining claims, showing a selection of 360 acres of land in section 15 and 60 acres in section 10, in the township and range specified, which location seems to conflict with that of the Indiana Mining Company. The latter corporation, on November 1, 1910, executed to Burt German a deed conveying, inter alia:

> "Those certain quartz mining claims known, located, and recorded as the Golden Star, Mayflower, Wallowa, and Leasia, situated on the Grande Ronde river, about one mile above the mouth of Clear creek in what is known as the Camp Carson mining district, in Union county, Or.; * * * also that certain ditch and water right connected therewith, which said ditch taps the Grande Ronde river and diverts water therefrom, on section 9, township 6 south, range 36 east, Willamette meridian, which said ditch and water right is used for power purposes in operating the machinery connected with said mining property."

Burt German and his wife, on November 16, 1910, executed to the Hot Springs Copper Company, an Oregon corporation, a deed conveying to it, inter alia, the property last above described. The latter corporation was on May 22, 1912, duly adjudged to be a bankrupt by consideration of the federal court of Oregon, and W. A. Shoemaker was appointed and duly qualified as trustee for the estate.

August Hug, as sheriff of Union county, Or., on April 29, 1913, by virtue of a decree and order of sale issued in a suit foreclosing miners' liens wherein H. A. Shropshire was plaintiff and the Oregon Mining & Milling Company and the Grande Ronde Mining & Power Company, corporations, were defendants, sold at public auction to that plaintiff the property of the defendants known as the Camp Carson Mines, in sections 4, 5, 9, 10, 15, 16, 21, 22, and 28 in township 6 south of range 36 east of the Willamette meridian.

W. A. Wilson and Frank F. Turner on June 15, 1914, filed a notice of appropriation of 1,000 inches of water, miner's measurement, from Grande Ronde river, to be diverted at the northwest corner of section 23, in that township and range, and conducted by a ditch and flume to a point on Tanner creek near the center of section 15 in such township. The notice contained a clause as follows:

> "And it is the intention of the undersigned to use as far as possible the old Indiana ditch, now abandoned."

H. A. Shropshire on August 12, 1914, executed to H. T. Harvey a deed of all the property so conveyed to him by the sheriff of Union county, Or., particularly describing each tract of land and the water right used in connection therewith. H. T. Harvey and wife, on August 31, 1914, deeded to the Camp Carson Mining & Power Company, the plaintiff herein, all of such property. The plaintiff on September 24, 1914, applied to the state water board of Oregon to appropriate from the Grande Ronde river water to be used on its mining claims and conducted in the ditch and flume constructed by the Indiana Mining Company.

W. A. Wilson and Frank F. Turner on September 30, 1914, executed to the plaintiff a deed transferring all their right to the use of the water of the river which was initiated by the notice given by them June 15th of that year.

W. H. Shoemaker, the trustee in bankruptcy of the Hot Springs Copper Company, pursuant to authority of the referee and in consideration of $50, of which $30 was evidenced by a promissory note, executed to the defendants herein on October 31, 1914, a deed purporting to transfer all the bankrupt's right in and to the ditch and flume constructed by the Indiana Mining Company.

The foregoing comprises a brief statement of the muniments of title of the respective parties which were received in evidence and have been arranged in chronological order. It is maintained by defendants' counsel that the decree rendered in the suit to foreclose the miners' liens and the order of sale issued thereon, whereby the sheriff of Union county, Or., undertook to sell and convey to H. A. Shropshire the mining property described in some of these conveyances, was ineffectual for any purpose, and that, this being so, the plaintiff is not entitled to equitable intervention.

It will be remembered that this is a suit to enjoin alleged trespasses committed upon real property of which the plaintiff was in the undisputed possession, asserting ownership and securing the occupancy thereof by a conveyance of the land, no part of which is claimed by either of the defendants, except 60 acres hereinafter specified. In Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat. 59, 107, 5 L. Ed. 398, it was held that the possession of land by a party claiming it as his own in fee was prima facie evidence of his ownership and seisin of the inheritance. In deciding that case Mr. Justice Story says:

"For the law will never construe a possession tortious unless from necessity. On the other hand, it will consider every possession lawful the commencement and continuance of which is not proved to be wrongful, and this upon the plain principle that every man shall be presumed to act in obedience to his duty until the contrary appears. When, therefore, a naked possession is in proof, unaccompanied by evidence as to its origin, it will be deemed lawful, and coextensive with the right set up by the party."

[1] In a controversy before a judicial tribunal relating to land prior possession of the premises constitutes prima facie evidence and affords sufficient strength of the plaintiff's title to entitle him to relief against a mere trespasser who entered without right. McEwen v. City of Portland, 1 Or. 300; Oregon Ry. & Nav. Co. v. Hertzberg, 26 Or. 216, 37 Pac. 1019; Browning v. Lewis, 39 Or. 11, 64 Pac. 304; Sommer v. Compton, 52 Or. 173, 96 Pac. 124, 1065; Todd v. Pac. Ry. & Nav. Co., 59 Or. 249, 110 Pac. 391, 117 Pac. 300; Carroll v. McLaren, 60 Or. 233, 118 Pac. 1034; Friendly v. Ruff, 61 Or. 42, 120 Pac. 745; Kingsley v. United Rys. Co., 66 Or. 50, 133 Pac. 785; Parker v. Wolf, 69 Or. 446, 138 Pac. 463.

[2] It is unnecessary to consider the decree in the suit to foreclose the miners' liens, pursuant to which possession by mesne conveyances was given to the plaintiff, and, such being the case, it is entitled to maintain this suit against the defendants, whose answer does not controvert such right of possession, except as to 60 acres of mining land.

The testimony shows that the plaintiff, having obtained a deed of the mining claims, immediately commenced cleaning out a part of the old Indiana ditch, beginning at the point of diversion, and about September 30, 1914, or a month before the defendants secured their deed from the trustee in bankruptcy, conducted by means of such ditch and flume water from the Grande Ronde river to a point near the center of section 15, in the township and range mentioned, where the volume was used in operating machinery employed to save the fine gold. The defendants in April, 1915, relying upon the validity of their deed executed by the trustee in bankruptcy, prevented water from flowing into the ditch and removed from the flume forming a part of the conduit lumber, which they took to their mining claims, consisting of 60 acres, thereby precipitating this suit.

The question to be considered is whether or not the Indiana Mining Company had abandoned its right to the ditch and flume, or its grantee the Hot Springs Copper Company had forfeited its right thereto, so that the latter's trustee in bankruptcy had no title or estate in or to the conduit which he could sell or convey. The testimony discloses that the Indiana Mining Company, pursuant to the notice of October 18, 1907, constructed the ditch and flume referred to from the Grande Ronde river northwesterly to its mines, and used the water thus diverted from that stream in operating a quartz mill. The extraction of gold by such means could not have been very profitable for the work ceased in the year 1908, and was never thereafter resumed. Evidently the Indiana Mining Company, in order to protect its interest in the ditch and water right, caused some work to be done on its property after it quit operating the quartz mill. Thomas Loftus in referring thereto testified that in the year 1909 or 1910 he was employed in behalf of that corporation by William Muir:

"Q. And what particular work were you and Mr. Muir doing? A. We fixed up that Indiana ditch and turned water into it. * * * We were just prospecting to see if we couldn't find some trace of a ledge that had been lost, or something like that. * * * Q. How long did Mr. Muir stay there on the ditch? A. Oh, it took quite a while to clean it out all the way, was something like three weeks, and I guess we used it about a week after we got the water."

This witness, referring to some machinery which he saw, testified:

"It was there in the mill."

Alluding to Mr. Muir and to the Indiana Mining Company, Mr. Loftus stated on oath:

"He told me after the machinery was moved out that he wasn't in charge of it any longer; that they dismissed him."

This witness was unable accurately to state in what year he assisted in performing such work, for on cross-examination he testified in respect thereto:

"It might have been 1911. It was along there."

In speaking of the ditch Mr. Loftus stated upon oath:

"It might have been in use in 1910, but no later than that that I know of."

He further testified that the work which Mr. Muir and he rendered was performed in August and September.

John McIlroy testified that the services so performed were furnished in the year 1910, but that in the next year he worked with Mr. Muir 49 days doing assessment work for the Indiana Mining Company, and that the quartz mill was taken away from the mines in the fall of 1911. The defendant M. A. Stephenson corroborates such testimony in respect to the time of removing the machinery.

When it is remembered that the Indiana Mining Company, on November 1, 1910, sold and conveyed to Burt German all its mining claims, water right, mills, machinery, etc., and thereafter, so far as it can be determined from the evidence before us, had no interest in the property, it would seem that Mr. McIlroy and Mr. Stephenson had unintentionally erred in concluding that the last assessment work had been performed on such mining claims in the year 1911. Mr. McIlroy does not state, however, what month during that year he assisted in doing the assessment work for the Indiana Mining Company. No work whatever appears thereafter to have been done on such mining grounds until the plaintiff's agents in September, 1914, took possession of the ditch and flume, and about the 30th of that month turned into such conduit water, which was carried to a point near the center of section 15, in the township and range mentioned, where it was used for mining purposes. Giving to the testimony of Mr. McIlroy full credit as to the year when he assisted in doing such assessment work, a period of three full years had elapsed before any other labor or service was performed or any money or material was furnished in making improvements upon any of the mining property; and, this being so, had the water right together with the ditch and flume been abandoned when plaintiff's agents took possession thereof in September, 1914? As we understand, the decision of the trial court was founded upon the limitation prescribed by section 5136, L. O. L., which reads:

> "Ditches and mining flumes, permanently affixed to the soil, are hereby declared to be real estate: Provided, that whenever any person, company, or corporation, being the owner of any such ditch, flume, and the water right appurtenant thereto, shall cease to operate or exercise ownership over said ditch, flume, or water right, for a period of five years, and every person, company, or corporation who shall remove from this state with the intent or purpose to change his or its residence, and shall remain absent one year without using or exercising ownership over such ditch, flume, or water right, shall be deemed to have lost all title, claim, and interest therein."

This provision is section 9 of a statute enacted October 14, 1898 (Laws Or. 1898, p. 16), and is entitled "An act relating to mining claims," etc. As thus quoted, the language employed was impliedly amended in respect to the period of limitation by section 20 of a statute approved February 18, 1899 (Laws Or. 1899, p. 172), entitled "An Act to provide for the appropriation of water from the lakes and running streams of the state of Oregon for the purpose of developing the mineral resources of the state and for other purposes," etc., which provisions are incorporated in section 6571, L. O. L., and read:

> "The right to appropriate water hereby granted may be lost by abandonment; and if any persons, companies, or corporations constructing a ditch, canal, flume, or pipe line under the provisions of this act shall fail or neglect to use the same for a period of two years at any time, it shall be taken and deemed to have abandoned its appropriation, and the water appropriated shall revert to the public and be subject to other appropriations in order of priority; but the question of abandonment shall be one of fact, to be tried and determined as other questions of fact."

In Pringle Falls Power Co. v. Patterson, 65 Or. 474, 486, 132 Pac. 527, 529, Mr. Justice Bean, adverting to the appropriation of water to a beneficial use and referring to the section of the statute last set forth and to the limitation thus prescribed, says:

> "Such right may be extinguished by any act showing an intent to surrender or abandon the right, after which, if the person having the right ceases its use for the statutory period for abandonment, his interest is lost."

If the clause of section 6571, L. O. L., "But the question of abandonment shall be one of fact, to be tried and determined as other questions of fact," be construed as creating only a disputable presumption, no testimony was given at the trial tending in any manner to explain or excuse the delay of the Indiana Mining Company or its grantee, the Hot Springs Copper Company, for more than two years in using the ditch, flume, or water thereby conducted; and hence the latter corporation had abandoned its appropriation, and its trustee in bankruptcy conveyed no right to the defendants, who were and are trespassers upon the plaintiff's real property.

The evidence shows that a part of the mineral lands described in the complaint, to wit, the south half of the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter, the south half of the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter, and the west half of the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 10, in township 6 south of range 36 east of the Willamette meridian, containing 60 acres, was located by the defendants, and that the house which they tore down and removed the lumber therein to their claims stood upon such disputed tract. No testimony was offered tending to show which party had the superior right to this particular 60 acres of land, so that if the lumber had not been taken by the defendants no injunction would be issued to restrain the removal of such material because of a failure to establish a pre-existing right.

The alleged interference by the defendants with the road was only temporary, and, as disclosed by the testimony, they have built a bridge across the way, the travel along which was interrupted by the excavation of a ditch.

The decree will therefore be reversed, and one entered here enjoining each of the defendants, his agents and servants, from interfering in any manner with the diversion of the waters of the Grande Ronde river at the point stated in the complaint or with the flow of the specified volume in the Indiana ditch or flume to the center of section 15, in the township and range specified, and from trespassing upon the plaintiff's premises, the right to the possession of which is undisputed.

McCAMANT and BEAN, JJ., took no part in the consideration of this case.

ROETHLER et al. v. CUMMINGS.

1. Justices of the Peace ⇨203—Writ of Review—Waiver of Service of Writ.

Where defendant's counsel appeared at hearing in circuit court of writ of review proceedings to set aside justice's judgment, the justice having voluntarily made a full return of the writ by prearrangement between counsel, and filed brief and made argument, defendant's appearance was a general one, and service of the writ was waived in view of L. O. L. § 63, providing that a voluntary appearance shall be equivalent to personal service.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 790, 791.]

2. Appearance ⇨9(1)—Presumption—General or Special.

Where the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter, defendant's appearance will be presumed to have been general, where the record fails to show that it was special.

3. Appearance ⇨24(5)—What Constitutes—Statute.

L. O. L. § 63, providing that defendant's voluntary appearance shall be equivalent to personal service of summons, is not limited to appearance by answer, demurrer, or notice specified in section 542, as constituting appearance, since the defendant may submit himself to the court's jurisdiction in other ways; the purpose of the latter section being to define what shall be construed such an appearance as will entitle defendant to be heard as a matter of right and to entitle him to service of papers.

4. Appearance ⇨3—By Attorney—Effect of Unauthorized Appearance.

Where defendant admits right of an attorney to appear for him, and the attorney has been heard in behalf of his client, the latter is not in a favorable position to claim that appearance was unauthorized.

5. Certiorari ⇨49—Writ of Review—Pleading.

In proceeding for writ of review, defendant's only pleading is a return to the writ.

6. Justices of the Peace ⇨202(2)—Writ of Review—Sufficiency of Petition.

Petition for writ of review alleging want of service of justice's summons, and no appearance by defendants, held sufficient to challenge the jurisdiction of the circuit court to render judgment thereon.

7. Certiorari ⇨64(1) — Writ of Review—Questions Presented.

A writ of review presents questions of law alone arising on the record of the inferior tribunal.

8. Certiorari ⇨56(2) — Writ of Review — Contradiction of Record.

The record of the inferior tribunal brought up on writ of review cannot be contradicted on re-examination by the reviewing court, although incorrect.

9. Appearance ⇨9(7), 24(5) — Service of Process—Waiver of Objection.

Where attached property was released on defendant's bond as provided by L. O. L. § 310, defendant's application therefor was a general appearance, gave the court personal jurisdiction instead of jurisdiction in rem, and waived irregularities in service of process.

10. Appearance ⇨9(1)—Nature of.

The character of an appearance as general or special does not depend upon the form of the procedure but upon its substance and the relief sought.

In Banc. Appeal from Circuit Court, Baker County; Gustav Anderson, Judge.

Proceeding for writ of review by Amos Roethler and another against H. J. Cummings, to set aside judgment of justice court. Writ sustained by circuit court, and defendant appeals. Reversed and writ dismissed.

This is a proceeding for a writ of review to set aside the judgment of the justice's court in an action wherein H. J. Cummings was plaintiff and Amos Roethler and David Lee were defendants. The writ was sustained by the circuit court, and defendant Cummings appeals.

O. B. Mount, of Baker, for appellant. James H. Nichols, of Baker, for respondents.

BEAN, J. [1] The first error assigned for consideration upon this appeal is that there was no service of the writ. It appears, however, that by prearrangement made between counsel for the respective parties the justice of the peace voluntarily made a full return to the writ, and counsel for defendant Cummings appeared at the hearing, filed a written brief, and made an argument in the circuit court. The service of the writ was therefore waived by defendant. Section 63, L. O. L., provides that:

> "From the time of the service of the summons, or the allowance of a provisional remedy, the court shall be deemed to have acquired jurisdiction, and to have control of all the subsequent proceedings. A voluntary appearance of the defendant shall be equivalent to personal service of the summons upon him."

[2, 3] In a case where the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter the appearance by the defendant will be presumed to have been general, where the record fails to show that such appearance was special. Godfrey v. Douglas County, 28 Or. 446, 453, 43 Pac. 171. Section 542, L. O. L., is as follows:

> "A defendant appears in an action or suit when he answers, demurs, or gives the plaintiff written notice of his appearance, and until he does so appear he shall not be heard in such action or suit, or in any proceeding pertaining thereto, except the giving of the undertakings allowed to the defendant in the provisional remedies of arrest, attachment, and the delivery of personal property. When the defendant has not appeared, notice of a motion or other proceeding need not be served upon him, unless he be imprisoned for want of bail, or unless directed by the court or judge thereof in pursuance of this Code."

It has been held that the voluntary appearance mentioned in section 63 is not limited nor defined by the terms of this section, as one may appear and submit himself to the jurisdiction of the court without either answering, demurring, or giving the plaintiff a written notice of his appearance; that the purpose of this section is to define what shall be construed such an appearance as will entitle a defendant to be heard as a matter of right, and to have served on him all papers which the law requires to be served. See Belknap v. Charlton, 25 Or. 41, 44, 34 Pac. 758; Kinkade v. Myers, 17 Or. 471, 21 Pac. 557; Multnomah Lumber Co. v. Weston Basket Co., 54 Or. 22, 26, 99 Pac. 1046, 102 Pac. 1.

[4] Where the right of an attorney to appear for a defendant is conceded and the former has been heard in behalf of his client, pursuant to his authority, the latter is not in a favorable position to claim that the appearance was not authorized. He should not be permitted to take advantage of an informality which his adversary has not exacted in the matter of giving written notice of appearance. Carter v. Koshland, 12 Or. 492, 8 Pac. 556.

[5] In a proceeding for a writ of review the only pleading on the part of defendants is a return to the writ. Gaston v. Portland, 48 Or. 82, 85, 84 Pac. 1040. It is not essential that any motion or formal plea be filed by the defendant in order to defend against the writ. In the case at bar defendant Cummings had a full hearing in the circuit court and all the advantage of his "day in court." His appearance was a general one, and he is bound by the determination in the cause. If there was any error in the circuit court so proceeding with the hearing, it was invited by defendant, and he cannot complain.

[6] The second error alleged is that the petition for the writ is insufficient. It alleges inter alia that the complaint and summons in the action in the justice's court were never served upon either of the defendants, and that there was no answer filed nor any appearance on behalf of either of them; also that no application or motion to set aside the judgment was ever prepared or filed, as appears from the docket entries of the justice's court. The petition is sufficient to challenge the jurisdiction of that court to render the judgment therein. It is therefore necessary to examine the return to the writ which discloses the procedure in the justice's court as follows: On August 28, 1916, a complaint was filed, summons issued, an affidavit and undertaking for an attachment were filed, and a writ of attachment issued. On August 30th, Amos Roethler personally appeared, and a bond with two sureties was filed for a release of the sheep under attachment in the action and a notice to the keeper of the property of such release was issued to defendant Roethler. On September 6, 1916, a default judgment for $219.35 was entered which, when corrected, was against the partnership of Amos Roethler and David Lee, and Amos Roethler personally, and an execution was ordered against the defendant "and their bondsmen." The docket of the justice's court also recites the following:

> "Application to file motion to set aside judgment and vacate order of default received from James H. Nichols, attorney for defendants, September 7, 1916.
> "Application to file motion to set aside judgment and vacate order of default, denied, September 30, 1916."

Section 2417, L. O. L., directs that:

> "Actions at law in justices' courts shall be commenced and prosecuted to final determination, and judgment enforced therein, in the manner provided in the Code of Civil Procedure for similar actions in courts of record, except as in this act otherwise provided. * * *"

[7, 8] A writ of review presents questions of law alone arising on the record of the inferior tribunal, and such record, though incorrect, cannot be contradicted on re-examination by the reviewing court. Curran v. State, 53 Or. 154, 99 Pac. 420; Raper v. Dunn, 53 Or. 203, 99 Pac. 889; Gue v. City of Eugene, 53 Or. 282, 100 Pac. 254; Evans v. Marvin, 76 Or. 540, 550, 148 Pac. 1119.

[9, 10] Section 310, L. O. L., provides, in effect, that whenever the defendant shall have appeared in the action, he may apply, upon notice to the plaintiff, to the court or judge or clerk where the action is pending, for an order to discharge the attachment upon the execution of the undertaking mentioned in section 311; and if the application is allowed, the property shall be released from the attachment and delivered to the defendant. The undertaking required is to the effect "that the sureties will pay to the plaintiff the amount of the judgment that may be recovered against the defendant in the action." Such an instrument was delivered to the justice's court upon an application of the defendants to discharge the attachment in the proceedings in question and obligated the sureties to pay any judgment that might be rendered against the defendants. Based thereon the property of the defendants was released from the attachment. Such a procedure bound them to enter an appearance as contemplated by section 310, L. O. L., or be proceeded against as in case of personal service. Unlike the undertaking for a redelivery or forthcoming bond provided for in section 305, to be given to the attaching officer, the application to discharge the attachment invokes the judgment of the court upon a matter which presupposes and acknowledges the jurisdiction of such tribunal, or asks for relief which can be granted only after jurisdiction has been acquired. Such an appearance by defendants was a general one, and gave the justice's court jurisdiction of their persons. The character of the appearance does not depend upon the form of the procedure, but upon its substance and the relief sought. Winter v. Union Packing Co., 51 Or. 97, 93 Pac. 930; Spores v. Maude, 81 Or. 11, 17, 158 Pac. 169; Anvil Gold Min. Co. v. Hoxsie, 125 Fed. 724, 728, 60 C. C. A. 492; 4 C. J. p. 1331, § 25, where it is stated:

> "The giving of a bond operating as a discharge or dissolution of an attachment or garnishment operates as an appearance converting the action from one in rem into one in personam."

So here, by appearing and making application to the justice's court for a release of their property then under attachment, the defendants in effect said to the court:

> "Grant our request and we will give security that we will pay any judgment that may be rendered against us in the action pending."

Their pledge to the court was not that the judgment would be paid if the officer could find the defendants and make proper service of the summons upon them. They had already authorized the court to proceed in the matter. There had been an attempted service upon the agent of defendants which was of no force. This irregularity or failure was waived by defendants by the proceedings referred to. The justice's court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the action was thereby converted from one in rem into one in personam. The ruling in this state in this respect is in consonance with the general rule. See 4 C. J., supra, and notes; 2 R. C. L., p. 332, § 12. This view renders it unnecessary to consider the effect of the application made by defendants to set aside the judgment in the justice's court. We note, however, that no record appears of any answer to the complaint being tendered by them in that action.

There were informalities in the justice's court which the petition refers to, and which we have examined. We find no fatal defect nor any error in the procedure affecting the substantial rights of those defendants. It is alleged in the petition that the complaint unites several causes of action. Such an irregularity should have been taken advantage of by a demurrer, and is cured by judgment. Sections 68 and 72, L. O. L.; 31 Cyc. 776 et seq.; Davidson v. O. & C. R. R. Co., 11 Or. 136, 1 Pac. 705. From the return to the writ of review we find no substantial error. It follows that the judgment of the lower court must be reversed, and the writ dismissed; and it is so ordered.

ROGERS v. MALONEY. *

1. INDIANS 🔑16(3) — LEASE BY ALLOTTEE — APPROVAL—"CONDITION PRECEDENT."

A provision in a lease by an Indian allottee that it should become binding only after approval by the Indian reservation superintendent, or Secretary of the Interior, is a "condition precedent."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indians, Cent. Dig. 45.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Condition Precedent.]

2. CONTRACTS 🔑221(2)—"CONDITION PRECEDENT."

A "condition precedent" is a condition which calls for the performance of some act or the happening of some event after the terms of the contract have been agreed upon, and before the contract shall take effect.

3. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF 🔑158(2) — PAROL — MODIFICATION.

Ordinarily an agreement within the statute of frauds cannot be varied by parol.

4. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF 🔑119(2) — PAROL — MODIFICATION—ESTOPPEL.

Where a parol modification of a lease has been acted upon by a party to his disadvantage, the other party cannot set up the statute of frauds and stand on the original agreement.

5. INDIANS 🔑16(8) — LEASE — APPROVAL — CONDITIONS PRECEDENT—WAIVER.

Where a lease by an Indian allottee provided that it should not become effective until approved, evidence that the lessee advanced the lessor money, furnished supplies, and did some work on the property, all in reliance upon the lease, makes the lessor's waiver of the condition regarding approval, etc., a jury question.

In Banc. Appeal from Circuit Court, Umatilla County; Gilbert W. Phelps, Judge.

Forcible entry and detainer action by Frank Rogers against James W. Maloney. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

This is an action of forcible entry and detainer which involves plaintiff's right to the possession of a quarter section of land in the Umatilla Indian reservation, in Umatilla county. Prior to September 30, 1916, the land was in the undisputed possession of the defendant, under a lease from Ellen Darr, the Indian allottee. On June 1, 1916, a new lease was given by Mrs. Darr to the defendant, running from October 1, 1916, to September 30, 1920. This lease contained the following clause:

> "It is further understood and agreed by the parties hereto that this lease shall be valid and binding only after approval by the superintendent or other officer in charge of the Umatilla Indian reservation, or by the Secretary of the Interior."

The lease has never been so approved, nor did the lessor at any time make a new agreement in writing which made the lease effective, notwithstanding the condition created by the foregoing covenant. Under date of May 4, 1916, a patent was issued to Mrs. Darr for the property in question, pursuant to the provisions of the act of May 8, 1906 (34 Statutes at Large, 182, c. 2348 [U. S. Comp. St. 1916, §§ 3951, 4203]), and she thereupon became vested with entire control over the property and with the right to convey or lease the same without approval of any official. This patent reached the superintendent of the Umatilla reservation on June 25th, and was delivered to Mrs. Darr on July 3d. The lease under which the defendant claims the property was executed in ignorance of the existence of the patent. Subsequently, and on September 16, 1916, Mrs. Darr executed a lease of this same property to plaintiff for a period of ten years after the expiration of defendant's lease, which was then effective. Plaintiff claims that he has been entitled to the possession of the property at all times subsequent to October 1, 1916, under the operation of this lease. He undertook to take forcible possession of the property on October 17 and 18, 1916, but the defendant withheld possession from him, and he thereupon brought this action. The defendant contends that the condition in the lease above quoted was waived by Mrs. Darr. The case was tried before a jury. A verdict was rendered in favor of the defendant, on which judgment was entered, and plaintiff appeals.

J. H. Raley, of Pendleton (Raley & Raley, of Pendleton, on the brief), for appellant. James A. Fee and Charles H. Carter, both of Pendleton (Fee & Fee and Carter & Smythe, all of Pendleton, on the brief), for respondent.

McCAMANT, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1-4] The clause in defendant's lease providing that it shall be binding only after approval by the superintendent of the Indian reservation, or by the Secretary of the Interior, is a "condition precedent." Wellsville Co. v. Miller, 44 Okl. 493, 145 Pac. 344; Id., 37 Sup. Ct. 362, 243 U. S. 6, 61 L. Ed. 559. A "condition precedent" is a condition which calls for the performance of some act or the happening of some event after the terms of the contract have been agreed upon, before the contract shall take effect. 8 Cyc. 558. Defendant's lease was therefore ineffective unless the foregoing condition was waived. Johnson v. Warren, 74 Mich. 491, 497, 42 N. W. 74; People v. Center, 66 Cal. 551, 5 Pac. 263, 6 Pac. 481, 485. The defendant's lease, being for a longer period than one year, is within the statute of frauds. L. O. L. 804, 808. The general rule is that an agreement within the statute of frauds cannot be varied by parol. Neppach v. Oregon Co., 46 Or. 374, 395, 80 Pac. 482; Kingsley v. Kressly, 60 Or. 167, 173, 111 Pac. 385, 118 Pac. 678, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 746; Caples v. Morgan, 81 Or. 692, 704, 160 Pac. 1154. If the modification made by parol has been acted upon by the parties, and the position of one of them has been changed for the worse in reliance on the modification, the other party will be denied the right to set up the statute of frauds and stand on the original agreement. Neppach v. Oregon Co., 46 Or. 374, 395, 80 Pac. 482; Kingsley v. Kressly, 60 Or. 167, 173, 111 Pac. 385, 118 Pac. 678, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 746. This principle of law is clearly set out by the Supreme Court of California:

> "The right of courts of equity to hold a person estopped to assert the statute of frauds, where such assertion would amount to practicing a fraud, cannot be disputed. * * *
> "We can see no good reason for limiting the operation of this equitable doctrine to any particular class of contracts included within the statute of frauds, provided always the essential elements of an estoppel are present, or for saying otherwise than as is intimated by Mr. Pomeroy in the words already quoted, viz. that it applies 'in every transaction where the statute is invoked.' It is a general equitable principle, a part of the broader equitable doctrine stated in Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U. S. 580, 25 L. Ed. 618, and quoted therefrom in Carpy v. Dowdell, 115 Cal. 687, 47 Pac. 697, as follows: 'The vital principle is that he who by his language or conduct leads another to do what he would not otherwise have done shall not subject such person to loss or injury by disappointing the expectations upon which he acted. Such a change of position is sternly forbidden. It involves fraud and falsehood, and the law abhors both.'" Seymour v. Oelrichs, 156 Cal. 782, 794, 106 Pac. 88, 94, 134 Am. St. Rep. 154.

To the same effect see Smiley v. Barker, 83 Fed. 684, 687, 28 C. C. A. 9.

[5] The question with which we are concerned in this case is whether Mrs. Darr waived the condition precedent and thereby made the defendant's lease effective. In 29 A. & E. Enc. of L. 1103, it is said:

> "A person who does some positive act which, according to its natural import, is so inconsistent with the enforcement of a right in his favor as to induce a reasonable belief that such right has been dispensed with, will be deemed to have waived it."

In Bishop on Contracts, § 792, the principle is stated thus:

> "Waiver is where one in possession of any right, whether conferred by law or by contract, and of full knowledge of the material facts, does or forbears the doing of something inconsistent with the existence of the right or of his intention to rely upon it; thereupon he is said to have waived it, and he is precluded from claiming anything by reason of it afterward."

Do the facts in the case at bar bring the defendant within the principle announced in the foregoing authorities?

It appears that on June 3, 1916, the defendant indorsed the lessor's note for $200 to the First National Bank of Pendleton. The defendant testifies that he did this solely in reliance on the lease. This note remained unpaid at the time when plaintiff undertook to take forcible possession of the property. It was paid by Mrs. Darr on October 21st. On September 7, 1916, the defendant gave Mrs. Darr $30. The check by which the money was paid contained the words, "Advance on lease," and the defendant testified that he paid this money on account of the rentals which would become due under the lease. On October 21, 1916, Mrs. Darr deposited the sum of $30 to the credit of the defendant with the defendant's bankers. The defendant declined to accept the money. The bank thereupon put it in the form of a certificate of deposit and sent it to Mrs. Darr. The certificate had not been cashed at the time when the case was tried. Some testimony was offered on behalf of the defendant to the effect that at the time when this $30 was paid to Mrs. Darr she said to the defendant that the defendant "need not fear the lease. It was a good one, and if it was not satisfactory she would make it satisfactory." About this same time, on Mrs. Darr's application, the defendant gave her a load of hay and two sacks of barley. The defendant testified that he did this in reliance upon the lease of date June 1st. This lease obligated the defendant to do some fencing on the property. It appears that the defendant hauled three loads of posts for this purpose from Mrs. Darr's cabin, 25 miles distant, using for such purpose two six-mule teams and one two-mule team. It took two days for each team to make the trip.

We think that these facts were sufficient to go to the jury on the question of waiver. It has been twice held by this court that by the acceptance of a premium and the issuance of a policy an insurance company is estopped to set up a condition in the policy under the operation of which the policy was never at any time effective. Allesina v. London Co., 45 Or. 441, 78 Pac. 392; Arthur v. Palatine Co., 35 Or. 27, 31, 57 Pac. 62, 76 Am. St. Rep. 450. Since these cases were decided the Legislature has provided a standard form of fire insurance policy, and the law of waiver announced in these decisions is for that reason no longer applicable to similar states of fact. Oatman v. Bankers' Association, 66 Or. 388, 393-394, 133 Pac. 1183, 134 Pac. 1033. The principle announced in the Allesina and Arthur Cases is still regarded as sound wherever applicable. We think that the principle is controlling in this case, and that the lower court did not err in denying plaintiff's motion for a directed verdict.

The instructions requested by plaintiff did not recognize the principles of the law of waiver hereinafter set forth. While they correctly stated the general principle that a contract within the statute of frauds cannot be varied by parol, they would have misled the jury and were properly refused. The evidence admitted over the objection of plaintiff tended to prove the waiver which the defendant was entitled to prove, and the court did not error in admitting the testimony.

The judgment is affirmed.

STUART v. CAMP CARSON MINING & POWER CO. et al.*

1. EQUITY 🔑271 — AMENDMENT OF COMPLAINT—AFTER SUBMISSION OF CASE.

It was proper to allow plaintiff to amend complaint in equity suit to foreclose a mining lien after submission of cause, by attaching copy of notice of lien; the cause being considered upon its merits.

2. EQUITY 🔑265—AMENDMENT OF COMPLAINT—LIBERAL RULE.

The rule of amendment should be applied more liberally in equity suits than in actions at law.

3. MINES AND MINERALS 🔑114—LIENS—RECORDING OF CLAIM—COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTE.

Where a claim of lien for work on mines was recorded in same book as mechanics' liens, and directly and indirectly indexed, this was suficient compliance with L. O. L. § 7446, providing that the county clerk shall record claims in a book kept for that purpose and indexed as deeds and other conveyances are required to be indexed, and section 7421, providing substantially the same requirements for mechanics' liens.

4. EVIDENCE 🔑376(1)—BOOKS OF ACCOUNT—NECESSITY OF AUTHENTICATION.

Books of account offered in evidence must be authenticated by the oath of some one who made or directed the entry with authority, or, if this is not possible, by proof of handwriting.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1632.]

5. EVIDENCE 🔑376(1)—BOOKS OF ACCOUNT—AUTHENTICATION.

Witness' testimony held insufficient to authenticate time book offered in evidence in mining lien foreclosure.

6. MINES AND MINERALS 🔑112(2)—LIENS—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE—"LABOR."

"Labor" mentioned in miners' lien statute means actual physical labor unequivocally performed on the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 234.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Labor.]

7. INTEREST 🔑1—ALLOWANCE—NECESSITY OF STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Interest as such cannot be allowed on foreclosure of lien for work on mines, since the statute does not provide for it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Interest, Cent. Dig. § 1.]

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

8. MINES AND MINERALS 🔑117—LIENS—ALLOWANCE OF ATTORNEY FEES — COMBINED CLAIMS.

An attorney fee was properly allowed in a lump sum, although founded on several claims for mining liens assigned to plaintiff.

9. MINES AND MINERALS 🔑115—LIENS—EFFECT OF FAILURE OF LIEN.

Failure of a mining lien in foreclosure proceedings does not necessarily involve validity of defendant's indebtedness to claimants.

Suit to foreclose mining lien by E. J. Stuart against the Camp Carson Mining & Power Company and others. Decree allowing part of plaintiff's claim, and defendant named and defendant Turner Oliver appeal. Modified.

The Camp Carson Mining & Power Company is a corporation said to have conducted a general mining and sawmill business on about 1,440 acres of unpatented placer mining ground in Union county, owning and possessing certain buildings thereon, together with ditches, flumes, and machinery used in operating the mines. For himself the plaintiff alleges, in substance, that he performed work and labor as a mechanic for the company upon the mining property at the agreed and contract price of $4 a day covering a certain number of days in April, May, and June, 1915, totaling $208.80, against which he allows a credit of $67.45 by supplies and cash, leaving a balance of $141.35. Then follows in the original complaint this allegation:

> "That plaintiff performed the last of said labor and ceased to work on said property on the said 8th day of June, 1915, and thereafter, to wit, on the 22d day of July, 1915, duly prepared and verified his notice and claim of lien for the whole of said sum of $141.35, upon the whole of said described property, in the form and manner provided by law, and thereafter, to wit, on the 23d day of July, 1915, duly filed said notice and claim of lien in the office of and with the county clerk of Union county, state of Oregon, who then and there duly recorded said notice and claim of lien in Book D, Record of Mechanics' Liens of said county, at page 428 thereof, where said claim and notice of lien ever since has remained, and still remains, so of record, that said record was and is a record kept by said clerk for the purpose of recording therein such liens, and that said clerk then and there duly indexed the record of said notice and claim of lien in the manner and as deeds and other conveyances are required by law to be indexed."

He avers that no part of the above-mentioned balance has been paid by the company or any one else, and that the whole thereof remains due, together with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from June 8, 1915, until paid, that he paid $4.20 for filing and recording the lien, and that the sum of $50 is a reasonable amount to be allowed him as attorney's fee for foreclosing the lien. He also declares as assignee on 21 other lien claims for labor performed and materials furnished to the defendant mining company by other parties. The form of pleading is the same in each count. A general demurrer by the company and Turner Oliver, also defendant, against the original complaint, having been overruled, they filed an answer denying all the allegations of each count except the corporate character of the company and its ownership of the property mentioned. After all the testimony was in and the case had been finally submitted, the court permitted the plaintiff to file an amended complaint. The change consisted in adding to the quoted allegation above set out in each count these words:

> "A true copy of said notice of lien is hereunto attached, marked 'Exhibit A,' and made a part of this amended complaint."

The answering defendants move to strike out the new pleading on the ground:

> That it "does not purport to add any name or to strike out the name of any party from the pleading, and does not purport to correct any mistake in the name of any party or a mistake in any other respect, and does not purport to make the pleading conform to any facts proved, but substantially changes the cause of action after the case has been tried and submitted, * * * and the court has no jurisdiction to consider such pretended amended complaint nor any discretion to permit the same to be filed, and no motion was attached to said pretended amended complaint asking permission of the court to file the same."

This motion was overruled, and afterwards the defendants who appeared answered the amended complaint as before, traversing it and setting up the title of Turner Oliver to the property by virtue of a foreclosure of mortgage upon the property. The reply put in issue all the new matter. The court made findings of fact and conclusions of law followed by a decree which rejected the claims assigned to plaintiff by Rudolph F. Peterson, S. S. Somerville, Gordon Land, F. F. Turner (on his second claim), Mrs. J. R. Somerville, and Hans Olsen. It allowed a portion of the plaintiff's claim and sustained the demands of Axel Wengren, O. J. Burnett, Charles Denny, J. A. Shira, F. F. Turner (on his first claim), Cecil Merrill, L. W. Becker, Christy Nelson, Earl Taylor, R. E. Lindley, Elmer Somerville, J. R. Somerville, W. W. Dill, La Grande Grocery Company, and Sawyer-Clark Company, some in full and others only in part. The mining company and Turner Oliver alone appealed, there being no complaint of the decree on the part of the plaintiff or the other defendants, the latter of whom defaulted.

Turner Oliver, of La Grande, for appellants. F. S. Ivanhoe, of La Grande, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] The defendants assign as error the overruling of their demurrer to the original complaint and the action of the court in permitting the plaintiff to amend after the cause was submitted. Conceding that the original complaint was demurrable because it stated mere conclusions of law about the making and filing of the notice of lien, yet we may set it down as a defective statement of a cause of suit which might be aided by amendment. The matter in hand is not like Golden Rod Milling Co. v. Connell, 164 Pac. 588, where we held that even in an equity suit the plaintiff had no right to amend his complaint after the cause had been submitted when the change involved the averment of a new and distinct cause of suit. The only attack made upon the new pleading of the plaintiff here was a motion to strike out the same, which being denied, the defendants answered it. It does not appear that the evidence required to support the second complaint was any different from that offered to prove the first. Neither is it apparent from the record that the defendants were deprived of any defense upon the merits or that they were denied any opportunity to take additional proof. For aught that the abstract discloses, the cause was considered upon its real merits under the issues formed by the amended pleadings.

[2] This being an equity suit heard and determined by the court, we think the rule of amendment should be applied more liberally than in the strict procedure of an action at law, and that, unless the defendant mining company can show that its rights on the real merits were abused, the error is negligible.

[3] The defendants also complain that the court erred in admitting in testimony each of the 22 claims of liens, copies of which are attached to the amended complaint, for three reasons: (a) That each of the notices fails to show that the contract of employment was made by any one having authority to bind the defendant company; (b) that each of the notices was recorded in the record of mechanics' liens, and not in the record of miners' liens; (c) it affirmatively appeared in the testimony that neither of said notices of lien was indexed as "deeds and other conveyances are required by law to be indexed"; and (d) that it was clearly shown by the evidence that none of said claims for labor contained a true statement of claimant's demand after deducting all just credits and offsets, and each of them contained charges for matters and things other than for labor upon or in development of the mining property described in the complaint. It is required by section 7446, L. O. L., that:

> "The county clerk shall record said claim in a book kept for that purpose, which shall be indexed as deeds and other conveyances are required by law to be indexed. * * *"

In respect to what are commonly known as mechanics' liens, section 7421, L. O. L., provides that:

> "The county clerk shall record said claim in a book kept for that purpose, which record shall be indexed as deeds and other conveyances are required by law to be indexed."

Substantially the same language is used in providing for the filing of liens for laborers' wages due from any concern put in the hands of a receiver. L. O. L. § 7441. The testimony in this case coming from the county clerk is to the effect that the book in which the claims in question were recorded was one kept for that purpose, although in the same volume mechanics' liens were likewise recorded, and that in the book there was a direct and indirect index citing the page whereon each claim was inscribed. This point is ruled against the contention of the defendants in Slover v. Bailey, 49 Or. 426, 90 Pac. 665. Mr. Chief Justice Bean there says:

> "Where the book in which a particular instrument shall be recorded is prescribed by law, it must be recorded in such book; but, where no particular book is designated, recording it in any book kept by the officer for that purpose is sufficient," citing authorities.

Other precedents are these: Ivey v. Dawley, 50 Fla. 537, 39 South. 498, 7 Ann. Cas. 354; Farabee v. McKerrihan, 172 Pa. 234, 33 Atl. 583, 51 Am. St. Rep. 734; Switzer v. Knapps, 10 Iowa, 72, 74 Am. Dec. 375; Mee v. Benedict, 98 Mich. 260, 57 N. W. 175, 22 L. R. A. 641, 39 Am. St. Rep. 543.

In Osborn v. Logus, 28 Or. 302, 37 Pac. 456, 38 Pac. 190, 42 Pac. 997, it was held, in substance, that it was unnecessary for the notice of lien in terms to connect the claimant with the owner in a contract relation. It was deemed sufficient to follow the words of the statute, but that case does not dispense with the necessity of establishing such a relation as a matter of pleading and proof at the trial either directly or through an agent who may be such by virtue of the enactment or by appointment of the owner. See, also, Smith v. Wilcox, 44 Or. 323, 74 Pac. 708, 75 Pac. 710, Litherland v. Cohn Real Est. Co., 54 Or. 71, 100 Pac. 1, 102 Pac. 303; Equitable Savings & Loan Association v. Hewitt, 55 Or. 329, 106 Pac. 447. In form we consider the notices sufficient and the manner of indexing them complies substantially with the directions of the statute in that a means is provided whereby any one searching the book for a record of liens is directed by the index to the page where he may obtain the information desired. The other objection requires an examination of the evidence.

The principal question in the matter of testimony hinges upon a time book introduced in evidence by the plaintiff. This was produced by a witness, W. W. Dill, and he alone gives to it whatever of authenticity it may have. Called upon to testify about the length of time the men were at work and when they quit, he said:

> "Well, I would have to go to the data because I can't remember it. Q. Now, this data you speak of, state what that is. A. Why, I have the time book of the company. Q. State whether you had anything to do with the keeping of the time book. A. I did. I kept the time book from the 29th day, I think it was the 29th day, of June, until the 29th day of July, when I left there. I kept the time book most of that time. Q. From that data do you know when these different men quit work there? A. I do. Q. Now, Mr. Dill, will you refer to such data as you have and made yourself, that you can testify from, as to when Mr. Stuart was there, and when he quit work. A. Well, I will have to go to the time book."

Then an objection was sustained by the court to the effect that the testimony was incompetent except during the time that the book was kept by Mr. Dill himself, the rest being hearsay. The question being repeated, the witness said:

> "Mr. Stuart left there before I got the time book to keep time with. * * * Q. You have knowledge of his working there, have you? A. Oh, yes; I know he was there and worked. Q. Have you any record in your possession that the company kept, of his time? A. I have as far as the time book is concerned."

Objection was then made to the time book being admitted for the reason that it is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, and it is not shown that he kept it nor that it is correct, but the court admitted it in evidence.

[4] Books of account and the like are received in testimony as ancillary to the declarations on oath of a witness who either knows the fact in general and is compelled to refer to the books for detail, or where, having at one time knowledge of the fact, he is compelled to refresh his memory from them, or, failing in that, he is able to state that he knew the fact when he made the entry and that it was entered correctly. Such writings are not evidence per se. They do not prove themselves, and are not original evidence in the full sense of the word. Books therefore must be authenticated by the oath of some one who made or directed the entry with authority, if living and capable as a witness, otherwise by proof of his handwriting posting the entries. 10 R. C. L. 1174; Harmon v. Decker, 41 Or. 587, 68 Pac. 11, 1111, 93 Am. St. Rep. 748; Mason v. Melhase, 64 Or. 522, 130 Pac. 1134; Lintner v. Wiles, 70 Or. 350, 141 Pac. 871.

[5] Dill only testifies that he kept the book most of the time from June 29th to the same date in the successive month. He does not even say that he kept it correctly or that he had knowledge of the facts upon which his entries were founded. He does not point out even what entries he made for that part of the time that he kept the book. The greater portion of the claims for which liens are sought to be enforced were founded upon labor alleged to have been performed before he ever had custody of the book. It is true that he says that a few days before he appeared in the circuit court as a witness he received the book indirectly from the secretary of the company in Seattle; but there is an utter absence of any sworn testimony authenticating it before he received it into his custody. Under all the authorities it must be laid out of the case as evidence.

The following claims assigned to the plaintiff depend entirely upon the translation which Dill made of the time book in question to show how long the original claimants worked at the mine, viz.: Axel Wengren, Charles Denny, F. F. Turner (first claim), Cecil Merrill, L. W. Becker, Earl Taylor, Elmer Somerville, J. R. Somerville, and J. A. Shira. The latter was a witness in behalf of the plaintiff, but made no statement respecting the length of time he himself labored, if at all, or the character of his services.

[6] As to the claim of F. F. Turner, his own testimony shows that he was away from the mine much of the time, that while there he was a mere caretaker, and that his claim consists largely of hotel bills in La Grande and Union while he was thus absent. None of his evidence brings him within the rule laid down in Durkheimer .v. Copperopolis Copper Co., 55 Or. 37, 104 Pac. 895, holding that the labor mentioned in the statute for miners' liens means actual physical labor unequivocally performed upon the property.

The support of the following claims does not depend upon the time book, for the claimants themselves appeared in person as witnesses and testified respecting their services in kind and quantity as follows: E. J. Stuart, $141.35; O. J. Burnett, $130.50; Christy Nelson, $62.72; R. E. Lindley, $234.21; W. W. Dill, $563.40; La Grande Grocery Company, $172.13; Sawyer-Clark Company, $44.58. No assignment of error is made in regard to the finding of fact that these two latter claims, being for groceries and other supplies furnished for use at the mine, were true as stated in the complaint.

[7] The demand for interest must be denied on the authority of Sargent v. Am. Bank & Trust Co., 80 Or. 16, 154 Pac. 759, 156 Pac. 431. The claims last above mentioned will therefore be allowed, and a decree entered foreclosing the same at those amounts, including the sum of $4.20 for each one as a fee for filing and recording the same.

[8] The attorney fee will be fixed at $250. This is properly allowed in a lump sum, although founded on several claims. Bishop v. Henry, 165 Pac. 237, decided May 29, 1917. The other claims must be dismissed for failure of proof.

[9] We remember, however, that this is a foreclosure proceeding, and that failure of the lien does not necessarily involve the actual validity of the indebtedness of the defendant company to the claimants who have fallen short in the testimony. As to them, therefore, the decree will be that this suit is dismissed without prejudice to the right of their assignee to recover from the defendant company by action at law or otherwise, as he properly may be advised.

STODDARD LUMBER CO. v. OREGON-WASHINGTON R. & NAV. CO.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. May 29, 1917.)

1. CARRIERS 🔑86—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—DELIVERY—DUTY OF CARRIER.

At common law, when it became impossible for a common carrier to deliver shipments in accordance with the contract of carriage, it was its duty to exercise ordinary care and diligence for the protection of the property of the owner.

2. CARRIERS 🔑89 — CARRIAGE OF GOODS—FAILURE TO DELIVER GOODS TO CONSIGNOR.

Where a common carrier is unable to deliver the goods shipped to the consignee, it is its duty to exercise due diligence to notify the consignor within a reasonable time.

3. CARRIERS 🔑94(3) — CARRIAGE OF GOODS—FAILURE TO DELIVER—NOTICE.

Where a common carrier is unable to deliver the goods shipped to the consignee, the burden is upon it to show a state of facts relieving it from its duty to notify the consignor within a reasonable time.

4. CARRIERS 🔑86—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—NOTICE OF FAILURE TO DELIVER.

Where goods are consigned by a shipper to its own order, with directions to notify a person named, upon failure of the carrier to deliver the goods it is not sufficient that it notify such person, but it must notify the consignor, if the bill of lading shows that he is the owner of the goods.

5. CARRIERS 🔑175 — CARRIAGE OF GOODS—CONNECTING CARRIERS—NOTICE OF NONDELIVERY.

Where a carrier is unable to deliver the goods, which have been shipped through connecting carriers, the Carmack Amendment treats such carriers as if they were controlled by a single corporation, and the initial carrier is not relieved of its duty to notify the consignor because the terminal carrier did not know his residence; such carrier being chargeable with the knowledge of the initial carrier thereof.

6. CARRIERS 🔑86—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—NOTICE OF NONDELIVERY.

Where goods are shipped to the consignor's order, with directions to notify the purchaser of the goods, the carrier cannot extend credit to such person, but must give notice of nondelivery not later than the day following that on which the goods were offered to the purchaser.

7. CARRIERS 🔑177(3)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—NOTICE OF NONDELIVERY—CARMACK AMENDMENT.

Under the Carmack Amendment (Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 7, 34 Stat. 595 [U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 8604a]), providing that any common carrier, receiving property for transportation from a point in one state to a point in another state, shall issue a receipt or bill of lading therefor, and shall be liable to the lawful holder thereof for any loss caused by it, or by any common carrier to which such property may be delivered, or over whose lines such property may pass, the initial carrier is liable for the failure of the terminal carrier to properly notify the consignor of failure to deliver goods shipped.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1050(1)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

In an action against an initial carrier for damages because of the terminal carrier's failure to give notice of nondelivery of the goods shipped, admission of evidence of the custom of railway companies to give notice when the shipment cannot be delivered, if error, was harmless, where such evidence only tended to charge defendant with its legal duty.

9. CARRIERS 🔑89 — CARRIAGE OF GOODS—NONDELIVERY OF GOODS.

Where goods are shipped to the consignor's order with directions to notify purchaser thereof, the carrier will not be relieved of its duty to exercise due diligence in caring for goods because of the fact that the consignee is derelict in his duty to receive the goods.

10. CARRIERS 🔑86—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—NOTICE OF NONDELIVERY—AGENCY.

Where goods are shipped to the consignor's order, and the bills of lading are sent to a bank at destination, such bank is the consignor's agent for the purpose of presenting the draft only, and not for the purpose of receiving notice that the goods cannot be delivered.

11. CARRIERS 🔑94(1)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—NOTICE OF CLAIM.

In an action against a common carrier for damages, due to failure to notify consignor of nondelivery of goods, failure to present a formal bill as a claim for damages within the time limited in the contract was not fatal, where defendant was notified in writing that the consignor had a claim against them and insisted upon its payment; such notification having been given in due time.

12. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1068(4)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action against a common carrier for failure to notify the consignor of nondelivery, an instruction that the measure of damages was the difference between the market value of the goods when notice should have been given and their value when it was actually given, if erroneous, was harmless, where the verdict gave the proper amount of damages.

13. CARRIERS 🔑89 — CARRIAGE OF GOODS—NOTICE OF NONDELIVERY.

In an action against a common carrier for damages due to failure to give the consignor notice of nondelivery, where the bill of lading provided that the purchaser should have 10 days within which to pay for the goods, the duty did not devolve upon the carrier to give notice of nondelivery until after the expiration of such 10 days.

14. Appeal and Error 🔑169—Presentation of Grounds—Failure to Raise Question.

Questions not raised in the lower court will not be reviewed.

In Banc. Appeal from Circuit Court, Baker County; Gustav Anderson, Judge.

Action by the Stoddard Lumber Company against the Oregon-Washington Railroad & Navigation Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

This is an action brought to recover damages sustained by plaintiff's assignors, Stoddard Lumber Company, a Utah corporation, and Shockley & McMurren Lumber Company, by reason of the alleged failure of a connecting carrier of the defendant to notify plaintiff's assignors of the nondelivery of shipments of box shooks, carried over the lines of defendant and its connecting carriers, in the year 1912. The complaint sets up five causes of action. It appears that plaintiff's assignors had received orders from Pierce & Maternes, of Hotchkiss, Colo., for the shooks in question, and that pursuant to these orders the first carload was shipped from Baker, Or., July 29, 1912, reaching Hotchkiss on August 12th. The car mentioned in the second count of the complaint left Baker August 2d, and reached Hotchkiss August 14th; that mentioned in the third count left Baker August 17th, arriving at Hotchkiss September 7th; that in the fourth count left Baker August 19th, and reached Hotchkiss September 4th; that mentioned in the fifth count, being the car sold by Shockley & McMurren Lumber Company, left Baker August 10th, and reached Hotchkiss August 23d. The shipments were in each case consigned to the order of the shipper, and a direction was written on the bill of lading requiring the carrier to notify Pierce & Maternes. The bill of lading in each case was handed by plaintiff's assignors to the Baker Loan & Trust Company, by which course it was transmitted to the Bank of North Fork at Hotchkiss, Colo. A draft for the purchase price accompanied the bill of lading, and the instructions given to the Hotchkiss bank required it to insist upon payment of the draft before surrender of the bill of lading.

The goods in each case reached Hotchkiss over the lines of the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad Company. It is conceded that this carrier notified Pierce & Maternes, and that Pierce & Maternes failed to take up the bills of lading. The defendant alleges in its answer that these purchasers promised from day to day that they would secure the bills of lading and accept delivery of the goods, but no evidence was offered in support of this allegation. No notice was given plaintiff's assignors of the nondelivery of the goods, and on September 26th they applied to the defendant at Baker to send a tracer after the shipments. On the following day, September 27th, they were notified that the box shooks were still undelivered at Hotchkiss. The shooks were suitable for the making of peach boxes and for no other purpose. At the time when they reached Hotchkiss, the evidence satisfactorily shows an active market for peach boxes, justifying the conclusion that, if plaintiff's assignors had been promptly notified, they could have disposed of the goods. About September 15th the peach crop in that part of Colorado was destroyed by frost, and thereafter the box shooks were unsalable. By the time plaintiff's assignors were notified of the nondelivery of the goods, considerable charges had accumulated against them for freight and demurrage. Plaintiff's assignors refused to pay these charges. The railroad company thereupon stored the goods in the vicinity and sold them during the following season, accounting to plaintiff's assignors for the net proceeds, which were received under a stipulation that plaintiff should not be prejudiced thereby in this litigation.

Plaintiff claims the right to charge the defendant with the dereliction of its connecting carrier, under the Carmack Amendment to the Interstate Commerce Law. The jury found for plaintiff in the invoice value of the shipments, less the sums which had been paid plaintiff's assignors on the sale of the box shooks in 1913. The defendant appeals.

William D. Riter, of Salt Lake City, Utah (James H. Nichols, of Baker, on the brief), for appellant. John L. Rand, of Baker, for respondent.

McCAMANT, J. (after stating the facts as above). Plaintiff's right of action in this case is based wholly on its contention that, where goods cannot be delivered by a terminal carrier in accordance with the contract of transportation, the duty devolves on such carrier to notify the owner of the goods, whether he be consignor or consignee. This principle is challenged by counsel for defendant. The liability of an initial carrier under the Carmack Amendment is only that imposed by the common law on its connecting carrier. Adams Express Co. v. Croninger, 226 U. S. 491, 511, 33 Sup. Ct. 148, 57 L. Ed. 314, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 257. Judson on Interstate Commerce (2d Ed.) § 46. The common law was evolved before the days of mail and telegraphs. We cannot, therefore, expect to find in the common law anything more than a statement in general terms of the duties devolving on a common carrier when it becomes impossible for the carrier to deliver shipments in accordance with the contract of carriage.

[1] The common-law principle is that in such case the carrier is charged with the duty of ordinary care and diligence for the protection of the property of the owner. 4 Elliott on Railroads (2d Ed.) § 1463; 2 Hutchinson on Carriers (3d Ed.) § 714. What, then, is the duty which ordinary care and diligence, as applied to the conditions under which we live, impose upon a terminal carrier when it is unable to deliver a shipment at the point of destination? The shipments so carried by interstate carriers are of great variety; some of them are perishable, many of them fluctuate in value, many of them are valuable only in limited territories and for short seasons, and their marketing often requires special skill and instruction. It is not to be expected that the terminal agents of the carrier will be advised in all cases of the value of the shipments, or of the proper method of caring for them and protecting their owners from loss. The Interstate Commerce Commission, in the case of Kehoe v. Nashville Co., 14 Interst. Com. Com'n, 555, 556, said:

> "It is in the interest of the public that the consignor should be promptly notified when the shipment is not delivered."

We think the interests of the carrier are subserved by a rule which requires notice to the consignor within a reasonable time after the refusal or failure of the consignee to accept delivery. A rule which requires such prompt notification will be of value in releasing the rolling stock of the carrier and making it available for future business. Ordinarily, a post card notification would be sufficient.

[2] There is a conflict of authority on the question as noted by this court in Normile v. Oregon Co., 41 Or. 177, 182, 69 Pac. 928. We think the weight of authority sustains the principle that in such case the carrier must exercise due diligence to notify within a reasonable time. 5 Thompson on Negligence, § 6622; 12 A. & E. Enc. of L. (2d Ed.) 557; Nashville Co. v. Dreyfuss Co., 150 Ky. 333, 150 S. W. 321; American Co. v. McGhee, 96 Ga. 27, 21 S. E. 383; Alabama Co. v. McKenzie, 139 Ga. 410, 77 S. E. 647, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 18; Michigan Co. v. Harville, 136 Ill. App. 243, 253; Carrizzo v. New York Co., 66 Misc. Rep. 243, 123 N. Y. Supp. 173; Fine v. Barrett, 81 Misc. Rep. 234, 142 N. Y. Supp. 533; Sauer v. Lehigh Valley Co., 150 N. Y. Supp. 977. This court is partially committed to the doctrine of these authorities. McGregor v. Oregon Co., 50 Or. 527, 536–537, 93 Pac. 465, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 668. As applied to interstate shipments, the question is one of federal law, and the federal Supreme Court is the final arbiter. Its decisions trend in the direction of the above rule. The Thames, 14 Wall. 98, 107, 20 L. Ed. 804; North Penn. Co. v. Commercial Bank, 123 U. S. 727, 734, 8 Sup. Ct. 266, 31 L. Ed. 287.

[3] Circumstances will doubtless arise from time to time which will relieve the carrier from this duty, as, for example, when the owner of the goods has no place of abode. Butler v. East Tennessee Co., 8 Lea (Tenn.) 32, 34. The burden of showing such a state of facts devolves on the carrier. The authorities cited by the defendant state no consistent rule. Some of them hold that the duty of carriers is a variable duty, dependent upon the circumstances. Steamboat Keystone v. Moies, 28 Mo. 243, 246; Manhattan Co. v. Chicago Co., 9 App. Div. 172, 41 N. Y. Supp. 83, 85; Kremer v. Southern Express Co., 6 Cold. (Tenn.) 356. Some of the authorities relied on by defendant involve no question of notice. Fisk v. Newton, 1 Denio (N. Y.) 45, 43 Am. Dec. 649; Ginnochio v. Missouri Co., 153 Mo. App. 598, 134 S. W. 1028. Others of the authorities cited sustain defendant's contentions. Hudson v. Baxendale, 2 Hurlstone & N. 575; Weed v. Barney, 45 N. Y. 344, 6 Am. Rep. 96. These cases are out of harmony with the weight of American authority, and, in our judgment, are not sustained by sound reasoning.

The lower court charged the jury in the case at bar that the terminal carrier was chargeable with the duty of due diligence in the protection of the property of plaintiff's assignors, and that, if the jury found that reasonable care of the property required notice to plaintiff's assignors, then the jury should find for plaintiff on this issue. We think the charge of the court was more favorable to the defendant than was warranted by the law.

[4] The defendant contends that the above principle is inapplicable to this case, because the goods were consigned by the shipper to its own order, with directions to notify Pierce & Maternes; that by this method of shipment the shipper made Pierce & Maternes its agents for the purpose of receiving notice; and that, when the terminal carrier gave notice to Pierce & Maternes, it fulfilled its duty in the premises. This contention of the defendant is supported by the case of Hardin v. Chicago Co., 134 Mo. App. 681, 114 S. W. 1117, 1118. On this issue plaintiff relies largely on the case of Nashville Co. v. Dreyfuss Co., 150 Ky. 333, 150 S. W. 321. The facts in this case are closely akin to those in the case at bar. Plaintiff in the Kentucky case shipped goods from Paducah, Ky., to De Soto, Ga., consigned to itself, with instructions to notify R. E. Howe. Howe was notified by the terminal carrier and refused to take the goods. The carrier neglected to notify plaintiff, and while the goods were held in the carrier's warehouse they were destroyed by fire. The Kentucky court said:

> "When the goods reached De Soto, Ga., and R. E. Howe, on being notified of their arrival, refused to accept them, it was incumbent upon the carrier to notify Dreyfuss-Weil Company of this fact, for, if they had been notified that their goods were there, they might have taken steps to protect themselves. The bill of lading showed that the goods were the property of Dreyfuss-Weil Company. The goods were consigned to their order. While there is some conflict in the decisions on the subject, the better rule is that, where the consignee refuses to accept the goods, the carrier must notify the consignor of this fact if the bill of lading is sufficient to show that he is the owner of the goods. This rule has the approval of the United States Supreme Court and the Supreme Court of Georgia. See Amer. Sugar Refining Co. v. McGehee, 96 Ga. 27, 21 S. E. 383; Hutchinson on Carriers (3d Ed.) § 721. When Howe refused to accept the goods, the carrier held them subject to the shipper's order, and notice to the shipper was essential to his protection. We therefore conclude that the Seaboard Air Line, having failed to notify Dreyfuss-Weil Company of the refusal of Howe to accept the goods, was liable to the shipper for the subsequent destruction of the goods while lying in its warehouse."

We think the case last cited correctly states the law. It appears from the books that goods are frequently shipped consigned to the order of the shipper, with instructions to notify some one for whom the goods are intended. North Penn. Co. v. Commercial Bank, 123 U. S. 727, 736, 8 Sup. Ct. 266, 31 L. Ed. 287; 4 Elliott on Railroads, 1427, 1530; 4 R. C. L. p. 842. The purpose of shipping in this manner is plain; it is the intention of the shipper in every such case to exact payment of the purchase price of the goods on delivery. In the case at bar plaintiff proved without objection from the defendant a general custom to ship in this manner, when the shipper is unwilling to extend credit to the purchaser by whom the goods are ordered. The answer shows affirmatively that the purpose and effect of shipping in this manner were understood by the defendant.

[5] The defendant contends that it should be relieved of the duty to notify in the case at bar, because there was no evidence tending to show that the terminal carrier knew the residence of the consignor. The effect of the Carmack Amendment is to treat a line of connecting carriers as if they were owned and controlled by a single corporation. The terminal carrier is chargeable with the knowledge of the initial carrier, and it appears from the record in this case that plaintiff's assignors had many dealings with the defendant and the defendant must have been apprised of their place of business. We think, furthermore, that no carrier can be held to have fulfilled its duty of due diligence in the matter of notification, when it has made no effort to notify the consignor at the place where the shipment originates.

[6] There is no evidence of a refusal on the part of Pierce & Maternes to receive the goods in question, but the pleadings admit their failure so to do. The defendant contends that this circumstance differentiates the case at bar from the ordinary case, and that the terminal carrier was justified in assuming from day to day that Pierce & Maternes would take the box shooks, thus rendering notification unnecessary. We do not think that the duty of notification arises as a matter of law immediately on the tender of the goods to the purchasers, unless the purchasers refuse to accept them. On the other hand, the carrier is unauthorized to extend any appreciable time by way of credit to the purchasers. The fact that the goods are consigned to the order of the shipper is evidence that the shipper is unwilling to extend credit to the purchaser. The principles of the law of agency forbid the carrier to extend to the purchaser a credit which the shipper was unwilling to grant. We think the duty of the carrier to notify is analogous to the duty arising under the law merchant on the dishonor of negotiable paper, and that therefore the notification should not be deferred beyond the day following that on which the goods are offered to the purchaser.

[7] Plaintiff finds no fault with anything done by the defendant, basing its right of recovery wholly on the liability of the defendant under the Carmack Amendment to answer for the fault of the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad Company, the terminal carrier. The defendant contends that the Carmack Amendment is inapplicable to such a complaint as that made in the case at bar. The amendment in question, in so far as it is material to the present case, is as follows:

> "That any common carrier, railroad, or transportation company receiving property for transportation from a point in one state to a point in another state shall issue a receipt or bill of lading therefor and shall be liable to the lawful holder thereof for any loss, damage, or injury to such property caused by it or by any common carrier, railroad, or transportation company to which such property may be delivered or over whose line or lines such property may pass." 34 Stat. p. 595.

The defendant cites Norfolk Co. v. Stuart's Co., 109 Va. 184, 63 S. E. 415-417; Hogan v. Union Pacific Co., 91 Kan. 783, 139 Pac. 397. These authorities seem to sustain the defendant's contention, but the construction of this statute is a federal question, and the United States Supreme Court has construed it. New York Co. v. Peninsula Exchange, 240 U. S. 34, 37, 36 Sup. Ct. 230, 231 (60 L. Ed. 511, L. R. A. 1917A, 193). This was an action for damages arising from delay in the transportation of merchandise. It was contended that the initial carrier was not liable, inasmuch as no injury had been done to the goods, and the case therefore fell without the operation of the amendment. The court said:

> "We need not review at length the considerations which led to the adoption of this amendment. These were stated in Atlantic Coast Line v. Riverside Mills, 219 U. S. 186, 199-203 [31 Sup. Ct. 164, 55 L. Ed. 167, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 7]. It was there pointed out that, along with singleness of rate and continuity of carriage in through shipments, there had grown up the practice of requiring specific stipulations limiting the liability of each separate company to its own part of the through route, and, as a result, the shipper could look to the initial carrier for recompense only 'for loss, damage or delay' occurring on its own line. This 'burdensome situation' was 'the matter which Congress undertook to regulate.' * * * The rule, said the court in defining the purpose of the Carmack Amendment, 'is adapted to secure the rights of the shipper by securing unity of transportation with unity of responsibility.' * * * It is now in> sisted that Congress failed to accomplish this paramount object; that while unity of responsibility was secured, if the goods were injured in the course of transportation or were not delivered, the statute did not reach the case of a failure to transport with reasonable dispatch. In such case it is said that, although there is a through shipment, the shipper must still look to the particular carrier whose neglect caused the delay. We do not think that the language of the amendment has the inadequacy attributed to it. The words 'any loss, damage, or injury to such property' caused by the initial carrier or by any connecting carrier are comprehensive enough to embrace all damages resulting from any failure to discharge a carrier's duty with respect to any part of the transportation to the agreed destination. It is not necessary, nor is it natural, in view of the general purpose of the statute, to take the words 'to the property' as limiting the word 'damage' as well as the word 'injury,' and thus as rendering the former wholly superfluous. It is said that there is a different responsibility on the part of the carrier with respect to delay from that which exists where there is a failure to carry safely. But the difference is with respect to the measure of the carrier's obligation; the duty to transport with reasonable dispatch is none the less an integral part of the normal undertaking of the carrier. And we can gather no intent to unify only a portion of the carrier's responsibility."

The initial carrier was held liable for the damage sustained. For further authoritative construction of this legislation see Georgia Co. v. Blish Milling Co., 241 U. S. 190, 194, 36 Sup. Ct. 541, 60 L. Ed. 948, and Cleveland Co. v. Dettlebach, 239 U. S. 588, 36 Sup. Ct. 177, 60 L. Ed. 453. Under the construction which has been placed by the federal Supreme Court on the Carmack Amendment, we are clear that the defendant is chargeable with the neglect of the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad Company to notify plaintiff's assignors.

[8] The defendant contends that there was error in admitting evidence of the custom of railway companies to give notice when a shipment cannot be delivered. The evidence objected to tended only to charge the defendant with the duty devolving upon it under the law, and its admission was therefore harmless error, if error at all.

[9] The defendant strenuously contends that it was the duty of plaintiff's assignors to be present at Hotchkiss to receive the goods. Many of the authorities announce the doctrine that the duty of the consignee to receive and that of the carrier to deliver are correlative duties, equally binding on the parties. An examination of these authorities discloses the fact that the doctrine so announced is incidental to the determination of the question of when the liability of the carrier as an insurer terminates. It is held that the consignee cannot extend the period in which the carrier is an insurer by failure to take the goods when the carrier is ready to deliver them. 2 Hutchinson on Carriers (3d Ed.) § 723. It does not follow that the failure of the consignee to take the goods works a forfeiture, or relieves the carrier of its duty to exercise due diligence in caring for them.

[10] It is next contended that the bank at Hotchkiss was the agent of plaintiff's assignors, and that therefore the knowledge of the bank was the knowledge of plaintiff's assignors. Inasmuch as this bank knew that the drafts drawn on Pierce & Maternes were not taken up and the bills of lading were not surrendered, it is argued that plaintiff is chargeable with this knowledge. It is alleged in the complaint that plaintiff's assignors sent the respective drafts, with bills of lading attached, to the Hotchkiss bank, with proper instructions. These allegations are admitted by the answer. We think that the pleadings admit that the Hotchkiss bank was the agent of plaintiff's assignors. 3 R. C. L. pp. 610, 622, 624; 1 Mechem on Agency (2d Ed.) §§ 332, 333, 337; 31 Cyc. 1597; Bank v. Triplett, 1 Pet. 25, 7 L. Ed. 37; Wilson v. Smith, 3 How. 763, 769–770, 11 L. Ed. 820.

> "It is a familiar and well-settled rule that, as to third parties, notice to an agent while acting within the scope of his authority is notice to the principal. But it is equally as well settled that such notice, in order to bind the principal, must relate to the business or transaction in reference to which the agent is authorized to act for and on behalf of his principal, and to matters over which his authority extends. Story on Agency, § 118; Mechem on Agency, § 718. If it relates to a matter over which the agent has no authority, and concerning which he is not authorized to act for his principal, although he may be an agent for other purposes, it will not affect the principal or be binding on him." Pennoyer v. Willis, 26 Or. 8, 36 Pac. 569, 46 Am. St. Rep. 594.

The authority of the Hotchkiss bank extended only to the collection in each case of the draft and the surrender of the bill of lading. It had no physical control over the goods or authority to deliver them. There is no evidence that it had any knowledge as to the whereabouts of the freight, and, if it had, such knowledge cannot be imputed to plaintiff's assignors, because it would be without the scope of the agency. The goods should not have been delivered by the terminal carrier without surrender of the bill of lading, but our attention has been directed by the authorities cited in the briefs of these parties to a number of cases where goods have been delivered by the carrier without demanding the bill of lading. See, for example, Georgia Co. v. Blish Milling Co., 241 U. S. 190, 36 Sup. Ct. 541, 60 L. Ed. 948. It may be that the knowledge imputable to plaintiff's assignors that the drafts were unpaid and the bills of lading unsurrendered was enough to create suspicion in their minds that the goods had not been delivered, but we think the doctrine of constructive notice is inapplicable to this case. The defendant's connecting carrier neglected to notify the shippers. It cannot excuse its neglect by showing that they could have secured the information in question by inquiry from some one else. If the shipper has actual knowledge of the nondelivery of the shipment the carrier will be absolved from liability. 2 Hutchinson on Carriers (3d Ed.) § 721; Manhattan Co. v. Chicago Co., 9 App. Div. 172, 41 N. Y. Supp. 83, 85; Wien v. New York Co., 166 App. Div. 766, 152 N.

Y. Supp. 154. This is as far as the authorities go.

[11] The defendant asked a directed verdict as to the third count in the complaint, on the ground that no claim had been presented with reference to the shipment covered by this count until April 22, 1913. The bill of lading in question provided that:

> "Claims for loss, damage, or delay must be made in writing to the carrier at the point of delivery or at the point of origin within four months after delivery of the property, or, in case of failure to make delivery, then within four months after a reasonable time for delivery has elapsed. Unless claims are so made, the carrier shall not be liable."

It is true that no formal bill stating in dollars the damages of plaintiff's assignors was presented to the defendant until April 22, 1913; but under dates of December 19 and December 22, 1912, the defendant was notified in writing that plaintiff's assignors had such a claim and insisted upon its payment. These letters were specific as to the shipment in question, and gave defendant the preliminary information necessary to a proper investigation of the facts. These letters were a sufficient assertion of the claim, within the construction placed upon the clause in question by the federal Supreme Court. Georgia Co. v. Blish Milling Co., 241 U. S. 190, 36 Sup. Ct. 541, 545, 60 L. Ed. 948.

[12] The defendant challenges the correctness of the instruction given by the lower court on the measure of damages:

> "If you find for plaintiff, the measure of damages for you to determine from the evidence should be the difference between the market value of the goods at Hotchkiss, Colo., at the time the owner should have been notified of their arrival and nondelivery, if due care had been taken, and the market value the goods had at same place at or about the time the shipper did receive such notice and was offered opportunity to receive the goods. You will ascertain the value, the market value of the goods at Hotchkiss, Colo., at the time when the plaintiff's predecessors should have had notice of the nondelivery, and ascertain the value of the goods when the shippers were actually informed that the goods had been received and not delivered, and the difference in those values would be the measure of damages, if you find defendant was negligent under the instructions heretofore given and that the plaintiff is entitled to damages, and from the amount you thus arrive at, if you find for the plaintiff, you will deduct the amount it is admitted was paid to the plaintiff's predecessors, and state that balance in your verdict."

It is contended that this instruction is error, because there was no evidence in the record as to the market value of the box shooks at the time when notice was given plaintiff's assignors. The record sufficiently shows the market value of the shooks at the time when they were shipped, but it appears affirmatively that there was no market for them subsequent to September 15, 1912. The case of Hardin v. Chicago Co., 134 Mo. App. 681, 114 S. W. 1117, 1118, sustains the defendant's contention that it is error to instruct the jury to measure damages by the market value when there is no evidence of market value. A careful reading of the foregoing instruction given by the lower court indicates that the court corrected himself as to the point in question, and that the jury must have understood that the measure of damages would be the difference between the market value of the goods when plaintiff's predecessors should have had notice and their value when notice was actually given. There was but little evidence in the record tending to show what was the value of the goods when notice was given. One of plaintiff's witnesses testified that they had some value, but the only testimony tending to fix this value in dollars is the amount which was secured for the box shooks when sold under the direction of the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad Company in 1913. It is apparent from the verdict that the jury gave credit for this amount, and we think, therefore, that the error, if any, in the instruction of the court, was harmless, within the rule announced in Lemler v. Bord, 80 Or. 224, 228-230, 156 Pac. 427, 1034.

[13] There remains a single question. It is alleged in the answer:

> "That it was the shipper's intention that Pierce & Maternes should have at least 10 days to take up the bill of lading after the arrival of the car, for it notified both Pierce & Maternes and the bank that a discount of 2 per cent. would be allowed if the draft were paid within 10 days."

As to the first, second, and fourth counts in the complaint, the testimony sustains this allegation. It clearly appears that the three cars of shooks referred to in these counts were sold on a contract under which Pierce & Maternes were allowed 10 days in which to make payment, and were given a cash discount of 2 per cent, if they paid within that time. As to the fifth count, while the allegation is identical, the proof is that the purchasers were allowed 60 days' time within which to make payment. The defendant is, of course, limited to its allegations, and cannot avail itself of proof unsupported by its pleading. The record, therefore, would seem to show that Pierce & Maternes were allowed 10 days within which to pay the drafts and take up the bills of lading for the cars reaching Hotchkiss August 12th, 14th, and 23d and September 4th. The terminal carrier was not chargeable with neglect in failing to notify the shipper until after the expiration of the 10 days in question. As to the cars reaching Hotchkiss August 12th, 14th, and 23d, it was competent for the jury to find that a notice given the shipper at the expiration of 10 days from the arrival of the cars would have averted the loss; but such a conclusion cannot have been reached by the jury with reference to the car which reached Hotchkiss on September 4th. The evidence is that the market broke in the middle of September; it would have taken at least two days for a notice by mail to reach plaintiff's assignors.

[14] We think it clear therefore, that defendant was entitled to prevail as to the cause of action set up in the fourth count of the complaint. If the defendant had moved for a directed verdict as to this count, its motion would have been well taken. No such motion was made, nor was the question otherwise raised in the circuit court. This court is exercising appellate jurisdiction; its province is to review questions raised in the lower court; unless questions are raised there, they are not reviewable here. United States Co. v. Marquam, 41 Or. 391, 405, 69 Pac. 37, 41; State v. Anderson, 10 Or. 448; State v. Abrams, 11 Or. 169, 8 Pac. 327.

On the whole case the record fails to show reversible error, and the judgment is affirmed.

MORGAN v. JOHNS.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. May 22, 1917. Rehearing Denied June 19, 1917.)

1. Appeal and Error 🔑189(3)—Record—Matters to be Shown—Exceptions to Ruling.

Though L. O. L. § 172, provides that no exception need be taken or allowed upon any decision or matter of law when the same is entered in the journal or made wholly on matters in writing and on file in court, where defendant's bill of exceptions did not disclose any objection by him to the ruling denying his motion for judgment of nonsuit, such ruling could not be assigned as a reason for reversal, since the ruling was not made wholly upon written data before the circuit court; the bill of exceptions must not only show what the ruling was, but also that the party appealing objected to the decision when it was made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1152½, 1153.]

2. Corporations 🔑123(15)—Stock—Pledge or Sale—Jury Case.

In an action for conversion of corporate stock, the question whether the deposit of the stock with defendant was a pledge or sale held for the jury.

3. Corporations 🔑123(15) — Stock — Conversion by Pledgee—Damage.

In an action for conversion of corporate stock by the pledgee, though the stock was not known in the market, and so was without market value, plaintiff could recover the actual value of the stock.

4. Corporations 🔑123(15)—Stock—Pledge—Conversion—Instruction.

In an action for conversion of corporate stock, an instruction that a pledge is a transfer of personalty, as security for a debt or other obligation, which the pledgee has a right to repledge without the pledgor's consent, but that the new transaction would not change the character of the chattels as being hypothecated for debt, was proper as an expanded statement of the doctrine once a pledge always a pledge until its status has been changed by the foreclosure or further contract.

5. Pledges 🔑1—Continuance as Such.

A pledge is always a pledge until its status has been changed by foreclosure or further contract of the parties.

6. Corporations 🔑123(14) — Stock — Conversion by Pledgee.

If corporate stock was pledged to defendant only to secure a debt, he had no authority to sell the stock outright, and if he did so there was a conversion rendering him liable to the pledgor for the reasonable value of the stock, not exceeding the sum mentioned in the complaint.

7. Corporations 🔑123(12)—Conversion of Pledged Stock—Refusal of Tender.

If corporate stock was pledged as security with defendant, and plaintiff, the pledgor, tendered or offered to pay the debt, being at the time able, ready, and willing to make the payment, defendant's lien on the stock was discharged, and his refusal to return the stock was a conversion rendering him liable to plaintiff for the reasonable value of the property, not exceeding the amount stated in the complaint.

8. Corporations 🔑123(15)—Stock—Conversion by Pledgee—Damages—Mitigation—Pleading.

If defendant, charged with conversion of plaintiff's corporate stock, had wholly made way with the stock, the only method by which he could put in as a defense plaintiff's indebtedness to him, to secure which the stock was pledged, was to plead it in mitigation of damages.

9. Trial 🔑252(20)—Instruction—Applicability to Evidence.

In an action for conversion of corporate stock, an instruction that the jury, if they found for plaintiff, should give verdict for damages for a sum equal to the reasonable market value of the stock, was erroneous, where there was no evidence as to the reasonable market value of the stock, which had never been known on the market.

10. Corporations 🔑123(15) — Stock — Pledge—Conversion—Value.

In an action for conversion by pledgee of corporate stock which had never been known on the market, the court improperly limited the jury to a consideration of the reasonable market value of the assets of the corporation in arriving at a just valuation of the stock; since not only the value of the company's assets, but also the amount of its indebtedness, must be considered.

11. Appeal and Error 🔑1129—Determination—Ascertaining Damages.

On appeal in an action for conversion of corporate stock which had never been on the market, wherein the court improperly limited the jury to a consideration of the reasonable market value of the company's assets in arriving at a just valuation of the stock, the Supreme Court will not support verdict for plaintiff by attempting to ascertain the correctness of the verdict by computation of figures shown in the testimony as the amount of the company's indebtedness and the valuation of its assets.

Action by Thomas Morgan against James Johns. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

This action is one in the usual form charging the defendant with the conversion of 15 shares of stock in the Union County Farm Company, a corporation, of the value of $9,812.50, the property of the plaintiff, to his damage in that sum. The answer denies the whole complaint, except as otherwise stated, and then in substance avers that the plaintiff, being the owner of the stock mentioned, sold the same to a brother of the defendant, taking from the vendee an option to repurchase it on a certain date at a stipulated price, and that this transaction constitutes the conversion described as a cause of action. Substantially the reply controverts the defendant's pleading so far as inconsistent with the complaint, and in addition thereto declares:

> "That plaintiff at no time bargained and sold said certificate of stock to John G. Johns, and has never at any time seen said John G. Johns, and did not know of said John G. Johns until about the 20th day of March, 1914; that no lien as claimed by said John G. Johns or by defendant has ever been foreclosed, and on the 22d day of March, 1915, plaintiff in writing offered to pay defendant and said John G. Johns the sum of $1,440, which is the sum of $1,382.73, with interest thereon from the said 10th day of December, 1913, until the date of said offer of payment; that the defendant thereupon refused to return the said certificate of stock upon demand by this plaintiff, and still refuses so to do."

The outcome of a jury trial was a judgment for the plaintiff, from which the defendant appeals.

Thos. H. Crawford, of La Grande (Crawford & Eakin, of La Grande, on the brief), for appellant. George T. Cochran and Colon R. Eberhard, both of La Grande, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] At the close of the plaintiff's case the defendant moved for a judgment of nonsuit which was denied, and this is assigned as error. On the other hand, the plaintiff points out that the bill of exceptions does not disclose any objection by the defendant to this ruling, and hence that it cannot be assigned as a reason for reversal, maintaining that it is not error alone, but a mistake to which an exception has been regularly taken that will avail the appellant in this court. The defendant seeks to avoid this argument by reference to the statute which says:

> "No exception need be taken or allowed to any decision upon a matter of law, when the same is entered in the journal, or made wholly upon matters in writing and on file in the court." L. O. L. § 172.

The defendant urges that the written bill of exceptions fulfills this rule of procedure so that the decision is indeed made upon matters in writing and on file in the court. We cannot concur in this view, because the ruling was not made wholly upon written data then before the circuit court. When it was made, the determination of the application for nonsuit depended mainly upon the oral testimony which the judge had heard, and, although that has been reduced to writing by the official stenographer since then, and appears in certified form attached to the bill of exceptions, yet it does not alter the situation as it existed before the circuit court when the motion was denied. The recitals of the bill of exceptions relate to matters already past when that document was framed. It narrates that the defendant objected, or, in other words demurred to, the sufficiency of the plaintiff's testimony, but it does not appear therefrom that any objection was made to the ruling of the court on the motion for a nonsuit. This much to settle the question of practice suggested by the discussion to which allusion has been made. In brief, the bill of exceptions must not only show what the ruling was, but also that the party appealing objected to the decision at the time it was made.

[2] On the merits, however, the determination of the motion for a nonsuit was correct; for we find in the report of the testimony sent up for the purpose of explaining the matter that there was enough to take to the jury the question of whether the deposit of the stock with the defendant was a pledge or a sale. The statement of the defendant that he had taken the shares as collateral, as related by the witness Holmes, and his other admission to the same witness that the stock had been pledged to him for the loan, are sufficient in themselves to support the ruling on the motion. This being true, it eliminates from our consideration the error assigned on the refusal of the court to direct a verdict for the defendant at the close of all the testimony.

[3] From the evidence it appears that Morgan was the owner of an undivided third of a tract of agricultural land in Union county, the remainder of which was the property of the wife of the defendant, for whom the latter was acting. This realty was heavily incumbered. The plaintiff had farmed the same during the crop year of 1913, and when settlement of their affairs was made at the end of the season he lacked $1,282.73 of having money enough to pay his share of the expenses and what was due at the time upon the incumbrances. It seems that the defendant arranged to advance that money for him. In connection with the transaction, they formed the corporation mentioned in the complaint, and one-third of the capital stock, 15 shares, was issued to the plaintiff. His contention is that he pledged the same to the defendant to be used in raising money to pay his balance of the indebtedness; while the latter maintains that the plaintiff sold the stock absolutely to the person named in the answer as vendee. As all this was done concurrently with the formation of the company, naturally there could be no market value of the stock, for there had been no sale for the same. In that connection the defendant requested the court to charge the jury thus:

> "I further instruct you that there is no evidence in this case upon the question of the market value of this stock, or as to whether or not it had a market value, and that, if you find for the plaintiff in this case, you can only find for nominal damages—that is, one cent, or one dollar, or some nominal sum."

It was no error to refuse this instruction, because it excluded from the consideration of the jury the actual reasonable value of the stock, although it was not known in the market, and hence could not have what is called market value.

[4, 5] The defendant takes exception to a charge of the court to the effect that a pledge is a transfer of personal property as a security for a debt or other obligation which the pledgee has a right to repledge without the pledgor's consent, but that this new transaction would not change the character of the chattels as being hypothecated for debt. The principle is that once a pledge always a pledge until the status of the same has been changed by foreclosure or further contract of the parties. As between the litigants the instruction was an amplified statement of this doctrine, and is not subject to criticism on that ground.

[6] The same precept applies to the further charge of which the defendant complains and which states, in substance, that if the stock was pledged to the defendant only to secure the money with which to repay himself, he would have no authority to sell the same outright, and if he did it would constitute a conversion calling for a verdict for the plaintiff for the reasonable value of the pledge, not exceeding the sum mentioned in the complaint.

There is assigned as error also the instruction of the court to the purport that, if the shares were pledged as a security, and the plaintiff had tendered or offered to pay the debt, being at the time able, ready, and willing to make the payment, the lien of the defendant would be discharged, and his refusal to return the pledge would be a conversion thereof on account of which the jury should find for the plaintiff for the reasonable value of the property, not exceeding the amount stated in the complaint.

[7] The conduct of the defendant as described in that instruction does, indeed, constitute a conversion, because it is the exercise of an unjustifiable control over the plaintiff's property in derogation of his title to the same. The plaint of the defendant is that the court left out of consideration the amount of the debt for which the shares were pledged. The defendant, however, is in no position to complain of this, for, as stated by Mr. Chief Justice Bean in Springer v. Jenkins, 47 Or. 502, 84 Pac. 479:

> "The defendants cannot invoke this rule, because they have not pleaded the amount due on the mortgage in mitigation of damages."

[8] If, indeed, the defendant has wholly made way with the plaintiff's property and is charged with the same in trover, the only method by which he can put in the indebtedness as a defense is to plead it in mitigation of damages, as taught by Springer v. Jenkins, supra. In this case there is no attempt to state any such defense. The complaint, on the one hand, charges direct conversion. The answer denies this. No mention whatever of indebtedness is made in the defendant's pleading. For want of this he has no standing to complain of this instruction; for it conforms to the pleadings made by the parties. A good reason for requiring the indebtedness charged against a chattel to be averred in mitigation of damages for conversion of the property is that otherwise the jury might actually deduct the amount of the debt, and there would be nothing in the record which the debtor could plead in bar of a subsequent action to recover it. On the other hand, if the claim is litigated in the trover action by way of reducing the damages, the resulting judgment will protect the debtor from further exactions.

The remaining error assigned by the defendant is predicated upon this direction given to the jury at the trial:

> "I further instruct you that, if you find for the plaintiff, you should give your verdict for damages in a sum equal to the reasonable market value of said shares of stock at the time of conversion, if any, or within a reasonable time thereafter, and if you find that the said shares of stock have no market value, then, in ascertaining their reasonable value, you will consider the reasonable market value of the assets of said corporation, if any, in arriving at the reasonable value of said stock, if any, and your verdict should be for such amount as you may find said stock to be reasonably worth."

[9] This charge was materially erroneous In the first place there was no evidence about the reasonable market value of the stock, for, as we have seen, it had never been known on the market. It then remains to consider the rule by which to determine its reasonable value.

[10] The court was wrong in limiting the jury as it did to a consideration of the reasonable market value of the assets of the corporation in arriving at the just valuation of the stock. We have almost daily instances of corporate concerns which have considerable assets, but whose indebtedness far exceeds the worth of the property. It is common sense to say that the value of the stock of the institution would be nil under those circumstances. In such an investigation we must necessarily consider not only the value of the assets, but also the amount of the indebtedness. The instruction was also bad in this respect.

[11] The plaintiff, however, charges that the correctness of the verdict can be ascertained by computation of figures shown in the testimony as to the amount of indebtedness and the value of the land. We cannot, however, determine from the record whether the jury took the opinion of the witnesses as to the worth of the realty at the highest price mentioned in the evidence and then deducted the amount of the indebtedness, or whether they merely discounted the estimate of the witnesses without reference to the debt. If they did the latter, it would strictly conform to the instruction of the court as to the formula for ascertaining the reasonable value of the shares. There is a diversity of views of the testimony either one of which might be assumed as a starting point in calculating the proper value of the stock to be assessed in a verdict, and it is possible that a result might be figured from some of these bases substantially equivalent to the one set down by the jury. It is impossible, however, for us safely to enter upon such a quest on the record before us. The trial by jury is the proper method for solution of the question.

For this mistake in directing the jury in effect to consider only the assets of the concern in assessing the value of its stock, the judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

Under Laws 1913, pp. 580, 581, §§ 1, 2, 3, providing that no mortgage upon real estate heretofore or hereafter given shall be a lien or incumbrance after the expiration of ten years, etc., does not apply to the foreclosure by state land board of a mortgage given to secure moneys borrowed from the irreducible school fund; the state being the real party in interest, although proceedings are in the name of the state land board.

Suit by the State Land Board against Mary E. Osborn Lee, formerly Mary E. Osborn, and others. From a decree awarding partial relief, the State Land Board appeals. Decree modified.

This is a suit to foreclose a note and mortgage given to the state land board by George H. Osborn and his wife, Mary E. Osborn. The note is dated October 13, 1902, recites that it is for $700 "borrowed on account of the irreducible school fund," bears interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, and by its express terms became due "one year after date." The note was secured by a mortgage on 480 acres of land in sections 10 and 15 of a designated township. No payments were made on the principal of the note. Payments were made on the interest from time to time, the last payment being on March 19, 1913, when the interest was satisfied to August 5, 1912.

The land in section 15 was conveyed to E. T. Kaster and C. J. Forsstrom on August 7, 1911, while the remainder of the mortgaged premises was acquired by Ed Lee and F. M. Lee prior to December 20, 1915, when this suit was commenced by the state land board. The present owners of the land purchased with notice of the mortgage; and hence, if the mortgage is enforceable against the mortgagors, it is likewise enforceable against the subsequent purchasers of the land.

The defendants resisted the attempt to foreclose the mortgage by interposing chapter 304, Laws 1913. The statute reads thus:

"Section 1. No mortgage upon real estate now, heretofore or hereafter given, shall be a lien or incumbrance, or of any effect or validity for any purpose whatsoever, after the expiration of 10 years from the date of the maturity of the obligation or indebtedness secured or evidenced by such mortgage, or from the date to which the payment thereof has been extended by agreement of record. If the date of the maturity of such obligation or indebtedness is not disclosed by the mortgage itself, then the date of the execution of such mortgage shall be deemed the date of the maturity of the obligation or indebtedness secured or evidenced by such mortgage.

"Sec. 2. After 10 years have elapsed from the date of the maturity of any mortgage upon real estate, as herein provided in section 1 of this act, such mortgage shall conclusively be presumed to be paid, satisfied and discharged, and no action, suit or other proceeding shall be maintainable for the foreclosure of the same.

"Sec. 3. This act shall not take effect until the first day of January, A. D. 1914; after which date the same shall be in full force."

The trial court awarded a judgment against the makers of the note for the principal and interest due, an attorney's fee and costs and disbursements; but a decree foreclosing the mortgage was refused on the theory that the lien of the mortgage was released on January 1, 1914. The state land board appealed.

Colon R. Eberhard, of La Grande, and Geo. M. Brown, Atty. Gen. (I. H. Van Winkle, Asst. Atty. Gen., on the brief), for appellant. C. H. Finn, of La Grande (R. J. Kitchen, of La Grande, on the brief), for respondents.

HARRIS, J. (after stating the facts as above). It is conceded that the payment of interest tolled the statute of limitations as against the note, and that therefore the plaintiff is entitled to a judgment for whatever sums may be due on the note. Section 25, L. O. L. The defendants contend, however, that chapter 304, Laws 1913, bars the plaintiff from enforcing the lien of the mortgage. The parties did not make any agreement of record extending the time for payment; more than 10 years expired from the date of the maturity of the note before the commencement of this suit; and hence the mortgage cannot be foreclosed if chapter 304, Laws 1913, is available to the defendants, although the note which the mortgage was designed to secure can be reduced to a money judgment. The question for final decision is whether the statute applies to mortgages given to secure moneys borrowed from the irreducible school fund. The defendants argue that chapter 304 is a statute of limitation, and that the language of the enactment is sufficiently comprehensive to embrace mortgages given to the state land board to secure money borrowed from the irreducible school fund. The plaintiff contends that this is in reality a suit by the state, and that, if chapter 304 is assumed to be a statute of limitation, it does not embrace the state for the reason that the state is neither expressly mentioned nor included by necessary implication.

[1] Stated in broad terms, it is a rule of universal recognition that the government is not included in a general statute of limitation, unless it is expressly or by necessary implication included. This rule is said to be founded upon the legal fiction expressed in the maxim, "Nullum tempus occurrit regi." However, it is not necessary to predicate this salutary precept upon any fiction, since sound reason for the rule is found in the fact that as a matter of public policy it is necessary to preserve public rights, revenues, and property from injury and loss by the negligence of public officers. State v. Warner Valley Stock Co., 56 Or. 283, 308, 106 Pac. 780, 108 Pac. 861; United States v. Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 118 U. S. 120, 6 Sup. Ct. 1006, 30 L. Ed. 81; Catlett v. People, 151 Ill. 16, 37 N. E. 855; State v. Fleming, 19 Mo. 607; Blazier v. Johnson, 11 Neb. 404, 9 N. W. 543; Gibson v. Chouteau, 13 Wall. 92, 20 L. Ed. 534; State v. School Dist., 34 Kan. 237, 8 Pac. 208; Buswell on Limitations and Adverse Possession, § 97; 19 A. & E. Ency. Law (2d Ed.) 188; 25 Cyc. 1006; 36 Cyc. 1171.

For the purpose of avoiding the common-law rule exempting the government from limitation statutes, the Legislature passed a statute in 1862 which provided that:

> "The limitations prescribed in this title, shall apply to actions brought in the name of the state, or any county or other public corporation therein, or for its benefit, in the same manner as to actions by private parties." Section 13, Deady's Code.

This statute remained unchanged until 1903, when the Legislature amended it so as to read thus:

> "The limitation prescribed in this title shall not apply to actions brought in the name of the state, or any county, or other public corporation therein, or for its benefit. * * *" Section 13, L. O. L.

Another section provided that a suit shall only be commenced within the time limited to commence an action. Section 391, L. O. L. From 1862 until 1903 statutes of limitation applied to the state and private persons alike, for the sole reason that the state, acting through its Legislature, had expressly consented that limitation statutes be made applicable to the commonwealth.

That the Legislature recognized the existence of the common-law rule exempting the government is conclusively proved by the passage of the act of 1862, because, if the common-law rule did not at that time prevail in this jurisdiction, then the enactment of the statute of 1862, so far as made applicable to the state, was a work of supererogation; and, moreover, whenever the courts applied the bar of a statute of limitation to an action prosecuted by the state, they did so only because the limitation statute had been made applicable to the state by an express legislative enactment. State v. Baker, 24 Or. 141, 146, 33 Pac. 530; Schneider v. Hutchinson, 35 Or. 253, 254, 57 Pac. 324, 76 Am. St. Rep. 474; Wallowa County v. Wade, 43 Or. 253, 260, 72 Pac. 793; State v. Portland Gen. Elec. Co., 52 Or. 502, 515, 95 Pac. 722, 98 Pac. 160; State v. Warner Val. Stock Co., 56 Or. 283, 308, 106 Pac. 780, 108 Pac. 861; Silverton v. Brown, 63 Or. 418, 424, 128 Pac. 45; State v. Warner Val. Stock Co., 68 Or. 466, 471, 137 Pac. 746. Had the Legislature merely repealed section 13 in 1903, the repeal would of itself have restored the common-law rule which had been suspended since 1862 (State ex rel. Goodman v. Halter, 149 Ind. 292, 47 N. E. 665, 49 N. E. 7); but the common-law rule was first revived and then reinforced by an express legislative declaration that statutes of limitation shall not apply to actions brought in the name of the state or for its benefit. The history of section 13 is helpful in ascertaining the legislative purpose concerning the statute of 1913. In 1862 the state adopted the policy of submitting itself to limitation statutes, but subsequently in 1903 the state concluded that a different policy would be better and accordingly declared that it would no longer submit itself to limitation statutes. Chapter 304, Laws 1913, does not contain any words expressly including the state nor does its language necessarily imply that the state is included. When viewed in the light of the previously declared policy of the state, the act of 1913 is devoid of any suggestion whatever, and much less a necessary implication that the state is included.

[2] Although the state is not a party plaintiff eo nomine, nevertheless, if the suit is in truth for the benefit of the state, and if it is the real party in interest, a statute of limitation will not operate against the commonwealth. Even in the absence of a statute like section 13, L. O. L., the court will examine the record, and if it appears that the state is the real party in interest, a limitation statute which does not expressly or by necessary implication include the government will not be permitted to operate against the state. State Bank v. Brown, 1 Scam. (2 Ill.) 106; Commonwealth v. Baldwin, 1 Watts (Pa.) 54, 26 Am. Dec. 33; Glover v. Wilson, 6 Pa. 290; Eastern State Hospital v. Graves, 105 Va. 151, 52 S. E. 837, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 746, 8 Ann. Cas. 701; Black v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 237 Ill. 500, 86 N. E. 1065; People v. Kerber, 152 Cal. 731, 93 Pac. 878, 125 Am. St. Rep. 93; Sixth Dist. Agr. Ass'n v. Wright, 154 Cal. 119, 97 Pac. 144; United States v. Beebe, 127 U. S. 338, 8 Sup. Ct. 1083, 32 L. Ed. 121; State ex rel. Goodman v. Halter, 149 Ind. 292, 47 N. E. 665, 49 N. E. 7; Hill v. Josselyn, 13 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 597; Wasteney v Schott, 58 Ohio St. 410, 51 N. E. 34.

Having determined that chapter 304, Laws 1913, does not include the state, and having concluded that, if the state is the real party in interest, the statute is not available to the defendants, even though the state land board is the nominal plaintiff, we must now direct attention to the origin and functions of the state land board and to the history of the irreducible school fund in order to discover whether this suit is for the benefit of the state.

The act of Congress approved February 14, 1859, c. 33, 11 Stat. 383, admitting Oregon to statehood, offered to the commonwealth sections 16 and 36 in every township of public lands in the state for the use of schools. Article 8, § 2, of the state Constitution provides that:

> "The proceeds of all the lands which have been, or hereafter may be, granted to this state, for educational purposes; * * * all the moneys and clear proceeds of all property which may accrue to the state by escheat or forfeiture;" and all moneys derived from other specified sources "shall be set apart as a separate and irreducible fund, to be called the common school fund, the interest of which, together with all other revenues derived from the school land mentioned in this section, shall be exclusively applied to the support and maintenance of common schools in each school district, and the purchase of suitable libraries and apparatus therefor."

Section 3 of the same article directs the Legislature to provide by law for the establishment of a uniform and general system of common schools. Section 4 commands that provision shall be made by law for the distribution of the income of the common school fund among the several counties of the state; and section 5, so far as material here, reads thus:

> "The Governor, secretary of state, and state treasurer shall constitute a board of commissioners for the sale of school * * * lands, and for the investment of the funds arising therefrom, and their powers and duties shall be such as may be prescribed by law. * * *"

By the terms of section 3882, L. O. L., the Legislature declared that the Governor, secretary of state, and state treasurer "are hereby made a board of commissioners for the sale of state lands, and for the investment of the funds arising therefrom, and shall be styled the 'state land board.'" Section 3913, L. O. L., provides that the irreducible school fund of this state shall be composed of moneys derived from specified sources. The state land board is required by sections 3914, 3915, L. O. L., to loan all moneys belonging to the irreducible school fund, and the board is commanded to secure such loans by notes and mortgages "to the state land board on real estate in this state." Section 3926, L. O. L., makes it the duty of the state land board to foreclose all mortgages taken to secure loans from the school fund whenever more than one year's interest is due and unpaid.

By the terms of the Constitution the Governor, secretary of state, and state treasurer are made a board of commissioners for the sale of school lands and for the investment of the funds arising from such lands; and the powers and duties of the board "shall be such as may be prescribed by law." The Legislature has given the board a name by calling it the state land board, and, acting on the authority of the Constitution, has prescribed the powers and duties of the board. Every power conferred upon the board and every duty imposed upon it, whether conferred or imposed by the Constitution or legislative enactment, is for the direct benefit of the state. The state land board exists for the sole purpose of serving the state. Every attribute given to it and every function performed by it is for the benefit of the commonwealth. The state land board is the land department of the state. It is not an inferior board, but it is created by the Constitution and is a co-ordinate department of the state government. Corpe v. Brooks, 8 Or. 223, 225; Robertson v. State Land Board, 42 Or. 183, 187, 189, 70 Pac. 614; Miller v. Wattier, 44 Or. 347, 351, 75 Pac. 209; Warner Val. Stock Co. v. Morrow, 48 Or. 258, 262, 86 Pac. 369; State v. Warner Val. Stock Co., 56 Or. 283, 303, 106 Pac. 780, 108 Pac. 861; De Laittre v. State Land Board (C. C.) 149 Fed. 800. Manifestly the state land board is acting for the benefit of the state, and the latter is the real party in interest.

The defendants proceed with their argument by contending that, even though it is assumed that the state is the real party in interest, nevertheless, when the state loans money, it strips itself of the prerogatives attaching to sovereignty and acts in a purely proprietary capacity, subject to all the rules governing private parties. The defendants are relying upon precedents which do not apply to the instant case. If it be assumed that the state land board is a private corporation and that the state is a mere creditor of the board, then cases like Calloway v. Cossart, 45 Ark. 81, might be available to the defendants. Cases where the state is the real party in interest are widely different from those where the state is a mere creditor of a party who is both the nominal and real party to a legal proceeding. Bank of United States v. Planters' Bank, 9 Wheat. 904, 6 L. Ed. 244; Bank of United States v. McKenzie, Fed. Cas. No. 927. See, however, Glover v. Wilson, 6 Pa. 290; State ex rel. Goodman v. Halter, 149 Ind. 292, 47 N. E. 665, 49 N. E. 7; and Buswell on Limitations and Adverse Possession, 150. Again, if it be assumed that, prior to the time fixed by the note as the date of its maturity, the Legislature had passed a statute shortening the period for the maturity of the note, or if a law had been enacted prescribing that the interest should be paid monthly instead of semiannually as stipulated in the note, then the defendant might be able to rely upon adjudications like Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. *203, 21 L. Ed. 447; Hall v. Wisconsin, 103 U. S. 5, 26 L. Ed. 302; Patton v. Gilmer, 42 Ala. 548, 94 Am. Dec. 665; Chapman v. State, 104 Cal. 690, 38 Pac. 457, 43 Am. St. Rep. 158; Carr v. State, 127 Ind. 204, 26 N. E. 778, 11 L. R. A. 370, 22 Am. St. Rep. 624; People v. Stephens, 71 N. Y. 527; Boston Molasses Co. v. Commonwealth, 193 Mass. 390, 79 N. E. 827.

[3, 4] The state, like a private person, is prohibited from impairing the obligation of a contract entered into by it. A pure limitation statute does not operate upon the contract itself, and hence does not impair any obligation imposed by a contract; but a statute of limitation only affects the remedy and does not act upon the debt. Anderson v. Baxter, 4 Or. 105, 113; Kaiser v. Idleman, 57 Or. 224, 228, 108 Pac. 193, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 169; Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 122, 4 L. Ed. 529; Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How. 311, 11 L. Ed. 143; Waltermire v. Westover, 14 N. Y. 16; 6 R. C. L. 367. Cases where, independent of any statute of limitation, the equitable defense of laches has been recognized, are also distinguishable from questions arising out of chapter 304, Laws 1913.

[5] When the state loans money belonging to the irreducible school fund, it does not act in a proprietary capacity stripped of the attributes of sovereignty; but, on the contrary, it is performing a duty enjoined upon it by law and is acting for the public. The state is expressly commanded by the Constitution to provide for the establishment of a uniform and general system of common schools; and, furthermore, the Constitution commands that the school funds derived from specified sources shall be irreducible, and that the interest shall be applied exclusively to the support of the common schools. The state does not loan the money for a private purpose, but the moneys are loaned in order that revenue may be obtained to educate the children, upon whom in after years will largely depend the welfare and stability of the commonwealth. This is a public purpose of the highest type. The title to the funds is vested in the state in its sovereign capacity; the state is not a mere dry trustee, but it holds the funds in trust for the common schools of the state, and hence in trust for a public purpose; and therefore chapter 304, Laws 1913, cannot bar the foreclosure of mortgages given to secure moneys borrowed from the irreducible school fund. State v. Chadwick, 10 Or. 423, 428; Lawrey v. Sterling, 41 Or. 518, 531, 69 Pac. 460; Alexander v. Knox, 6 Sawyer, 54, 59, Fed. Cas. No. 170; Black v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 237 Ill. 500, 505, 86 N. E. 1065; United States v. Beebe, 127 U. S. 338, 342, 8 Sup. Ct. 1083, 32 L. Ed. 121; State ex rel. Goodman v. Halter, 149 Ind. 292, 297, 47 N. E. 665, 49 N. E. 7; Hill v. Josselyn, 13 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 597; United States v. Nashville, etc., Ry. Co., 118 U. S. 120, 6 Sup. Ct. 1006, 30 L. Ed. 81.

The plaintiff is entitled to the money judgment awarded by the trial court, and also to a decree foreclosing the mortgage. The decree appealed from will be modified to conform to the conclusions herein expressed.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, King County; J. T. Ronald, Judge.

Action by M. H. Ingersoll against Edward Cudihee, Sheriff of King County, and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

M. H. Ingersoll, of Seattle, in pro. per. Flick & Frater, of Seattle, for respondents.

MAIN, J. The controversy in this case is over the ownership of an automobile, upon which an execution had been levied by the sheriff of King county, as the property of a judgment debtor. Under the third party claim statute (sections 573 to 577, Rem. Code), the plaintiff filed an affidavit and bond, claiming ownership of the property. The defendants are the sheriff and the plaintiff in the action out of which the execution issued. The cause was tried to the court and a jury, and resulted in a verdict adverse to the plaintiff's claim. From the judgment entered upon the verdict, the appeal is prosecuted.

[1] The respondents move that the statement of facts be stricken, because the certificate thereto is insufficient. The certificate recites that the matters and proceedings embodied in the statement of facts are "a portion of the matters and proceedings occurring in said cause"; that the statement contains "a portion of the material facts, matters and proceedings heretofore occurring in said cause"; and that "the foregoing statement of facts contains a portion of the evidence and testimony introduced upon the trial of said cause." The certificate neither recites that the statement of facts contains all the facts, matters, and proceedings occurring in the cause, and not already a part of the record, nor that it contains all the facts upon any particular phase of the case. Under the holding of this court in Taylor v. Andres, 83 Wash. 684, 145 Pac. 991, this certificate is not sufficient, and, upon the authority of that case, the motion to strike the statement of facts must be granted.

[2, 3] The presumption is in favor of the correctness of the judgment, and, in the absence of a statement of facts, the record presents no question upon the merits for review.

The judgment will be affirmed.

ACCORD AND SATISFACTION 🔑12(1)—WHAT CONSTITUTES—STATEMENTS ON CHECKS.

Where statements for lumber were paid by voucher checks each reciting "In full settlement of account below" and containing notation of the statement covered, and following the signature the words: "Indorsement of this voucher check constitutes acknowledgment by payee of full payment of the account specified hereon. Void if altered or erased in any way. Return to payor if not correct"—the condition following the signature was only a statement as to the conception the drawer of the check had as to its legal effect when received and indorsed.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Spokane County; Hugo E. Oswald, Judge pro tem.

Action by the M. A. Phelps Lumber Company against the Bradford-Kennedy Company. Judgment for plaintiff in part, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Zent & Powell, of Spokane, for appellant. Danson, Williams & Danson and Geo. D. Lantz, all of Spokane, for respondent.

CHADWICK, J. Respondent, a dealer in fence posts, contracted with appellant, whose principal office is at Omaha, Neb., to furnish posts in carload lots. The posts were shipped by respondent, upon the order of appellant, to various places throughout the Middle West, where it had found customers. The transactions between the parties ran over a period of more than two years. Differences growing out of rejections by customers, and shortages, and other like items arose between the parties, so that in April, 1915, respondent claimed there was due him from appellant a balance of $498.81. Appellant pleads accord and satisfaction. The trial judge rejected a part of respondent's claims, and rendered judgment for $262.16. Payments were made by what are called by counsel voucher checks. These checks were upon printed forms; each of them reciting: "In full settlement of account below." Below is a ruled space for items. In this space is written: "As per statement No. ——, $——." Each shipment was a separate transaction, and each voucher contained a different statement number and a different amount. The voucher checks also contain the following words following the signature of the payee:

> "Indorsement of this voucher check constitutes acknowledgment by payee of full payment of the account specified hereon. Void if altered or erased in any way. Return to payor if not correct."

The trial judge found that, notwithstanding the form of these voucher checks, they had been received with an understanding on the part of the payee that the differences existing between the parties were to be settled later on, and that as to some of the items the appellant itself had taken the position that the checks were not final as between the parties.

Appellant has filed a very able brief to sustain its contention, but we are unable to distinguish the case from that of Allen v. Tacoma Mill Co., 18 Wash. 216, 51 Pac. 372, and, without further discussion, we rest the law of the case upon that authority.

Having in mind the authority cited, we think that the words following the signature of the payee are no more than a statement on the part of the drawer of the check of its conception of the legal effect of receiving and indorsing the voucher check. The controlling words, if any, are those printed as a part of the body of the check, to wit: "In full settlement of account below."

As for the facts, we are not prepared to say that the findings of the trial judge are not sustained by a preponderance of the testimony.

Affirmed.

STEWART v. NORTHERN PAC. RY. CO.

RAILROADS ⇨350(22)—CROSSING ACCIDENTS —QUESTIONS FOR JURY—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Plaintiff's horse-drawn vehicle was struck at a crossing by a passenger train running down a grade by gravity without the noise usually incident to the application of steam power. A building, an orchard, and a box car standing on a spur track, the corner of which was 28 feet from the center of the main track, obstructed the view, so that there was a very limited view until nearly opposite the corner of the car. An electric gong intended to ring automatically and on which plaintiff had come to depend was not ringing. He proceeded very slowly, almost stopping his horse, and listening for trains, until he arrived near the standing car, and then speeded up his horse to pass in front of an engine which he saw some distance away. After passing the car he saw the train and tried to turn so as to avoid it, but was unable to do so. Held that, in view of the fact that he was driving a horse, making it unsafe to stop close to the track, and his right to rely to some extent on the electric gong, it was a question for the jury whether he obeyed the stop, look, and listen rule to the extent he should have done.

PARKER, J. The plaintiff, Stewart, seeks recovery of damages for personal injuries, for the killing of his horse, and injury to his buggy, which he claims resulted from the negligence of the defendant railway company. Trial in the superior court for Yakima county sitting with a jury resulted in a verdict and judgment awarding him $2,500, from which the defendant has appealed to this court.

Counsel for appellant make the single contention here that respondent's own negligence and want of care so contributed to his damages that he should not be allowed to recover in this action, and that it should be so decided as a matter of law. They made appropriate motions in that behalf in the superior court at the close of the trial, which motions were by the trial court denied, and the question of respondent's contributory negligence submitted to the jury, together with the question of appellant's negligence. It is conceded by counsel for appellant that the evidence introduced was such as to call for the submission to the jury of the question of appellant's negligence and sufficient to support recovery against appellant but for respondent's contributory negligence.

The accident in question occurred at the crossing of appellant's main line of railway and a much-traveled street the center line of which marks the northern city limits of Yakima. The railway at this point runs approximately north and south, while the street runs east and west, so that they cross each other at approximately right angles. East-bound trains approach this crossing and the city of Yakima from the north. For a considerable distance north of this crossing, indeed for several miles, and also south of it into the city the railway runs down grade. Because of this, east-bound trains coming into the city from the north are allowed to run towards and over this crossing by gravity and their own momentum without the application of steam power and without the noise usually incident thereto, commencing to so run a long distance before reaching the crossing. Passenger trains are in the habit of going over this crossing at a rate of about 20 miles per hour, which is the city ordinance speed limit. This is a very much used crossing, it being on the main traveled highway from the business portion of the city to a suburb of some considerable population called Fruitvale. Appellant, evidently appreciating its dangers, maintains an electric gong at the crossing which when in working order automatically commences to ring as a warning of the approach of any train from the north when it reaches a point approximately one-half mile north of the crossing. On the north side of the street and east of the railway tracks are Standard Oil Company buildings and a yard surrounded by a high board fence, and also an orchard. The main building of the oil company at its southwest corner is on the street line and is 42.7 feet from the center of the main line track of the railway. At the time of the accident there was a box car on a spur track adjacent to the building on the west which projected one foot into the street beyond the building. The southwest corner of this car was 28.4 feet from the center of the main line track, and would be approximately 23 feet from the end of the crossbeam on the front of a passing engine and about the same distance from the side of the cars of a passing train. The orchard back of the oil company's yard comes to within about 30 feet of the main track.

The orchard, the oil company's structures, and the car standing upon the spur obstructed the view of the track to the north from the street, so that one approaching the track from the east would have no view of the track to the north except such as could be obtained when he had reached a point near the southwest corner of the car. The usable driveway portion of the street was principally to the north of the center line of the street, so that one approaching the railway from the east would drive along within approximately 20 or 25 feet of the oil company's fence and buildings and slightly closer to the end of the car on the spur track at the time of the accident. Thus a person so approaching the track along the roadway from the east would have a very limited view of the track to the north until he came nearly opposite the corner of the car. Respondent lived at Fruitvale, and was driving his horse hitched to his buggy from the business portion of the city to his home, approaching the track along the street from the east. He was quite well acquainted with the crossing, having driven over it a great many times. He knew of the electric gong being there and had heeded its warning on previous occasions of the passing of trains, and had come to depend upon it. He did not know that it was then or ever had been out of working order. When he arrived near the corner of the oil company's building and the car upon the spur track he proceeded very slowly, almost stopping his horse, and listened for the approach of any train from the north. Not hearing the approach of any train from that direction, and the gong then not ringing, and seeing only an engine on the west side track about 150 feet south of the crossing headed north, apparently about to start, he speeded up his horse to about 5 miles per hour with the view of passing quickly over the tracks, which plainly he could safely do in so far as that engine was concerned. Upon passing the end of the car he saw a passenger train bearing down upon him from the north a very short distance away at a speed estimated by the several witnesses at from 20 to 25 miles per hour. He tried to turn his horse to the left, but before he could do so the horse was struck by the end of the crossbeam on the front of the engine, throwing it against the side of the engine, killing it instantly, injuring the buggy, and also seriously injuring him. The fireman having a clear view on that side of the engine, and being then on the lookout, first saw the horse's head and shoulders when the front of the engine was about 50 feet and the cab about 100 feet from the crossing. If the fireman's version is correct, then it seems plain the respondent did not see the engine until his horse was somewhat closer to the track, since he was sitting in the buggy some 13 feet back of the horse. The jury might well conclude that from the time the fireman saw the horse or from the time the respondent first saw his own danger until the collision less than two seconds elapsed. The whistle of the engine seems to have been blown for the station at the usual place some half a mile north of the crossing. Respondent says he did not hear it, nor did he hear the engine's bell ring. This it is possible to account for by the orchard and oil company's structures being between him and the approaching train. It seems to be conceded that there was no blowing of the whistle for the crossing, though apparently the bell was being rung. The train was running on schedule time, but respondent says that he did not know it was then time for any train to pass. Respondent's driving a horse would render his position somewhat more critical than as if he had been driving a motor-propelled vehicle, which, of course, would have been subject to more effectual control because of the absence of the element of fright on the part of the horse. This summary of the facts, we think, is as favorable to appellant's contention that respondent was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law as the evidence will warrant.

Counsel for appellant invoke the general rule of stop, look, and listen as though it were a hard and fast rule of law which can be applied and made determinative of the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence in a crossing case without regard to the varying circumstances of the particular case to be decided and as though it was under all circumstances negligence per se not to stop, look, and listen upon approaching a railway crossing. They also seem to argue that it can be readily determined as a question of law whether one has stopped, looked, or listened to the extent required by law in a given case. It seems to us that the rule cannot be so readily applied as an exact measure of duty on the part of one approaching a railway crossing. If the probability of danger is very great one might well be held to the duty of stopping some considerable time and looking or listening or both with great care. On the other hand, if the surrounding circumstances are such as to indicate to an ordinarily prudent person that the probability of danger is but slight, then the measure of time and care to be used in stopping to look or listen would seem to diminish proportionately. These observations seem to suggest, even if there be no dispute as to the facts, that the inference to be drawn therefrom may be so debatable as to induce different minds to arrive at different conclusions upon the question of whether or not one approaching a railway crossing and injured there by a passing train is guilty of contributory negligence because of his failure to stop, look, and listen with that degree of care the law requires. Judge Dunbar, speaking for the court in Averbuch v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 55 Wash. 633, 636, 104 Pac. 1103, made some observations touching the general rule of stop, look, and listen in harmony with these views. Now an inquiry which involves the possible affirmative determination that plaintiff has been guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, the negligence of his opponent concededly appearing sufficient for submission to the jury, we apprehend should be approached with somewhat greater caution than an inquiry which involves only the question of whether or not any evidence has been produced warranting the submission of a question to the jury. In the former case it is deciding as a matter of law that the fact has been conclusively affirmatively proven, while in the latter it is deciding as a matter of law that no evidence has been introduced to prove a fact. It seems to us that there is more danger of invading the province of the jury in the former than in the latter inquiry. In Steele v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 21 Wash. 287, 57 Pac. 820, Judge Dunbar, speaking for the court, observed and quoted with approval from two eminent authors as follows:

> "'It is frequently stated that, when the facts are undisputed or conclusively proved, the question of negligence is to be decided by the court. A better opinion, however, would seem to be that, in order to justify the withdrawal of the case from the jury, the facts of the case should not only be undisputed, but the conclusion to be drawn from those facts indisputable. Whether the facts be disputed or undisputed, if different minds may honestly draw different conclusions from them, the case should properly be left to the jury.' 2 Thompson, Negligence, p. 1236.
> "As showing the impropriety of judges taking this question from the jury, except in cases showing undisputed and palpable negligence, it is said by Mr. Cooley, in his work on Torts (page 802): 'If the judge in such a case were to pass upon negligence as a question of law, he must, in doing so, be endeavoring to enforce a rule of a variable nature, which must take its final coloring from the experience, training, and temperament of the judge himself; a rule which his predecessor might not have accepted, and which his successor may reject, and upon which a court of review may reverse his action, not because the facts are differently regarded, but because judges are men, and men are different. As has been said in one case, it must be a very clear case, indeed, which would justify the court in taking upon itself this responsibility. For when the judge decides that a want of due care is or is not shown, he necessarily fixes in his own mind the standard of ordinary prudence, and, measuring the conduct of the party by that, turns the case out of court or otherwise disposes of it upon his opinion of what a reasonably prudent man ought to have done under the circumstances.'"

Observations made by us in Richmond v. Tacoma Ry. & P. Co., 67 Wash. 444, 456, 122 Pac. 351, are quite in harmony with these views. A number of decisions of this court there noticed clearly show the reluctance with which this court ever takes the question of contributory negligence away from the jury and decides affirmatively that the plaintiff is guilty of such negligence. Probably the clearest general statement of the view of this court upon that question is that made by Judge White in Traver v. Spokane Street Ry. Co., 25 Wash. 225, 239, 65 Pac. 284, 289, as follows:

> "The great weight of authority is to the effect that, before a court will be justified in taking from the jury the question of contributory negligence, the acts done must be so palpably negligent that there can be no two opinions concerning them."

See, also, 1 Thompson, Negligence § 425; 2 Cooley, Torts (3d Ed.) p. 1428.

Now, we have seen that respondent did come almost to a stop and listened when, as can well be argued, he was as near the main track of the railway as it was safe for him to go with his horse before deciding that he could safely proceed; that the electric gong was then silent; that he failed to hear the approach of any train from the north; and that the train was running down grade of its own momentum, and therefore not making as much noise as it otherwise would. In view of these facts we think it cannot be said as a matter of law that a reasonably prudent man in the situation respondent was would not have proceeded across the track. It is true respondent did not look. Where he came almost to a stop with a view of listening he could not have seen had he looked in the direction of the approaching train. It may well be argued, as already suggested, that he then had approached as close to the main track as it was safe for him to do before deciding whether or not he could safely proceed, in view of the fact that he was driving a horse, and not an inanimate motor-propelled vehicle. Had he proceeded beyond the end of the freight car a sufficient distance so that he could have seen north along the track for any considerable distance before stopping, he would have then placed himself and horse in great danger considering the great probability of the fright of the horse with its head so close to the track on which the train was approaching. Had he been injured by reason of having come into that position, which would have been highly probable, though not by collision with the train, and sought relief from the railway company on account of its negligence, it would, no doubt, be here urging his contributory negligence as it is now doing and with just as much reason for success upon that ground. It may be that the jury would and should have found that respondent was guilty of contributory negligence in approaching and attempting to cross as he did, and it may be that the trial judge, and also the judges of this court, were they triers of the facts, would arrive at that conclusion; but that is quite a different matter than so deciding as a matter of law. That of itself does not argue that there was nothing for the jury to decide as a matter of fact. We cannot escape the conclusion that there is room for honest difference of opinion as to whether respondent obeyed the stop, look, and listen rule to the extent he should have done, in the light of the facts then appearing to him as a reasonably prudent man. The following decisions of this court in crossing cases, as well as those already noticed, we think, support this conclusion: Northern Pac. R. R. Co. v. Holmes, 3 Wash. T. 543, 18 Pac. 76; Ladouceur v. Northern Pac. R. R. Co., 4 Wash. 38, 29 Pac. 942. The decisions in Dukeman v. C., C., C & St. L. Ry. Co., 237 Ill. 104, 86 N. E. 712, and Pendroy v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 17 N. D. 433, 117 N. W. 531, are in point as showing that the rule of stop, look, and listen does not in all cases render a party approaching a railway crossing guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law by his failure to stop, look, and listen, and also as showing that the extent to which he must stop, look, and listen and the degree of care he must exercise in that regard is not always the same.

In the following decisions the courts seem to have regarded the presence of an automatic electric bell or gong maintained at a crossing as a warning of the approach of trains, and its ringing or failure to ring as an element entering into the question of one's negligence in approaching a crossing in the light of the stop, look, and listen rule. McSweeney v. Erie R. Co., 93 App. Div. 496, 87 N. Y. Supp. 836; C., C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Heine, 28 Ind. App. 163, 62 N. E. 455; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Champ (Ky.) 104 S. W. 988; Jacobs v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 97 Kan. 247, 154 Pac. 1023, L. R. A. 1916D, 783. It is true these cases all seem to hold that one approaching a railway crossing has no right to rely entirely upon an automatic gong maintained there by the railway company to give warning of the approach of trains, but they do recognize that he may properly consider the ringing or failure to ring of such a gong in connection with other things evidenced by the proper use of his senses to determine whether or not there is present danger. The last-cited case may seem to be opposed to this view, but, read in the light of its own facts, we can hardly so regard it. That was a case of an automobile approaching a railway crossing under such circumstances that it could have been stopped at a point near the track where the approaching train would have been plainly seen. Common experience teaches us that an automobile can be stopped with safety much closer to a track upon which there is a speeding train than can the ordinary horse. To stop a horse with its head say within 10 feet of a track on which there is a speeding train would ordinarily seem little short of foolhardy, while an automobile could stand even closer to a train moving at great speed with comparative safety; the difference being that the driver has not that absolute control over his horse that the driver has over his automobile. In harmony with the views expressed in these cases similar views have been expressed in cases where there are maintained gates at crossings, and the gates being open has been considered as some evidence to the public that no train was approaching. Ellis v. Boston & Maine R. R., 169 Mass. 600, 48 N. E. 839; McClain v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 89 Kan. 24, 130 Pac. 646, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 699.

We are not arguing that respondent had the right to depend wholly upon the ringing of the electric gong at the crossing to advise him of the approach of a train without the use of his senses in other respects or without in some measure stopping and listening, but only that the presence of the gong there, his knowledge thereof, his experience with it on previous occasions and not knowing that it was then out of order or that it ever had been out of order in some measure lessen the degree of care to be exercised by him in stopping and listening. These facts, taken together with the fact that he was driving a horse instead of an inanimate motor-driven vehicle, might have induced the jury to believe that as a reasonably prudent man he was not negligent in proceeding as he did and without first going forward a sufficient distance to see along the track and stopping and looking.

Let us now notice the decisions of the courts relied upon by counsel for appellant, and also one or two others which may seem to lend it support.

In Woolf v. Washington Ry. & N. Co., 37 Wash. 491, 79 Pac. 997, the plaintiff was held guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, but it was because at approximately 100 feet from the crossing he could see along the railway track for a distance of 600 feet, and, seeing a train approaching, he attempted to cross the track ahead of it.

In Cable v. Spokane & I. E. R. R. Co., 50 Wash. 619, 97 Pac. 744, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1224, the driver of an open buggy approaching a railway was held guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. In that case it appears that he knew that the train was approaching, and that it usually ran at high speed at that point.

In Bowden v. Walla Walla Valley R. R. Co., 79 Wash. 184, 140 Pac. 549, the driver of an automobile approaching a railway crossing was held guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. From a point 100 feet from the crossing he could see a train upon the railway 200 feet away, and from a point 40 feet from the crossing he could have seen a train at least 300 feet away. He proceeded without using his senses, which would have plainly revealed his danger, and he could have stopped the automobile before reaching the track.

In Aldredge v. Oregon-Washington R. R. & N. Co., 79 Wash. 349, 140 Pac. 550, the plaintiff was held guilty of contributory negligence because he apparently took no precaution whatever to ascertain that the train was approaching. Just before turning on to the crossing he was driving parallel to the railway track in plain view of an approaching train, though apparently his view was obstructed by some bushes in some degree when he was close to the track.

In Cole v. Northern Pacific Ry. Co., 82 Wash. 322, 144 Pac. 34, a boy riding a bicycle was held guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law because he approached a double-track railway and slowing up to await the passing of a train in one direction immediately proceeded without looking and was struck by a train from the opposite direction.

In Skaala v. Twin Falls Logging Co., 82 Wash. 679, 144 Pac. 897, a pedestrian was held guilty of contributory negligence in crossing railway tracks under such circumstances as rendered it almost too plain for argument that he did not use his senses in any degree looking to his own protection. Of course, a pedestrian can so control his actions by using proper caution as to render himself safe though he be very close to a moving train.

In Allison v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 83 Wash. 591, 145 Pac. 608, the plaintiff, driving an automobile upon a crossing at night, was held guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law because he ran into a slowly moving train which his own headlights would have plainly revealed had he used his sense of sight.

In McKinney v. Port Townsend & P. S. Ry. Co., 91 Wash. 387, 158 Pac. 107, it was held that an automobile driver was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law upon approaching a railway track, the evidence rendering it certain that his automobile was running under such conditions that it could have been stopped within 3 to 7 feet, and he came within plain view of the track and the approaching train within a distance of 15 or 20 feet of the crossing. That case was not finally disposed of by that decision, but was remanded for new trial because of the failure of the trial court to properly submit to the jury the question of last clear chance as bearing upon the liability of the company.

In Blackburn v. So. Pac. Co., 34 Or. 215, 55 Pac. 225, we have a case of contributory negligence, and so decided as a matter of law where the deceased was familiar with the crossing and aware of the fact that it was about time for the train to pass, and he proceeded without stopping to look or listen. That case, we think, can be distinguished from the one before us by the fact that deceased knew it was about time for a train to pass, and there was not present any automatic electric bell or gong for the purpose of giving warning of the approach of trains. In other words, there was nothing present there to suggest to the deceased that there was no train approaching, but, on the contrary, he knew it was about time for one to pass.

In Griffin v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co., 170 Cal. 772, 151 Pac. 282, L. R. A. 1916A, 842, an automobile driver was held guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in approaching a crossing without stopping to look and listen. He stopped about 35 feet from the track, where obstructions made it impossible for him to see the approaching train, and, hearing no noise and seeing no smoke, he proceeded. Had he driven within 17 feet of the track and stopped his machine he could have seen the approaching train. There was no gong present to suggest to him by its ringing or silence what the then probability of danger was. Two of the justices dissented, they being of the opinion that plaintiff could not be held guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

The decision in Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Crisman, 19 Colo. 30, 34 Pac. 285, cited and relied upon by counsel for appellant, seems to make some general observations lending support to their contention. It was not, however, there decided as a matter of law that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, the case being remanded for new trial because of error in instructions. The observations made in the opinion, however, do suggest the thought that the extent to which one approaching a railway crossing must stop, look and listen is not always capable of exact measurement.

We are of the opinion that it cannot be held as a matter of law that respondent was guilty of contributory negligence, and that the trial court properly left that question to the jury.

The judgment is affirmed.

(96 Wash. 366)

CITY OF HILLYARD ex rel. TANNER, Atty. Gen., v. CARABIN et al. (No. 13762.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑894—PAYMENT OF FUNDS BY TREASURER—WARRANT—STATUTE.

Under Rem. & Bal. Code, § 7687, providing that all demands against cities of the third class shall be paid by warrants specifying the purpose for which they are drawn, the action of the treasurer of such a city in paying claims against the city in cash without warrant was illegal.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑894—PAYMENT OF FUNDS—SHORTAGE.

All city funds, once in the hands of the city treasurer, must in law be regarded as continuing in his official custody until lawfully drawn out. Payments made otherwise are made in his own wrong, and cannot diminish the fund for which he is responsible.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑173(5)—MISAPPROPRIATION OF FUNDS BY TREASURER—MANNER—PROOF.

Where, by his illegal act in paying out the money of a city of the third class in cash without warrant, the city treasurer created a shortage in his official fund, and illegally paid out the city's money, to recover from him the city need not show also the manner of the misappropriation.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑894—PAYMENT OF FUNDS IN CASH—CITY COUNCIL.

The city council of a city of the third class could not pay the city's current indebtedness by cash, and could not ratify the city treasurer's illegal act in so doing.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑173(5) — FUNDS OF CITY—SHORTAGE IN CITY TREASURER'S FUND—LIABILITY.

Where the city treasurer of a city of the third class without warrants illegally paid out money in cash, in pursuance of a fraudulent scheme on his part to appropriate the city's money by forging voucher signatures of laborers, the city treasurer was liable for the shortage thus created in his fund.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑173(5) — PRINCIPAL AND SURETY—CITY TREASURER—SHORTAGE—AUDIT—LIABILITY.

The failure of auditing officers of the state to discover a shortage in the accounts of a city treasurer did not relieve the latter or his bond from liability, since the failure of auditing officers, whose examination and reports are not conclusive, cannot be binding on either the officer or the public he serves; the bureau of inspection having no power to discharge an official from liability.

7. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS 🔑22(8)—ACTION AGAINST SURETY—ACTION ON WRITTEN CONTRACT.

An action against an official bond, the basis of which is the wrongful and illegal act of the principal, on which the liability of the surety is dependent, is not an action on a written contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 109.]

8. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS 🔑57(4)—STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS—ACTION AGAINST BOND OF OFFICIAL—TERM OF OFFICE.

The three-year statute of limitations for actions on unwritten contracts (Rem. Code 1915, § 159, subd. 3) begins to run on a city's cause of action against its treasurer and his bond for misappropriation of funds at the end of his term of office, whether or not the relief asked for is based on undiscovered fraud.

9. COSTS 🔑231(2)—ON APPEAL.

Appellants, who obtained a more favorable judgment in the Supreme Court than that secured below, in point of the amount of recovery awarded against them, will recover costs of the appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. § 872.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Spokane County; E. H. Sullivan, Judge.

Action by the City of Hillyard, on the relation of W. V. Tanner, Attorney General, against John A. Carabin and the Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Judgment modified.

W. C. Donovan and Chas. E. Swan, both of Spokane, for appellants. W. V. Tanner, Atty. Gen., Scott Z. Henderson, Asst. Atty. Gen., C. C. Upton, of Hillyard, and L. L. Thompson, of Olympia, for respondent.

HOLCOMB, J. This action was brought on behalf of the city of Hillyard to recover from appellants Carabin and Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Company, the surety on his official bond, certain sums of money which the city claims to have lost by reason of alleged fraudulent acts committed by Carabin, while acting as the city treasurer, together with his alleged coconspirators, the city engineer and city clerk.

The record shows that during Carabin's terms of office a great many men were employed by the city in constructing a water system, and that, instead of paying these men by warrant as provided in Rem. & Bal. Code, § 7687, they were paid in cash by Carabin when they presented a time certificate to him, signed by the foreman of the works, at which time they signed a voucher for the same. During the first part of the work this was the only record kept of these men. Later on pay rolls were kept, but the men were still paid by cash, instead of warrants. At the end of the month a warrant to relieve cash would be issued to Carabin by order of the city council. Carabin would then take this warrant to the bank, where it would be cashed, and the cash deposited to the credit of the city of Hillyard. The bank would hold the warrant until it was presented and paid. On April 1, 1913, Carabin, the city engineer, and the city clerk were charged with conspiracy, and later pleaded guilty to conspiring to defraud the city out of certain money by forging the names of fictitious persons on the pay roll. The evidence of handwriting experts was introduced also tending to show that the names on the receipts, vouchers, and pay roll were forged by Carabin, the city engineer, and the city clerk; it being respondent's theory that the alleged payees were fictitious persons, and that the moneys purported to have been paid to them were wrongfully retained by the conspirators.

From an adverse judgment in the sum of $4,015.93, appellants appeal, and urge that, since the gravamen of this action is fraud, in order for respondent to recover, it must establish by a preponderance of the evidence that Carabin was guilty of fraud as alleged, and also that the men whose names were alleged to have been forged to the pay roll and vouchers were fictitious persons, or had not worked for the city as pretended, and that such money was retained by Carabin and his coconspirators.

[1, 2] In considering this question, the evidence shows that Carabin might have incurred a prima facie liability on the ground of illegally paying out the city's money, irrespective of the question of active fraud, for Rem. & Bal. Code, § 7687, specifically provides that all demands against cities of the third class shall be paid by warrants which shall specify the purpose for which they are drawn. From this statute it is apparent that the action of Carabin in paying claims against the city in cash without warrant was an illegal act. McCormick v. Bay City, 23 Mich. 457. And it also created a shortage, as:

> "All district funds once in the hands of the town treasurer must in law be regarded as continuing in his official custody until lawfully drawn out. Payments made otherwise are made in his own wrong, and cannot diminish the fund for which he is responsible." People ex rel. Burns v. Bender, 36 Mich. 195; Seymour v. Ellensburg, 81 Wash. 365, 142 Pac. 875.

[3, 4] By his illegal act Carabin created a shortage in the fund of the city treasurer and illegally paid out the money of the city. Because of these facts we do not think that, in order to recover in this action, respondent must show also the manner of the misappropriation, which in this case would be impossible, for respondent could not show that men whose names were signed to the pay roll and time certificates did not work for the city at the time the cash was paid out. By ostensibly paying out the money, but in a wrongful manner, Carabin rendered it impossible for respondent to make this proof; and to now hold that respondent must so do would be to render ineffective the statute which requires that claims against the city must be paid by warrants, and place a premium upon its violation. Nor is the issuance of a warrant by the council to relieve the cash of any consequence, inasmuch as the council itself could not pay the city's current indebtedness by cash, and could not ratify Carabin's illegal act in so doing.

[5] As it was not necessary for respondent to show that these men whose names were signed to the pay roll did not work for the city of Hillyard, by showing that the money was illegally paid out, together with the evidence of fraud on the part of Carabin, respondent established a case which, if believed, would render Carabin liable for the shortage, and the evidence of fraud is sufficient in our minds to show that the shortage shown was misappropriated by Carabin.

[6] In their original answers, by way of affirmative defense, appellants pleaded that Carabin's books were examined during the years 1910, 1911, and 1912, by officers of the state, that no report of these shortages was ever made, that the bond was executed in reliance upon such examinations, and that consequently appellants were discharged from liability. The action of the lower court in sustaining the demurrer to these defenses is next assigned as error. No authority is cited to sustain this contention, nor are we able to find any. On the other hand, the rule seems to be well settled that the failure of an auditing officer to discover a shortage in the accounts of another officer does not relieve the latter or his bond from liability. Anderson v. Blair, 121 Ga. 120, 48 S. E. 951, 2 Ann. Cas. 165. That the auditing officers were incompetent or negligent in their examinations at those times is established by the facts. But the failure of such officers, whose examinations and reports are not conclusive, cannot be binding upon either the officer or the public he serves. The bureau of inspection assuredly has no power to discharge an official from liability.

[7, 8] This action was commenced in June, 1914, and it is appellants' contention that all transactions which occurred prior to March, 1911, the date of the expiration of Carabin's first term as city treasurer, are barred by the statute of limitations. While it is true this is an action against a bond, it is not an action on a written contract, as the basis of the action is the wrongful and illegal act of the principal upon which the liability of the surety is dependent. Board of County Com'rs v. Van Slyck, 52 Kan. 622, 35 Pac. 299. Appellants therefore urge that this action comes within the provisions of subdivision 3, § 159, Rem. Code, which provides that actions on unwritten contracts must be brought within three years, and this theory would seem to be well founded, unless respondent's contention that, since this is an action for relief on the ground of fraud, the statute does not commence to run till the fraud is discovered, as provided in subdivision 4, § 159, Rem. Code, is meritorious. However, in a case of this kind, whether or not the relief asked for is based on fraud which has not been discovered, the rule is well established by this court that the statute starts to run at the end of the term of office within which the cause of action arose. Spokane County v. Prescott, 19 Wash. 418, 53 Pac. 661, 67 Am. St. Rep. 733; Skagit County v. American Bonding Co., 59 Wash. 1, 109 Pac. 197. In the latter case the court said:

> "It should rather be held that, for the purposes of the statute of limitations, all causes of action matured at the expiration of his term, for defalcations during such term, without reference to the several dates on which they occurred, and that as between the county on the one part, and the delinquent officer on the other, the period of limitation would not commence to run prior to the expiration of his term."

Subsequently in that case it is determined that the statute does not start to run at the times the different misappropriations were made, when they were not discovered at such times, and respondent therefore argues that the statute does not run till such discoveries are made. But this case plainly places a limit, viz., the end of the term of office, when the statute does in any event start to run; and the failure to discover the fraud cannot stop the toll of the statute after that time. It was therefore error for the court to allow a recovery for items misappropriated prior to January, 1911, the end of Carabin's first term of office. Their recovery is barred by the statute of limitations.

Several other assignments of error are urged, based on the admission and refusal to strike certain evidence. It is sufficient to say that we have considered these assignments, and do not deem them of sufficient merit to warrant a reversal.

The judgment of $4,015.93, which was computed by adding together the sums of $3,171.07 as principal and $844.86 interest to November 30, 1915, the date of the judgment below, must be and is modified by eliminating the items of loss caused by defalcations prior to January, 1911, amounting to $1,636.80 principal and $521.33 interest to November 30, 1915. The remaining defalcations, amounting to $1,534.27 principal and $323.53 interest to November 30, 1915, totaling $1,857.80, are recoverable, and as to them the judgment is affirmed. In making these deductions we are not unmindful of the fact that some deductions were made from these items by the trial court, but in so far as this is ascertainable from the record none of them were made for defalcations in 1910. To $1,857.80 should also be added the sum of $723.81, being the sum of $608.93, with interest to November 30, 1915, which amount the trial court found to be due respondent, but inadvertently failed to include it in the judgment.

[9] Appellants, having obtained a more favorable judgment here than they secured below, will recover costs of this appeal. Let the judgment be modified, and ordered accordingly, for the sum of $2,581.61, with trial costs.

TOMKINS v. SEATTLE CONSTRUCTION & DRY DOCK CO. (No. 13847.)

1. CONTRACTS 🔑140—EFFECT OF ILLEGALITY—VIOLATION OF STATUTE—SUBSEQUENT AGREEMENT.

Where defendant employed plaintiff, a British subject, to come to the United States to work as an engineer, contrary to Act Feb. 26, 1885, c. 164, § 2, 23 Stat. 332 (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 4245), prohibiting the importation and migration of foreigners under contract to perform labor in the United States, and invalidating such contracts, the employé could not recover on a subsequent agreement by which he was to continue such work; the complaint showing that the subsequent agreement grew out of and was connected with the original void contract.

2. CONTRACTS 🔑140—EFFECT OF ILLEGALITY—VIOLATION OF STATUTE—SUBSEQUENT AGREEMENT.

In determining whether a new contract is so connected with an illegal contract as to render it void, the test is whether plaintiff is required to resort to the illegal contract.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, King County; A. W. Frater, Judge.

Action by J. A. Tomkins against the Seattle Construction & Dry Dock Company. Complaint dismissed, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. N. Sears, of Seattle, for appellant. Bogle, Graves, Merritt & Bogle, of Seattle, for respondent.

MAIN, J. The purpose of this action was to recover damages for the breach of an alleged contract of employment. To the third amended complaint, which will be hereafter referred to as the complaint, a demurrer was interposed, and sustained by the trial court. The plaintiff refused to plead further, and elected to stand upon the complaint. From a judgment of dismissal, the plaintiff appeals.

The facts, as stated in the complaint, so far as necessary to present the decisive question, may be summarized as follows: The respondent was a corporation, organized under the laws of the state of New Jersey, doing business in Seattle, Wash., and at Barnett, in the province of British Columbia, Canada. The appellant was a British subject, and a skilled artisan. On or about September 22, 1915, the respondent, at Vancouver, B. C., "entered into an oral contract of hiring and employment whereby it was mutually agreed by and between them that defendant [respondent] on said date employed plaintiff [appellant] to serve it from month to month in the capacity of mechanical engineer in Seattle, Wash., and elsewhere, at a monthly wage and salary of $300 a month, and plaintiff agreed to serve defendant as mechanical engineer on said terms and at said salary." Immediately after this contract was entered into, the appellant came to Seattle, Wash., and there, for one month, beginning on or about September 25, 1915, performed his duties as mechanical engineer in the respondent's employ. At the "end of said month it was agreed by and between these parties that thereafter plaintiff should continue to perform said services for defendant at said monthly salary of $300, from month to month beginning on the 1st day of each calendar month thereafter, and plaintiff continued to perform said services for defendant on said terms until December 8, 1915." On the date last mentioned the appellant was discharged by the respondent. The present action was instituted for the purpose of recovering as damages the salary which the appellant would have earned between December 8, 1915, when he was discharged, and the end of that month. There is no claim that all salary earned up to the date of the discharge had not been paid.

[1, 2] The controlling question is whether the contract pleaded is tainted with illegality. From the facts stated it appears that the appellant was a British subject, residing in or near Vancouver, B. C., when the contract of employment was originally entered into, and that performance of the contract was to take place in Seattle, Wash.

Section 2 of chapter 164 (23 U. S. Stat. L. p. 332), being an act entitled "An act to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its territories, and the District of Columbia," provides:

> "That all contracts or agreements, express or implied, parol or special, which may hereafter be made by and between any person, company, partnership, or corporation, and any foreigner or foreigners, alien or aliens, to perform labor or service or having reference to the performance of labor or service by any person in the United States, its territories, or the District of Columbia previous to the migration or importation of the person or persons whose labor or service is contracted for into the United States, shall be utterly void and of no effect."

By this act the original contract of the parties in the present case, made at Vancouver, B. C., was illegal and void and of no effect. This is recognized by the appellant, but it is claimed that at the end of the first month's service in Seattle a new contract was entered into, and that such new contract does not violate the act of Congress.

It will be noticed by reference to the second excerpt quoted above from the complaint that, where it is sought to allege the contract made at the end of the first month, it is stated that the appellant "should continue to perform said services for defendant at said monthly salary of $300." Here is a direct reference which connects the original void contract with the one alleged to have been made at the end of the first month.

It is also alleged that when, on December 8, 1915, the appellant was discharged, he was performing services "under said employment from month to month." Here again is a direct reference to the contract alleged in the preceding part of the complaint. The general rule, which is supported by the authorities, is well stated in volume 15, A. & E. Encycl. of L. (2d Ed.) p. 992, as follows:

> "Where a contract grows immediately out of and is connected with a prior illegal contract, the illegality of such prior contract will enter into the new contract and render it illegal. * * * But if the new contract is not connected with the illegal contract or transaction, but is founded on a new consideration, it is not affected by such prior illegal contract or transaction, though the latter may have indirectly given rise to it."

In determining whether a new contract is so connected with an illegal contract as to render it also illegal and void, the test is whether the plaintiff, to make a case, is required to resort to the illegal contract. In Stirtan v. Blethen, 79 Wash. 10, 139 Pac. 618, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 623, it was said:

> "Where a plaintiff, to make a case, must rely upon the illegal contract itself, he cannot recover. The law will aid neither party to an illegal agreement, but will leave the parties where it finds them."

While the facts in that case are not the same as those in this case, the controlling legal principle is the same. The allegations of the complaint in the present case show that the contract alleged to have been made at the end of the first month's service grew out of and was connected with the prior void contract, made in British Columbia, and, under the law, the illegality of the latter contract entered into the new contract, and rendered it likewise void.

The judgment will be affirmed.

WILLIAMSON INV. CO. v. WILLIAMSON. (No. 13666.)

1. PARTITION ⚷13—TENANTS IN COMMON.

Where there are no complications as to the title of either party, either tenant in common can demand partition as a matter of right.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partition, Cent. Dig. §§ 36, 81.]

2. PARTITION ⚷26—DEFENSES—INJURY—INCONVENIENCE.

Probable injury to the property by a partition between tenants in common, inconvenience, or hardship to either of the parties are not adequate barriers to the assertion of the right to partition, nor a valid excuse for material delay in according the remedy.

3. PARTITION ⚷77(1)—EQUITY JURISDICTION—SALE.

In the original jurisdiction of equity, there was no partition of property between tenants in common by means of sale, except where all parties were sui juris and consented; wanting such capacity and consent, the division was always in kind, and, where the land was incapable of exact or fair division, compensation for the inequality was made by an award of owelty of partition.

4. PARTITION ⚷77(1)—PARTITION IN KIND.

The courts still, as formerly, favor a partition of land in kind between tenants in common whenever practicable.

5. PARTITION ⚷77(4)—PRESUMPTIONS—DIVISION OR SALE.

Since by Rem. Code 1915, § 838, authorizing actions for partition of property, and a sale if it appear that a partition cannot be made without great prejudice to the owner, the power of the court to order a sale is conditioned on showing that great prejudice would result from a division, there is a presumption that land held in common can be equitably divided according to the interests of the parties measured by value.

6. Partition 🔑77(4) — Sale — Burden to Show Prejudice from Division.

In an action for partition by a tenant in common who seeks a sale of the property on the ground that it cannot be divided without great prejudice to the owners, the burden to show great prejudice rests on him who asserts it.

7. Partition 🔑77(3)—Sale for Division—Statute—"Great Prejudice."

"Great prejudice," as used in Rem. Code 1915, § 838, authorizing actions for partition of property and a sale if it appear that a partition cannot be made without great prejudice to the owners, means material pecuniary loss, not mere temporary inconvenience, or temporary impairment of income, slight in comparison with the value of the property for the uses for which it is suitable.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Great Prejudice.]

8. Partition 🔑77(3) — Unimproved Land — Building.

Where a lot was worth on a depressed market $20,000 to $22,000, and, on a normal market, $30,000 to $37,000, and the building there rented precariously for only $40 or $50 a month, requiring continual reductions to keep it tenanted at all, the property was not permanently improved, or improved at all in any real or material sense, the lot being worth as much without it as with it, and the property should be treated for the purpose of partition as if the building were not there, since its absolute destruction would not greatly prejudice the owner in the legal sense of material pecuniary loss.

9. Partition 🔑77(4)—Party Wall Agreement—Burden of Proof.

In suit for partition, the burden was upon plaintiff, to whom was awarded the east half of the lot, to show that there was a continuing party wall agreement, obligating the owner of the east half to sustain the building on the adjoining lot.

10. Adjoining Landowners 🔑4(5)—Removal of Building—Absence of Party Wall Agreement.

Where buildings on adjoining lot serve to sustain one another, but there is no party wall agreement, the only duty of either party, who desires to remove his building, is to notify the other that the latter may protect his own building, and thereafter the removing party is liable only for failure to exercise reasonable care.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adjoining Landowners, Cent. Dig. §§ 34, 35.]

11. Partition 🔑77(3)—Partition in Kind —Diminution in Value.

Where division of a lot owned by tenants in common would reduce the aggregate value of the halves, but a sale for partition on the existing market for division of the proceeds would result in even a greater loss, simply because the aggregate value of the halves would be somewhat less than the value of the whole, the law will not deny partition in kind, and force one or possibly both of the common owners to change the form of his holding and forego the value of his investment by selling the entire property at a sacrifice.

12. Evidence 🔑486—Opinion—Value.

Opinion evidence is always admissible on questions of value.

13. Appeal and Error 🔑1009(1)—Findings —Conclusiveness.

In a suit in equity for a partition, on appeal the trial in the Supreme Court is one de novo, and, by Rem. Code 1915, § 1736, the findings of the trial court are not binding upon the Supreme Court, but they are entitled to great weight, particularly when supported by the referee's report.

14. Partition 🔑103—Sale for Division— Bid by Owners.

In case of a sale ordered for partition of property between tenants in common, either party may become a bidder at the sale.

15. Appeal and Error 🔑1046(5)—Immaterial Error.

In a suit for partition, where no sale of the property for division was ordered, error of the trial court in expressing the view that if he ordered a sale he should not permit either party to the suit to become a bidder was immaterial.

16. Partition 🔑91 — Competency of Referee.

A witness at the original hearing of a partition suit was not disqualified to be a referee to partition the property; the fact having been known when he was appointed, and no objection having been made at that time.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Spokane County; E. H. Sullivan, Judge.

Action by the Williamson Investment Company against Mabel C. Williamson. From a decree confirming partition made by referees, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Voorhees & Canfield, of Spokane, for appellant. Wellington D. Rankin, of Helena, Mont., and Sam H. Cone, of Spokane, for respondent.

ELLIS, C. J. This is an action for partition. The question is whether the land should be sold or divided in kind.

The property is described as lot 20, block 8, Havermale's addition to Spokane Falls, now Spokane. It is located on the north side of Main avenue, between Brown and Barnard streets, in the business district of the city. It has a frontage of 50 feet on Main avenue and a depth of 90 feet to the north. It is owned in undivided moieties by the parties to this action as tenants in common. It is adjoined on the east by lot 21 of the same dimensions and in the same block. Many years ago the then owner of lot 20 and the then owner of lot 21 erected a two-story wooden building covering both lots. The building had a common entrance on the line between the two lots giving access to the second story. Sixteen years ago Volney D. Williamson, president of the plaintiff corporation, became the owner of lot 20, and another owner acquired lot 21. The building was an old building at that time. A few years later the common entrance was closed, and a wooden partition wall cutting the original building into two was run through on the line between lots 20 and 21. Thereafter the two buildings were operated as separate buildings, the main entrance to that on lot 20 being placed in the middle of the Main avenue or front wall, with a stairway leading to the second story. The ground floor consists of two storerooms. The upper floor is fit only for a cheap rooming or lodging house. The upper hallway, office, laundry, and rooms are so arranged that a partition and double stairway could not be run through on the middle line of lot 20 so as to make two separate buildings without prohibitive expense. At the time of the trial the west storeroom was rented for a small monthly rental. The other storeroom was vacant. The upper story was rented at a monthly rental of about $40. It is admitted that the income from the building is hardly sufficient to carry the taxes and insurance, and that the rent is being continually reduced in order to keep the building tenanted at all. Three of plaintiff's witnesses somewhat indefinitely valued the building at from $1,500 to $3,000, though all of them admitted that it added little or nothing to the value of the lot, and that its only value was as an aid in carrying the property till the lot shall be used by the erection thereon of modern improvements as business property. Two witnesses for defendant and the three referees in partition appointed by the court testified that the building had little or no value, and, in substance, that the property would sell as readily, and for as much, without the building as with it. From the whole evidence it is plain that the building is an old wooden shell, badly out of repair and not worth repairing. Props have been placed in the rear, presumably to keep it from falling. On the part of the city officials there have been threats, or at least talk, of condemning it. One of the referees, a practical contractor and builder of 40 years' experience, who said he had examined the building critically, testified as follows:

> "As a matter of fact this property can be partitioned without any great prejudice to the owners. I do not consider the building of any value. I will have to answer that way. If it was a good building, I would say it hurts it. But I consider the lot as though the building was not there. Independent of the question of the times, it would not be any great prejudice to cut the lot in two, not particularly, but then, as a rule, you can sell 50 feet better than you can 25 feet, but there is no great detriment on that property, because very often some one wants 25 feet, but I prefer 50 feet myself. That would be owing to the buyer. As to the condition of the building, can the stenographer spell 'rotten'? It is in bad shape. It is gradually rotting down. The back timbers or studding are all rotten on the bottom. They put these braces up for fear it might fall—these braces on the back. I don't know if it would fall, but it looks bad. The plumbing is in bad shape. They do not use the bathroom at all; they use the sink and toilet; and the plastering is all broken down, and lathing exposed, and paper and all off, and I would think the building was ready to be condemned, myself; I think it's worthless."

As to the value of the lot, one of plaintiff's witnesses, an architect, expressed the opinion that it was worth at the time of the trial about $20,000; that he thought there was then a market for it at that price; that the real estate market was then much depressed, and that in normal times he would consider $600 a front foot, or $30,000, a good price. He expressed the further opinion that to cut the lot in two would reduce the aggregate value by 25 per cent. to 30 per cent. Another of plaintiff's witnesses, an experienced real estate man, was of the opinion that a high or boom price for the lot would be $60,000, a low or "hard-times" price $22,000, and the normal value $30,000; that to cut the lot in halves would reduce the aggregate value by 10 per cent. When asked in substance, which would result in greater loss to the owners, to divide the property in kind or sell it on the present market, he said it would be a "toss up" as to which would be advisable, and that "assuming that one could wait till normal times * * * it would be more prejudicial to sell than to divide." Still another witness, an architect not acquainted with real estate values in Spokane, expressed the view that a division in kind would depreciate the aggregate value by about 20 per cent. Another real estate dealer placed the values higher and the loss by division at about 33 per cent. He also placed the market value at the time of trial more than one-third below normal value. Of defendant's witnesses, one, a real estate dealer of long experience, was of the opinion that the property could not be sold at the time of the trial for more than 30 per cent. to 50 per cent. of its ordinary normal value. Another experienced real estate agent, who has had this property in his charge for about 3 years, while not expressing himself in terms of percentage, was of the positive opinion that the property could not be sold to advantage on the depressed market existing at the time of trial, and he said:

> "As far as that particular property is concerned I would rather have half of it all my own than to have it sold and take half of the money at this time."

An experienced contractor and builder, who was also one of the referees afterwards appointed by the court to partition the property, who had had 30 years' acquaintance with conditions and relative real estate values in Spokane, stated that he would not sell real estate at this time unless forced to do it; that it could not be done without considerable loss, which in some cases might run as high as 70 per cent.

The trial judge was of the opinion that the building was of little or no permanent value to the property, and that the fact that it could not be advantageously divided should not be permitted to stand in the way of a partition in kind. He found that the property could be divided into equal parts without great prejudice, or any substantial prejudice, to either of the owners, and that it should be so divided and partitioned between the parties without a sale. He accordingly entered an interlocutory decree of partition, appointing three duly qualified and disinterested persons to make the partition, and directing, if they were unable to partition and assign to each of the parties an equal portion, quantity, and quality relatively considered according to their respective rights, without great prejudice to the parties respectively, that they make and file a report to that effect. The referees accordingly partitioned the property, reporting that they had done so without great prejudice to either of the parties, by dividing it into two equal portions, quantity and quality relatively considered, by drawing a straight line from the center point of the north line of the lot to the center point of the south line, and that they had assigned the west half to defendant and the east half to plaintiff. Plaintiff filed exceptions to this report and contested its confirmation. After a full hearing the court entered its final decree confirming the partition as made by the referees. Plaintiff appealed.

Both parties concede that the sole question for the court's determination was whether or not a partition in kind could be made without great prejudice. The appellant throughout took and still takes the negative of this issue, the respondent the affirmative. It is obvious that every case of this character must ultimately depend upon its own peculiar facts. For that reason we have endeavored to set out fairly and fully the purport of the evidence. There are, however, certain broad guiding principles which it may profit to notice.

[2] Probable injury to the property, inconvenience, or hardship to either of the parties are not adequate barriers to the assertion of the right, nor valid excuses for material delay in according the remedy. Wittel v. Wittel, 82 N. J. Eq. 229, 91 Atl. 722; Mylin v. King, 139 Ala. 139, 35 South. 998.

[3] In the original jurisdiction of equity there was no such thing as partition by means of sale, except where all parties were sui juris and consenting. Wanting such capacity and consent, the division was always in kind, and where the land was incapable of exact or fair division, compensation for the inequality was made by an award of "owelty of partition." 4 Pomeroy's Equity Juris. (3d Ed.) §§ 1389, 1390.

[4] The practical inconvenience and frequent inadequacy of this method led to the enactment in England, and in nearly all of the states of the Union, of statutes conferring upon the courts power to make partition by sale of the land, when not partible in kind without greater injury than a sale would cause, independently of the consent of the parties. But partition has not lost its original purpose of a division without changing the existing character of the inheritance. The courts still, as formerly, favor a division in kind whenever practicable. 4 Pomeroy's Equity Juris. (3d Ed.) § 1390.

> "The law favors partition of land among tenants in common, rather than a sale thereof and a division of the proceeds, and it is only when the land itself cannot be partitioned that a sale may be ordered." Kloss v. Wylezalek, 207 Ill. 328, 69 N. E. 863, 99 Am. St. Rep. 220.

It is still recognized that an owner has the right to retain his inheritance or investment in the form in which he has it, so long as it can be done without great prejudice to his cotenant.

> "The power to convert real estate into money against the will of the owner, is an extraordinary and dangerous power, and ought never to be exercised unless the necessity therefor is clearly established." Vesper v. Farnsworth, 40 Wis. 357.

Nearly all of the state statutes, of which that of this state is typical, therefore, condition the power of the court to order a sale upon a finding from evidence that partition in kind cannot be made without "great prejudice" to the owners. Our statute (Rem. Code, § 838) authorizes actions for partition of property, "and for sale of such property, or a part of it, if it appear that a partition cannot be made without great prejudice to the owners." And again section 845 declares:

> "If it be alleged in the complaint and established by evidence, or if it appear by the evidence without such allegation in the complaint, to the satisfaction of the court, that the property, or any part of it, is so situated that partition cannot be made without great prejudice to the owners, the court may order a sale thereof, and for that purpose may appoint one or more referees. Otherwise, upon the requisite proofs being made, it shall decree a partition according to the respective rights of the parties as ascertained by the court, and appoint three referees therefor, and shall designate the portion to remain undivided for the owners whose interest remain unknown or are not ascertained."

Construing a statute couched in terms not materially different from ours, an able court has held that the term "great prejudice to the owners" means material pecuniary loss. The court said:

> "So the established test of whether a partition in kind would result in 'great prejudice to the owners' is whether the value of the share of each in case of a partition would be materially less than his share of the money equivalent that could probably be obtained for the whole." Idema v. Comstock, 131 Wis. 16, 110 N. W. 786, 120 Am. St. Rep. 1027.

See, also, to same effect Vesper v. Farnsworth, supra.

The Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia has clearly expressed what we conceive to be fundamental guiding principles in all cases, though the statute there involved made the criterion "convenience" instead of great prejudice. That court said:

> "In any case such sale may be made if the parties are all adults and consent thereto. But the court has no right to decree a sale without their consent, unless it finds: First, that partition in kind cannot be conveniently made; and, second, that the interests of the parties owning the land will be promoted by a sale. These two requisites are conditions imposed by the statute which alone confers upon a court of equity the power to make a sale at all. They are important and indispensable conditions. The statute is an innovation upon the common law, taking away from the owner the right to keep his freehold, and converting his home into money. That must not be done except in cases of imperious necessity. It is a legislative alteration of a canon of the law which forms part of the substructure of our jurisprudence. Forcible conversion of property into money is avoided wherever possible." Croston v. Male, 56 W. Va. 205, 49 S. E. 136, 107 Am. St. Rep. 918.

See, also, Roberts v. Coleman, 37 W. Va. 143, 16 S. E. 482. Pomeroy (section 1390) expresses the same thought when he says the power of sale is to be exercised "whenever it shall appear to the court * * * that a sale would be more beneficial, or less injurious, than an actual division."

[5, 6] Since by the statute itself the power of the court to order a sale is conditioned upon a showing that great prejudice would result from a division, there is a presumption that land held in common can be equitably divided according to the interests of the parties, measured by value. The burden of proof to show great prejudice, therefore, rests upon him who asserts it. East Shore Co. v. Richmond Belt Ry., 172 Cal. 174, 155 Pac. 999; Mitchell v. Cline, 84 Cal. 418, 24 Pac. 164; Hellier v. Syck, 147 Ky. 762, 145 S. W. 1110; Idema v. Comstock, supra.

In the case before us the burden to show that great prejudice would result from division in kind was upon the plaintiff. In the light of the foregoing well-established principles has this burden been adequately met?

[7, 8] It is first urged that, because the building cannot be advantageously divided, to divide in kind amounts to an order for a destruction of the building, or for the construction of a wall on the dividing line at a cost greater than the value of the building, and that either alternative works great prejudice. But great prejudice means material pecuniary loss, not mere temporary inconvenience or temporary impairment of an income slight in comparison with the value of the property for the uses for which it is suitable. The question is, Should this property, in view of its suitable location for business purposes, be treated as permanently improved property would be treated? It seems to us that where a property worth on a depressed market $20,000 to $22,000, and on a normal market $30,000 to $37,000, is renting for only $40 to $50 a month, and precariously at that, since the evidence shows continual reductions in rent to keep it tenanted at all, it cannot be said to be permanently improved, nor improved at all in any real or controlling sense. The building is an old wooden shell so out of repair that it has been propped for safety; the plumbing is antiquated and out of repair; the plastering is off; the lathing is exposed. It is not worth repairing. The court in his findings gave it a value of about $1,000, but we think the evidence shows this valuation excessive by at least one-half. One cannot read the evidence without being impressed with the view of many of the witnesses that the lots would be worth as much without it as with it. On the facts we agree with the trial court and the referees that this building as an element of value is negligible. The property should be treated for the purpose of division as if it were not there. Its absolute destruction would not be great prejudice in the legal sense of material pecuniary loss.

[9, 10] The further claim that the building on lot 20 cannot be removed without entailing upon the owner of the east half of it the expense of building a wall to sustain the building on lot 21 adjoining it on the east is not supported either by the law or by the preponderance of the evidence. The evidence fails to show that there was ever a continuing party wall agreement of any kind. If there was any, the burden was upon appellant to show it. We must assume that there was none. In such a case, the only duty of either party who desires to remove his building is to notify the other of that intention, so that the other may do whatever he deems advisable to protect his own building. Thereafter the first party is only liable for a failure to exercise reasonable care in removing his structure. Clemens v. Speed, 93 Ky. 284, 19 S. W. 660, 19 L. R. A. 240; Hieatt v. Morris, 10 Ohio St. 523, 78 Am. Dec. 280. No law to the contrary is cited, and we know of none as applied to the facts here presented. That no such support would be necessary in any event we think is supported by a preponderance of the evidence. Two of the referees testified that the dividing wall was a double wooden wall. One of them, who seems to us probably the best qualified witness who testified in the case, said:

> "I am a builder and contractor. It is two buildings that were built on lots 20 and 21. They are two buildings. There are two separate supports there. I examined it critically when I was there. There were two six-inch walls. The wall is a foot thick. I went into the dark room and could see through the partition. It is a window they put through there. Evidently there is a vent there at the top. The building could be removed from the east half without furnishing any support for the building lying on lot 21."

The evidence to the contrary was vague and uncertain.

[11, 12] It is next urged that to divide the lot would reduce the aggregate value of the halves from 10 per cent. to 30 per cent. below its value as a whole, and that this would be great prejudice. Assuming that this is true, though respondent's witnesses could see no such excessive result, the fact remains that every one of appellant's witnesses who testified on the subject was just as positive that even a greater loss would result from a sale on the existing market, and on this point there was an absolute unanimity of opinion on the part of all the witnesses on both sides. To use the language of Pomeroy, Can such a sale be justly said to be "more beneficial, or less injurious, than an actual division?" Simply because the aggregate value of the halves would be somewhat less than the value of the whole, must the law on that account force one, or possibly both, of the common owners to change the form of his holding, a thing never favored in law, and forego the value of his investment by selling the entire property at a sacrifice? We think not. But it is argued that the evidence as to the present depressed condition of the real estate market and a probable advance of this land in value was inadmissible and purely speculative. We fail, however, to see that it was more so than the evidence of loss in value by a division. Both are matters of opinion, and opinion evidence is always admissible on questions of value. In Craighead v. Pike, 58 N. J. Eq. 15, 43 Atl. 424, Vice Chancellor Pitney, now Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, gave to evidence of this character a controlling weight. He held that the fact that the property as a body had been on the market for a long time and could not be sold except at great loss was a sufficient reason to divide it in specie.

[14, 15] In the course of the trial the trial judge expressed the view that if he ordered a sale, he should not permit either party to the suit to become a bidder at the sale. In this he was in error, but the error is wholly immaterial, since no sale was ordered. Whether that view influenced him to favor a division in kind can make no difference. Under the law it was his duty to favor such a division in any event, since the evidence showed the division practicable and failed to show that great prejudice would result from it.

[16] Some complaint is made of the fact that one of the referees was also a witness at the original hearing. As an objection this is wholly untenable. Garth's Guardian v. Thompson, supra; Hellier v. Syck, supra. This fact was known when he was appointed, and no objection was made at the time. Moreover, all of the referees were men of unquestioned standing, and all testified that they were not influenced by the court's decree in reaching the conclusion that the property should be divided.

The decree is affirmed.

MURPHY v. PROSSER. (No. 13733.)

1. Action 🔑48(3)—Causes of Action Arising Out of Same Contract or Transaction—Joinder.

To cover purchase price for plaintiff's share in land and for money advanced, defendant gave plaintiff three notes secured by a mortgage. Later defendant gave plaintiff a second mortgage upon the property to secure payment of $7,000 advanced by plaintiff for purpose of making improvements on property. In 1909, to cover the balance due upon the said transactions, defendant gave plaintiff a demand note for $1,500, unsecured, and a $15,000 note due in three years secured by a mortgage. Held, that on time note being due plaintiff could join the causes of action upon the $1,500 note and the $15,000 note and mortgage in view of Rem. Code 1915, § 296, providing that "plaintiff may unite several causes of action in the same complaint when they all arise out of—(1) contract, express or implied; or * * * (8) the same transaction."

2. USURY ⟹114—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In an action to recover on two notes given for a balance due plaintiff on land sold and money advanced for improvements, defense being usury, evidence of the intrinsic value of property, its character, and the purpose for which it was adopted, was properly excluded.

3. USURY ⟹117—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Where defendant agreed to pay $5,000 more for plaintiff's share in land than plaintiff had paid, including the $5,000 in mortgage note given for land would not be proof that it was a bonus for the $7,000 loan subsequently made.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, King County; M. L. Clifford, Judge.

Action by George Murphy against Joseph V. Prosser. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Douglas, Lane & Douglas, of Seattle, for appellant. Chas. D. Fullen and J. F. Roy Erford, both of Seattle, for respondent.

MAIN, J. In the complaint in this case, there are alleged two causes of action, separately stated, the first upon a demand note, unsecured, the second, upon a note secured by a mortgage upon real estate. To the complaint, a demurrer was interposed, upon the ground that the two causes of action were improperly united. The demurrer being overruled, the defendant answered and pleaded usury as a defense. The charge of usury was denied by a reply. The cause was tried to the court, without a jury, and resulted in findings of fact, conclusions of law, and a judgment in favor of the plaintiff. The judgment upon the first cause of action was for $1,471.40. Upon the second cause of action, the judgment was for $21,744.60, and for the foreclosure of the mortgage. The defendant appeals.

The facts are briefly these: Some time during the month of August, 1903, the appellant and respondent contracted to purchase from the then owner a certain tract of land on the western slope of the Cascade Mountains, referred to in the evidence as the Scenic Hot Springs property. The purchase price was $19,000 cash, one-half of which was advanced by each of the purchasers, and they became the owners of the property as tenants in common, with equal moieties. On January 27, 1904, the respondent sold his half interest in the property to the appellant for $14,500. Prior to this time, the respondent had advanced to the appellant $2,500. To cover this advancement and the purchase price, the appellant executed three notes, one for $7,000, and two for $5,000 each. These notes were not due until five or six years after date, and contained a renewal provision for five additional years, at the election of the maker. The interest rate provided in the notes was 6 per cent. per annum, and, in the case of renewal, 7 per cent. per annum. The notes were secured by a mortgage upon the Scenic Hot Springs property. On or about April 1, 1904, the appellant gave to the respondent a second mortgage upon the property to secure the payment of $7,000, which had been advanced by the respondent to the appellant for the purpose of making improvements upon the property. On February 8, 1909, there being a balance due the respondent upon the previous transactions between the parties of $16,500, to cover this amount two notes were given, one for $1,500 on demand, unsecured, and the other for $15,000, due three years after date, secured by a mortgage upon the property. The $1,500 note is the basis of the first cause of action. The second cause of action is predicated upon the $15,000 note and mortgage.

[1] It is first claimed that the demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained, because the two causes of action were improperly united. The answer to this contention is found in the statute. Section 296, Rem. Code, provides that:

> "The plaintiff may unite several causes of action in the same complaint, when they all arise out of—
> "1. Contract, express or implied; or * * *
> "8. The same transaction."

Under either of these subdivisions of the statute, the demurrer was properly overruled.

Each cause of action is based upon a contract, and arose out of the same transaction, and, when separately stated, could be pleaded in the same complaint.

[2] It is next claimed that the trial court erred in sustaining objections to offered testimony. The appellant offered testimony to the effect that the market value of the property had not increased between the time when it was purchased and the time when the respondent sold his half interest to the appellant, and also as to the physical character of the property, and to what use it could be adapted, as well as its intrinsic value. In making a ruling, the trial judge stated that he would assume that there had been no change in the value of the property, and sustained the objection to the other offered testimony. The defense, as above stated, was that of usury. Under this defense, the objection to the offered testimony was properly sustained. The intrinsic value of the property, its character, and the purpose for which it was adapted, were matters which would throw no light upon the question whether or not the transaction between the parties had been tainted with usury.

[3] Finally, it is contended that the contract is usurious, because it is claimed that $5,000 included in the $17,000 mortgage note, under date of January 27, 1904, was intended as a bonus for the $7,000 loan which was subsequently advanced and secured by the second mortgage under date of April 1, 1904. From the facts stated, it will be remembered that the appellant, in purchasing the half interest of the respondent, agreed to give $5,000 more therefore than the respondent had paid cash for it. The appellant claims that this $5,000 was a bonus for the $7,000 loan mentioned. The respondent claims that the $5,000 had no reference to the $7,000 loan, and that the transaction was a bona fide sale of his interest in the property for $14,500. If the $5,000 was a part of the purchase price, the transaction was not usurious. The fact that the property was sold upon a long-time mortgage, with a moderate rate of interest, for $5,000 more than it was previously purchased for, for cash, would not indicate that the including of the $5,000 in the mortgage was colorable, and was intended as a cloak or cover for a bonus for a loan, or forbearance of money, which the law would not sanction. Rushing v. Worsham, 102 Ga. 825, 30 S. E. 541; Hogg v. Ruffner, 1 Black, 115, 17 L. Ed. 38.

What the transaction really was is a question of fact. The trial court found that the contention that the $5,000 was a bonus for the making of the loan was not supported by the evidence. Upon the record, it is plain that no other finding could properly have been made. Even the appellant's testimony, when read in its entirety, would hardly sustain a finding that the $5,000 was intended as a bonus.

The judgment will be affirmed

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Skagit County; Augustus Brawley, Judge.

Action by the Citizens' Bank of Renton against the Winner Shingle Company, in which J. S. Goldsmith, trustee, filed a petition after decree. From the judgment on the petition, the Winner Shingle Company appeals. Affirmed.

Brown, Peringer & Thomas, of Bellingham, for appellant. McClure & McClure, of Seattle, and Coleman & Gable, of Sedro Woolley, for respondent.

CHADWICK, J. In the year 1908 the appellant purchased from one Pat Gibbons and wife certain property situated in Skagit county, Wash. One-half of the purchase price was paid in cash. Three notes were given for the remainder, each for the sum of $2,370, payable in one, two, and three years thereafter. These notes were secured by a mortgage on the property. Gibbons furnished an abstract which revealed a claim of title to the property by one E. G. English, and the pendency of an action instituted by English in the year 1902.

Thereupon Gibbons and wife entered into a contract with the appellant whereby they agreed to prosecute the English suit to a conclusion within two years, to protect appellant in the peaceable possession of the property, "and to pay all and every damage of every kind and nature whatsoever arising out of or connected with any claim to said premises by the said E. G. English, whether the said damage be in the nature of expenses incurred in litigation, a claim to improvements made or timber removed from said land, and in fact all and every damage of every character which may be sustained by the said [appellant] arising from any claim or action by the said English pertaining to the said property."

The first two notes were paid. Gibbons assigned the third note to the Citizens' Bank, the plaintiff herein, as collateral security for a loan. Gibbons was thereafter adjudged to be a bankrupt, and respondent J. S. Goldsmith, was appointed as his trustee in bankruptcy. In March, 1913, plaintiff began an action to foreclose the mortgage, and to satisfy the indebtedness of Gibbons out of the collateral security and mortgaged property. The action was defended by the appellant, but plaintiff prevailed, and judgment was entered in the full sum of $3,430.43. While the action to foreclose the mortgage was pending, appellant caused the case of English v. Gibbons, 79 Wash. 210, 140 Pac. 322, to be prosecuted to a conclusion in the superior court of King county and in this court. After judgment entered in this case, appellant paid the full amount found to be due in satisfaction of the judgment. Appellant expended in costs and attorney's fees in the defense of this action, and in the prosecution of the English Case, the sum of $1,032.88. When the appellant paid the money in satisfaction of the decree of foreclosure, it directed the clerk to pay to plaintiff $2,944.16 and accumulated interest, and to retain the remainder, the difference between the principal judgment and the amount due upon the collateral note, being $526, in the registry of the court until the respective rights thereto could be determined as between appellant and the trustee in bankruptcy. This amount the court ordered retained in the registry of the court pending its further order.

The trustee in bankruptcy filed a petition claiming the money as the property of the bankrupt. To this petition the appellant made answer, claiming a lien upon the fund; that the trustee in bankruptcy had full knowledge of the foreclosure proceeding; that he did not participate, but left the burden of the litigation to appellant; that by reason of its prosecution to a final judgment of the English Case it has conserved the estate at its own expense and cost, and is therefore entitled to the fund; and finally that the lower court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action from the beginning, and hence has jurisdiction now of all matters incident thereto, including the issue joined by the petition of respondent and the answer of appellant.

[1, 2] The contentions of appellant rest primarily upon the assertion that the said court, having charge of the fund, has jurisdiction to try out conflicting claims. While there can be no question of the jurisdiction of a state court to hear all controversies or suits brought by a trustee in bankruptcy, it does not follow that it will retain possession of property which is primarily the property of the bankrupt within the rule of sequestration, the legal title to which is in the trustee, and upon which there is no specific lien. The right of appellant, if any, is that of a claimant or creditor. Upon its own theory it is a creditor of the bankrupt claiming a preference or an equitable lien for the preservation of the property. If it were claiming the property under some antecedent title, or as derived from some independent source, or under a prior lien, a different question would be presented. But here the legal title to the fund is admittedly in the trustee. The trustee takes the title of the bankrupt by operation of law, and it is his duty to reduce all of the property to possession. The right of appellant therefore depends upon the proof and merit of its claim.

The controversy in the state court as outlined in the principal action had ceased with the satisfaction of the judgment, and appellant could neither invite nor compel the trustee to come into the state court to try title to funds which prima facie belong to the bankrupt. If appellant had retained the fund, respondent could have sued in either court. The point we make is that the choice of forums under a record such as we have before us is in the trustee. The creditor cannot, by the mere act of paying a disputed fund into the registry of a state court, invest that court with either primary or exclusive jurisdiction, or create a lien in his favor upon it.

While state courts have jurisdiction to pass upon all suits and controversies affecting the property of the bankrupt, the allowance or disallowance of claims is peculiarly, if not entirely, within the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court.

If appellant has a claim which ought to be paid out of the impounded funds, it may be heard in the other tribunal. The legal title to the money being in the trustee, there was no controversy of which the state court would take jurisdiction to the exclusion of the bankruptcy court.

Affirmed.

Action by Charles W. Litzell against Linnie B. Hart, individually and as administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of Virginia A. Parkhurst, deceased. From a decree for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed, except as to the judgment for costs, which is ordered to be reduced.

H. M. Brooks, of Spokane, for appellant. Smith & Gresham, of Okanogan, for respondent.

ELLIS, C. J. This is an action to amend and reform a decree to make it speak the actual decision of the court. The facts are complicated and require a full statement.

The original action was brought by Alfred L. Parkhurst, as plaintiff, under a power of attorney from his father, W. A. Parkhurst, against the Bank of Oroville to recover possession of certain securities—notes, mortgages, assignments of mortgages, and deeds of real estate. It was claimed that the securities in question belonged to W. A. Parkhurst as his separate property and had been left with the bank to be returned to him on demand. Virginia A. Parkhurst, wife of W. A. Parkhurst, intervened, claiming that the securities were hers in her own right, and asked that they be delivered to her. The bank was a mere stakeholder. After the action was commenced, W. A. Parkhurst died. Still later, but before trial, the intervener, Virginia A. Parkhurst, died. Thereafter the action was prosecuted by Alfred L. Parkhurst individually and Alfred L. Parkhurst as administrator of the estate of W. A. Parkhurst, deceased, and the complaint in intervention was prosecuted by Linnie B. Hart, a daughter of the intervener, individually and as administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of Virginia A. Parkhurst, deceased. By the will, Virginia A. Parkhurst left her whole estate to her daughter Linnie B. Hart, and her son one A. L. Kitchen, share and share alike, subject to a prior legacy of $1,000 to her brother Charles W. Litzell, plaintiff in this action.

The original action was tried in the superior court of Okanogan county; Hon. William A. Huneke, of the superior court of Spokane county, visiting judge presiding. That cause was tried to the court on evidence which is not before us. Judge Huneke, on his return to Spokane, where principal counsel for both parties resided, decided the case in a memorandum decision, unsigned but in his own handwriting, which appears in the record now before us. The memorandum shows that at the trial the sole question of fact considered and determined was the ownership of the securities; that is, whether they belonged to W. A. Parkhurst in his lifetime in his separate right, or to Virginia A. Parkhurst in her lifetime in her separate right, or to the marital community consisting of these two as their common property. After a commendably lucid résumé of the evidence, Judge Huneke found, as a matter of fact, that all of the property in question in that action had been acquired during their marriage by the joint efforts of W. A. and Virginia A. Parkhurst, invoked the familiar presumption that all property acquired during the marriage is community property and that the burden is upon him who disputes it, further found that neither party had sustained that burden, and decided in substance that all of the property was community property of W. A. Parkhurst and Virginia A. Parkhurst, his wife, in their lifetime, and that one-half should go to her estate by operation of law. The decision concluded with a direction that "judgment may be prepared awarding half the property to the intervener and the rest to plaintiff."

Notwithstanding the explicit finding that this property was community property, and the necessary legal conclusion that it should go in equal parts to the two estates, the decree actually presented to and signed by Judge Huneke awarded a part of the securities to Alfred L. Parkhurst, as owner thereof, and the remaining part, by specific descriptions, to Linnie B. Hart individually and in her sole and separate right.

A few days before the expiration of one year after the entry of this decree, plaintiff herein, who is concededly a legatee in the sum of $1,000 under the will of Virginia A. Parkhurst, brought the present action. He contends that the decree was at variance with the findings of Judge Huneke and with the decree that Judge Huneke actually directed to be entered, and that Judge Huneke signed the decree in ignorance of such variance. He avers that the decree, by reason of this variance, is essentially in fraud of his rights, in that it leaves no property in the estate of Virginia A. Parkhurst, deceased, out of which his legacy can be paid. He charges that the entry of the decree was procured through fraud practiced upon the court. He seeks so to amend the decree that the property thereby awarded to Linnie B. Hart in her separate right shall be awarded to the estate of Virginia A. Parkhurst, deceased, to the end that it may be available for the payment of his legacy.

A demurrer to the complaint on nearly all of the statutory grounds was overruled. The cause was tried before the court, Hon. R. B. Albertson, of the superior court for King county, visiting judge, presiding. Judge Huneke was a witness, and testified, in substance, that before the entry of the decree he submitted his memorandum decision to the principal attorney for plaintiffs and to the attorney for the intervener in the original action, and that he entered the decree in that action assuming that it conformed to his findings, and that he would not have signed that decree if he had known that it did not so conform. Both of the attorneys to whom Judge Huneke submitted his memorandum decision as a guide in framing a decree, testified, in substance, that it was agreed between them that the interests of their clients would be best served by awarding to them individually specific moieties of the property so as to relieve it from the expense of administration. The attorney for plaintiffs in that action testified that it was agreed at the time that Linnie B. Hart should pay the plaintiff in this action his legacy of $1,000, but, as pertinently remarked by Judge Albertson in his decision in this case:

> "In what way the interest of her brother, who, under the will of Virginia A. Parkhurst, was a residuary legatee with herself, was to be protected, does not appear from the record."

[1, 2] There was evidence that, prior to the death of W. A. Parkhurst, his wife Virginia A. had executed to Linnie B. Hart assignments of some of the securities involved in the original action, and a deed purporting to convey to her certain lots in the town of Oroville also involved in that action. But Judge Huneke found that all of this was community property. That finding Judge Albertson held, and we think soundly, is conclusive in this proceeding. Had either party felt aggrieved by that finding, there was just one way to avoid its necessary legal effect. That was by suffering a judgment to be entered upon it and appealing from that judgment. In the face of that finding, it is manifest that the assignments and deeds above mentioned conveyed no title to Linnie B. Hart. They were not made nor joined in by the managing member of the community nor made for a community purpose. Furthermore, Linnie B. Hart, as intervener for herself and as administratrix with the will annexed of her deceased mother's estate, could hardly contend that at the same time she and her mother were separate owners of the property.

[3] Upon the evidence, Judge Albertson decided, and we think he was fully justified in so holding, that:

> "Under the ruling of Judge Huneke, no part of the property should have been adjudged to belong to the plaintiff Alfred L. Parkhurst, individually, either in severalty or otherwise, and that no part of the property should have been adjudged to belong to Linnie B. Hart individually, in severalty or otherwise."

But the plaintiff in the present proceeding does not ask an amendment of the decree so that it shall fully conform to the actual decision. He asks only that it be so amended in so far as it affects the estate of Virginia A. Parkhurst, deceased. There was never any administration upon the community estate, nor any administration or distribution of the property, either in the estate of W. A. Parkhurst or in the estate of Virginia A. Parkhurst. Neither does it appear that W. A. Parkhurst left any will devising all or any of this property to Alfred L. Parkhurst, though it does appear that he left other children. Though noticing these facts, the able trial judge did not feel warranted in going beyond the prayer of the complaint or in reforming the decree so as to protect persons not before the court who may or may not have any present interest to protect. He therefore entered a judgment ordering, adjudging, and decreeing that the original judgment be and is declared void, set aside, and held for naught in so far as it decrees that Linnie B. Hart individually is the owner of any of the property, real or personal, described in that decree, except to the extent of her interest under the will of Virginia A. Parkhurst, deceased. Specific paragraphs of the original decree are then in terms amended and reformed so as to award to the estate of Virginia A. Parkhurst, by specific descriptions, all of the real estate and securities by the original decree awarded to Linnie B. Hart individually. The decree as reformed further provides, in the event Linnie B. Hart has collected any of the notes, mortgages, or sums due, or in the event she has sold any of the real estate mentioned, that she be held accountable therefor to the estate of Virginia A. Parkhurst, and awarded plaintiff judgment for his costs against Linnie B. Hart. From this decree of reformation, Linnie B. Hart prosecutes this appeal.

It is first contended that, inasmuch as respondent was not a party to the original action, he is not a proper party to apply for a reformation of the judgment. It is argued that he stands in the relation of a mere creditor of the estate of Virginia A. Parkhurst. On that assumption, the decision of this court in Kuhn v. Mason, 24 Wash. 94, 64 Pac. 182, is asserted as controlling. We think otherwise, for two reasons.

[4, 5] In the first place, our statute gives to executors and administrators powers which they did not possess at common law. It makes it their duty to take into possession all the estate of the deceased, real and personal. Rem. Code, § 1534. It empowers them to sue for the recovery of any property, real or personal, or for the possession thereof, and subjects them to suits, in all cases in which such suits might have been maintained by or against their respective testators or intestates. Rem. Code, § 1535. Such statutes, in effect, make them representatives of the estates of the decedents, in actions both as to real and personal property. Gibson v. Slater, 42 Wash. 347, 84 Pac. 648. Heirs, legatees, and devisees are therefore privies to judgments touching the estate rendered in actions by administrators or executors, though they would not have been privies at common law. As said by Freeman:

> "The courts have generally given to the judgments in such actions the same effect as if the heirs and all other parties in interest were nominal parties thereto." 1 Freeman, Judgments (4th Ed.) § 163a, p. 305; Cunningham v. Ashley, 45 Cal. 485.

[6] Respondent being as effectually bound by the original judgment, so long as it remains unmodified, as if he had been a nominal party thereto, the law would be lamentably deficient were it powerless to afford him a remedy. Being bound thereby as privy to the judgment, he has the same right to apply for its vacation or modification within the statutory period of one year from its entry as if he had been a nominal party. This, as a governing principle, is amply sustained by the authorities. Blodget v. Blodget, 42 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 19; McWillie v. Martin, 25 Ark. 556; First Baptist Church v. Syms, 51 N. J. Eq. 363, 28 Atl. 461; Richardson v. Loree, 94 Fed. 375, 36 C. C. A. 301; 6 Pomeroy's Equity Juris. § 651.

[7] In the second place, the trial court found, and the evidence conclusively showed, that the original decree was not the decree actually rendered by the court. In such a case, the court has the inherent power to so modify the judgment entry as to make it conform to the judgment actually rendered. O'Bryan v. American Inv. & Imp. Co., 50 Wash. 371, 97 Pac. 241. It follows as of course that this power can be invoked by any person injuriously affected.

From the foregoing it follows, as held by the trial judge, that it makes no difference whether this action be regarded as a proceeding by petition under the statute (Rem. Code, §§ 467, 468), or as an original suit in equity. It was commenced within the year, the appellant was served with summons, appeared and defended, and the court acquired complete jurisdiction. No rights of innocent third persons are affected.

[8] It is next claimed that respondent has not proceeded with diligence. It is admitted that he did proceed within the statutory period of one year. In Kuhn v. Mason, supra, relied upon by appellant, it was merely held that under the facts of that case the refusal to grant a petition on the ground of lack of diligence within the year was not an abuse of discretion. This is a clear recognition of the principle that the question of diligence within the year is addressed largely to the discretion of the trial court. In the case before us, a bare statement of the facts presents equities so overwhelmingly in respondent's favor that we have no hesitancy in saying that there was no abuse of discretion in entertaining the complaint filed at any time within the year. Moreover, the only evidence upon the subject shows that respondent did proceed within a short time after he discovered the facts.

[9] The claim that the complaint did not state nor the evidence show a meritorious defense or cause of action as required by Rem. Code, § 469, is without merit. It is based first upon the ground that respondent was not a party to the original suit. What we have already said effectually disposes of this ground. It is next based upon the claim that the complaint does not show that a different judgment would result from a retrial of the original action. This is true, but it does show that the real judgment which did result from the first trial was different from the judgment entered. It therefore presented a meritorious cause of action to reform the judgment entry.

[10] It is urged also that the judgment here should be reversed because there was no showing that fraud was practiced in obtaining the original decree, and because the trial court made no specific finding of fraud. True, it does appear that the attorneys who prepared and presented the decree intended no fraud in fact, but it does appear that they did not divulge to Judge Huneke the fact that it did not conform to his decision and that he was thus induced to sign a decree which he never intended to sign. That decree, if unmodified, will deplete the estate, and thus demonstrably operate as a fraud in law. Moreover, appellant herself, whatever the intentions of the attorneys, is now seeking to use that decree for a fraudulent purpose. She refuses to pay, or to recognize respondent's right to, his legacy rightfully payable out of the estate now in her hands. In such a case, relief will be granted regardless of the failure to show actual fraud in the entry of the decree. Benson v. Anderson, 10 Utah, 135, 37 Pac. 256.

Appellant attacks the costs bill on the ground that it taxed fees for the witness Huneke, including mileage from Spokane, at $53.33, whereas on the motion to retax an affidavit of Judge Huneke was presented showing that he actually received only $30, which he accepted in lieu of his mileage and per diem attendance as a witness. The above item of costs should be reduced to $30.

It is ordered that the judgment for costs be reduced in the sum of $23.33. In all other respects, the judgment is affirmed. Respondent may recover his costs on this appeal.

FLESSHER v. CARSTENS PACKING CO.

1. Judgment 🔑670—Res Judicata—Second Recovery.

Where plaintiff's minor daughter was injured by poisoning, and through plaintiff as her guardian ad litem sued for her own injuries, the mere fact that the petition contained an allegation of the amount spent for medical services, when nothing was recovered for such expenditures and the allegation was descriptive, would not estop plaintiff in his own action from recovering for the medical services.

2. Action 🔑50(3)—Joinder of Causes—Injuries to Minor Children.

When a minor is injured, two causes of action arise, one in favor of the minor for pain and suffering and permanent injury, and the other in favor of the parent for loss of services during minority and expenses of treatment, and the actions may be joined or tried separately.

3. Judgment 🔑670 — Bar — Injuries to Minor Children.

Where a minor is injured through the negligence of another, and an action is brought by the parent as guardian ad litem, and in that action recovery is sought by the complaint, or there are litigated therein any items of damage which belong to the parent, a subsequent action cannot be waged by the parent for the same items, because, by including them in the action in which the parent is guardian ad litem, the minor was authorized to recover such item or items of damage, and the parent is estopped from subsequently recovering therefor.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Kitsap County; Walter M. French, Judge.

Action by Charles Flessher against the Carstens Packing Company. Judgment dismissing the action, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Garland & McLane, of Bremerton, for appellant. Kerr & McCord, of Seattle, for respondent.

MAIN, J. The purpose of this action was to recover damages alleged to have accrued to the plaintiff, because of the injury which his minor daughter had sustained through the negligence of the defendant. The issues were made up by the complaint, the amended answer (which will be referred to as the answer), and the reply. When the cause came on to be heard upon the merits, and after a jury had been impaneled and sworn, the defendant moved the court for a judgment upon the pleadings, which motion was sustained, and a judgment entered which operated as a dismissal of the action. From this judgment the plaintiff appeals.

The controlling question in the case is whether the trial court erred in sustaining the motion for judgment on the pleadings. The complaint alleges that the respondent, the Carstens Packing Company, is a corporation, and is engaged in the business of the selling of meats at retail in the city of Bremerton, Wash.; that on or about the 15th day of October, 1912, the respondent sold to the appellant a certain piece or parcel of diseased meat, which was unfit for food; that on or about the day mentioned Mabel Flessher, a minor daughter of the appellant, Charles Flessher, then of the age of 10 years, ate of said meat, and as a result of, and in immediate consequence of, the eating thereof became sick; and that her health has become permanently impaired by the eating of such meat. By the complaint, three items of damages are sought to be recovered: (a) Expense to the appellant for medical treatment for his daughter; (b) expense incurred in caring for, or nursing, his daughter; and (c) for loss of services. The answer denies all the allegations of the complaint, other than the formal allegation which appears in the first paragraph thereof, and pleads affirmatively that the appellant in this action, on or about the 14th day of October, 1913, as guardian ad litem for his minor daughter, Mabel Flessher, commenced an action in the superior court of the state of Washington for Kitsap county, entitled "Mabel Flessher, Plaintiff, by Charles Flessher, Guardian ad Litem, v. Carstens Packing Company, Defendant," and a copy of the complaint is set out in full. In this complaint, the purchase and eating of the meat is alleged in similar language to that contained in the complaint in the present action, and paragraph 6 thereof is as follows:

> "That plaintiff ate said meat on or about said day mentioned, and as a result of and immediate consequence of and because of her eating said meat as aforesaid the plaintiff became ill, was thrown into fits and spasms, and her life was endangered; that because of an immediate consequence of said eating as aforesaid plaintiff's health has become permanently impaired, that her digestive system has become so impaired as to render life a burden to herself, and that by and through eating said meat plaintiff has lost control of the functioning of her excretory organs; that as a result of the injury to the health of plaintiff by eating said meat as aforesaid, and as a part of said injuries, plaintiff is in a weakened bodily and mental condition, and has frequent fits and spasms and periods of unconsciousness, and is compelled to and does have frequent medical treatment by a duly qualified and licensed physician."

Following this allegation, there was an allegation of the injuries sustained by Mabel Flessher, included in which was reduction in earning capacity, or permanent injury. It is then alleged, in the affirmative defense, that the action there referred to was removed from the superior court for Kitsap county to the United States District Court for the Western District of Washington, Northern Division, and that thereafter an answer was filed in the action in the United States District Court, which answer was a general denial of the allegations of the complaint; that on the 28th day of May, 1914, the cause was tried upon the issue thus framed, and resulted in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff in that action, and against the defendant, for the sum of $1,250; that judgment was entered upon the verdict, and subsequently paid by the defendant to the plaintiff in the action; that the appellant in this action was the guardian ad litem of his daughter, Mabel Flessher, in the cause tried in the federal court. It is alleged, also, that the appellant is estopped from maintaining this action, because he is seeking here to recover the same items of damage for which recovery was had in the action tried in the federal court. The reply to the affirmative defense contains certain admissions and denials, and concludes with this paragraph:

> "That the question of the damages to Charles Flessher, on account of medical and drug store bills and nursing bills incurred by him because of the injury to Mabel Flessher, his minor child, was not set up in the pleadings, was not submitted to the court or to the jury, either by evidence adduced, by the court's instruction to the jury, or otherwise, and that all such questions and all causes of action based on expenses incurred by Charles Flessher were excluded from the consideration by the jury on and by the instructions of the court, which said instructions are hereto attached and made a part hereof and marked Exhibit A."

The first inquiry must be directed as to whether the pleadings in this case show that recovery is sought here for the same items of damages for which recovery was previously had in the action tried by the federal court. As already stated, the complaint claims three items of damages: (a) Expense for medical treatment; (b) expense for nursing or care; and (c) for loss of services. It is conceded by the appellant that the item for loss of services was included in the recovery in the other action, and that therefore he is estopped from recovering for that item in this action. This reduces the question to whether, in the action tried in the federal court, there were included the items of medical treatment and care or nursing.

[1] The answer nowhere alleges specifically that the item of care was recovered in the other action. The reply alleges specifically that the items for medical attendance and nursing were "not submitted to the court or to the jury, either by evidence adduced, by the court's instruction to the jury, or otherwise." A copy of the instructions is attached to the reply, and it appears therefrom that the items of expense for medical attendance and nursing were not submitted to the jury in that case, and the allegations of the reply, already referred to, are to the effect that these items were not submitted to the court or to the jury at any time. Referring to paragraph 6, above quoted from the complaint in the federal court action, and the concluding clause thereof, it is argued that this contains a claim for expense for medical attendance; but we do not so construe the pleading. In that paragraph of the complaint, there was an attempt to set out a description, and the extent of the injuries, and the reference therein to medical treatment was purely descriptive, and would not furnish the basis for an estoppel upon that item, unless testimony had been offered, or the question had in some form been submitted, in the federal court action.

[2] As we construe the pleadings, the items of medical attendance and expense for care and nursing were not included in the allegations in the complaint in the federal court action, and were in no form litigated in that action. The question then arises whether the appellant has a right to recover for these items in this action. The law is that, when a minor is injured, two causes of action arise, one in favor of the minor for pain and suffering and permanent injury, the other in favor of the parent for loss of services during minority and expenses of treatment. These actions may be joined or tried separately. In Harris v. Puget Sound Electric Railway, 52 Wash. 299, 100 Pac. 841, upon this question it was said:

> "When a minor is injured, two causes of action arise, one in favor of the minor for pain and suffering and permanent injury, the other in favor of the parents for loss of services during minority or expenses of treatment. * * * These causes may be joined or tried in separate actions. * * *"

[3] Where a minor is injured through the negligence of another, and an action is brought by the parent as guardian ad litem, and in that action recovery is sought by the complaint, or there are litigated therein any items of damage which belong to the parent, a subsequent action cannot be waged by the parent for the same items, because, by including them in the action in which the parent is guardian ad litem, the minor was authorized to recover such item or items of damage, and the parent is estopped from subsequently recovering therefor. Daly v. Everett Pulp & Paper Co., 31 Wash. 252, 71 Pac. 1014; Donald v. Ballard, 34 Wash. 576, 76 Pac. 80; Hammer v. Caine, 47 Wash. 672, 92 Pac. 441. In Donald v. Ballard, supra, referring to the previous case of Daly v. Everett Pulp & Paper Co., it was said:

> "This court held that, when a suit is brought for damages arising from injuries to a minor, and when the action is brought in behalf of the minor with the father's consent, for damages which would otherwise be recoverable by the father, the latter cannot afterwards be heard to say that he has a demand of his own for the same items of damage which were included in the former suit. It was held that, under such circumstances, the father has emancipated his son in so far as the right to recover damages which were included in the son's suit is concerned. Such is the case here. That the father consented to this recovery by the son is manifest, since he himself caused the action to be brought in his own name as guardian ad litem, and specifically included the item of damage here under discussion. Under the case cited the minor was authorized to recover this item of damage, and the father cannot again, in his own behalf, recover for the same damage."

Applying the law to the facts in this case, it appears that the appellant, so far as the pleadings show, had a cause of action against the respondent for medical attendance, loss of services during the period of minority, and expenses for care or nursing; that the appellant, as the guardian ad litem for his minor daughter, waged the action in the federal court, and there was included in that action the item of loss for services; that there were not included in that action items of expense for medical attendance and care. Since these items were not litigated in any form in the federal court action, it cannot be said that the appellant authorized a recovery for such items therein, and is therefore estopped from maintaining the present action.

The judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded, with direction to the superior court to proceed with the trial of the cause.

KING COUNTY v. JOYCE et al. (No. 13747.)

1. Eminent Domain 🔑219 — Trial — Evidence—Map.

Where a map had been properly identified and admitted in evidence during the progress of a case of claimants for damages against a county seeking to condemn a right of way, and its accuracy was not questioned, it was properly admitted in evidence in the case of other claimants for damages against the county.

2. Evidence 🔑497—Opinion.

Opinion evidence may be permitted to fix damage, where the amount depends on the value of tangible property, and, in a county's proceeding to condemn a right of way, witnesses were properly permitted to state that in their judgment benefits to claimants for damages would outweigh any damages sustained.

3. Evidence 🔑488 — Opinion — Value of Condemned Property.

In condemnation proceedings, qualified witnesses may give their opinion as to the value of land before and after the taking.

4. Evidence 🔑471(28) — Conclusion of Law.

In a county's proceeding to condemn a right of way, where claimants of damages asserted that the condemnation would increase the cost of removing from certain land shingle bolts owned by them, the timber on the land having been previously sold to a corporation, which had the right to remove all merchantable timber by a certain date, the theory of claimants being that they were the owners of the shingle bolts by virtue of abandonment of the contract by the company, abandonment being a matter of intention, it was competent to inquire of the president of the company whether the company was the owner of the bolts, or whether it had abandoned its right to the property, so as to sustain claimant's right to claim damages, and the answer was not a conclusion of law; the ownership not depending on the contract alone.

5. Eminent Domain 🔑221—Ownership of Property—Question for Jury.

In such proceedings, whether the logging company was the owner of the bolts, or whether it had abandoned its right to the property, held for the jury.

6. Witnesses 🔑248(2) — Examination — Responsiveness of Answer.

In a county's proceedings to condemn a right of way, where damages were claimed on account of the increased cost of removing shingle bolts from certain land, the answer of the president of a lumber company, given in response to a question as to who owned the bolts, that the company owned them, rather than the claimants for damages against the county, did not involve a collateral inquiry.

7. TRIAL 🔑412—OBJECTION TO EVIDENCE—WAIVER.

Where appellant's counsel made objection in the midst of testimony, and the court ordered the jury to retire pending argument, whereupon counsel for appellant stated, "Never mind; it is not competent, but we want to get through with this case"—counsel waived his objection to the testimony, though he later moved to strike it, where the intention of the witness to testify as he did after objection was evident when it was made and waived.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑231(5) — RESERVATION OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW — MOTION TO STRIKE TESTIMONY.

General motion to strike testimony did not reach the contention made on appeal that the testimony was hearsay.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1033(3)—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

In a county's proceeding to condemn land for right of way, testimony tending to sustain a theory of claimants for damages was not prejudicial to them; the jury finding in legal effect in accordance with the theory.

10. WITNESSES 🔑268(13)—CROSS-EXAMINATION—TESTING TESTIMONY.

In a county's proceedings to condemn land for a right of way, a banker, called as a witness by claimants of damages to prove the value of their property, was properly asked, on cross-examination to test his testimony, the maximum amount of a loan he would give claimants with the property as security; the witness having fixed the value of the land at about $16,000, and stating that he would loan about 50 per cent. of its value, or $7,500, his testimony thus being consistent.

11. TRIAL 🔑29(3) — REMARKS OF TRIAL JUDGE.

In a county's proceeding to condemn a right of way, where claimants of damages called one of them to the stand, and the court stated, "You have had him three or four hours," there was no prejudice to claimants, or betrayal of a hostile attitude by the trial judge.

12. EMINENT DOMAIN 🔑203(1)—DAMAGES—EVIDENCE.

Testimony for claimants that on adjacent lands there was a large amount of timber, the natural outlet for which was through their gulch by means of an abandoned railroad grade, was properly stricken as remote, speculative, and not within the range of reasonable probability.

13. EMINENT DOMAIN 🔑203(1) — DAMAGES —EVIDENCE.

Where the condition of bottom land of claimants and its potential uses were not changed by the change in the county's road, the court properly rejected all testimony tending to show damages to the bottom lands.

14. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑925(3)—PRESUMPTION—PROPER INSTRUCTIONS—ADMONISHING COUNSEL.

Where counsel's opening statement in argument and the proceedings at the time his offensive remark was made were not brought to the Supreme Court as part of the statement of facts, on the statement of the trial court that he had given the jury proper instructions, the Supreme Court must conclude that the jury was properly admonished at the time the alleged offensive remark was made.

Ellis, C. J., dissenting.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, King County; J. T. Ronald, Judge.

Action to condemn a right of way by King County, wherein John Joyce and others claimed damages. From a verdict for less than the amount sought, the claimants Joyce appeal. Affirmed.

Jay C. Allen, of Seattle, for appellants. Alfred H. Lundin and Edwin C. Ewing, both of Seattle, for respondent.

CHADWICK, J. This action was brought to condemn a right of way for a county road. The county is seeking to put a road across a part of a large tract of land owned by appellants. The land is situate partly in the Snoqualmie valley. The valley land is level, cultivated farm land. The remainder is logged-off hill land. The road contemplated, while new construction, is in fact a change in the present road leading across the hill lands of appellants. Instead of following over the break of the hill, it is to start some distance back, and is to follow the course of a gulch, in which flows a small stream of water. The object of the change is to secure a more satisfactory grade from the hill to the valley below. There is no change of the highway where it traverses the valley.

Appellants set up damages for the increased cost of transporting shingle bolts, damages for the appropriation of a water power site, damages for the appropriation of a grade and right of way formerly occupied by a logging road, and damages for building of fences and for the value of the land taken, which is approximately 11 acres—in all aggregating the sum of $18,570. From a verdict in the sum of $275, claimants have appealed.

[1] The first error assigned is that the court permitted the witnesses to use a contour map or plat; that it went to the jury as an exhibit, without proof that it had been made by any of them, and without proof as to its correctness. Aside from the fact that we find no prejudicial error in permitting the use of the map, and in allowing it to go to the jury, we find that the map had been properly identified and admitted during the progress of the case of other claimants. Its accuracy was not questioned at the time. It was properly in the case, under

[2, 3] 2. It is assigned as error that certain witnesses were permitted to say that in their judgment the benefits to accrue to appellants would outweigh any damage sustained. It is insisted that this was an invasion of the province of the jury, the very question the jury was called upon to decide, and that it is contrary to many decisions of this court. This court has held, in common with all others, that a witness will not be permitted to fix the amount of damage, where a jury has been called upon to decide that issue. But there seems to be an exception to the rule. It is resorted to or rather allowed in condemnation cases, where the amount of damage depends upon the value of tangible property. This exception is noted in Jones on Evidence, §§ 387, 388. That qualified witnesses may give their opinions as to the value of land before and after the taking is so well understood that we do not feel put to the necessity of citing authority. This being so, we find the rule extracted from the authorities by Mr. Jones to be most plausible. It follows:

> "But in many states and with much reason it is held that opinions as to the damage sustained in such cases should be received in evidence. These decisions are based upon the reasoning that, inasmuch as the amount of damages in such proceedings depends entirely upon opinions as to the value before and after the condemnation, and as these opinions are competent, it can make no material difference whether the witness gives his opinion as to the amount of damages at once, or whether he is allowed simply to state to the jury his opinion as to values from which the opinion as to damages must necessarily follow by the processes of subtraction. The tendency of the later decisions seems to be in favor of this rule."

But were the question otherwise doubtful, it is not an open question in this state. In Seattle & Montana Ry. Co. v. Gilchrist, 4 Wash. 509, 513, 30 Pac. 738, 739, the court, in passing upon a like objection said:

> "It is also objected that one of the respondents was permitted to say how much, in his opinion, the land would be depreciated in value on account of the appropriation of the right of way and the construction of the railroad. It is conceded by appellant that it is competent for a witness, if properly qualified, to state his opinion as to the value of the land before and after the appropriation; but it is contended that it is for the jury to say what the damages are, and not the witness. While there is undoubtedly a conflict of authority upon this question, it seems difficult to perceive any substantial reason for rejecting such testimony. To admit evidence of the value of the land before and after the taking is to admit, in effect, the same thing to be done which appellant complains of, since the amount of the damages is then ascertained by the jury by the mere process of subtraction. And, this being so, we are unable to understand why the witness should not be permitted to state the result, as well as the facts from which such result is reached. In either case the amount of the damages is ultimately based on the opinion of the witness. The distinction here insisted on between the two methods is based on mere form, rather than substance. The facts upon which the witness bases his opinion may be shown on cross-examination, and when this is done the jury have all the means which can be afforded for forming an independent judgment as to the damages."

That case is cited and the doctrine adhered to in Johnson v. Tacoma, 41 Wash. 51, 82 Pac. 1092.

3. The next assignment rests in the fact that the court permitted the jury to pass upon the question of ownership of certain shingle bolts remaining upon the land after logging operations had ceased. It seems that some years ago claimants sold the timber on the hill land to one Wood, who, in company with others, organized a corporation which became the predecessor in interest of the Snoqualmie Logging Company. By the terms of the contract the timber was to be removed on or before April 16, 1916, and, if not so removed, to revert to the vendors. The company built a logging road across the valley and following the gulch up onto the hill land. Some two years before this action was begun the logging company ceased operations, tore up its track, and removed its equipment. The logging company was made a party to this action, but filed no appearance. This case was tried in January and February, 1916. The most persistent claim of appellants is that of damage for the increased cost of removing shingle bolts. The ownership of these bolts thus became material. P. C. Richardson, the president of the company, was called as a witness for the appellants. He testified to the contract, the logging, and that the work had ceased. He was then interrogated by counsel for respondent.

> "Q. Whose are these shingle bolts on this land now, yours or Joyce's? A. There might be a question there. I presume the fact that we have abandoned our project we are in the hands of Mr. Joyce in that way, but he has verbally told me that we could use the right of way, they would probably be his unless he wanted to give them to us; they are his. Q. They are whose? A. They are Joyce's, I suppose, in one sense of the word. In other words, we had the right to remove all merchantable timber by April, 1916, according to our contract. There might be a question of law there whether the fact that we have abandoned that for two years we have lost our right to remove all merchantable timber. Q. Outside of your opinion of it being a question of law, under the contract you have a right to sell any timber on Joyce's land? He gave you all the timber, didn't he?
> "Mr. Allen: That would not be the best evidence. He says he hasn't any claim to these shingle bolts.
> "The Court: He may state who owns the shingle bolts.
> "Mr. Allen: My objection is, that calls for a legal conclusion. He may state the facts. What rights the contract gave him or didn't give him is a question of law for the court.
> "A. This company owns the shingle bolts, the shingle-bolt timber that is there."

[4-6] It is contended that this testimony was prejudicial; that the ownership of the shingle bolts was a matter of law for the court, and not a question of fact for the jury. This would be true, if the ownership depended upon the contract alone; but it was the theory of the appellants that they were the owners of the bolts in virtue of an abandonment of the contract. Abandonment is a matter of intention, and to that extent it was competent to inquire of the witness, and it was for the jury, having in mind the contract and the conduct of the logging company, to say whether it was the owner, or whether it had abandoned its right to the property, so as to sustain a right in appellants to claim damages. The answer was not a conclusion, as claimed by appellants. Neither was it a response to a collateral inquiry, as respondent insists. It went to the merit of the case, and was legally equivalent to a response that the company had not abandoned its interest. It will be remembered that the Snoqualmie Lumber Company had been made a party to the action and had made default. To aid its cause, counsel for respondent took the stand and detailed a conversation between Richardson, the attorney for the lumber company, and himself, to the effect that Richardson said the company would not appear or assert an interest, because it had other possible transactions with Joyce, and could not afford to antagonize him. An objection was made while the witness was in the midst of his statement. The court ordered the jury to retire pending argument. Whereupon counsel for appellant said:

> "Never mind; it is not competent, but we want to get through with this case."

After the witness had finished, the following colloquy occurred:

> "Mr. Allen: I move to strike that.
> "The Court: You want that stricken.
> "Mr. Allen: Not objecting to the conversation he had with Joyce. [It is evident that counsel meant Richardson, as no conversation with Joyce had been testified to.] I don't want it to appear that there was anything between him and Joyce [Richardson] to keep him from appearing on the stand.
> "The Court: I will let it stand. The jury may put their own construction upon that. (Exception noted.)"

[7-9] We think counsel waived his objection. The intention of the witness to testify as he did was evident when the objection was made and waived, and the motion to strike does not reach the contention now made that the testimony was hearsay. It was not made to appear that anything occurred that would suggest that the witness had influenced Richardson or prevented him from appearing as a witness. He had already testified. Furthermore, the testimony came in response to like hearsay testimony given immediately before by counsel for appellants. It was clearly not prejudicial, for it tended to sustain appellants' theory of an abandonment. But there was no prejudice in this testimony. Appellants requested that the question of abandonment be submitted to the jury as a question of fact. The court instructed the jury to determine the fact, and to divide the recovery between appellants and the logging company if it found it to be entitled to any damage. The jury found that the logging company was entitled to no damage. This was, in legal effect, a finding that they had abandoned their contract.

[10] 4. One Boyd, who is a banker at Duval, was called as a witness by appellants to prove the value of appellants' property. He testified that his bank was a state bank, and loaned money on land. He was then asked, "What is the maximum amount of a loan that you would give Mr. Joyce with this property as security?" He was compelled to answer. This is assigned as error. But we think this was legitimate cross-examination. We can conceive of no surer way to put the testimony of such a witness to the test. To illustrate: The witness, in his direct examination, had fixed a value for the land over which the road runs at about $16,650. He said he would loan about 50 per cent. of its value, or $7,500. His testimony was consistent. We find no benefit to respondent or detriment to appellants in this assignment.

[11] 5. Following Boyd's testimony, appellants called appellant John Joyce to the stand. The court said: "You have had him three or four times." Exception was taken, and error assigned. We find no prejudice, or any betrayal of a "hostile attitude" on the part of the trial judge.

[12] 6. Appellants sought to show that on adjacent lands there was a large amount of timber, the natural outlet for which was through the gulch by means of the abandoned railroad grade. This testimony was properly stricken, as remote, speculative, and not within the range of reasonable probability. The possible sale of a right of way or an abandoned railroad grade to one who may, at some future time, negotiate therefor, is a pleasing hope, but we find no reason or authority for holding it to be a convertible asset.

[13] 7. The court rejected all testimony tending to show damages to the bottom land. This was proper. No basis of recovery was shown. The condition of the bottom land and its potential uses are not changed by the change in the road. The new road leaves the old road at the head of the gulch, and comes into the old road at the bottom of the hill. So far as the testimony goes, the use of the bottom land will not be impaired in any way.

8. Appellants offered testimony to show that a small stream flowing in the gulch would, if impounded by a dam, furnish a limited water power. The question of its value, though but remotely established, was submitted to the jury under a proper instruction, and decided adversely to appellants.

[14] 10. It is assigned as error that counsel for the county was guilty of improper conduct. The record continues:

> "The Court: Address the jury. (Mr. Ewing addresses the jury.)
> "Mr. Allen: I desire to put in the record now that Mr. Ewing in his opening statement to the jury said to the jury that they were the final arbitrators of the question between Joyce and the county, and that they had the county's treasury within their keeping; that any money that would be paid to Joyce by their verdict in this case would be their money, to which I object to the court, and ask the court to admonish counsel about making the statement, for the reason it is improper argument.

"The Court: Motion denied. Exception allowed. The court has given the jury proper instructions. Go ahead, Mr. Ewing."

The opening statement and the proceedings at the time the remark was made are not brought to us as a part of the statement of fact. Upon the statement of the court that it had given the jury proper instructions, we must conclude that the jury had been properly admonished at the time the alleged offensive remark was made.

Counsel makes 27 assignments of error. We have discussed all that are sustained by argument in his briefs, and will not pursue the inquiry, except to say that we find no error in the instructions given or refused, nor in the other assignments. Out of the abundance of the testimony, the jury has found that the benefits to appellants will approximate the damages which they will suffer. We find no reversible error.

Affirmed.

MORRIS and MAIN, JJ., concur.

ELLIS, C. J. It seems to me that the court erred in excluding all testimony tending to show damage to the bottom land. I therefore dissent.

WASHBURN v. WILEN et al. (No. 13622.)

1. HOMESTEAD 🔑42, 55—ACQUISITION—STATUTE.

Laws 1895, p. 109, § 1, provides the homestead consists of the dwelling house in which the claimant resides and the land on which the same is situated, selected as in this act provided. Section 30 provides in order to select a homestead a husband or head of the family or * * * the wife must execute and acknowledge in the same manner as a grant of real property is acknowledged, a declaration of homestead, and file the same for record. Section 31 prescribes what the declaration must contain. Section 32 requires it to be recorded in the auditor's office of the county in which the land is situated. Section 33 provides that from the time the declaration is filed for record the premises constitute a homestead. Held, that a "homestead" can only be selected by the execution and filing of a homestead declaration, and the premises constitute a homestead only from the time the declaration is filed for record, so that a property owner acquires no homestead right by occupancy.

2. STATUTES 🔑225—CONSTRUCTION—RULE.

Statutes in pari materia must be construed together.

3. HOMESTEAD 🔑188 — DECLARATION OF HOMESTEAD — SALE UNDER MORTGAGE — RIGHT TO RETAIN POSSESSION DURING REDEMPTION PERIOD.

Laws 1895, p. 109 et seq., provides in effect that a homestead can only be effected by the execution and filing of a homestead declaration. Section 7 provides that the homestead can be abandoned only by a declaration of abandonment or a grant thereof executed and acknowledged. Section 8 provides that such abandonment shall be effectual only from the time it is filed. Laws 1899, pp. 93, 94, § 15, provides that the purchaser of real property sold on execution or under foreclosure shall have possession until the resale or redemption, and the redemptioner until another redemption, and saves the rights of tenants, and provides that, when the mortgage contains a stipulation to that effect, the mortgagor may retain possession during the redemption period, and that if the land is used for farming purposes the judgment debtor shall have the right of possession during the redemption period, subject to a lien for interest on the crops raised, and "that in case of any homestead occupied for that purpose at the time of sale the judgment debtor shall have the right to retain possession thereof during the period of redemption without accounting for issues or value of occupation." Held, that the provisions of the act of 1899, making the right to retain possession of the homestead depend upon the occupancy thereof by the claimant at the time of the sale, were intended as a limitation upon, rather than an extension of, the homestead right, so that the premises must not only be occupied by the claimant at the time of sale, but must have been selected by him as a homestead prior to the sale by the filing of the declaration prescribed by law for such selection, to entitle the claimant to retain possession during the redemption period.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Kittitas County; Ralph Kauffman, Judge.

Action by Henry Washburn against Inas Wilen and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

John H. McDaniels, of Ellensburg, for appellants. E. K. Brown, of Ellensburg, for respondent.

ELLIS, C. J. This case presents a contest for the possession of real property sold on foreclosure of a mortgage during the period allowed by statute for redemption. In September, 1912, defendants mortgaged the premises to plaintiff for $3,000. The mortgage provided that, in case of foreclosure, the purchaser at sale should have immediate possession, and in terms waived any homestead right. The mortgagors defaulted in payment of interest and the mortgagee brought action to foreclose. Defendants were personally served, but made no appearance. An order of default was entered, and a judgment against them for the amount due and a decree foreclosing the mortgage and ordering a sale of the premises was rendered. At the sheriff's sale plaintiff purchased the property, bidding the full amount of his judgment. The sale was confirmed. Defendants refusing to surrender possession, plaintiff petitioned for a writ of assistance, setting out the pertinent provisions of the mortgage. Defendants resisted, claiming the right to retain possession during the redemption period on the ground that they occupied the premises as their homestead and for farming purposes. The matter was submitted to the trial court on a statement of agreed facts. From this it appears that the lands are two acres just outside the city limits of Ellensburg. Upon the premises is a brick house, in which defendants resided when the mortgage was given, and in which they have ever since resided and still reside. There is also a barn, a chicken house, and a well. The place is planted to fruit trees not yet bearing. Defendants have been raising wheat and potatoes between the rows. They have never filed any declaration of homestead in the auditor's office. The court ordered that a writ of assistance issue, directing the sheriff to put plaintiff in possession of the parts of the premises actually occupied by the house, barn, chicken house, and well, with access thereto, leaving the remainder of the tract, as farming land, in possession of defendants. Plaintiffs are content with this order. Defendants appeal.

[1] Several questions are discussed in the briefs, but as we view the case the order must be affirmed, upon the ground that no "homestead" in these premises within legal contemplation has ever been acquired, selected, or occupied as such by appellants. The homestead right is a purely statutory right. It is defined in and exists only by virtue of the act of 1895 (Laws 1895, p. 109 et seq.), entitled "An act defining a homestead, and providing for the manner of the selection of the same." Its provisions are found in Rem. Code, as section 528 et seq. Section 1 defines the homestead as follows:

> "The homestead consists of the dwelling house, in which the claimant resides, and the land on which the same is situated, selected as in this act provided."

Section 30 is as follows:

> "In order to select a homestead the husband or other head of a family, or in case the husband has not made such selection, the wife must execute and acknowledge, in the same manner as a grant of real property is acknowledged, a declaration of homestead, and file the same for record."

Section 31 prescribes what the declaration must contain, section 32 requires it to be recorded in the auditor's office of the county in which the land is situated, and section 33 provides that:

> "From and after the time the declaration is filed for record the premises therein described constitute a homestead."

In Hookway v. Thompson, 56 Wash. 57, 105 Pac. 153, it is asserted, and we still think soundly, that the self-evident purpose of this statute is that a homestead shall "exist in virtue of the record only," and further:

> "It would seem that the meaning of the present law as to the time and manner of selection of a homestead, and as to when and how a homestead right is created, is so clear as to make it certain that a homestead can only be selected by the execution and filing of a homestead declaration, and that the premises constitute a homestead only from and after the time the declaration is filed for record. The words of the statute, 'from and after the declaration is filed,' mean that the homestead is brought into existence by the doing of the several statutory acts by the claimant, and that it exists and speaks from the date of the filing, and not otherwise. The appellant acquired no homestead right by occupancy. There is nothing in the statute which remotely suggests that occupancy even initiates the right."

Appellants argue, in substance, that since the exact issue there involved was one of exemption from execution of the homestead, and the issue here is one of possession of the homestead pending the redemption period, therefore the real question here involved was not decided in that case. It is true the occasion or purpose of the inquiry in the two cases was different, but the fundamental question is precisely the same—What is the "homestead," and when and how is it created or asserted? When that primary question is answered, as it must be by a reference to the quoted sections, other and different sections of the Code determine the two secondary or subordinate questions of exemption of the homestead from execution and possession of the homestead pending redemption. Counsel fails to note that the provisions of the act of 1895 which we have quoted contain no mention either of exemptions or of possession pending redemption. He insists on treating the entire act of 1895 as only an exemption statute merely because other parts of it treat of exemptions, whereas the quoted provisions define and create the homestead as a legal concept and are the only provisions in our statutes which do.

[2, 3] The statute governing the right of possession of real property sold on execution or under foreclosure during the redemption period was passed in 1899. Section 15, Laws 1899, pp. 93, 94; Rem. Code, § 602. It provides that the purchaser at such sale shall have possession until a resale or redemption, and the redemptioner until another redemption, saves the rights of tenants, provides that, when the mortgage contains a stipulation to that effect, the mortgagor may retain possession during the redemption period, provides that, if the land is used for farming purposes, the judgment debtor shall have the right of possession during the redemption period subject to a lien on the crops raised for interest at 6 per cent. per annum on the purchase price and for taxes and interest, and provides further:

> "That in case of any homestead occupied for that purpose at the time of sale, the judgment debtor shall have the right to retain possession thereof during the period of redemption without accounting for issues or value of occupation."

This section refers to other lands as well as the homestead. While it uses the term "homestead," it does not define it. Yet appellants tie their whole case to the last proviso above quoted, arguing that it creates by implication a homestead founded in possession alone, and independent of the act of 1895, which expressly creates and defines the homestead. In the Hookway Case this court held that the act of 1895 was passed for the very purpose of abrogating the prior law permitting the assertion of a homestead right founded in mere occupancy. To say that the subsequent act of 1899 recognizes a homestead, evidenced by the sole fact of possession, would be to create by implication a distinct kind of homestead, when that implication is not only not a necessary implication but is contrary to the elementary rule that statutes in pari materia must be construed together. By the definition in the act of 1895, occupancy by residence therein of the claimant is essential to the creation of the homestead; so also is its selection "as in this chapter provided." But continued occupancy, after selection by the filing of the written declaration, is not essential to the continued existence of the homestead right. This is manifest from the further provision that the homestead can be abandoned only by a declaration of abandonment, or a grant thereof, executed and acknowledged (Rem. Code, § 535; Act 1895, § 7), which shall be effectual only from the time it is filed (Rem. Code, § 536; Act 1895, § 8). Schoenheider v. Tuengel, 164 Pac. 748.

It is plain, therefore, that the provisions in the act of 1899, making the right to retain possession of the homestead dependent upon occupancy thereof by the claimant at the time of the sale, were intended as a limitation upon rather than as an extension of the homestead right. The conclusion is irresistible that, in order to retain possession of the premises, they not only must be occupied by the claimant at the time of sale, but must have been selected as a homestead prior to the sale by the filing of the declaration prescribed by law for such selection. We so held in State ex rel. Jakubowski v. Superior Court, 84 Wash. 663, 147 Pac. 408, and that holding was not dictum as appellants claim. In that case the mortgagors sought to retain possession under a declaration of homestead filed after the foreclosure sale. That question had to be decided independently of the question of res judicata, since it was based on facts arising subsequent to the decree of foreclosure, which decree was urged as res judicata. It is true that, in the case of North Pacific L. & T. Co. v. Bennett, 49 Wash. 34, 94 Pac. 664, this court held, in substance, that a declaration of homestead filed after sale retroactively created a homestead as of the date of sale by reason of a continued possession; but that view is in direct conflict with and is expressly overruled by the decision in the Hookway Case. But, even if we still adhered to the view expressed in the Bennett Case, it would not avail appellants here. They filed no declaration of homestead, either before or after the sale. For that reason, also, we find it unnecessary to decide whether a homestead declaration can be effectual for any purpose as against a prior mortgage containing, as does the mortgage here, a waiver of the homestead right and stipulating that the purchaser at sale shall have immediate possession.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

1. JUDGMENT 🔑341—OPENING OR VACATING—DISCRETION OF COURT DURING TERM.

For the purpose of administering justice, the district court has very wide and extended discretion in opening judgments and in setting aside, vacating, or modifying proceedings had before it, if it does so at the same term at which the judgment or proceedings were had, if all the parties are present in court, and no advantage is taken of either party.

2. NEW TRIAL 🔑165 — DENIAL OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—VACATION AND GRANTING OF MOTION.

A trial court, after hearing a case and rendering judgment in favor of one of the parties and after the motion for a new trial has been filed, heard, and overruled, and extension of time granted to make and serve a case-made, at the same term at which all such proceedings and orders were rendered may in its discretion entertain a motion to set aside its former order denying a new trial and grant a new trial of said cause.

Commissioners' Opinion, Division No. 5. Error from District Court, Muskogee County; R. P. De Graffenreid, Judge.

Action by Clyde Barnes and another against Octavia Bruce and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

Vernor & Vernor, of Muskogee, for plaintiffs in error. Bailey, Wyand & Broaddus and Howell Parks, all of Muskogee, for defendants in error.

JONES, C. This action was commenced by plaintiffs on the 24th day of February, 1914, by filing their petition in the office of the clerk of the district court of Muskogee county, for a temporary injunction asking that the sheriff of Muskogee county and the defendants be restrained from selling under execution certain lands, and on the 3d day of March, 1914, the district court granted a temporary injunction, and on the final hearing of said cause the temporary injunction theretofore issued was made permanent, and on a full hearing of said cause the court rendered general judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, plaintiffs in error herein. Thereafter, on the 19th day of June, 1915, defendants filed their motion for a new trial, and on the same day said motion was overruled and appeal allowed, an extension of 60 days from said date was allowed to make and serve case-made to the Supreme Court, and plaintiffs were allowed 10 days to suggest amendments and the case-made to be settled and signed on 5 days' notice by either party. Thereafter, on the 6th day of July, 1915, the defendants, instead of taking the necessary steps to perfect their appeal, filed a motion in the office of the clerk asking the court for an order vacating and setting aside the order theretofore made overruling the motion for a new trial; and thereafter on the 12th day of July, 1915, there was filed in the office of the clerk a response by plaintiffs to the motion of the defendants, asking that the court vacate the order overruling the motion for a new trial. The principal averments in said response being to the effect that the court was without jurisdiction to hear and determine the motion filed to vacate an order overruling a motion for a new trial and granting an appeal to the Supreme Court, for the reason it involved a re-examination of matters already presented and passed upon by the court and does not come within the statutes of Oklahoma giving the court power and authority to set aside judgments on the grounds enumerated in the statutes, and for the further reason that said motion asking that the former order overruling motion for a new trial be vacated and set aside, contained no question other than that which was passed upon on the presentation of the original motion, and the matter was therefore res adjudicata, and the court, upon the overruling of the motion for a new trial and giving an extension of time in which to make and serve case-made, had lost jurisdiction of the cause of action, and that said order overruling motion for a new trial was reviewable only upon appeal. Thereafter, on the 17th day of July, 1915, the court passed upon the last above-mentioned motion and allowed the same, and there was filed in the office of the clerk an order granting the motion and vacating and setting aside the order overruling the motion for a new trial, to which ruling of the court the plaintiffs then and there excepted. The order further provided that the judgment therefor rendered in favor of the plaintiffs be set aside, and the permanent injunction awarded them be dissolved, and the defendants granted a new trial. Thereafter on the 8th day of December, 1916, a new trial was had of said cause, and at this trial judgment was rendered in favor of the defendants, from which plaintiffs prosecute this appeal.

There are other facts which might be material to a just settlement of this case, but as plaintiffs in error have briefed the case and base their sole right to a reversal of this case on the one assignment of error, to wit, the right of the court to entertain a motion to set aside its order overruling a motion for a new trial, and having granted an extension of time in which to make and serve case-made, it had no further jurisdiction, and therefore no right to pass upon any judgment or order made in the case, although all of the judgments and orders and proceedings were had at the same term of said district court.

[1] We would not commend the practice as pursued in the trial of this case; but we think that the law of this case has been decided heretofore by our Supreme Court, and we find it to be in conformity with the general rule of law governing the right of courts to vacate, set aside, modify, or annul its judgments and orders during term time as laid down in 23 Cyc. 901.

In the case of Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Halsey, 37 Okl. 678, 133 Pac. 202, the court uses this language:

> "A court has control of its judgments during the term at which they are rendered and may set them aside of its own motion, if they are erroneous."

In the case of Shallenberger v. Brady, 37 Okl. 440, 131 Pac. 1096, we find this language:

> "The judgment was set aside at the same term at which it was rendered. A court has control of its proceedings during the term and may set aside a judgment upon motion or upon its own motion, in proper cases, at any time during the term. When a court sets aside a judgment during the term at which it was rendered, the only question upon appeal is whether the judgment should have been set aside, not whether the court had jurisdiction to set it aside. Of course, in order for a party to take advantage of the court's refusal to set aside a judgment, he must have complied with the statute with reference to motions for new trials; but his failure to do so does not affect the jurisdiction of the court to act."

The court further states in Philip Carey Co. v. Vickers, 38 Okl. 643, 134 Pac. 851, that:

> "It is a general rule of law that all the judgments, decrees, or other orders of the court, however conclusive in their character, are under the control of the court which pronounces them during the term at which they are rendered or entered of record, and may then be set aside, vacated, or modified by the court."

[2] In the case of Hogan v. Bailey, 27 Okl. 15, 110 Pac. 890, which is a case very similar to the one at bar, we find this language:

> "It is insisted on the part of counsel for movant that, the court having once acted on the motion for a new trial, its power over the case and the order thus made was final and conclusive, and that the ruling made on the motion filed to vacate and set aside such order was error. The rule obtaining in all courts of general jurisdiction, except where restricted by some statute, is that during the whole term at which a judgment or order is rendered it remains subject to the plenary control of the court, and, where the administration of justice will be conserved thereby, it may be vacated and set aside, modified, or annulled. This power over the judgments and orders of such a court is not dependent upon any statute, but is inherent in the court itself."

There is apparently a conflict of Oklahoma authorities on this question. The case of Lookabaugh v. Cooper, 5 Okl. 102, 48 Pac. 99, is very much in point, and the learned justice very concisely lays down the rule that, in the absence of a showing of irregularity, fraud, unavoidable casualty, or misfortune, the district court has no power to set aside its order overruling a motion for a new trial upon a reconsideration of the same motion already passed upon, and a reversal of such order can be had only by proceedings in error in the Supreme Court. While we are inclined to feel this would be a good rule of practice and procedure in the trial courts, it occurs to us to be in conflict with the later decisions of our Supreme Court, and also in conflict with the general rule of law governing the question involved here.

Finding no error in the action of the trial court in entertaining the motion to set aside and vacate its former order refusing to grant a new trial, and none of the other assignments in error being pressed or called to our attention by the brief of either plaintiffs in error or defendants in error, we therefore affirm the judgment of the trial court.

On Rehearing.

SHARP, C. J. Except in so far as the opinion prepared by the learned commissioner commends the rule contained in Lookabaugh v. Cooper, 5 Okl. 102, 48 Pac. 99, it is approved. The rule announced in that case is in conflict with the principle involved in a number of later decisions of this court, including those cited in the commissioner's opinion. That opinion proceeds upon the theory that, before the trial court can vacate or modify its own order granting or denying a motion for a new trial, even though at the same term, some statute must be found authorizing such procedure; that, when the court has acted upon a motion for a new trial, it is without power, though at the same term of court, to reconsider its action, however erroneous it may be. The opinion in Lookabaugh v. Cooper, it will be seen, wholly overlooks the well-recognized rule that the judgments, decrees, and orders of a court of general jurisdiction, however conclusive in their character, are under the control of the court which pronounces them, during the term at which they are rendered, and that they may be then set aside, vacated, or annulled by that court. Nor does the difference between the facts involved in the Lookabaugh Case and those in Hogan v. Bailey, 27 Okl. 15, 110 Pac. 890, authorize the application of a different rule of law. In each case, the trial court undoubtedly had the power to make the second order, as is true in the case at bar. In Todd et al. v. Orr, 44 Okl. 459, 145 Pac. 393, the rule was announced that courts of general common-law jurisdiction have the inherent power, upon their own motion, to set aside a verdict and grant a new trial on account of prejudicial error, when done at the same term of court at which the verdict was returned or judgment rendered; and it was said that the power would not be deemed to have been taken away by statute, unless the intention to do so was clear. We there overruled the opinion of the territorial Supreme Court, in Long v. Board of County Com'rs, 5 Okl. 128, 47 Pac. 1063, handed down at the same term of the court as the opinion in Lookabaugh v. Cooper, and which case involves a question very similar to that in the latter case. The opinion in Todd v. Orr, supra, cites and reviews a number of English cases, as well as a large number of cases from the courts of other states, and in all of which the rule is recognized that a court of general jurisdiction has control over its orders or judgments during the term at which made, and for sufficient cause may modify or set them aside, and that when vacated the parties are remitted back to such rights and remedies as they formerly had, the same as though the judgment or order vacated had not been made in the first instance. We there said that:

> "The power to correct errors in their own proceedings is inherent in all courts of general jurisdiction, and in the exercise of that discretion they are governed, not alone by their solicitude for the rights of litigants, but also by the considerations of justice to themselves as instruments provided for the impartial administration of the law"—and that any other view would so fetter and paralyze the power of the courts that they must frequently do wrong from mere inability to do right.

If, then, the court has the inherent authority upon its own motion to vacate or modify orders made by it during the term, a fortiori, should the power be exercised when invoked by one of the parties to the proceedings.

The same general principle is recognized in Philip Carey Co. v. Vickers, 38 Okl. 643, 134 Pac. 851, where Mr. Justice Kane, speaking for the court, announced the rule that all judgments, decrees, or other orders of the court, however conclusive in their character, are under the control of the court which pronounces them, during the term at which they are rendered or entered of record, and may then be set aside and vacated or modified by the court. In that case a motion invoking the inherent equitable power of the superior court to vacate one of its own judgments was filed during the term at which such judgment was rendered, but was not ruled upon until the succeeding term, when it was sustained and the judgment set aside; and it was held that the discretionary power of the court was not lost by the continuance of the motion to the next term, and, when sustained at that term, the action of the court in the premises was the same in legal effect as if the ruling had been made at the term at which the motion was filed. As the rule announced in Lookabaugh v. Cooper is contrary to that contained in the opinion in Todd v. Orr and Philip Carey Co. v. Vickers, supra, and, further, is unsound in principle and opposed to the great weight of authority, the same is expressly overruled.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

BROWNELL v. MOOREHEAD. (No. 6369.)

(Supreme Court of Oklahoma. Jan. 2, 1917. Rehearing Denied May 29, 1917.)

1. WITNESSES 🔑75 — OBJECTION TO TESTIMONY—COMPETENCY OF WITNESS.

An objection to the competency of testimony does not raise the question of the competency of a plaintiff's wife to testify at all concerning the matter as to which inquiry is made.

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT 🔑99—POWERS OF AGENT—EMERGENCY.

A servant, acting in an emergency in the absence of his principal, and apparently for the protection of the interests of the principal, may frequently do things which transcend his usual authority, and they will be deemed to be authorized.

3. HUSBAND AND WIFE 🔑21—WITNESSES 🔑56(3) — WIFE'S AGENCY FOR HUSBAND—WIFE.

A wife was directed by her husband to answer the telephone. Held, that she was thereby constituted his agent for the purpose of hearing any message intended for him, and conveyed on such telephone call, and to repeat such message to him. Held, further, that the wife was a competent witness in a suit brought by her husband to testify concerning the fact of such conversation, and to detail the message received. Whether she was a competent witness, under the last clause of subdivision 3, § 5050, Rev. Laws 1910, to testify concerning any communication of such message by her to her husband not being raised, is not decided.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 139, 141; Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 155.]

4. TRIAL 🔑76, 97—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—RESPONSIVENESS—MOTION TO STRIKE.

It is not permissible for counsel to be quiet and allow evidence to come out and take advantage of it, if favorable, and, if not, to ask that it be stricken out. Still less can a party complain of the court's refusal to sustain such a motion to strike when the testimony given is in direct response to one of his own questions.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1052(4)—HARMLESS ERROR — ADMISSION OF IMPEACHING EVIDENCE.

The admission of evidence, which is competent to impeach a witness, prior to any proper foundation therefor being laid, will not be held to constitute prejudicial error, where afterward, during the course of the trial, a proper foundation therefor is laid.

6. TRIAL 🔑255(4)—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—LIMITATION OF PURPOSE—REQUEST.

The general admission of evidence competent for purposes of impeachment, but otherwise incompetent, will not be held to be prejudicial error, where no request was made to limit the effect of the testimony to purposes of impeachment.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1046(5)—HARMLESS ERROR—REMARKS OF TRIAL COURT.

Remarks of the trial court examined, and held not prejudicial.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1066, 1170(9)—COURTS 🔑90(1) — HARMLESS ERROR — INSTRUCTION—PRECEDENT.

Whether or not an instruction, correct as an abstract statement of the law, but inapplicable to the facts of the case, was prejudicial to the rights of plaintiff in error must be determined by this court upon the whole facts in each particular case, and the determination will ordinarily not serve as a precedent for any other case, since the same instruction may be prejudicial in one case and not in another, depending upon the facts of each case and the circumstances under which it is given. A cause ought not to be reversed for misdirection of the jury in this regard, unless this court can say that such misdirection constituted a substantial violation of a statutory or constitutional right or probably resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

9. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT 🔑20(2)—CONTINUING AGENCY — PROOF — SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

A continuing agency may be proven by facts and circumstances tending to show the existence of such agency both prior and subsequent to the date of the transaction. Such facts and circumstances may properly include specific instances of conduct when such instances are sufficiently numerous to base thereon an inference of systematic conduct under substantially similar circumstances so as to be naturally accountable for by a system only and not a casual recurrence. The range of time preceding and subsequent to the event in question, within which such instances should have occurred in order to be admissible in evidence, is generally a matter in the judicial discretion of the trial court. Such circumstantial evidence is admissible even though there be direct testimony denying the existence of the agency.

10. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT 🔑24, 194(1)—AGENCY—QUESTION FOR JURY—EVIDENCE.

Proper circumstantial facts tending to prove the existence of an agency being in evidence, and the agency being denied, the trial court was not in error in submitting the question of the existence of the agency to the jury, and in instructing them that they might take such facts and circumstances, as well as those surrounding the particular transaction, into account in determining whether or not an agency existed.

Commissioners' Opinion, Division No. 2.

Appeal from District Court, Cleveland County; Robert McMillan, Judge.

Action by L. M. Moorehead against J. A. Brownell, for damages for personal injuries. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. B. Dudley, of Oklahoma City, Hutchin & Burke, of Lexington, and Gray & McVay, of Oklahoma City, for plaintiff in error. Williams & Luttrell and T. W. Mayfield, all of Norman, and McAdams & Haskell, of Oklahoma City, for defendant in error.

BURFORD, C. This action arose out of an accident occurring upon the Purcell-Lexington bridge, caused by the breaking of a buggy in which one Albert Brownell was transporting the plaintiff, Moorehead, from Lexington in an endeavor to board an outgoing train at Purcell. Plaintiff alleged and introduced evidence tending to prove that Albert Brownell was the agent of his father, J. A. Brownell, who conducted a bus or hack line running from Lexington to Purcell, and who was a common carrier of passengers for hire; that plaintiff, being desirous of going to Purcell, called by telephone the Brownell establishment and ordered a conveyance; that when the conveyance did not come, he again called; later the telephone rang, and he requested his wife to answer it; that she did so, and was advised by Mrs. Brownell, acting as agent for her husband, to have plaintiff walk down the street, and that she would send a buggy to meet him and carry him to Purcell; that plaintiff did so, and met Albert Brownell, who took him in, and, in the course of the trip, in an endeavor to meet the approaching train, drove so recklessly that the buggy broke, throwing plaintiff against the bridge and breaking his hip. It was alleged as negligence that the buggy was old, worn, and unsafe; that the horse was wild and unsafe, that Albert Brownell was "an unsuitable and improper person to have charge of said conveyance," and was a "willful and reckless driver," and that the horse was driven at a "high and reckless" speed. Defendant denied, and introduced evidence to support his denial, that Albert Brownell was his agent for any purpose; that Mrs. Brownell had authority to furnish a buggy for use in the transfer business; that she, in fact, did furnish or direct the furnishing of such buggy; that she had the telephone conversation above referred to with Mrs. Moorehead, and that there was negligence on the part of the defendant or his agents. Defendant also pleaded contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. The cause was tried to a jury, resulting in a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $1,800. The resulting judgment is now before us for review upon numerous assignments of error.

So far as the testimony is concerned, it cannot be reviewed without coming to the unfortunate conclusion that it cannot, in any way, be reconciled, and that not only one, but several witnesses upon this trial committed willful and corrupt perjury. Upon which side this occurred was for the jury to determine. We are satisfied that the testimony would have reasonably supported a verdict for either party, and therefore does support the verdict rendered. Other assignments are considered seriatim.

[1] Error is alleged in that Mrs. Moorehead, wife of the plaintiff, was allowed to testify concerning certain statements made by Albert Brownell on the evening after the accident occurred. The objection made was "incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, no proper foundation having been laid." The objection to the competency of the testimony does not, under our practice, raise the question of the competency of the wife of plaintiff, under section 5050, Rev. Laws 1910, to testify at all concerning the matter as to which inquiry is made. Muskogee Electric Traction Co. v. McIntire, 37 Okl. 684, 133 Pac. 213, L. R. A. 1916C, 351; Hartzell v. Hartzell, 42 Okl. 390, 141 Pac. 772, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 1191; Bell v. Territory, 8 Okl. 80, 56 Pac. 853; Williams v. Joins, 34 Okl. 733, 126 Pac. 1013; Butler v. Wilson, 153 Pac. 823. As to the competency of the testimony itself, we think it clearly admissible, not as a statement of the agent to bind the principal (Chickasha Cotton Oil Co. v. Lamb, 28 Okl. 275, 114 Pac. 333), but as impeachment of the witness, Albert Brownell. He had previously been asked upon cross-examination, without objection, concerning certain alleged statements made at the home of plaintiff, and had denied making such statements. Thereafter on rebuttal Mrs. Moorehead was asked concerning the same statements, and allowed to testify that such statements, in substance, were made by Albert Brownell, at the plaintiff's home on the evening of the accident. There was no request to the court to limit the effect of the testimony, to purposes of impeachment (A., T. & S. F. v. Baker, 37 Okl. 48, 130 Pac. 577) and, as tending to impeach, the testimony itself was competent.

[2, 3] The next error alleged is as to the admission of the testimony of Mrs. Moorehead concerning a telephone conversation with Mrs. Brownell shortly prior to the accident. It appears that plaintiff, after telephoning for a conveyance, was awaiting its arrival, when the telephone rang. He directed his wife to answer it, which she did. Mrs. Brownell was on the wire and, according to Mrs. Moorehead, told Mrs. Moorehead that she had turned in the call to two of the drivers and did not understand why they did not respond, but to tell Mr. Moorehead "to start this way, and I will send a single rig after him, and maybe—I think we can make the train all right." Objection was made to the competency of the testimony, and to that of the witness to relate it. As to Mrs. Brownell it suffices to say that we hold that there was sufficient testimony to establish that she was the agent of her husband for the purpose of receiving orders for conveyances and in directing his employés to execute such orders, and that at least the apparent authority was broad enough to cover the sending of the single rig in the emergency which is shown to have arisen, even though single rigs were not used in the defendant's general transfer business. St. L. & S. F. R. v. Bagwell, 33

> "In every business and employment there are exigencies which are not anticipated and which require a servant to act, in the absence of the principal, for the immediate protection of his interests, and he may do things in his interest when the emergency arises which transcend his usual authority, and they will be deemed to have been authorized." Marks v. Rochester Railway Co., 146 N. Y. 181, 40 N. E. 782.

This much being determined it seems that it must be held that Mrs. Moorehead was competent to relate the conversation. We can draw no other conclusion than that when her husband directed her to answer the telephone she was constituted his agent, at least for the purpose of hearing any conversation intended for him, and of relating to him such conversation. Defendant says she was but the "ear" of plaintiff. But what is the purpose of an ear but to hear and convey what is heard, to the understanding? Surely it cannot be said that when I send one to the telephone for me to hear a message intended for me, my purpose is that my messenger shall receive the message then not repeat it to me, but shall retain it only in his own consciousness. Such is not the ordinary course of human affairs. The conclusions reached in Fish v. Bloodworth, 36 Okl. 586, 129 Pac. 32, are not in conflict with the decision here. In that case a husband was held incompetent to testify concerning a conversation where he "accompanies his wife to hear a conversation between her and a third party, particularly when this conversation is not with the adverse party, and does not concern the vital issue in the case." Here the wife did not relate a conversation which her husband also heard. The conversation was with the agent of the adverse party, and concededly concerned the most vital issues in the case, to wit, the agency of Albert Brownell. The question raised in the brief is as to the competency of Mrs. Moorehead to testify concerning the conversation which she heard. No question is made as to her competency to testify that she related such conversation to her husband, and, not being raised, is waived. We are not therefore to be taken as passing upon the competency of the witness in that regard under the final clause of subdivision 3 of section 5050, Rev. Laws 1910.

[4] The next error assigned is that Mrs. Moorehead was allowed to testify concerning a conversation had with Mrs. Brownell after the accident, and in relation to her having sent Albert Brownell with the single rig to get the plaintiff. Here again the objection was to the competency of the testimony, and not to the competency of the witness. The trial court was not in error in admitting this testimony, for two reasons: First, the testimony was elicited upon cross-examination by defendant's counsel and the objection made was by motion to strike. In Ardmore Milling Co. v. Robinson, 29 Okl. 79, 116 Pac. 191, this court said:

> "It is not admissible for counsel to be quiet and allow the evidence to come out and take advantage of it, if favorable, and, if not, to ask that it be stricken out and not considered"

—and quoted the expression used in State v. Efler, 85 N. C. 585:

> "Still less can he complain when it comes out in response to his own inquiries."

Counsel for defendant urges that the answer of the witness was not responsive to the question asked, and that therefore a motion to strike was his only remedy. After a review of the whole course of the examination, immediately preceding the question which brought out the answer complained of, we are convinced that such answer was directly responsive to the question asked, taken in the meaning which any ordinary person would draw from its language.

[5, 6] Second. The testimony was admissible as an impeachment of Mrs. Brownell. Although admitted in advance of any proper foundation having been laid therefor, and though improper as an impeachment at the time admitted, still when the proper foundation was afterward laid by cross-examination of Mrs. Brownell, the error in admitting the testimony was cured, there being no request to limit the effect of the testimony to purposes of impeachment. A., T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Baker, 37 Okl. 48, 130 Pac. 577; Rounsavell v. Pease, 45 Wis. 506; Roux v. Blodgett & Davis Lbr. Co., 94 Mich. 607, 54 N. W. 492.

[7] The next error alleged relates to certain remarks made by the trial court. Mrs. Moorehead, being recalled to the witness stand, was being questioned in relation to whether it was in the morning conversation or later that Mrs. Brownell had told her that Albert was directed to go after plaintiff. The following colloquy then took place:

> "Defendant objects as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and for the reason that this witness is the wife of the plaintiff. For the further reason that it is a form of question which is leading and suggestive and attempting to correct the witness' former testimony by suggesting to her what he wants her to testify at this time, which is directly opposite to what she testified before.
> "The Court: I heard her say when she answered that question that afterwards she said that: I remember noticing it at the time, and I don't think there is any opposition in her testimony, the way the court remembers, but I presume that the stenographer has got a record of it.
> "Counsel: I desire to except to the remark as to the court's recollection."

This court has said that the trial court ought not to express opinions upon the weight of the evidence or credibility of witnesses. Newkirk v. Dimmers, 17 Okl. 525, 87 Pac. 603; Wilson v. Territory, 9 Okl. 331, 60 Pac. 112; Kirk v. Territory, 10 Okl. 46, 60 Pac. 797; Hicks v. U. S., 2 Okl. Cr. 626, 103 Pac. 873. The Criminal Court of Appeals has said (Cochran v. State, 4 Okl. Cr. 390, 1111 Pac. 978) that:

> "Where such remarks are made, and it is clear that they could not have injured the defendant, they will not constitute ground for a new trial."

An examination of the record showing the former testimony of the witness reveals that the court's remarks were in all respects true. There was no opposition in her testimony upon this point, and no reasonable ground for contending that there was. The remark of the court did not go to any question of fact which, under the record, could be before the jury for determination. He did not indicate that he believed her testimony upon any point to be true or untrue. He did not express confidence in the credibility of the witness, or indicate his opinion as to any of the merits of the case. Under such circumstances, we think the remarks made ought not to be held to constitute error. First National Bank v. Yoeman, 17 Okl. 613, 90 Pac. 412; Morgan v. Coleman, 139 Ga. 459, 77 S. E. 579; Norfolk, etc., Co. v. O'Neill, 109 Va. 670, 64 S. E. 948.

[8] The next assignment relates to an instruction in which the court told the jury that:

> "When one with full knowledge allows another to represent him as his agent and remains silent when occasion arises for him to speak, he may be held as principal."

There was no testimony upon which to base an instruction of this sort, and it should not have been given. Was it prejudicial? This court has frequently said that the giving of an instruction which correctly states an abstract principle of law, but which is inapplicable to the facts, is error, but we have variously held that such an instruction was not prejudicial "unless it is apparent that such instruction misled the jury" (Chickasha Compress Co. v. Bow, 149 Pac. 1166; Pearson v. Yoder, 39 Okl. 105, 134 Pac. 421, 48 L. R. A. [N. S.] 334, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 62; Weller v. Dusky, 151 Pac. 606); that giving such an instruction is prejudicial when it is "calculated to mislead the jury" (C., R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Beatty, 42 Okl. 528, 141 Pac. 442; Obenchain & Boyer v. Roff, 29 Okl. 211, 116 Pac. 782); when it will "probably tend to confuse the jury" (St. L. & N. S. F. Co. v. Bruner, 156 Pac. 649); when it is "strongly calculated to confuse and mislead the jury" (Kingfisher Nat. Bank v. Johnson, 22 Okl. 228, 98 Pac. 343); when it appears that "the jury were misled thereby" (Oklahoma Portland Cement Co. v. Brown, 45 Okl. 476, 146 Pac. 6), etc. The sum of all these expressions is that the instruction is prejudicial when we can fairly say that its necessary effect upon the jury was such that in the language of the statute (section 6005, Rev. Laws 1910) it "probably resulted in a miscarriage of justice." Whether or not the instruction had such effect must necessarily be determined by this court, according to our best judgment, upon the whole record in each particular case and each case will largely stand as a determination only of itself. As was said by the Criminal Court of Appeals in Dooling v. State, 3 Okl. Cr. 491, 106 Pac. 982:

> "An instruction harmless in one case may be prejudicial in another, depending upon the facts of each case."

In the case at bar the connection in which the language used was given—as a part of a long instruction—in fact the whole record, leads us to conclude that the giving of this instruction was not prejudicial.

The same reasoning applies to an instruction upon exemplary damages, for which there was no foundation in the evidence. It is clear from the record that plaintiff suffered an impacted fracture of the thigh bone; that he was confined in a hospital for a long period with his leg in a cast, with weights suspended therefrom; that he suffered such pain that he was kept for many days largely under the influence of opiates; that he had incurred bills of considerable size for doctors' fees, medicine and hospital fees; that his leg was permanently shortened about two inches, that he was compelled, because of the injury, to give up a position paying $100 per month, and had changed his occupation. The verdict was for $1,800.

Assuming that he was entitled to recover at all—and this was in this case a question of fact and for the jury to determine—we cannot say that there is even a probability that exemplary damages were included in a verdict of this amount; unless we can so say the instruction was prejudicial. Many of the authorities sustaining the view we take here are collected by Mr. Justice Turner delivering the opinion of this court in Great Western Coal & Coke Co. v. Coffman, 43 Okl. 404, 143 Pac. 30, and the principles there adduced are reiterated in Planters' Cotton & Ginning Co. v. Penny, 155 Pac. 516. It is unnecessary for us to further review them.

> "If you find from the evidence in this case that the party, Albert Brownell, had acted as agent for his father previous to the alleged injury, and shortly after said alleged injury he began to act for his father again in carrying on the livery and transfer business, you may look to all these as well as to all other surrounding circumstances to determine as to whether or not the said Albert Brownell was really acting for his father at the time of the alleged accident, and among these circumstances you may look to see as to where and how he got his information and what phone was used, if any, and whose team he used, and from what place said team was taken, as well as any and all circumstances appearing in the evidence."

To this instruction counsel object upon the ground that the fact that Albert Brownell was formerly in the employ of the defendant does not tend to show that he was his agent at that time. It is too remote, too speculative; evidence of a foreign fact not within the issues. And even if evidence of such former employment was admissible, its only effect was a remote inference or presumption, and the inference or presumption could not be indulged in the face of the positive evidence that Albert Brownell was not the agent of the defendant on the day of the injury or in the transaction in question. Counsel cites in support cases holding that evidence of similar transactions as principal and agent long before the particular event involved, and evidence of isolated acts of agency not connected with the transaction in question, is not admissible to establish agency, especially where positive evidence is available. In this case, however, the proof of both parties showed that Albert Brownell was driving in the transfer business for his father up until about ten days before the injury to plaintiff, and that he was in the same employment a short time after the injury. His alleged agency upon the day of the injury was the very fact in controversy. To say that because one witness or a dozen positively denied the agency on the particular day involved, the opposite party was thereby precluded from showing facts and circumstances to disprove such positive testimony is, we think, beyond the range of reason. Positive, direct testimony as to the authority or employment of an agent is generally available only to the alleged principal and agent. As a general rule, they are the only ones who can testify positively to the arrangement, or lack of arrangement, between them, but the facts and circumstances regarding and surrounding the acts and conduct of such parties are available to the opposite party. If he be denied the right to produce evidence of such facts and circumstances, he is entirely at the mercy of his adversary, the alleged principal who, with the alleged agent, alone can swear positively as to the existence or nonexistence of the employment. The law gives a party, therefore, the right to show acts and conduct tending to establish agency, but limits the extent of testimony of that character to acts and conduct in relation to transactions of the same nature as that involved and reasonably proximate in time to the transaction involved in the cause being tried. The cases cited by counsel consider, as above stated, acts held to be too remote. Had the evidence in this case been confined to showing that Albert Brownell once drove a hack for his father a year or so before this accident the cases cited would have been applicable and the testimony incompetent. But where a general course of employment in the same business as that in controversy in the action up to within a short time before and commencing again a short time after the accident, is shown, supplemented by acts and conduct upon the very day of the accident tending to show a continuance of that same general employment, then we think such testimony all becomes competent and material, and was properly defined in the court's instruction. That Albert Brownell drove a buggy upon the day of the accident instead of a hack or automobile we regard of little importance, for the reasons given under our previous discussion in relation to the apparent scope of authority of Mrs. Brownell. Cases of this sort are not infrequent. Greenleaf says (volume 2, § 65):

> "The most numerous class of cases of agency is that which relates to affairs of trade and commerce where agency is proven by inference from the habit and course of dealing between the parties."

Mr. Wigmore has given a very able discussion of the principles applicable to the class of evidence here involved. He says (Wigmore on Evidence, § 375) that of the modes "of evidence circumstantially a human quality or condition, two only are practically here available, namely, specific instances of conduct, exhibiting the habit or custom, and the prior or subsequent existence of it" (section 376):

> "In general, when habit of conduct is to be evidenced by specific instances, there is no reason why they should not be resorted to for that purpose. The only conditions are: (a) That they should be numerous enough to base an inference of systematic conduct; and (b) that they should have occurred under substantially similar circumstances so as to be naturally accountable for by a system only, and not as casual recurrences. As to the first condition convenience requires that the discretion of the trial court should control in order to avoid the objection of unfair surprise and confusion of issues. * * * As to the second condition, it may be said that the courts are apt to require too much, ruling often as if it were their function to require incontrovertible demonstration from each piece of evidence, instead of merely to declare it relevant to be considered by the jury."

The principles are applicable to proof of agency (section 377—1). So, too, he says (section 382):

> "It has already been seen that the prior subsequent existence of a quality or condition is evidential of its existence at a given time. * * * The prior or subsequent existence of such fact is always evidential to show its existence at a time in issue, upon the general experience that such facts involve a human attitude more or less continuous and permanent."

Without entering into a discussion of the many cases from the different states upon the subject, it is sufficient to refer to Ricker Nat. Bank v. Stone, 21 Okl. 833, 97 Pac. 577, St. Louis Cordage Mills v. Western Supply Co., 154 Pac. 646, Wrought Iron Range Co. v. Leach, 32 Okl. 706, 123 Pac. 419, and Reeves Co. v. Phillips, 156 Pac. 1179, where it was held generally that:

> "The apparent authority of an agent is to be gathered from all the facts and circumstances, and is a question of fact for the jury."

And in Reed v. Scott, 151 Pac. 484, where this court said:

> "A jury may, if they so decide, accept circumstantial evidence upon one side, and reject positive testimony presented on the same point by the other side."

Having determined that the evidence referred to in the instruction was admissible to prove agency, it must follow that, there being conflict upon that point, the court did not err in submitting the question of agency to the jury and in advising them that they might consider such facts and circumstances in determining the existence or nonexistence of the agency.

It is next contended that there was error in the admission of testimony tending to prove that Albert Brownell had been fined for automobile speeding, and had an automobile accident subsequent to the accident here in question. The testimony of which complaint is made is not set out in the brief, and we are not therefore required to search the record to discover it. Rule 25 [137 Pac. xi] and numerous decisions of this court.

Other errors are alleged, but, owing to the necessary, but regrettable, length of this opinion, we dispose of them by saying that we have examined each and find no reversible error.

The judgment of the trial court should be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. Adopted in whole.

MAURMAIR v. NATIONAL BANK OF COMMERCE OF TULSA. (No. 6700.)

1. Banks and Banking 🔑148(1)—Check—Knowledge of Depositor's Signature.

A bank upon which a depositor therein draws a check is charged with knowledge of the depositor's signature.

2. Banks and Banking 🔑148(1)—Forged Check—Right to Payment.

Where a signature to a bank check is forged or made without authority of the person whose signature it purports to be, it is wholly inoperative, and no right to enforce payment thereof against any party thereto can be acquired through or under such signature, unless the party against whom it is sought to enforce such right is precluded from setting up the forgery or want of authority.

3. Trial 🔑251(1)—Instructions—Irrelevant Issue.

It is error for the trial court to instruct the jury upon an irrelevant issue, not raised by the pleadings or of which there is no evidence, when the instruction is calculated to mislead the jury.

Error from Superior Court, Tulsa County; M. A. Breckenridge, Judge.

Action by Louis Maurmair against the National Bank of Commerce of Tulsa, Oklahoma. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed and remanded.

Former opinion (158 Pac. 349) withdrawn.

Sherman, Veasey & O'Meara, of Tulsa, for plaintiff in error. Randolph, Haver & Shirk, of Tulsa, for defendant in error. J. R. Cottingham and S. W. Hayes, both of Oklahoma City, amici curiæ.

SHARP, C. J. This action was brought by Louis Maurmair to recover $1,170.30 from the National Bank of Commerce of Tulsa, Okl.; it being alleged that plaintiff deposited such sum in the bank and the bank refused to pay the same upon demand. An answer was filed charging payment, except the sum of $130.30, which it was alleged was on deposit in defendant bank subject to plaintiff's check. Plaintiff replied by general denial.

The question presented at the trial related to the payment of three checks of $90, $440, and $510, which were paid by the bank, and the signatures to which the plaintiff claimed were forgeries. The primary issue before the trial court was whether the signatures were genuine or forgeries. There was no claim either by plaintiff or defendant that the signatures were obtained by fraud or trick practiced upon the plaintiff, and no evidence to support such a claim. A witness for the plaintiff sought to show the signatures to have been made from a common signature by tracing over plaintiff's signature, using transfer or carbon paper, so as to obtain his apparent signatures on the checks alleged to be forgeries. By instruction No. 6, which the court gave to the jury over plaintiff's objection, the law was said to be that if the signatures to the checks for $400 and $510 were made by plaintiff, either by directly affixing his signature thereto, or by affixing his signature thereto without his knowledge or consent by means of a deception practiced upon him, by third parties placing carbon papers between the paper on which he knowingly affixed his original signature and the checks thereunder, thereby obtaining carbon copies of his original signature, such copies of his signature would be considered as his original signature, binding upon him; and, further, that if the bank paid such checks in good faith, believing the signatures thereto were genuine, the plaintiff would not be allowed to recover thereon. The instruction is outside of the issues framed by the pleadings and is not authorized by the evidence. Throughout the trial, plaintiff testified that the signatures were not his. Southwell, the handwriting expert, expressed the opinion that the signatures were not genuine, but had been made by the use of Maurmair's signature upon some piece of paper and the genuine signature, thus secured, used in imprinting his signature upon the checks by the use of carbon sheets. We find no testimony in the record that the signature to the checks was made by the plaintiff, either by the intentional or unintentional use of carbon sheets. On the other hand, the testimony was to the effect that plaintiff had never used carbon paper in his check book, or in any otherwise. In short, there was no evidence to support the contention that plaintiff's signatures to the checks were affixed thereto by means of imposition practiced upon him by a third party placing a carbon paper under some other paper "on which he knowingly affixed his original signature." The evidence on the part of the bank was that the signatures to the three controverted checks were the genuine signatures of the plaintiff.

Obviously, therefore, there is no basis for the instruction complained of; it is wholly outside the issues and without evidence to authorize its submission. The plaintiff, as the bank's creditor, sued to recover for the amount of his deposit; the bank answered pleading payment except as to the sum of $130.30, then on deposit. Plaintiff replied denying that his deposit had been paid him. The burden was then upon the bank to prove payment. This it sought to do by showing that the checks drawn by Maurmair were his genuine checks; not that, because of plaintiff's negligence in and about the making of the checks, he was estopped from urging payment thereto. No question of negligence was raised by the pleadings, nor was it claimed by the bank that the plaintiff was precluded from setting up his claim of forgery because of any conduct on his part that would estop him from asserting his right to payment.

Furthermore, the instruction is opposed to section 4073, Revised Laws 1910, which provides:

> "Where a signature is forged or made without authority of the person whose signature it purports to be, it is wholly inoperative, and no right to retain the instrument or to give a discharge therefor, or to enforce payment thereof against any party thereto, can be acquired through or under such signature, unless the party, against whom it is sought to enforce such right, is precluded from setting up the forgery or want of authority."

[1] A bank is bound to know the signatures of its depositors. Kenneth Investment Co. v. National Bank of Republic, 96 Mo. App. 125, 70 S. W. 173; First Nat. Bank v. Bank of Cottage Grove, 59 Or. 388, 117 Pac. 293; First Nat. Bank of Belmont v. Barnesville First Nat. Bank, 58 Ohio St. 207, 50 N. E. 723, 41 L. R. A. 584, 65 Am. St. Rep. 448; North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 161 App. Div. 341, 146 N. Y. Supp. 720; Timbel v. Garfield Nat. Bank, 121 App. Div. 870, 106 N. Y. Supp. 497; Havana Cent. R. Co. v. Knickerbocker Trust Co., 198 N. Y. 422, 92 N. E. 12, L. R. A. 1915B, 720; Redington v. Woods, 45 Cal. 406, 13 Am. Rep. 190; Morse on Banks and Banking (3d Ed.) vol. 2, par. 480; Daniel on Neg. Inst. (5th Ed.) par. 1654A.

[2] If, in the course of business, a bank pays a forged check, it must be considered as making the payment out of its own funds, and cannot charge the amount against the depositor, unless it shows a right to do so on the ground of estoppel, or because of some negligence chargeable to the depositor. In such circumstances, the depositor must suffer the consequences of his own conduct, and the amount may be charged to him. Harter v. Mechanics' Nat. Bank of Trenton, 63 N. J. Law, 578, 44 Atl. 715, 76 Am. St. Rep. 224; Morgan v. U. S. Mortgage, etc., Co., 208 N. Y. 218, 101 N. E. 871, L. R. A. 1915D, 741. Ann. Cas. 1914D, 462; Hardy v. Chesapeake, 51 Md. 562, 34 Am. Rep. 325.

[3] While this court has on numerous occasions held that instructions not responsive to the pleadings and evidence will not require a reversal of the case if not calculated to confuse or mislead the jury, we cannot conscientiously say that the instruction complained of did not have that effect. On the contrary, from an examination of the record it appears that the instruction was strongly calculated to confuse the issues before the jury to the prejudice of plaintiff, so as to necessitate the reversal of the case. Kingfisher Nat. Bank v. Johnson, 22 Okl. 228, 98 Pac. 343; St. L. & S. F. R. Co. v. Bruner, 156 Pac. 649: Obenchain v. Roff, 29 Okl. 211, 116 Pac. 782; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Beatty, 42 Okl. 528, 141 Pac. 442.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial. All the Justices concurring.

Commissioners' Opinion, Division No. 3. Error from Superior Court, Pittsburg County; W. C. Liedtke, Judge.

Suit by Robert I. Bond against the Amazon Fire Insurance Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Stanard, Wahl & Ennis, of Shawnee, for plaintiff in error. W. J. Hulsey, of Hartshorne, and Clayton & Clayton, of McAlester, for defendant in error.

HOOKER, C. The defendant in error sued to rescind a contract, and for damages for fraud and deceit alleged to have been caused him by reason of false and fraudulent representations and statements having been made to him by the agents of the Western & Southern Fire Insurance Company, as the result of which he purchased from the company through its agents 100 shares of stock in said company at $25 per share, in payment of which he executed two notes, for $1,500 and $1,000, respectively, due in one year, with 5 per cent. interest, payable to himself and indorsed by himself. The defendant company denied the authority of the parties making the sale to act for it in any capacity, and denied that it had sold to plaintiff any stock or had any transaction with him. Upon this issue, under proper instructions of the court, this cause was presented to the jury, and a judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff, to reverse which the company has appealed, assigning the following errors:

(1) That the court erred when it refused to require the plaintiff to submit his cause upon one theory.

(2) That it was error to permit plaintiff below to amend his petition in the progress of the trial, so as to state a cause of action.

(3) The refusal of the court to give requested instructions, and likewise error in giving certain instructions.

(4) No evidence to support the verdict of the jury.

(5) The admission of incompetent evidence over its objection.

The evidence here discloses: That in the summer of 1909 one Edmund Dwyer and one Blanchard, representing themselves to be agents of the Western & Southern Fire Insurance Company, solicited plaintiff to purchase stock in said company, but he was not at the time interested. That about December 1, 1909, they again visited him for said purpose, but were unsuccessful. About January 27, 1910, they again visited Dr. Bond and sold to him 100 shares at $25 per share, in payment of which he executed and delivered his two notes as stated above. That said notes, at the instance of Dwyer, were drawn payable to Dr. Bond, and indorsed by him, and delivered to Dwyer. At this time Dwyer gave to Dr. Bond the following receipt:

"Receipt for Stock Settlement.
"Western & Southern Fire Insurance Company, Shawnee, Oklahoma."
"Book No. 130.
"Application and Receipt No. 12.

"Received of Dr. Robert Bond ($2,500.00) twenty-five hundred dollars, in payment for 100 shares of the capital stock of the Western & Southern Fire Insurance Company of Shawnee, Oklahoma. This receipt is issued subject to the contract of purchase of duplicate number. Only salesman No. 9, whose signature appears on the inside front cover of this book, has authority to countersign this receipt.

"Signed this 27th of January, 1910.
"Western & Southern Fire Insurance Co.,
"By Edmund Dwyer."

And indorsed upon the back of said receipt was the following:

"Should the purchaser of the stock indicated on this application, and for which he has given his notes for $2,500.00 and due in 12 months from date, desire to renew all or part of his notes, he has the right to do so at 5 per cent. per annum. Edmund Dwyer, Agt.
"Jany. 27, 1910."

Dwyer and Blanchard took the $1,500 note and discounted the same to the McAlester Trust Company, along with other notes, and they stated to the president of the bank at the time they were agents of the Western & Southern Fire Insurance Company, and the president of the bank in payment of said notes caused some certificates of deposit in the name of the company to be given to Dwyer and Blanchard. These certificates of deposit were all later indorsed by the Western & Southern Fire Insurance Company and paid by the McAlester Trust Company. The $1,000 note, a short time after its execution, was in the possession of and owned by the company, and was so owned by it at the time of the institution of this suit, and also its property when renewed in January, 1911, and interest paid thereon. The evidence further shows that Dwyer and Blanchard held in their possession at the time of the sale to plaintiff—

"various forms of contract of the Western & Southern Fire Insurance Company and various reports and other literature of the company, such as any agent engaged in the sale of stock would have."

Plaintiff paid the larger note at maturity, and procured in January, 1911, a renewal of the $1,000 note, and paid the interest thereon, and when this note was about due he wrote the company, and requested it to send same to the bank at Hartshorne and he would pay it, but changed his mind and instituted this suit to recover the sums paid out by him, and to cancel the outstanding note, claiming he had just ascertained the fraud; that is, that in 1912 he first ascertained that the statements made in 1909 by Dwyer and Blanchard as to the Western & Southern Fire Insurance Company having purchased or acquired the interest of the Shawnee Mutual Fire Insurance Company was false, and that as soon as he discovered the same he brought this suit. It is asserted that said parties stated that the Western & Southern Fire Insurance Company had acquired the business of the Shawnee Mutual Fire Insurance Company, which was then a going concern, and there is some evidence supporting the theory, had this been true, the stock in the Western & Southern Fire Insurance Company would have been more valuable.

The evidence also discloses that, while these negotiations were being made by Dwyer and Blanchard with Dr. Bond for the sale of said stock, they conversed with other parties in Hartshorne, and stated to them that they were agents of the company for the purpose of selling the stock, and that they sold some of the stock to other parties and took notes in part payment, and that these notes later were in the possession of the company and claimed by it. The company asserted that one J. C. Chrisney had subscribed for a large number of its shares and had not paid therefor, nor had said stock been issued to him, and that he employed Dwyer and Blanchard, as his agents, to sell stock, and that when the stock was sold by him, and notes taken therefor and delivered by Chrisney, he would transfer said notes to it, and it would credit his account therefor, and that in this way it acquired the ownership of the various notes, etc., involved here.

Upon this evidence this cause was presented to the jury, and it, after hearing the evidence, found that Dwyer and Blanchard were the agents of the company, and that they had made the statements claimed, and same were false.

The petition alleges that the company is liable for two reasons: First, because Dwyer and Blanchard were specifically authorized to act for it; second, if not specifically authorized, the company ratified the acts of Dwyer and Blanchard by accepting the benefits of the transaction. These are not inconsistent causes of action.

[1] The Western & Southern Fire Insurance Company was acquired after this transaction by the Amazon Fire Insurance Company, but the stock purchased by plaintiff was never delivered to him at any time. In the case of Austin Mfg. Co. v. Decker, 109 Iowa, 277, 281, 80 N. W. 312-314, the Supreme Court of Iowa said:

> "The whole doctrine of election is based upon the theory that there are inconsistent rights or remedies of which a party may avail himself, and a choice of one is held to be an election not to pursue the other. The principle does not apply to coexistent remedies."

In the instant case the fact to be established was the agency of Dwyer and Blanchard on behalf of the company, or subsequent ratification, and the cause of action of Dr. Bond can be maintained, if he can establish they were the agents in the first instance, or that they assumed to act for the company, and that the company subsequently ratified their acts. In either event, the court did not commit any error in refusing to require the defendant in error to elect in this case.

[2] Under our Code the amendment of the pleadings is discretionary with the trial court, and unless the same constitutes an abuse of discretion this court will not interfere with the action of such trial court in permitting an amendment. It is true that here, during the progress of the trial, the court permitted the defendant in error to amend his petition so as to make the same state a cause of action. The plaintiff in error did not show, nor attempt to show, the trial court where this was prejudicial to its interests, nor did it claim in the court below that it was surprised by this amendment, and a full consideration of the record does not disclose that there was an abuse of discretion in this respect. Section 4790, Revised Laws 1910, affords abundant authority to sustain the action of the trial court in permitting such amendment.

[3] Upon the trial the court permitted the defendant in error to show that the purported agents of the company, Dwyer and Blanchard, had made other sales of its stock to parties in the locality of Hartshorne about the time of the sale to the plaintiff below, and also permitted said parties to testify to the representations made by said purported agents at the time. This was objected to by the plaintiff in error in the trial below, and is assigned here as one of the reasons why this judgment should be disturbed. In 17 Cyc. 287, it is said:

> "An attendant circumstance of highly probative value may in some cases be found in the existence of such a series or system of co-ordinated or correlated facts as lead to the inference that the particular act which is under investigation must have been done as a necessary part of a general plan to attain a definite object, and that it was done by the person to whose real or supposed interest the particular act would redound. The acts or other facts constituting such an attendant circumstance may be shown, to indicate the existence of a systematized plan or comprehensive design, and they may be shown, notwithstanding the fact that the various acts cover an extended period of time."

This rule seems to be well supported by the authorities cited in the note to the text above given. It seems to us that this testimony was competent to show a wholesale system on the part of Dwyer and Blanchard to sell the stock of the company, and clearly evidences a total disregard of the truth, and indicates a settled conviction upon their part to sell stock, regardless of the representations necessary so to do.

In Mechem on Agency, vol. 1 (2d Ed.) 188, it is said:

> "So evidence of agency is also found in the facts that the alleged principal has acquiesced in, recognized, or adopted similar acts done on other occasions by the assumed agent. Where the acts so adopted are so closely connected as to constitute a course of dealing or to establish a custom, there can usually be but little difficulty; neither can there be where the acts are so numerous or so closely related as to reasonably lead to no other conclusion than that of a general agency of the doing of the acts of that character."

[4] If there is any evidence supporting this judgment we cannot disturb the same. The question of agency is one of fact, to be decided from all the facts and circumstances surrounding the transactions. It is often quite difficult to establish positive authority, and the power of the agent can only be determined by a critical examination of the entire transaction. When one starts out in an enterprise to defraud, often almost every known effort is resorted to in order to conceal and hide the fraudulent conduct. If liability can be averted, or suspicion shifted to others, it is a perfect defense. In the instant case, the company by its own admission permitted Chrisney to subscribe for a large number of its shares, knowing full well that before he could pay therefor he would have to sell the same to others, and that he was selling same as rapidly as possible, and that he was turning to it money and notes to be applied in settlement for stock for which he had subscribed.

Dwyer traveled over the country, assuming to be its agent, executed contracts in its name, sold stock, and represented he was selling same for the company, and if for a private individual he concealed the same from the purchasers, accepted notes in payment therefor, and these notes afterwards were in the possession of the company; he had contracts and other literature of the company in his possession, such as a stock salesman would have, and in some instances the stock sold by Dwyer was delivered to the purchaser by the company, and Dwyer also discounted notes and accepted certificates of deposit in the name of the company therefor, which the company afterwards indorsed and collected, and some of which were indorsed by Dwyer, as agent of the company, and some of same deposited in the bank to the credit of the company, and afterwards paid to the company.

The company did not fully inform the purchasers from Dwyer as to its condition when requested, and it is apparent that any efforts upon the part of the company would have fully discovered the representations made by Dwyer in making his sales. It appears the company diligently sought to avoid knowledge, content to revel in the wickedness of Dwyer and others and profit by their iniquity. This court in the following cases: Port Huron Co. v. Ball, 30 Okl. 11, 118 Pac. 393; Ricker Nat. Bank v. Stone, 21 Okl. 833, 97 Pac. 577; Mullen v. Thaxton, 24 Okl. 643, 104 Pac. 359; Allen v. Kenyon, 30 Okl. 536, 119 Pac. 960—said that the apparent authority of an agent is to be gathered from all the facts and circumstances in evidence, and is a question of fact for the jury. Also in U. S. F. & G. Co. v. Shirk et al., 20 Okl. 576. 95 Pac. 218, this court said:

> "One who, by his conduct, has led an innocent party to rely upon the appearance of another's authority to act for him, will not be heard to deny the agency to that party's prejudice."

And that:

> "One who voluntarily accepts the proceeds ot an act done by one assuming, though without authority, to be his agent, ratifies the act, and takes it as his own, with all its burdens, as well as all its benefits."

In Midland Savings & Loan Co. v. Sutton, 30 Okl. 448, 120 Pac. 1007, it is held:

> "1. The question of agency and the extent and scope of the agent's authority are to be determined by the jury, as other facts, from the evidence.
> "2. The apparent authority of an agent is to be gathered from all the facts and circumstances in evidence, and is a question of fact for the jury.
> "3. One who leads an innocent party to rely on the appearance of another's authority to act for him will not be heard to deny the agency to the party's prejudice. * * *
> "6. Where there is evidence reasonably tending to sustain the issues on the part of the plaintiff, and the evidence on the part of the defendant conflicts therewith, the determination thereof is for the jury."

And in Fant v. Campbell, 8 Okl. 586, 58 Pac. 741, it is said:

> "The act of one who assumes to act for another, though without authority, may be ratified by the one for whom he assumes to act voluntarily accepting the proceeds or profits of such unauthorized act. * * *"

This court also in Minneapolis Threshing Machine Co. v. Humphrey, 27 Okl. 697, 117 Pac. 203, 204, said:

> "As the question of ratification or confirmation was submitted to the jury, and they found in favor of the defendant Burke on that question, if there is any evidence reasonably tending to support their finding, it will not be disturbed by this court. It is a general rule that evidence of any conduct on the part of the principal recognizing the acts of the agent is admissible. * * * There was evidence to the effect that, immediately upon the execution of the release by Davies, the threshing machine was turned over to Humphrey, and remained in his possession until taken from him by the threshing machine company. * * * All these circumstances, we think, tend to contradict the evidence of the president to the effect that the actions of Davies in executing the contract of release were never ratified or confirmed by the company, and join an issue of fact for the jury. It is true that evidence of knowledge of these facts by the company is essential to a ratification, but such knowledge may be presumed when the acts of the agent are of such a nature that the principal must have known of them. * * * Ratification of an unauthorized act of an agent may be presumed from long-continued silence of a principal who has knowledge of the facts constituting such ratification. * * * In Hatch v. Taylor, 10 N. H. 538, it was held that evidence of conduct may be admitted, and be sufficient to establish ratification, notwithstanding the prin> cipal expressly declared he would not sanction the contract. In Patterson v. Van Loon, 186 Pa. 367, 40 Atl. 495, the court said: 'The evidence necessary to establish such relation is very different from that required to prove an express agency. In the former greater latitude must necessarily be allowed in the admission of testimony tending to prove facts and circumstances from which the existence of an agency may be legitimately inferred. From the nature of the case, evidence that would tend to prove an implied agency, or subsequent ratification, would be admissible as proof of an express agency."

In Iowa Separator Co. v. Sanders, 40 Okl. 658, 140 Pac. 406, 407, this court said:

> "Counsel takes the position that all the evidence on the part of the defendant regarding agency was incompetent, and therefore, if his objections had been sustained to the introduction of such evidence, there was no other evidence sufficient to authorize the submission of the issues to the jury. While it is true, as a general rule, that, until some evidence of agency has been introduced, declarations of an assumed agent, seeking to establish agency, are incompetent. There are exceptions to this rule, however, and one of the exceptions is that, where the suit is based upon a contract entered into by the alleged agent, the declarations of the agent are admissible and competent testimony. * * * In the case at bar, in addition to the fact that the suit was based upon a contract entered into by Hustin, the alleged agent, there were other circumstances and testimony tending to prove agency. * * * In view of these facts, we are of the opinion that the court did not err in admitting the testimony complained of, and that there was sufficient testimony, warranting the submission of the issues to the jury. Where there is any controversy about the facts, the question of agency is an issue for the determination of the jury."

[5] Ratification, as it relates to the law of agency, may be defined as the express or implied adoption and confirmation by one person of an act or contract performed or entered into in his behalf by another, who at the time assumed to act as his agent in doing the act or making the contract without authority to do so. And it is stated that as a general rule, in order that a ratification of an unauthorized act or transaction of an agent may be valid and binding, it is essential that the principal have full knowledge of all material facts and circumstances relative to the unauthorized act or transaction, or that some one authorized to represent the principal, except the agent, have such knowledge, unless the principal is willfully ignorant or improperly refrains from seeking information.

The lack of full knowledge does not protect a principal, who is willfully ignorant and deliberately chooses to act without such knowledge, as where, knowing that he is ignorant of some of the facts, he has such confidence in his agent that he is willing to assume the risk and to ratify the act without making inquiry for further information that he at the time possessed, or where he intentionally and deliberately ratifies without full knowledge under circumstances which are sufficient to put a reasonable man upon inquiry, and the principal cannot ratify that part which is beneficial to himself and reject the remainder, for with the benefits he must take the burden, and if the circumstances are sufficient to put a man of reasonable prudence upon inquiry, the principal should make every reasonable effort to discover whether another has assumed to act in his behalf. In Blakley v. Cochran, 117 Mich. 394, 75 N. W. 940, it is held:

> "It is contended that, before ratification can be shown, it must appear that the principal has full knowledge of the transaction. This knowledge may be inferred from the circumstances proven."

In the case of Lee v. Kirby, 80 Ark. 366, 97 S. W. 298, the Supreme Court of Arkansas said:

> "A partnership dissolution agreement, releasing plaintiff from all debts of the firm, was signed by L., defendant's brother, for himself and for defendant. In an action to compel reimbursement for debt paid by plaintiff after dissolution, defendant claimed that L. had no authority to bind him by such contract, but testified that they both signed the contracts for the firm as they desired; that L. had charge of the business, so far as the interest of both in the partnership was concerned, and frequently signed the name of L. Bros. to notes, the validity of which was never disputed, but was expressly recognized. Defendant also knew that plaintiff had been released from the partnership on some terms, but made no inquiry as to what such terms were. Held, that defendant had ratified his brother's act, and was bound by the contract of dissolution."

And in the body of the opinion the court said:

> "He was thereupon put upon inquiry as to the terms of the dissolution, and by failing to inquire, or object to the terms, is deemed, under the circumstances, to have assented to and affirmed the contract made in his name by his brother."

In the case of McDermott v. Jackson, 97 Wis. 64, 72 N. W. 375, the Supreme Court of Wisconsin said:

> "The principle that a person cannot retain the avails of an unauthorized contract made for his benefit by another, assuming to act as his agent, and repudiate the responsibilities of such contract, and that any attempt so to do, with full knowledge of the facts, constitutes a ratification of the unauthorized act, and creates a liability on the part of such person to the same extent as if such contract were originally authorized, is familiar. * * * This principle applies where the agent, in excess of his authority, borrows money on the credit of his principal and with it discharges debts of the principal in the business in which such agent is engaged. * * * The facts upon which the first case [Perkins v. Boothby, 71 Me. 91] turned are stated in the opinion of Symonds, J., as follows: 'The duty of the agent was to have charge of the store, sell the goods, and from time to time make such purchases of goods as might be necessary in his judgment, subject to the oversight of the directors. In the conduct of the business of the company, he assumed to borrow for them and to pay their debts for goods that had been purchased.' * * * In discussing the general principle before stated, the court quoted with approval from Green's Brice, Ultra Vires, 618, as follows: 'There appears to be no substantial reason whatever for not extending the principle here involved to all analogous cases. If liable in one case, why should a corporation not be always liable to re> fund the property or money of a person, which it has obtained improperly, or without consideration, or, if unable to return it, to pay for the benefit obtained thereby.' The conclusion reached was that such principle was applicable to the facts of that case, and that plaintiff was entitled to recover the money borrowed, as for money had and received. We perceive no good reason why the principle should not be held to apply here. Defendant had the full benefit of plaintiff's property. To the amount of such property he was relieved from liability to others, which, but for such property, he would have been obliged to pay. A refusal to return the money, with knowledge of the facts, or with notice and sufficient time, with reasonable diligence, to discover the facts, would constitute in law a ratification of the unauthorized dealing and render him liable."

In the case of Tabor v. Kelly, 109 Iowa, 544, 80 N. W. 520, the Supreme Court of Iowa said:

> "It is elementary that if the bank, with knowledge of the terms on which Coats received the Baldwin note, took and retained the same without objection, it will be held to have ratified what Coats did. Indeed, there is authority for saying that the bank, when it received this paper, was under obligation to inquire and ascertain the facts of the transaction with Coats, and is bound by the knowledge which such an inquiry would have given."

In the case of Ballard v. Nye, 138 Cal. 596, 72 Pac. 159, the Supreme Court of California said:

> "Now, upon the matter of ratification: Appellant contends in this connection that payment to Hayford by the company was not payment to her, unless he had authority to represent her. There is no doubt of this as a legal proposition. Of course, authority must be shown; but it need not be express authority. It may be implied, and one of the recognized legal methods of proving authority is by ratification. From such proof the law implies previous authority to the same extent as if in the first instance it had been expressly conferred. The doctrine of ratification proceeds upon the theory that there was no previous authority, and that the relation of principal and agent did not in fact exist, but implies it from the acts and conduct of the parties, and, when so implied, is equivalent to previous authority, and results as effectively to establish the relation of principal and agent as if the agency had been authorized in the beginning. But the general doctrine of ratification is so well understood as to need no further reference to it. While on the subject, however, it may be said, as to the character of proof from which ratification may be inferred, that it is the most frequently established by implication from the conduct and acts of the party in whose behalf the unauthorized agency was assumed, inconsistent with any reasonable intention on his part, other than that he intended approving and adopting it. * * * With all these facts directly and strongly showing that Hayford had no right to the possession of this money—facts which should have suggested investigation and inquiry as to how he acquired it—the appellant made none. We are mindful of the general rule that a party must have full knowledge of all the material facts before the doctrine of ratification can be applied. 'Ignorance of such facts, however, can avail nothing where it is intentional and deliberate, or where the circumstances are such as reasonably to put the principal upon inquiry.' Mechem on Agency, § 148. This general rule is intended to protect the vigilant, not to aid those who, advised by the situation and surroundings that an inquiry should be made, make none; and ignorance of the existence of facts which might have been ascertained with ordinary diligence is no protection. Where the situation naturally and reasonably suggests that some inquiry or investigation should be made, and none is made, the person failing to make it will be deemed, in law, possessed of such facts as the inquiry would have disclosed."

Upon investigation of the record before us we cannot say that the inferences which the jury was justified in drawing from this evidence do not justify the conclusion reached by them in the consideration of this case. We realize that agency is often a difficult fact to directly establish, and that frequently, on account of the inability to show specifically the true relation between parties, resort must be had to the details and circumstances surrounding the transaction, in order to gather from them such deductions as would justify a conclusion. The facts here upon which the jury found adversely to the company are largely circumstantial, but this court is committed to the doctrine that facts may be established from circumstances, and in fact in everyday life we all draw conclusions and reach opinions from circumstances that are presented to us. Sov. Camp, Woodmen of the World, v. Teubner, No. 4520, 165 Pac. ——, not yet officially reported.

It is unnecessary for us to comment upon the conduct of the parties here, and it is sufficient for us to say that we cannot see our way clear to molest the verdict in this case as it comes to us, for the verdict of the jury met with the approval of the conscience of the trial court, and we think it is right.

There being no prejudicial error in the instructions, this cause is affirmed.

STATE ex rel. FREELING, Atty. Gen., v. LYON, Secretary of State. (No. 9071.)

1. COURTS 🔑207(4)—MANDAMUS IN APPELLATE COURT—MATTERS OF PUBLIC RIGHT—DELIVERY OF NOTARIES' COMMISSIONS.

The delivery of commissions to notaries public throughout the state and the refusal of the secretary of state to deliver such commissions to the persons appointed by the Governor is publici juris, and this court will entertain an original action brought by the state, upon relation of the Attorney General, for mandamus directing the secretary to deliver the commissions.

2. MANDAMUS 🔑77(2)—PUBLIC OFFICERS—MINISTERIAL DUTIES.

It is the duty of the secretary of state to deliver the commissions to the notaries public appointed by the Governor of the state, and this duty is ministerial. Upon the refusal of the secretary to perform this duty, a writ of mandamus may issue from this court to compel him to do so.

3. MANDAMUS ⚷71—PUBLIC OFFICERS—MINISTERIAL DUTIES.

A writ of mandamus may lawfully issue from a court having jurisdiction to compel an executive officer to perform a mere ministerial act which the law imposes upon him the duty to do.

4. WORDS AND PHRASES—"PUBLICI JURIS"—"PUBLIC"—"RIGHT"—"PUBLIC INTEREST."

"Publici juris" means "of public right," and the word "public" in this sense means "pertaining to the people, or affecting the community at large; that which concerns a multitude of people," and the word "right," as so used, means "a well-founded claim; an interest; concern; advantage; benefit," and the term "public interest" means more than a mere curiosity, and means something in which the public has some pecuniary interest, or some interest by which their legal rights or liabilities are affected.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Public; Public Interest; Right; Rights.]

Original action for a writ of mandamus by the State of Oklahoma, on relation of S. P. Freeling, Attorney General, against J. L. Lyon, as Secretary of State. Peremptory writ of mandamus awarded.

S. P. Freeling, Atty. Gen., and Jno. B. Harrison, Asst. Atty. Gen., for relator. Warren K. Snyder, E. G. McAdams, and Norman R. Haskell, all of Oklahoma City, for respondent.

OWEN, J. This is an original action in this court for a writ of mandamus, instituted by the state of Oklahoma, upon the relation of S. P. Freeling, Attorney General, against J. L. Lyon, secretary of state.

It appears from the petition and response that Hon. R. L. Williams, Governor of the state, appointed certain persons notaries public, and the respondent, acting as secretary of state, attested the commissions as required by law, but refused to deliver them to the various persons appointed by the Governor and named in the commissions. In his response the secretary of state says, as his reasons for not delivering the commissions, the amount of money appropriated for his contingent fund for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, will not cover all the necessary expenditures of his office properly chargeable against that fund, and if he uses the necessary amount of that fund to defray the expenses of postage to deliver these commissions, he will not have a sufficient sum to meet the other expenses of his office which will arise before the expiration of the fiscal year. Further, he says he delivered, through the United States mail, commissions to the persons named in five cities and towns of the state, and that it appears from a tabulated statement (attached to his response) of the population of the towns in which the other persons reside there are already a sufficient number of notaries public residing in these places to properly serve the public interests, and therefore there exists no necessity to deliver the commissions in question.

[4] Counsel for the respondent, in opposing the issuance of the writ, group their objections under four propositions: First, they challenge the jurisdiction of the court because, as they say, it appearing from the allegations of the response, and the tabulated statement attached, there is no public need for these additional notaries, the question presented to this court is not publici juris, and therefore the court ought not exercise its original jurisdiction to hear and determine the case. We agree with counsel that this court should not grant the writ unless some interest of the public is involved, or, in other words, unless the public has some right involved in the question before the court. To determine this we must consider the meaning of the terms under discussion. By "publici juris," we understand, is meant "of public right." The word "public," in this sense, means "pertaining to the people, or affecting the community at large; that which concerns a multitude of people." Webster's New International Dictionary; Greenl. Ev. 152; Stockton v. Williams, 1 Doug. (Mich.) 546; Morgan v. Cree, 46 Vt. 773, 14 Am. Rep. 640. The word "right," as used here, is defined in Bouvier's Law Dictionary as "a well-founded claim; an interest; concern; advantage; benefit." We understand "public interest" to mean more than a mere curiosity; it means something in which the public, the community at large, has some pecuniary interest, or some interest by which their legal rights or liabilities are affected. It does not mean anything so narrow as the interests of the particular localities which may be affected by the matters in question.

[1] The question presented here is furnishing notaries public throughout the state commissions authorizing the discharge of their duties. If the secretary of state can determine the need for notaries in any particular locality and withhold 70 commissions, as it appears in this instance he has done, what is there to prevent his withholding all the commissions issued to notaries public in the state? When we consider the office of notary public in relation to the transaction of public business—the business of the whole people of the state—and that all conveyances of real estate to be recorded, including deeds, mortgages, satisfaction of mortgages, leases, powers of attorney, affidavits, and contracts, must be acknowledged before a proper officer and authenticated by his seal of office, and that officers other than notaries authorized to take such acknowledgments are accessible to a very small per cent. of the people, we must conclude the duties of a notary public affect the pecuniary interests, legal rights, and liabilities of the public. The discharge of the duties of that office materially affect the legal rights not only of the parties to the instruments acknowledged, but also the public at large. In the proper exercise of those duties and the easy access to these officials the public is concerned and has a right, to the end that business may be dispatched without unnecessary delay and inconvenience. The respondent cannot be heard to say there is no public need for these notaries whose commissions he refuses to deliver. The law gives him no voice in the appointment. The law does not lodge with him the power or authority to determine what localities do require and what localities do not require notaries public. That power is lodged with the Governor, under section 4240, Rev. Laws 1910, which is as follows:

> "The Governor shall appoint and commission in each county as occasion may require, one or more notaries public who shall hold their office for four years."

[2, 3] Second, counsel urges that this court is without authority to grant the writ in this case for the further reason to do so would be to direct the discretion of the secretary of state in the expenditure of the contingent fund of his office, and, not having what he considers sufficient funds to meet the expenses of his office, he has the right to direct what expenditures will be made from the fund. We recognize the well-settled rule that courts will not undertake to control the discretion of a public officer by a writ of mandamus. But that rule has no application here. Section 4242, Rev. Laws 1910, reads as follows:

> "Blanks for bonds and oath of office shall be furnished with the commission by the secretary of state."

This statute makes it the duty of the secretary to furnish the commission to the person appointed by the Governor. This is a mere ministerial duty placed upon the secretary by the law, and in the performance of which he has no discretion. The courts universally hold a writ may issue to compel an officer to perform a ministerial duty. Norris v. Cross, 25 Okl. 287, 105 Pac. 1000. It is no answer to the commands of the statute to say it will require some postage to deliver the commissions through the mail, and, postage being one of the expenses for which the contingent fund was appropriated, the secretary has a discretion as to how and when it will be used. The law imposes the duty to furnish these commissions. The performance of this duty being ministerial, the secretary should perform it when the occasion arises, as any other of the duties of his office. In holding this duty under the statute to be ministerial, we are not without authority. The case of United States v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 378, 26 L. Ed. 167, is one in which the Secretary of the Interior refused to deliver a patent to certain land to one McBride after the patent had been duly issued and attested. In that case the court said:

> "The next objection to issuing the writ which we are called to consider is that the Secretary, in deciding whether he would deliver the patent to McBride or not, was called upon to exercise a judgment and discretion on the case presented to him which were not merely ministerial, but which were rather judicial in their character, and in regard to which many matters were to be considered, such as the validity of the title conferred by the patent, the circumstances under which it was signed, sealed, and recorded, and the conflicting rights of other parties to the lands covered by it. * * * No further authority to consider the patentee's case remains in the Land Office. No right to consider whether he ought, in equity or on new information, to have the title or receive the patent. There remains only the duty, simply ministerial, to deliver the patent to the owner—a duty which, within all the definitions, can be enforced by the writ of mandamus."

To the same effect is Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137, 2 L. Ed. 118; Kendall v. United States, 12 Pet. 524, 9 L. Ed. 1181. The last-named case was one in which, under an act of Congress, the Postmaster General was directed to credit to Stokes, on a certain contract with the Post Office Department, whatever sum of money the Solicitor of the Treasury, after examination, should decide to be due. The Solicitor of the Treasury certified the parties were entitled to credit for a certain sum. The Postmaster General entered credit for a smaller sum than that found by the solicitor to be due. A writ of mandamus was applied for, and there, as here, counsel for respondent contended that it was an effort to enforce and control an official duty; an infringement upon the executive department of the government; the court was without authority to control the Postmaster General's discretion in the matter. The Supreme Court of the United States in that case said:

> "We do not think the proceeding in this case interferes in any respect whatever with the rights and duties of the executive, or that it involves any conflict of powers between the executive or judicial departments of the government. The mandamus does not seek to direct or control the Postmaster General in the discharge of his official duty, partaking in any respect of an executive character, but to enforce the performance of a mere ministerial act which neither he nor the President had any authority to deny or control. * * * The act required by the law to be done by the Postmaster General is simply to credit S. & S. with the full amount of the award of the Solicitor of the Treasury. This is a precise, a definite, act, purely ministerial, and about which the Postmaster General had no discretion whatever. This was not an official act in any other sense than being a transaction in the department where the books and accounts were kept, and was an official act in the same sense that an entry in the minutes of the court, pursuant to an order of the court, is an official act. There is no room for the exercise of discretion, official or otherwise. All that is shut out by the direct and positive command of the law; and the act required to be done is in every just sense a mere ministerial act."

Counsel for respondent, in urging this proposition, rely upon the case of Farris et al., School Board, v. State ex rel. Murphy, 46 Neb. 857, 65 N. W. 890. The question in that case arose upon the failure of the school board to appropriate the necessary money to purchase school books. The board alleged there had been no levy for that purpose, and that the contingent fund provided for would be exhausted by claims already incurred and not paid. The court in the opinion says:

> "It is very clear that no portion of the state apportionment could be appropriated to any other purpose than the payment of teachers' wages. Com. St. subd. 5, c. 79, par. 8. In any view of the resources of the district as disclosed by the pleadings, it is perfectly clear that there were no funds available, after paying salary of teacher, fuel bills, and necessary incidentals, wherewith to buy text-books."

Had the secretary, by his response in this case, shown that he was at this time without funds, or for any reason it was impossible for him to comply with the statute, a different question would be presented.

Third, counsel urges that to require the secretary's compliance with the statute in this instance is, in effect, to require him to incur the necessary expense for the postage necessary to deliver each commission, and that constitutes an expenditure of public funds, and the action is therefore one against the state, and cannot be maintained on this application. In support of this contention counsel cite the case of Lovett v. Lankford, 145 Pac. 767. That case was one in which Lovett and the other commissioners of Creek county sought, by mandamus to control the actions of the bank commissioner in determining whether certain moneys deposited in a bank should be paid out of the depositors' guaranty fund upon the failure of the bank. The law made it the duty of the bank commissioner to determine upon the facts presented whether the depositor was protected by the guaranty fund. The court properly held in that case such duty requires the exercise of judgment and discretion, and this court would not control that discretion by mandamus.

Fourth, counsel insist that the allegations in the response present a question of fact as to whether the secretary has sufficient funds and clerks at his disposal to deliver the commissions through the mail without neglecting some of the other duties of his office. Holding, as we do, the facts alleged in the response do not constitute a defense to the writ, the duty of the secretary being purely ministerial, there is not such an issue of fact presented here that requires a trial by jury. The law makes it the plain ministerial duty of the secretary to deliver these commissions. This court is not concerned at this time as to the method of delivery.

The peremptory writ of mandamus is therefore awarded. All the Justices concur.

WILSON v. CALKINS et al. (L. A. 3813.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 16, 1917.)

MORTGAGES 🔑74 — FORECLOSURE — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In suit to foreclose a mortgage given to secure payment for shares of stock, evidence that stock was delivered to defendant, who signed a receipt and voted proxies for it but allowed the issuing bank to retain it as security for an indebtedness due it, sustains a finding that the shares were delivered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 172.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Mortgage foreclosure action by John W. Wilson, trustee, against C. C. Calkins and Kate A. Calkins. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Waterman & Green, of Los Angeles, for appellants. Shankland & Chandler, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. In 1908 the defendants delivered to the Columbia Trust Company (which afterward by change in corporate name became the Oil & Metals Bank & Trust Company) their promissory note for $3,750 for the purchase of 30 shares of the stock of the trust company. Thereafter, and while a renewal note for this indebtedness was held by the trust company, the defendants executed a new note to the company for the sum of $800, and at the same time executed a mortgage in form a deed absolute to certain real property which they owned. They covenanted that the mortgaged property should also be security "for any and all other debts or claims held against the promisors by said company which may be outstanding and unpaid at any time." The Oil & Metals Bank & Trust Company, successors to the Columbia Trust Company, became financially involved. John W. Wilson was made trustee for the purposes of liquidation. The defendants' obligations and the security were transferred to him. He brought this action to foreclose the mortgage under pleadings declaring the mortgage to be security for the debts evidenced by both promissory notes. The defendants answered, admitting that it was security for the $800 note, but denying that it was security for the note given by them in payment of the stock of the trust company, which, of course, had become of greatly depreciated or of no value.

The court found a delivery to and receipt by defendants of the 30 shares of the stock of the trust company for which their note was given. The one question argued upon this appeal goes to the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain this finding, the defendants testifying that they never received the stock. The testimony in support of the finding, however, shows that the 30 shares of stock were actually issued to the defendants, and the stub of the certificate in the stock book shows a receipt for it by defendant C. C. Calkins. The former president testifies that the stock was actually delivered to defendant, that he had possession of it, and that because of his indebtedness to the bank it was permitted to remain in the custody of the bank, apparently for purposes of security; but that Mr. Calkins recognized his ownership of the stock by giving proxies authorizing the voting of it at stockholders' meetings on more than one occasion.

The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

HORTON v. WINBIGLER. (L. A. 3862.)

1. REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS 🔑36(2) — PLEADING—AGREEMENT BETWEEN PARTIES.

To invoke the authority of equity to reform a contract to incorporate therein provisions claimed to have been omitted in its execution, though intended by the parties to have been inserted, it must be pleaded as a fact that there was an agreement between the parties that the provision or term omitted should have been contained in the executed instrument.

2. REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS 🔑36(2) — PLEADING—AGREEMENT BETWEEN PARTIES.

In suit to reform a contract to incorporate provisions which it is claimed the parties agreed to incorporate therein, it is not necessary that it shall be alleged in direct terms that such an agreement was made, but it is sufficient if it appears reasonably and fairly from matters stated in the complaint and the language used representing them that in effect such an agreement is alleged.

3. REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS 🔑36(2) — PLEADING—"INTENTION."

Where, in suit for reformation of a contract and deed to limit the estate of defendant's intestate therein to a life interest, the remainder on her death to pass to plaintiff, the complaint alleged that the purchase was made pending the administration of an estate, with the funds of the estate, the use of one-half of which defendant's intestate was to have only for life, with absolute property therein to pass to plaintiff upon her death, and alleged also that "it was intended at the time between" defendant's intestate and the plaintiff "that the contract should contain," etc., it sufficiently alleged the agreement between plaintiff and defendant's intestate as to what such instruments should contain, for whether the word "intention" is equivalent to an "agreement" depends on the connection in which it is used.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Reformation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. § 142.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Intention.]

4. PLEADING 🔑52(2) — JOINDER OF CAUSES OF ACTION.

A complaint to reform a contract and deed, which were only parts of one transaction consisting of purchase of land, the mutual mistake alleged applying to the entire transaction, was not demurrable as stating two separate causes of action.

5. Reformation of Instruments 🔑44—Evidence—Admissibility.

In suit for reformation of a contract and deed to make the estate therein of defendant's intestate only a life interest in an undivided half and at her death the same to pass to plaintiff, it appearing that defendant's intestate had only a life interest in the use of the money which went into the purchase of the property, plaintiff having the remainder, testimony of plaintiff as to his intention relative to the interest which the respective parties should have in the property was admissible, since defendant's intestate, by consenting to the investing in the property of the money in which she had only a life interest, could not acquire a greater interest therein than her interest in the funds entitled her to, unless it was the intention of the plaintiff that she should take it.

6. Evidence 🔑158(11)—Parol Evidence.

In action for reformation of contract of purchase and deed, where the respective interests of the parties under a prior will was material to the issues, the court's action in allowing the attorney for plaintiff in the settlement of such testator's estate, who prepared a contract between plaintiff and defendant's intestate as to the interest they should take upon the distribution and also prepared the decree of distribution, to testify as to what was intended by the terms of these various instruments was error, since the will and the contract and the decree of distribution all spoke for themselves, if the two former were entitled to be considered at all in construing the decree of distribution.

7. Appeal and Error 🔑1052(2)—Harmless Error—Admission of Evidence.

Error in admitting evidence as to what was intended by a will and a contract between the beneficiaries thereof as to the interest they should take upon distribution was harmless, if the will and contract were properly admitted by the court.

8. Evidence 🔑236(3)—Declarations by Deceased.

In action for reformation of contract and deed to limit the estate of defendant's intestate therein to a life estate and give plaintiff the remainder after defendant's intestate's death, evidence was properly admitted of declarations of defendant's intestate after the execution of the deed in question and while she and plaintiff were both in possession of the property that the property would belong to plaintiff after her death, that she often spoke of her interest in it being simply a life interest, and similar declarations; such declarations being admissible under Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subds. 2, 4, as declarations of a deceased person against her interest in respect to her real property.

9. Executors and Administrators 🔑315(1)—Decree of Distribution—Incorporation of Provisions of Will.

In making a decree of distribution, a court may incorporate therein the provisions of the will, or an agreement entered into between the heirs, which is called to the attention of the court with a view of having it incorporated in the decree, and the court may, by express terms or by apt reference thereto, incorporate said will or agreement in the decree so as to constitute it a portion of its distributive terms.

10. Evidence 🔑386(2) — Extraneous Evidence.

Where the will and a contract between the heirs were by express reference incorporated in a decree of distribution, they were admissible as part of the decree in an action involving a consideration of the decree, and were not inadmissible as matters extraneous to the terms of the decree and modifying or changing it.

11. Deeds 🔑211(2)—Evidence.

In an action to reform a contract of purchase and a deed and to quiet plaintiff's title to the land, evidence held to support the court's finding that the parties intended to have the instruments show that defendant's intestate had only a life interest in an undivided half, the same at her death to pass to plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 648.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by Charlie L. Horton against Theodore A. Winbigler, administrator. From judgment for plaintiff and order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. O. Spencer, of Anaheim, and A. J. Mitchell, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Tipton & Callor, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This action was for a decree reforming a contract of purchase and a deed to 30 acres of land in Orange county made and executed to plaintiff and the intestate in her lifetime, and further quieting the title of plaintiff to said land against the estate of said decedent.

There was no conflict in the evidence in the case. It was all produced by plaintiff. Certain facts are as follows: Plaintiff is the only son, and decedent was the mother of Minnie W. Horton. Mrs. Horton died testate September 23, 1909, several years before her mother, and by her will bequeathed to the latter certain personal effects, a monthly allowance to be charged against certain described real estate, and also "one-half of all the money * * * of which I may die possessed to have and enjoy for and during her life." The plaintiff was bequeathed the other half of the estate absolutely, and was also the residuary devisee on the death of his grandmother of the half of the estate in which she was left a life interest. The will of Mrs. Horton was admitted to probate and administered upon by the plaintiff. Pending the administration, and on December 19, 1909, the plaintiff and said Lucy J. Brown, his grandmother, entered into a written contract with one William Wagner to purchase from him the 30 acres of land here in question for $8,500, payable in certain installments, the last of which was to be paid on January 1, 1911, when they were to receive a deed to the property. While the administration of the estate of Mrs. Horton was still pending, and on September 12, 1910, said Lucy J. Brown and plaintiff, as beneficiaries under the will of said Mrs. Horton, made an agreement which was filed in the estate, whereby it was mutually agreed between them that said Lucy J. Brown should take under the said will one half of the moneys of the estate "to use and enjoy during her life," all the furniture and personal effects absolutely, and that her claim to $50 a month should be waived; that plaintiff should take the other half of the moneys his mother died possessed of and certain real property in the city of Los Angeles and in the state of Washington. Within the same month that this agreement between plaintiff and Mrs. Brown was made, a decree of distribution in the estate of Mrs. Horton was entered, whereby there was distributed to Mrs. Brown one-half of $10,395.71 cash in the hands of plaintiff, as executor, and certain personal effects, and the rest of the estate was distributed to the plaintiff. The particular terms of this decree of distribution will be subsequently referred to when we are discussing a question respecting its effect which is involved on this appeal. After the entry of the decree of distribution, and on February 24, 1911, in consummation of the contract with him, Wagner made a deed to plaintiff and Mrs. Brown, of the 30 acres involved in this action (the installment payments having been completed under the contract). It was an ordinary grant, bargain, and sale deed running to both said grantees, their heirs and assigns, and expressing a nominal consideration of $10. It further appears that Mrs. Horton, Mrs. Brown, and plaintiff came from Texas, and lived together at the home of Mrs. Horton until her death. Thereafter Mrs. Brown lived with plaintiff and his family. Mrs. Brown had no property when she came to California, and all she acquired subsequently (eliminating for the present the interest from Wagner to herself and plaintiff) was what she received by virtue of the will of Mrs. Horton—principally the life interest in this money. The purchase of this 30 acres was negotiated for by plaintiff while he was executor of the estate of his mother, pending the administration and after a conference with Mrs. Brown about its purchase, at which time Mrs. Brown told him to do as he saw fit and use his own judgment. He thought it advisable to purchase, and both himself and Mrs. Brown made the contract with Wagner to do so, and the payments aggregating $8,500 were made solely from the funds of the estate of Mrs. Horton in the hands of plaintiff as administrator of her estate.

Mrs. Brown died October 27, 1911, intestate. Letters of administration were issued to the defendant, who is asserting in behalf of her estate a claim to an undivided half interest in the 30 acres of land. Plaintiff brings this action, his complaint being based on two counts; upon one he seeks a reformation of the contract of purchase and deed; on the other to quiet title to the property. In that relating to the reformation of the instruments, after alleging the facts above recited as far as pertinent to the cause of action, plaintiff further alleged that the contract of purchase of this land made between Wagner and himself and Mrs. Brown did not, in truth or in fact, state the real intention of the parties, in that no mention is made therein that said Lucy J. Brown was to have but a life estate only in said property, and that it was intended at the time between plaintiff and Mrs. Brown that said contract should contain a stipulation, in substance, "that as to Lucy J. Brown a life interest only in the undivided one-half of the property herein described and on her death the same to pass to Charlie L. Horton"; that said stipulation was omitted by the mutual mistake of said plaintiff and said Lucy J. Brown, deceased. It is then further alleged as to the deed from Wagner to himself and Mrs. Brown that the same mistake was made by the mutual mistake of said parties; that in the said deed to plaintiff and Mrs. Brown there was omitted the same stipulation as aforesaid.

The other count, as stated, contained allegations under which plaintiff seeks to have his title to said premises quieted. The prayer is for a reformation of the contract and deed to conform to the alleged intention of the parties and for a decree quieting title. Defendant demurred generally and specially to the complaint, and, his demurrer being overruled, answered, denying the principal allegations of the complaint. The court made findings and a decree in favor of plaintiff, reforming the contract and deed and quieting the title of plaintiff, and this appeal is from the judgment and an order denying the motion of defendant for a new trial.

As grounds for a reversal appellant claims that the court erred in overruling his demurrer to the complaint; erred also in the admission of evidence; and it is further asserted that the evidence does not sustain certain of the findings.

[1-3] As to the demurrer the only points urged by appellant in presenting his demurrer in the trial court which we think call for any consideration are that there is no allegation in the complaint of an agreement entered into between plaintiff and Mrs. Brown in her lifetime when the contract and deed were made that there should be inserted therein a clause limiting the interest of said Mrs. Brown to a life interest with remainder over to plaintiff. The argument is that if there was no such agreement, then there could be no mutual mistake upon which a reformation of the instruments could be based. It is further contended that the reformation of the contract and deed were separate causes of action which should have been separately stated, but were not, and hence the demurrer which made this particular point should have been sustained on that ground. As to the first claim that there is no allegation that plaintiff and Mrs. Brown did agree to any terms or stipulations to be inserted in the deed as to their interest in the land, it is quite apparent that there is no specific allegation to that effect. The most direct allegation is that, when the property was purchased—

"it was intended at the time between the said Lucy J. Brown and the plaintiff that the said contract should contain the following stipulation 'that as to Lucy J. Brown a life interest only in and to the undivided one-half of the property herein described and at her death the same to pass to Charlie L. Horton.'"

When a court of equity is authorized to reform a contract at all, so as to incorporate therein provisions claimed to have been omitted in its execution though intended by the parties to have been inserted, in order to invoke such jurisdiction it must be pleaded as a fact that there was an agreement between the parties that the provision or term omitted should have been contained in the executed instrument. But it is not necessary that it shall be alleged in direct terms that such an agreement was made. The requirement of pleading will be met if it appears reasonably and fairly from matters stated in the complaint and the language used representing them that in effect such an agreement is alleged. The complaint here alleged that the purchase of the property was made pending the administration of the estate of Mrs. Horton with the funds of her estate, the use only of one-half of which Mrs. Brown was to have for life, with absolute property therein to pass to plaintiff upon her death. This limitation in the interest of Mrs. Brown in such funds of the estate was not one of agreement between plaintiff and herself, but was imposed by the will of her testator. Her interest in it could not extend further, and when she with plaintiff invested the funds of the estate in the property in question, it would only be natural that as part of the agreement in purchasing the property it should be agreed and understood that the interest of Mrs. Brown therein would be limited by the interest which she had in the funds which she was investing therein, a life interest in one-half. We refer to these allegations, not as assuming that they amount to an allegation of an explicit agreement between plaintiff and Mrs. Brown when the property was purchased as to the interest each should take therein and the stipulations respecting it to be inserted in the instrument, but as bearing on the language of the allegation quoted above "that it was intended at the time between the said Lucy J. Brown and the plaintiff that the contract should contain," etc. It is contended that "intention" is not equivalent to an "agreement." But whether it is or not depends on the connection in which it is used. Such use will often make the one word equivalent in meaning to the other. So it is here. The allegation is not that there was an intention simply on the part of plaintiff or Mrs. Brown that the contract should contain a certain stipulation, but that an intention had been reached between them at the time of the contract that the contract should contain such stipulation. An alleged intention between them that a specified provision should be placed in the contract could only mean, giving the language its ordinary meaning, that as a result of a consideration of the matter between the parties it was agreed or understood that the contract should contain the specified provision, and that construction sufficiently meets the objection of appellant.

[4] On the other point that there were two separate causes of action for reformation of instruments—one for reformation of a contract; one of a deed—which were not separately stated. There was but one cause of action, based upon mutual mistake. The contract for the purchase of the property supplemented by a deed thereto were only parts of the one transaction, namely, the purchase of the land. There was but one set of facts, and these as to this mutual mistake alleged in the complaint applied to this entire transaction. It constituted one mutual mistake, consisting of an omission from the written instruments of a provision agreed on to be inserted as to the extent of the interest the parties should take under the instruments.

[5] As to the alleged errors in the admission of evidence. It was proper for the court to admit in evidence the answer of the plaintiff as to his intention relative to the interests which the respective parties should have in the property and which should be inserted in the contract and deed. Mrs. Brown had only a life interest in the use of the money which went into its purchase price. The ownership of the fund subject to such life use was in the plaintiff. Mrs. Brown, by consenting to the investing of the money in which she had only a life interest in this land, could not acquire a greater interest therein than her interest in the funds entitled her to, unless it was the intention of the plaintiff that she should take it. While it is true that the intention of the plaintiff alone is not a controlling factor in the case, but that it must appear that some agreement or understanding existed between himself and his grandmother disclosing a mutual intention on their part to have the written instrument contain the alleged conditions which it is claimed were omitted, still, when one of the questions in the controversy was whether Mrs. Brown was to have a greater interest in the land to be purchased than she had in the purchase money to be invested in it, we think it was proper to allow the evidence of the intention of plaintiff on that point, as his intention was necessary to effect a gift, and to be considered in connection with all the other evidence tendered to show mutual intention and a mutual mistake. Appellant contends that this intention of the plaintiff was the only evidence relied on by him as showing mutual mistake, but whether it was or not is not the question here to be considered, but only the admissibility of the evidence. Whether there was any further evidence or not to sustain the finding will be considered further along in its place.

[6, 7] It is further claimed that the court erred in allowing the attorney for plaintiff in the settlement of the estate of Minnie W. Horton, deceased, and who prepared the contract between plaintiff and Mrs. Brown as to the interests they should take upon the distribution, and who further prepared the decree of distribution, to testify as to what was intended by the terms of these various instruments. He testified, over the objection of defendant, that the contract was not intended to change the disposition under the will, nor did the decree of distribution intend, to distribute to Mrs. Brown a greater estate or to plaintiff a lesser estate than was given by the terms of the will. This evidence was not admissible. The will and the contract and the decree of distribution all spoke for themselves, if the two former were entitled to be considered at all in construing the decree of distribution. There was nothing ambiguous or uncertain in any of the terms of these instruments which required extraneous evidence to explain them. But while it was error to admit this testimony, it was harmless error if the will and contract were properly admitted by the court in connection with the decree of distribution. This is a question for later consideration.

[8] Evidence was admitted, over the objection of defendant, of declarations made by Mrs. Brown after the execution of the deed to plaintiff and herself, and while they were both in possession of the property, that the property would belong to plaintiff after her death; that she often spoke of her interest in it being simply a life interest, and similar declarations. Such declarations were clearly admissible under subdivisions 2 and 4 of section 1870 of the Code of Civil Procedure as declarations of a deceased person against her interest in respect to her real property.

The last point made by appellant is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain certain of the findings which relate to the decree quieting title of plaintiff to the land. The court found that:

> Plaintiff "now and ever since the death of Lucy J. Brown has been the owner in fee of the real property described in plaintiff's complaint, and that the estate of Lucy J. Brown is not the owner of an undivided one-half interest therein."

Further:

> "That said estate of Minnie W. Horton was distributed in accordance with said will and the contract entered into by the plaintiff and said Lucy J. Brown, and provided by its terms that said Lucy J. Brown should take a life interest only in and to one-half of said real estate distributed to her * * * and that by the terms of said will and contract and decree of distribution the said Lucy J. Brown, now deceased, acquired a life estate only in and to said real property described herein."

This claim of appellant is based solely on the construction which he claims must be given to the decree of distribution in the estate of Minnie W. Horton. His claim is that the only distributive language in the decree provides for a plain, distinct and unequivocable distribution "of one-half of all the moneys on hand to the said Lucy J. Brown, * * *" that no limitation to the use of such moneys for life is prescribed in the decree as to the interest or share given to said Lucy J. Brown in said money, but that it is given to her absolutely; and with much insistence appellant asserts that the clause above quoted must be taken segregated from other parts of the decree and considered by itself, and that, so considered, it must be construed as declaring an absolute ownership in Mrs. Brown of one-half of said money. But the error in the contention of appellant lies in placing undue stress on this particular distributive clause and ignoring other provisions of the decree intimately connected with and constituting an important part of its distributive terms. As we have shown, the will of Mrs. Horton gave Mrs. Brown the use of one-half of the moneys she died possessed of and the subsequent contract between plaintiff and Mrs. Brown, after extinguishing some right under the will to which she would otherwise be entitled, declares that she, Mrs. Brown, "selects and elects to take under said will one-half of the money for life" and certain other personal effects of the deceased absolutely.

Now, in the petition for a decree of distribution the terms of the will are set forth, and the agreement between plaintiff and Mrs. Brown aforesaid as to the method in which the estate should be distributed to them is also set forth, and distribution is then asked to be given under said will and agreement, and in the decree of distribution it is recited "that in pursuance of, and according to the last will of said deceased, the agreements of the heirs and legatees, and deeds and conveyances on file herein, the said property is distributed as follows, to wit," followed by the distributive clause in favor of Lucy J. Brown of one half of the money of the estate in the terms relied on by appellant and the other half of the money to plaintiff, together with certain real estate.

[9, 10] In making a decree of distribution a court may incorporate the provisions of the will therein or a contract or agreement entered into between the heirs and which is called to the attention of the court with a view of having it incorporated in the decree; and the court may, by express terms or by apt reference thereto, incorporate said will or contract in the decree so as to constitute it a portion of its distributive terms. This is what was done in the decree of distribution under consideration. The court incorporated the will and the contract between plaintiff and Mrs. Brown as to the respective interests which each should take on distribution, and pursuant thereto made distribution accordingly. When a necessity arose thereafter to construe said decree, the court was not limited to a consideration of the particular provision of it, as claimed by appellant, but it was the duty of the court to look to the will and the contract which were made a part of the decree, together with the other terms, in order to ascertain just what the terms of the distribution were, because the distribution as declared by the court was in accordance with the provisions of the will and the agreement of the heirs. This declaration and reference to the will and agreement made them a part of the decree as effectually as though set forth in it. The court was not, as appellant asserts, allowing the admission of the will and contract as matters extraneous to the terms of the decree for the purpose of modifying or changing the decree of distribution. The court was admitting these instruments, which were in effect part of the decree of distribution because referred to therein and declared to be the basis of the decree itself, not to modify it or change it in any particular, but for the purpose of construing it in its entirety and determining just what was meant by all its distributive provisions. The right of the court to incorporate provisions of a will or agreement by express reference in a decree of distribution and thereafter in an action involving a consideration of the decree to resort to said will and agreement as part of the decree in construing its terms, as was done in this case, is well settled in this state. Goldtree v. Thompson, 79 Cal. 613, 22 Pac. 50; Goad v. Montgomery, 119 Cal. 552, 51 Pac. 681, 63 Am. St. Rep. 145; McCloud v. Hewlett, 135 Cal. 361, 67 Pac. 333.

[11] An attack is made also on a finding respecting the second cause of action. It is alleged in the complaint and found by the court that when the contract of purchase was entered into and the deed to the property subsequently made it was the intention of the parties to have the said instruments show that as to Lucy J. Brown she was to have only a life estate in an undivided half interest thereof, the same at her death to pass to plaintiff. Appellant claims that this finding is not sustained by the evidence. The only evidence on the subject was that produced by the plaintiff. It was not voluminous, and, the matter being of a private nature in which the plaintiff and Mrs. Brown were alone interested and she dead, it would hardly be expected to be otherwise. But even under these conditions we are satisfied there was sufficient warrant for the finding. When this transaction took place Mrs. Brown had no means of her own. All she had was a life interest in the money which on her part went into the purchase of her half interest in the property. Upon the investment of such funds she could not, without the consent of plaintiff, have acquired any greater interest in the land than a life interest, with a right in the plaintiff to take the property on her death. This was true because her interest or the money invested by her or its proceeds, together with the ultimate right of the plaintiff thereto on her death, was fixed by the terms of the decree of distribution under which she received the money for her use during her natural life. No action on her part could enlarge her interest in those funds or in the property purchased thereby. So that, in the absence of any evidence that the plaintiff and Mrs. Brown intended to hold the real property purchased under any other or different terms than they held the money derived from the estate of Mrs. Horton which went into its purchase, the inference would naturally be that they did not. Add to this the testimony of the plaintiff that it was the intention of himself and his grandmother when they bought the property to act in accordance with his mother's will; that the grandmother have a life estate or a life legacy in it, and at her death it was to revert to plaintiff; that plaintiff did not intend to make a gift to his grandmother of any interest in it; that his grandmother's intention and his intention, as he declared, were that she should have only a life interest in the same. After the purchase of the property, and while both parties were in possession on several occasions, the grandmother declared that on her death the property would belong to plaintiff; that she often spoke of her having but a life interest in it; that it did not make any difference as to expenditures made by him on the ranch, as the property would all go to him on her death. Taking into consideration that the grandmother only had a life interest in the fund invested in the real property, that she never claimed any other or different interest in it than a life estate, together with the testimony of plaintiff as to what was intended by himself and his grandmother as to the interest she should take in the property, the court was warranted in finding that it was the intention under the contract and deed to convey to her a life interest only, and that the omission to have said conveyances so declare was a mutual mistake.

We have examined all the points made for a reversal which we think merit attention, and, finding no reason for disturbing the order and judgment, they are affirmed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

1. Appeal and Error 🔑607(1)—Transcript—Time.

Filing of a notice within the time prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, is essential to one's right to have prepared a stenographic transcript for use in support of an appeal.

2. Appeal and Error 🔑607(1)—Transcript.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, providing that when appellant desires to have the record presented other than by printed record he shall file with the clerk a certain notice within ten days after entry of the judgment, order, or decree, or if a proceeding on motion for new trial be pending within ten days after notice of decision denying said motion or of other termination thereof, although no written notice was given petitioner of the decision denying a motion for a new trial, if he had actual knowledge of the decision at the time it was made, he would have only ten days from decision to file his motion for preparation of stenographic transcript.

3. Appeal and Error 🔑607(1)—Transcript—Time.

Minutes of the court, reciting that motion for new trial came on regularly to be heard, Y. appearing as attorney for plaintiff and V. for defendant, followed by order denying motion, was insufficient to show that defendant's attorney had actual notice of decision, and defendant's time for filing notice for preparation of transcript did not begin to run until notice of the decision was served.

4. Appeal and Error 🔑165—Estoppel—Election of Remedies.

That petitioner contemplated an appeal upon a bill of exceptions under Code Civ. Proc. § 650, and took steps to obtain an extension for the preparation thereof could not deprive her of the right given by section 953a to bring up the record in a different manner.

In Bank. Original application by Edna A. Brown for a writ of mandate against the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, and John M. York, Judge thereof. Granted.

Arthur C. Vaughan, of Los Angeles, for petitioner. Milton K. Young, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is a proceeding in mandate to compel the certification by a trial judge of the stenographic reporter's transcript, as provided in section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure, for use in support of an appeal prosecuted by petitioner from a judgment rendered against her in a case entitled Tropical Investment Company v. Edna A. Brown.

The principal ground for the refusal of the trial judge to certify the transcript was that the notice for the preparation of the same was not filed with the clerk of the superior court within the time prescribed by law. The law requires such notice to be filed "within ten days after notice of entry of the judgment, order or decree, or if a proceeding on motion for new trial be pending, within ten days after notice of decision denying said motion, or of other termination thereof." Section 953a, Code Civ. Proc.

[1] It is settled that the filing of this notice within the time prescribed is essential to one's right to have such a transcript prepared and settled. Estate of Keating, 158 Cal. 113, 110 Pac. 109. The notice was not filed within ten days after notice of entry of the judgment. There was a motion for a new trial, which was heard and denied on July 17, 1916. Written notice of this decision was served on petitioner on July 29, 1916, and within ten days after such service, viz. on August 8, 1916, petitioner filed the requisite notice with the clerk. As will be observed, this was more than ten days after the decision denying the motion was actually made. It is claimed that petitioner had actual notice of the decision on the motion for a new trial at the time it was made, and that where such is the case written notice is not made essential by the language of this particular statute, with the result that her time for filing the notice for preparation of the transcript commenced at once and expired July 27, 1916.

[2] It was held by the court in bank in Estate of Keating, 158 Cal. 109, 110 Pac. 109, after a most exhaustive discussion, that, in view of the language of this statute, "actual notice established by satisfactory evidence of record will start the statute in motion without the service of a formal written notice." (The italics are ours.) In that case the filing of a notice of appeal from the order sought to be reviewed was held to be conclusive evidence that the party knew of the entry of the order, and this notice was taken as satisfactory "evidence of record." The same conclusion upon similar facts was reached by the court in bank in Fiske v. Gosbey, 168 Cal. 334, 143 Pac. 611. While written notice is not required where actual notice exists, as is established by these decisions, it appears to be equally well settled that the actual notice must be clearly shown by facts appearing in the records, files, or minutes of the court, such for instance as the filing by the party of a notice of appeal or a notice of intention to move for a new trial, or an application for a stay of execution, etc. In such cases it has sometimes been said by the court that by such acts the party must be held to have waived written notice of the decision. Such acts clearly show the actual notice of the decision which, it is established, renders the service of written notice unnecessary under the particular statute here involved.

of the court, which show the following entry, viz.:

> "Tropical Investment Co., Plaintiff, v. Edna A. Brown, Defendant. The defendant's motion for a new trial coming on regularly to be heard, M. K. Young, Esq., appearing as attorney for plaintiff and A. C. Vaughn, Esq., for defendant. It is ordered that the motion be and the same is hereby denied."

There is nothing in the entry or on the records or files to indicate that petitioner or her attorney did any act showing actual notice of this decision until, in pursuance of the written notice subsequently served, the notice for preparation of the transcript was filed. We do not think that it may fairly be held that the minute entry clearly shows actual notice of the decision to her attorney. It is entirely consistent therewith that he did not have such notice. While it shows that he appeared on the hearing of the motion, it does not show whether or not he was actually present when the decision was rendered. So far as the record shows, he may or may not have been present at that time. The records failing to show clearly that he did have such actual notice, we are of the opinion that it must be held that time for filing notice for preparation of transcript did not commence to run until the notice of decision was served, viz.: on July 29, 1916, and that the notice filed on August 8, 1916, was in time.

[4] As to another objection made, we are entirely satisfied with what was said by the District Court of Appeal of the Second Appellate District, in the decision in this proceeding, as follows:

> "It appears that on August 2d the court, upon petitioner's application, made an order extending the time within which to prepare a bill of exceptions to be used on appeal; and this fact is urged as a further ground for the refusal of the court to certify the reporter's transcript prepared in lieu thereof. The fact that on August 2d petitioner contemplated an appeal upon a bill of exceptions, as prescribed in section 650, Code of Civil Procedure, and took steps to obtain an extension of time for the preparation thereof, could not deprive her of the right given by section 953a in bringing up the record in the manner there prescribed."

There is no other point requiring notice.

Let the peremptory writ of mandate issue as prayed.

SMITH-BOOTH-USHER CO. v. LOS ANGELES ICE & COLD STORAGE CO.

1. EVIDENCE 🔑400(3)—REDUCTION TO WRITING—MERGER.

Where a contract for the sale of a pump was reduced to writing, nothing not found in the writing, except that which is presumed by law from that which is written, can be considered as a part of the contract.

2. SALES 🔑273(1)—SALE FOR PARTICULAR PURPOSE—WARRANTY OF FITNESS—STATUTE.

The warranty created by Civ. Code, § 1770, providing that one who manufactures an article, under an order, for a particular purpose, warrants by the sale that it is reasonably fit for that purpose became part of the contract for sale of a pump by plaintiff acting as agent for the manufacturer; the article being supplied for a particular specified purpose.

3. SALES 🔑273(1)—WARRANTY OF FITNESS FOR PARTICULAR PURPOSE—BREACH.

Where plaintiff furnished a pump, under Civ. Code. § 1770, warranting that it was fit to work in a normal well of designated size and depth, and to lift and discharge 500 gallons of water per minute, and the pump would not do the work satisfactorily simply because the conditions were abnormal, and the well was filled with loose sand, which the operation of the pump disturbed, there was no breach of warranty.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. D. Arnot, Judge.

Action by the Smith-Booth-Usher Company, a corporation, against the Los Angeles Ice & Cold Storage Company, a corporation. From a judgment for defendant and an order denying plaintiff's motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Judgment and order reversed.

William M. Hiatt and Edward M. Selby, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. Sidney J. Parsons and C. W. Pendleton, Jr., both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff sold a pump and pumping apparatus to defendant under circumstances hereinafter related. It was paid a part of the purchase price, the pump was installed, and failed to give good service. Defendant so notified plaintiff, demanded a return of its money, and requested a removal of the pump, in order that it might install one which would perform the desired service. Thereupon plaintiff brought this action to recover the unpaid part of the purchase price, and defendant answered, averring that it purchased the pump under a warranty that it would deliver 500 gallons of water per minute, and that the pump in fact would not deliver to exceed 100 gallons per minute. It counterclaimed, seeking a return of the amount of the partial payment which it had made on the purchase price of the pump and compensation for expenditures to which it had been put in its efforts to overcome the imperfections of the pump. The court found that the agreement between the parties was that the plaintiff would deliver a pump "which would furnish to said defendant not less than 500 gallons of water per minute"; that the pump was unable to furnish more than 100 gallons per minute; that by its written contract plaintiff warranted to the defendant that the pump would be reasonably fit for the particular purpose for which it was ordered, "but that the pump manufactured or caused to be manufactured by plaintiff and by plaintiff delivered to defendant was not reasonably fit for said purpose"; that in executing the contract defendant relied upon the warranty of fitness; that plaintiff warranted that the pump which it would manufacture and deliver "would have a capacity of delivering to defendant at least 500 gallons of water per minute from a well of defendant located in accordance with the specifications in said written contract contained." Following these findings, judgment was given against plaintiff and in favor of defendant on its counterclaim.

The question advanced by appellant for determination is twofold: First, did it give such a warranty as the court found, and, second, if it did, did the pump which it furnished fail to conform to the requirements of the warranty. The facts are that defendant in its business used water from several wells upon its premises. In the pumping of these wells it had been using air-lift pumps. It was represented to it that a pump known as the Weber subterranean pump would furnish a larger supply of water at less expense. The Weber subterranean pump was manufactured by the Weber Subterranean Pump Company of New York, but plaintiff represented that company as a selling agent. The Weber subterranean pump operated by compressed air. The result of conversations was a contract in writing, which, of course, measures the rights, duties, and obligations of the parties. The well in which the Weber pump was to be used had not at the time been dug by defendant, so that the specifications referred to in the findings could only go, as will appear from the contract itself, to such matters as its location and depth. The plaintiff submitted to defendant in writing the following:

> "As per your request, we have submitted to the Weber Subterranean Pump Company of New York, three propositions as follows: Well to be 18 inches inside diameter; 250 feet deep; location of well 50 feet from (air) compressor; capacity 500 gallons per minute."

Then followed proposal A, based on the water level lowering during the pumping to a depth not exceeding 120 feet below the surface of the ground. Upon this the offer continued with a list of materials, being manifestly the necessary and component parts of the pump itself, concluding with:

> "All cut to proper lengths and fitted complete, ready to erect, delivered to your plant, and one competent man furnished to superintend and assist in the erection of same; all for the sum of $2,085.90."

Then followed proposal B:

> "Based on water level receding when pumping 500 gallons per minute not to exceed 150 feet below surface of ground, the equipment would remain the same (as under proposal A) with the exception of necessarily added casing to place the valves at the greater depth, the total addition of cost of material for this purpose being $118.60. There would be required for this service approximately 615 cubic feet of free air per minute delivered from the compressor at about 65 pounds gauge pressure."

This proposal B was formally accepted in writing by defendant. In due time the well was dug and the pump installed. From the outset of the operations of the pump there was trouble, and this trouble clearly arose, not from any defect in the pump itself, but from the fact that the well ended in water-bearing sand, and that the action of the compressed air disturbed this sand and forced it into the pipes and clogged the valves. Upon the first occasion when the pump, after installation, was removed, there were 30 feet of loose sand in the bottom of the well and 4 feet of sand in the pump casing and valves. The pump itself worked perfectly saving for this impediment to its successful operation. The Weber pump, which in the principle of its operation forced the water upward by compressed air at the bottom of the well, created a much greater disturbance of this sand than did the straight air lift pumps which defendant theretofore had used and which, while they would furnish a less supply of water, created much less disturbance of the sand itself. This fairly presents the conditions as shown by the evidence.

[1] Since this contract was reduced to writing, nothing which is not found in the writing (except that which is presumed by law from that which is written) can be considered as a part of the contract. Johnson v. Powers, 65 Cal. 179, 3 Pac. 625. The writing did contain an express warranty of capacity of the pump, that is to say, it declared that the pump, working in a well of designated diameter and depth, and within a fixed distance from the air compressors, would deliver 500 gallons of water per minute. Respondent, in addition to this, invokes the application of section 1770 of the Civil Code, which declares that:

> "One who manufactures an article under an order for a particular purpose warrants by the sale that it is reasonably fit for that purpose."

[2] It may be said that this warranty, erected by law, also becomes a part of the contract under the circumstances here shown; the plaintiff being considered as an agent for the manufacturer, and the manufacturer having supplied an article for a particular purpose, thereby warranting that it is reasonably fit for that purpose.

[3] What then precisely was the purpose which measures the warranty? It could be no more than that, working in a normal well of the designated size and depth, the pump would lift and discharge 500 gallons of water per minute, and the evidence leaves no doubt that this pump would do this thing. It was called upon to work, however, under abnormal conditions—in a well filled and filling with loose sand. Plaintiff's warranty certainly cannot be extended to include this condition, nor could plaintiff know that such condition would exist, since in fact the well had not been dug. It was as much without the contemplation of the warranty, whether it be regarded as express or implied, as it would have been if the well, dug to the size and capacity, had not contained a sufficient quantity of water to furnish 500 gallons a minute. Moreover, while the rights of the parties are to be found in the terms of their written contract, to which are to be added such warranties as the law itself creates under proven circumstances, the parol evidence itself does not show that the plaintiff intended to warrant, or was ever called upon to warrant, the operation of its pump in a heavily sanded well. Defendant's manager testifies that he explained to plaintiff "our whole situation as to the wells we had and the trouble we had with the pumps we had in them." He testifies further as to one well that the defendant was afraid to longer pump it lest the sand removed might cause a cave in the surface soil, but nowhere does it appear that it was in contemplation that the well to be dug would be overloaded with sand and that the pump which plaintiff was to furnish was to have a 500-gallon per minute capacity working in such sand. The article furnished was reasonably fit for pumping an ordinary well of the size and capacity specified. If defendant desired a warranty that it would so pump under any condition which might be developed after the digging of the well, it should have seen to it that this warranty was expressed in the contract, as clearly it is not. Whatever may have been the conversations touching this matter, the terms of the written agreement may not be extended because of them. Bancroft v. San Francisco Tool Co., 120 Cal. 228, 52 Pac. 496; Germain Fruit Co. v. Armsby Co., 153 Cal. 585, 96 Pac. 319; United Iron Works v. Outer Harbor Dock and Wharf Co., 168 Cal. 81, 141 Pac. 917.

The judgment and order appealed from are therefore reversed.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by Maggie G. Steinberger against Milton K. Young, administrator of the estate of Elizabeth B. Ross, deceased, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

H. M. Barstow, Milton K. Young, Davis, Kemp & Post, Joseph Scott, A. G. Ritter, and Taylor & Forgy, all of Los Angeles, for appellants. J. H. Merriam, of Pasadena, and Joseph L. Lewinsohn, John A. Powell, and Hunsaker & Britt, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Elizabeth B. Ross died intestate on January 5, 1910, leaving an estate of considerable value. This action was brought against her heirs and the administrator of her estate to obtain specific performance of an agreement alleged to have been made in September, 1865, between one Halbert, plaintiff's stepfather, and plaintiff herself, on the one hand, and Elizabeth Ross, on the other, whereby Elizabeth Ross agreed that she would adopt the plaintiff, take her into her home, and treat her as her own daughter, and that said plaintiff should be the heir of said Elizabeth, and on her death should be entitled to receive her property. The stipulated consideration for these promises consisted of the surrender by Halbert to Mrs. Ross of the control and custody of the plaintiff, and the rendition by plaintiff to Mrs. Ross of the obedience, affection, and services of a daughter. The complaint contained the necessary allegations of performance on the part of Halbert and the plaintiff, and of adequacy of consideration. At the close of the trial, the plaintiff, by leave of court, filed an amended complaint alleging, in effect, the recognition and ratification of the agreement by Elizabeth Ross at various times. This amendment, made "to conform to the proof," was designed to meet the claim of the defendants that Elizabeth Ross, the alleged promisor, was a married woman at the time of the making of the alleged agreement, and that she was, under the provisions of our statutes then in force (Stats. 1850, c. 103; Stats. 1858, p. 22; Stats. 1862, p. 518), precluded from making a valid contract concerning her real property, except by an instrument in writing, executed by the husband and wife, and acknowledged by the wife. The ratification relied upon was claimed to have been made after the disability had been removed by a change in the statute. A renewed promise, made after the death of her husband, was also set up. The court found in accordance with the plaintiff's allegations, and entered judgment declaring her to be the equitable owner of all of the property owned by Elizabeth B. Ross at the time of her death, and requiring the heirs to make conveyance to her. The defendants appeal from the judgment.

[1-6] One of the contentions strongly urged by the appellants is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding that the contract set up in the complaint was made. It is well settled in this court that an oral contract to dispose of property upon death in a particular way may, under proper conditions, be specifically enforced, and that, prior to the amendment, in 1905 and 1907, of our Codes (Civ. Code, § 1624; Code Civ. Proc. § 1973), it was not required that an agreement to this effect should be in writing. The subject was very recently under consideration in this court in Monsen v. Monsen, 162 Pac. 90, and we need only refer to the opinion in that case, and the earlier decisions there cited, for a statement of the rules of law governing the enforcement of contracts like the one here set up. The opinion in the Monsen Case emphasizes the rule, often laid down in earlier decisions, that, to warrant specific enforcement of a contract to make a certain will, or to make a person one's heir, the proof of such contract must be clear, definite, and certain. Applying this rule, it was held that the contract there sought to be enforced had not been established by proof filling the measure of these requirements. We think however, that the evidence in the case at bar is materially stronger than that presented in the Monsen Case, and that, under the settled rule regarding the binding effect of findings made upon conflicting evidence, the determination of the trial court that a contract, as alleged, had been made, cannot be assailed here. The sufficiency of the evidence to establish a given fact, even where the law requires proof of the fact to be clear and convincing, is primarily a question for the trial court (Couts v. Winston, 153 Cal. 686, 96 Pac. 357; Estate of Pepper, 158 Cal. 619, 112 Pac. 62, 31 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1092), and, if there be substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached below, the finding is not open to review on appeal.

[7] In September, 1865, Elizabeth B. Ross was living with her husband, Robert Ross, in Sierra county, in this state. Plaintiff was then a child of the age of five years. Her mother had died two months before, leaving surviving a husband, J. C. Halbert, plaintiff's stepfather. The evidence is abundant and undisputed to the effect that, at this time, the plaintiff, with the consent of her stepfather, was taken into the family of Mr. and Mrs. Ross, and that, until her marriage, which took place in 1883, she lived in that family as a member thereof. She took the name of Ross, and was treated by Robert and Elizabeth Ross as a daughter. She gave them the service and the affectionate devotion due from a child to its parents, and received from them care and nurture, as well as the best educational advantages available. On each of two occasions, when plaintiff was receiving attentions from young men, Mrs. Ross exercised a parent's right of opposing the proposed marriage, and each time her objections were heeded. When plaintiff married Mr. Steinberger, Mr. and Mrs. Ross were present, the former "giving her away." In 1884, Robert Ross died, and thereafter, until the death of Mrs. Ross, the most affectionate relations continued between the latter and the plaintiff. Gifts of real and personal property of considerable value were made by Mrs. Ross to the plaintiff. It is not contended that any formal adoption was ever made. In fact, at the time of plaintiff's entry into the Ross family, there was in this state no statutory provision for adoption. But Mrs. Ross made many statements showing that she and her husband had intended to adopt the plaintiff. There were but two witnesses who could testify directly to the occurrences of September, 1865, when Halbert gave the child to the Rosses. One of these was the plaintiff herself. She could not, of course, recall in detail what took place at this early period of her life and did not testify to the making of any agreement. Will T. Ross, who was present on the occasion in question, testified that Mrs. Ross had asked Halbert to give her the little girl. Halbert assenting, Mrs. Ross asked her husband whether he was willing, stating that she would assume the responsibility, to which the husband replied, "All right." Halbert handed the child over to Mrs. Ross, saying, "Maggie, here is your new mama and papa." On the same day Mrs. Ross said to other persons, "We have taken Maggie for our own." It is true that in this there is no statement in words of an agreement to make any particular provision for the child. But this witness did not claim to have heard the entire conversation, and, under the circumstances, some arrangement to this end would naturally form a part of the transaction. Mrs. Arrowsmith, who had been acquainted with Mrs. Ross from 1869, said that in that year, and in 1870, Mrs. Ross had frequently told her:

> "That she and Mr. Ross had adopted the plaintiff and made her their sole heir. She told me on one occasion that they had taken the plaintiff and had agreed with her stepfather, Mr. Halbert, I think his name was, that they would adopt her and make her their sole heir."

Again in 1884, after Mr. Ross's death, Mrs. Ross had said to this witness in plaintiff's presence, referring to the failure of Ross to leave a will giving his estate to plaintiff:

> "There will be no such mistake as that in regard to my property. We agreed with Maggie that she should have our property, and she shall have it."

In addition to this, many witnesses testified to declarations of Mrs. Ross to the effect that Maggie (the plaintiff) would be her sole heir, "that she should receive their property whenever they died the same as if she was their own child," and the like. The testimony of Mrs. Arrowsmith was evidence tending to show that Mrs. Ross and her husband had agreed with Halbert and the plaintiff to make the plaintiff their sole heir, and to leave her all of their property. Whatever may be said of the weight to be given to testimony of oral declarations of decedents, it cannot be said that such testimony, supported, as it is in this case, by other evidence and by the inferences which may fairly be drawn from the entire conduct of the plaintiff and her foster parents, is not sufficient to warrant the finding of the court below.

[8] But, as we have suggested above, it is argued by the appellant that in September, 1865, the date of the alleged contract, a married woman could not bind her separate estate, except in a particular manner prescribed by statute. The statute in question was entitled, "An act defining the rights of husband and wife," and was enacted in 1850. Section 6 of the act was amended in 1858 (Stats. 1858, p. 22), and again in 1862 (Stats. 1862, p. 518). Under the last amendment, the section provided that the husband should have the management and control of the separate property of the wife during the continuance of the marriage; "but no alienation, sale, or conveyance, of the real property of the wife, or any part thereof, or any right title or interest, therein, and no contract, or power of attorney, concerning or relating to the same, and no lien or incumbrance created thereon, shall be valid for any purpose, unless the same be made by an instrument in writing, executed by the husband and wife, and acknowledged by her, as provided for in the Acts concerning conveyances," etc. It further provided that personal property should not be sold, assigned, or transferred, unless both husband and wife joined in the sale, assignment, or transfer. The acknowledgment referred to in section 6 was one made upon an examination apart from, and without the hearing of, the husband. Stats. 1850, c. 101, § 22. The decree appealed from covers real estate of large value. Clearly, an agreement by which a married woman agrees to devise all of her estate, real and personal, or to have it pass upon her death to a given person, is, so far as it affects her real property, a contract "concerning or relating to the same." In September, 1865, Mrs. Ross could not, therefore, make a contract which should form the basis for an assertion of rights against her separate real estate, unless such contract were executed and acknowledged in conformity with the requirements of the statute to which we have referred. The contract here set up was oral merely.

[9] But, in 1874 (St. 1873-74, p. 193), the amendment of section 167 of the Civil Code removed the last restriction upon the power of the wife to contract with respect to her separate property, with the single exception that an acknowledgment of her conveyance of real estate was still required to be made as provided in sections 1093 and 1181 of the Civil Code. Marlow v. Barlew, 53 Cal. 456. The appellants do not dispute the proposition that, from and after this time, a married woman had the power, without any writing or acknowledgment, to make the kind of contract here involved. By the amendment to her complaint, the plaintiff alleged that, after the change of the law in 1874, Mrs. Ross recognized the validity of the agreement, and "for the continuing consideration to her rendered by the plaintiff, as in this complaint alleged and shown, she approved, ratified, and adopted said agreement," and continued to receive from plaintiff the benefit of the performance by plaintiff of the obligations on her part to be performed. The court found these allegations to be true, and the finding has sufficient support in the evidence. The testimony of Mrs. Arrowsmith shows a recognition by Mrs. Ross of the binding force of the agreement of 1865, and there is abundant other evidence to show that plaintiff continued to give Mrs. Ross the obedient service and devotion of a daughter, and that Mrs. Ross accepted such performance.

[10, 11] But, say the appellants, the contract of 1865 was void in its inception, and was therefore not capable of ratification. This contention, we think, cannot be sustained. While the statute of 1850, as amended in 1862, prohibited a married woman from making such a contract, except in the prescribed mode, the restrictions went rather to the mode of exercising her power of dealing with her separate estate than to the existence of such power. The Constitution of 1849 itself (article 11, § 14) defined the separate property of the wife, and provided that:

> "Laws shall be passed more clearly defining the rights of the wife in relation as well to her separate property as to that held in common with her husband."

Under this provision, as was said in an early case:

> "The capacity of the wife to hold her separate property being equal to that of the husband, or of any other individual, the same incidents necessarily attach to her capacity, as to that of the husband." Selover v. American Russian Commercial Co., 7 Cal. 266.

The statutory limitations upon the wife's disposition of her property were designed mainly for her own protection.

> The statute "does not prohibit her from disposing of, or incumbering, all or any part of her separate estate upon such terms as to her may seem proper. It does not in the slightest degree interfere with her free will. It only prescribes the mode in which she shall manifest that will. It was undoubtedly the object of the statute to provide a mode of alienation and of incumbering her estate, uniform, simple, and conclusive, which should protect both the wife and the purchaser; one that should secure entire freedom of will and action to the wife, and afford the least possible opportunity for subverting her interest through the medium of undue influence, threats or fraud. It is a beneficent provision intended for her benefit, and not as an encroachment upon her rights. And we think its obvious tendency is to throw a safeguard around without in any degree impairing, the jus disponendi." Maclay v. Love, 25 Cal. 367, 382, 85 Am. Dec. 133.

So, in Love v. Watkins, 40 Cal. 547, 560, 6 Am. Rep. 624, the court says that:

> "The object of requiring the contracts of married women to be executed with certain formalities has been often held to be for her protection, and not to deprive her of any power over her estate."

The contract was therefore one which Mrs. Ross had the power to make, although it was not, in the then state of the law, valid and enforceable unless executed in the prescribed manner. But, when the restrictions upon her mode of contracting were removed, we see no reason why she could not, by a ratification of her contract, coupled with the receipt and enjoyment of the continuing consideration, bind herself and her property. Brown v. Bennett, 75 Pa. 420. See, also, Jourdan v. Dean, 175 Pa. 599, 34 Atl. 958, 964; Pettus v. Gault, 81 Conn. 415, 71 Atl. 509. The contrary is held in two cases strongly relied on by the appellants. Austin v. Davis, 128 Ind. 472, 26 N. E. 890, 12 L. R. A. 120, 25 Am. St. Rep. 456; Thompson v. Minnich, 227 Ill. 430, 81 N. E. 336. We shall not stop to inquire whether these cases are distinguishable from the one before us. It will suffice to say that, if they are not, they proceed upon a theory of the relationship of a married woman to her estate which is not in harmony with the view taken by this court of the effect of the Constitution of 1849, and the statutes passed thereunder.

If these conclusions are correct, the findings of ratification are sufficient to sustain the judgment without regard to the further finding that, after the death of Robert Ross, Mrs. Ross, upon a new consideration, agreed to leave all of her property to the respondent. We need not, therefore, inquire whether the evidence is sufficient to support this additional finding, nor need we go into the various questions which arise in connection with it, such as the applicability of the statute of limitations to an action upon the new contract.

Some further points are made, and may be briefly discussed.

[12, 13] It is claimed that the plaintiff was guilty of laches, in that she did not bring her action for over two years after the death of Mrs. Ross. There is evidence, however, that the plaintiff believed that Mrs. Ross had left a will giving the entire estate to her, and that she commenced her action within a reasonable time after it became clear that no such will could be found. Furthermore, the court below was justified in concluding that the delay had not prejudiced the opposing parties. Nor was the action barred by limitation. The complaint was filed within the period fixed by any of the sections of the Code of Civil Procedure relied upon by the appellants. The amendment to the complaint, in so far as it alleged ratification of the original contract, did not set up a new cause of action.

[14] We see no force in the contention that the contract was invalid because made with the stepfather, Halbert, who, it is claimed, had not legal control over the child. The contract was made primarily for the benefit of the child herself. She was, if not the formal party, the real party in interest, and Halbert stood in a relation which authorized him to act in her behalf.

[15] The appellant assigns as error certain rulings on the admission and rejection of evidence. The only ones which call for particular notice are those relating to the declarations of Mrs. Ross. The declarations offered by the plaintiff, as a part of her case, were properly admitted as the declarations of a decedent against her pecuniary interest. Code Civ. Proc. § 1853. On the other hand, the court was right in rejecting evidence offered by the appellants to show declarations of Mrs. Ross in favor of the position assumed by the appellants, who claim under her in this litigation. It is sufficient, in support of the correctness of both classes of rulings, to refer to Rulofson v. Billings, 140 Cal. 452, 74 Pac. 35.

The judgment is affirmed.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. E. Densmore, Judge.

Action by Henry Stieglitz against Maria Encarnacion de Sepulveda Settle and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

William A. Alderson, of Los Angeles, for appellant. E. H. Bantzer and Davis, Kemp & Post, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff sued defendant Maria Encarnacion de Sepulveda Settle to recover his commissions as broker for services which he had rendered in the sale of certain of defendant's land. The other defendant is the husband of Maria Encarnacion, married to her after the consummation of the transactions forming the basis of this litigation. At the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence defendants moved for a nonsuit upon "the general broad ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision and that the plaintiff's evidence showed moral turpitude." The court granted the nonsuit upon the ground that "the plaintiff had failed to prove a sufficient case for the jury, and the evidence introduced was insufficient to support a judgment for the plaintiff."

[1] The court's power to grant a nonsuit has been so often discussed, and the limitations of that power so often declared, that it should be necessary to do no more than refer to Estate of Arnold, 147 Cal. 583, 82 Pac. 252, Estate of Chevallier, 159 Cal. 161, 113 Pac. 130, and Estate of Caspar, 172 Cal. 147, 155 Pac. 631. In passing upon such a motion "every favorable inference fairly deducible and every favorable presumption fairly arising from the evidence produced must be considered as facts proved in favor of the" plaintiff. Estate of Arnold, supra. The evidence discloses that defendant Maria Encarnacion was a widow. She owned a one-half interest in 860 acres of land, a part of the Rancho Palos Verdes, and had other large property interests and land holdings. This particular land had come to her from her former husband, Sepulveda. She did not speak English. Apparently she could not write. Her trusted business manager and man of affairs was Richard Mahar, whom she had known long and well, and with whom she could converse in Spanish. Mahar held her general power of attorney. The plaintiff is, and for many years has been, an attorney at law. In the past he had been in several matters Mrs. Sepulveda's attorney at law. At the time of the transactions here questioned he was her attorney at law in a partition suit to divide the lands in the Rancho Palos Verdes above referred to. This action had been instituted some time before. It was the only pending matter in which plaintiff was acting as Mrs. Sepulveda's attorney at law. He was not her general counsel. She had never consulted him at his office. He had never been to her house more than three times, and she had never sought his advice upon her general affairs. Mrs. Sepulveda, as is not unusual with ladies in her position, needed money. While owning much land, she had no fixed income, and taxes and her personal expenditures were burdening her with debts. She told her attorney in fact, Mr. Mahar, that she wanted to sell her undivided interest in the Rancho Palos Verdes. The partition proceedings affecting this land had not been completed by final judgment, but had been practically closed. Mrs. Sepulveda talked many times to Mr. Mahar about selling the land and urged him to make and he did make efforts so to do, all of which he reported to his principal. A number of real estate agents became active in their efforts to secure purchasers. The bids and offers which he received he duly reported. As a result of all of these efforts, the highest and best offer which was obtained for the land was $250 an acre. Mr. Mahar talked this offer over with plaintiff, and both agreed that the price offered was too low, and Mr. Mahar so reported to his principal.

Then Mr. Stieglitz told Mr. Mahar that if he, with the approval and assent of Mrs. Sepulveda, would give him permission to sell the ranch on commission, he would use his endeavors to secure a purchaser. Mr. Mahar consulted Mrs. Sepulveda, and duly informed Mr. Stieglitz that he could go ahead and sell the ranch, and if he succeeded Mrs. Sepulveda would pay him the usual commission. Mr. Mahar, as does Mr. Stieglitz, testifies to this effect, and further that he did consult Mrs. Sepulveda, did explain to her that Mr. Stieglitz would endeavor to sell the ranch, upon the payment of the usual commission if he succeeded, asked her if she was willing to pay the commission under these circumstances, to which she replied, "Por supuesto"—of course. At this time Mr. Stieglitz had no particular purchaser in mind. He not only had not seen George Peck, who became the purchaser, but did not even think of him. After this agreement and understanding, which, because of the relations existing between the parties, plaintiff did not think necessary at the time should be in writing, Mr. Stieglitz used his best efforts to find a purchaser, and succeeded in the person of George Peck. Mr. Peck, after many negotiations with Mr. Stieglitz and Mr. Mahar, all of which were reported to Mrs. Sepulveda, finally purchased the land for $400 an acre; this purchase price being approved by Mrs. Sepulveda before the contract of purchase was entered into on her behalf by her attorney in fact. After the sale had been consummated, Mr. Stieglitz asked for payment of his commissions; but, owing to Mrs. Sepulveda's immediate need for money, that which was received from the first payment had been expended, and Mr. Mahar so explained to Mr. Stieglitz, saying that he would have to wait until July for his money, the sale having been effected on March 19th. Then, because of this delay, Mr. Stieglitz, expressing a willingness thus to wait for his compensation, and expressing also the natural apprehension that "something might happen to me or to him, thought it would be no more than right that an agreement be prepared, and that he sign the agreement with me." Mr. Stieglitz then prepared an agreement, dated March 17th (antedating by two days the sale of the land), which agreement authorized him to sell the land upon "the regular or customary commission for making said sale as fixed by the Realty Board of the City of Los Angeles." This was signed by Maria Encarnacion, by her attorney in fact, Richard Mahar, and bore also the signature of Mr. Stieglitz over his acceptance. Both understood the reason why the contract bore a date before its actual writing, and both understood and agreed that no concealment should be made of this circumstance, and none in fact was made. Thereafter and in the same year defendant Maria Encarnacion married defendant George Settle, and in September he called upon Mr. Stieglitz and asked him whether he had any claims against his wife. Mr. Stieglitz asserted that he did have such a claim in the matter of his commissions in the sale of this land, to which Settle replied that he would never get the commission, and that he would see that he did not.

[2] Touching briefly upon the law, no question arises but that the power of attorney held by Mr. Mahar was amply sufficient to authorize him to do everything which in fact he did do. But in addition to this is the evidence (unnecessary to establish the legality of Mr. Mahar's conduct, but standing undenied, as it does, persuasive of fair dealing) that Mrs. Sepulveda was fully advised of and fully assented to the principal transaction. Mr. Mahar, under his power of attorney, had the authority to enter into the contract with Mr. Stieglitz for the payment of this commission. The uncontradicted evidence is that he did so enter into it with the knowledge and approval of his principal. It was equally within his power to cure the defect of the parol agreement by subsequent ratification in writing, which was done and made. Civ. Code, §§ 2307, 2310.

[3] Touching Mr. Stieglitz' position and conduct there is absolutely nothing shown in the evidence which would forbid him, on either legal or ethical grounds, from entering into a contract with Mrs. Sepulveda which had no bearing on or relation to his position as her attorney at law in the partition suit, especially so as in the making of the contract he did not even personally see her, and so could not have personally influenced her, and the explanation of the contract was made by, and her assent given to, her trusted agent and man of affairs. An attorney is under no actual incapacity to deal with or purchase from his client. All that is required, where the relation of confidence exists, and where the questioned transaction has a bearing upon that relationship, is a clear showing that there has been no abuse of confidence and no advantage taken. Felton v. Le Breton, 92 Cal. 457, 28 Pac. 490; Cox v. Delmas, 99 Cal. 104, 33 Pac. 836; Vanasse v. Reid, 111 Wis. 303, 87 N. W. 192; 1 Story, Jur. § 313. "There is no authority establishing, nor was it ever laid down, that an attorney cannot purchase from his client what was not in any degree the object of his concern as attorney. * * * Under such circumstances he is not the attorney in hac re." Montesquieu v. Sandys, 18 Ves. 313.

[4] In support of this judgment, given on nonsuit, respondents seem to place reliance upon certain testimony given by Mr. Mahar to the effect that he understood that he and Mr. Stieglitz were to divide the commission, and that he thought he and Mr. Stieglitz might as well make a commission upon the sale of the property as anybody else, and also upon the fact that after the sale Mr. Peck insisted on giving him—Mr. Stieglitz—$500, which he refused to take, telling Mr. Peck that, if he wanted to give this money, to draw his check for that amount to Mr. Mahar, which Mr. Peck did, and that subsequently Mr. Mahar insisted upon Mr. Stieglitz taking half of the amount. As against this, however, is the positive testimony of Mr. Stieglitz that there had been no previous agreement between himself and Mr. Peck, or between himself and Mr. Mahar, concerning the $500, and that he never had any agreement with Mr. Mahar by which he—Mr. Mahar—was to receive any part of the commissions for the sale of the land. To sustain the nonsuit it would have to be said as matter of law that this evidence to which we have last adverted absolutely destroys all the force and effect of the rest of the evidence in the case. But this manifestly is not so. The most that can be said of it is that it is evidence tending to impeach the fair dealing of Mr. Mahar with his principal. It does not at all affect the legal rights of plaintiff as above set forth.

The judgment appealed from is therefore reversed.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. A. Hawkins, Chas. Wellborn, Judges.

Action by M. E. Smalley against the George C. Peckham Company and others. From a judgment for defendants, and from orders denying motion for new trial and taxing costs, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

William Freeman, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Fred W. Morrison, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff sued to rescind a contract into which he had entered for the purchase of several acres of land in the county of San Bernardino on the 21st of November, 1910. He served a notice and demand for rescission on January 27, 1912. The right to rescind is based upon the asserted fraudulent misrepresentations made by defendants to plaintiff to induce him, and under which he was induced, to enter into the contract of purchase. These false statements are declared to be representations that the land was of superior quality and especially adapted to the cultivation and production of orange trees and their fruit; that it was situated in the "orange belt," and was free from frost, and that the climatic conditions were especially favorable for the cultivation and production of citrus fruits; further, that the purchaser of each 10 acres would be entitled to $^1/_{10}$ of the water and water rights and pumping plant appurtenant to the tract free of charge, except for the expense of upkeep, and that the water supply was adequate to irrigate the land properly; that defendants "prevented and persuaded plaintiff not to make any inquiry for himself as to the truth of said conditions of climate and water"; that plaintiff did not read the agreement, nor consult any one about it, but relied solely on the defendants' representations; that after the execution of the agreement he discovered that "said land in quality, and said water, water rights, and pumping plant in quantity, were not as represented," and he so informed defendants, and plaintiff believes "that the demands for money for water by said defendants, their officers, agents, and employés were and are in excess of the pro rata expense provided by said agreement and contrary thereto"; that plaintiff paid in cash on account of the purchase of the land $1,000 and other smaller sums amounting to $180; and "that the consideration for his obligation under said agreement has failed in part and in whole, and has become entirely void through the fault of the said defendants, to the damage of the plaintiff in the sum of $1,180." The defendants answered, and for cross-complaint set up the contract, plaintiff's breach of it, and sought a decree giving plaintiff a reasonable time within which to be relieved from his default or suffer foreclosure of all his right and interest in and to the land. Judgment passed for defendants, and plaintiff appeals from the judgment, the order denying his motion for a new trial, and also from the order of the court taxing costs in the action.

[1] The brief quotations which we have made from the complaint will suffice to show its inartificiality as a pleading, and respondents argue with much force: First, that no damage is shown, and that fraud without damage furnishes no ground for action (Holton v. Noble, 83 Cal. 7, 23 Pac. 58); and, second, that nowhere in the pleading is it made to appear what injurious difference the plaintiff discovered between the land and the water right which he received and the land and water right for which he contracted, and that, therefore, there is an utter failure to show a difference in value, and, consequently, that the allegation that the consideration for the agreement "has failed in part and in whole and has become entirely void" is wholly unsupported by any allegation in the complaint. We need not, however, pause to discuss this, for a consideration of the evidence of plaintiff, even when it is upon a material matter, is sharply in conflict with the evidence of the defense, and the findings of the court, therefore, are supported, and will not here be disturbed.

[2, 3] The action was commenced in the county of Los Angeles. The defendants served notice that they would move for a change of venue to the county of San Bernardino, upon the ground that the real property affected by the litigation was situated in that county. An affidavit of merits was filed in support of this, and the motion was opposed by plaintiff, and was denied. The defendant Merchants' Bank & Trust Company had brought its action in San Bernardino county against this plaintiff for the enforcement of this contract, and the complaint in that action was identical with the cross-complaint filed in this. Before the court in San Bernardino county plaintiff's counsel represented that the action pending in Los Angeles county would determine all the questions involved in the San Bernardino county action, and the trial of the latter action was upon this ground postponed. Appellant here seemingly complains of the action of the trial court in concurring with his view that the place of the trial of the action should not be changed from Los Angeles county. Aside from the fact that it does not lie in his mouth thus to argue, the court's ruling was sound. Grocers', etc., Union v. Kern, 150 Cal. 476, 89 Pac. 120.

[4, 5] But if appellant's objection is that the court retained jurisdiction of the action after the filing of the cross-complaint and should not have done so, the answer is twofold—that he made no motion for a change of venue (Code Civ. Proc. § 396), and that it is a familiar rule of equity that when the court has once obtained jurisdiction it will do complete justice by deciding the whole case and leaving nothing for future litigation (Booker v. Aitken, 140 Cal. 473, 74 Pac. 11).

[6] The defendants, prevailing in the litigation, filed a cost bill. The action was in equity, and the award of costs discretionary with the court. On motion of defendants it taxed the costs in the sum of $119.10, and judgment was entered accordingly. Appellant states that his bill of exceptions specifies the points and reasons so clearly that the error of the court in so taxing the costs will plainly appear without argument or authorities; but an examination of this bill of exceptions thus unnecessarily forced upon us shows that the court in no respect erred.

The judgment and orders appealed from are therefore affirmed.

In Bank. Appeal from District Court of Appeal, Second District.

Action by the First Congregational Church of Christ in Corona, California, against C. L. Lowrey and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Ben Goodrich and Goodrich & Martinson, all of Los Angeles, for appellants. G. R. Freeman, of Willow, and Purington & Adair, of Riverside, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. [1] This is an action brought against the surety on a contractor's bond. Defendant Lowrey had entered into a contract with the plaintiff for the construction of a church. He abandoned his contract, and plaintiff brought its action against him and against the surety to recover the amount of damages which it sustained by reason of this abandonment. The contract between the owner and the contractor made provision for alterations, deviations, additions, or omissions in the work to be done, and provided that the reasonable value should be added to or deducted from the contract price, "provided, however, that the character and valuation of any or all of said changes, omissions, or extra work should be agreed upon and fixed in writing, signed by the owner and the said contractor prior to the commencement of the work of making such alterations, deviations, additions or omissions." The court found that certain alterations and omissions were made and were agreed to between plaintiff and the defendant Lowrey. It found the value of these, item by item; one item amounting to $164.25, another to $209, and a third to $204. It further found that the character and value of these changes, omissions, and extra work were agreed upon between the owner and contractor, but were not agreed upon and fixed in writing or signed by the owner and contractor, prior to the commencement of the work, or at all. It still further found:

> "That none of such alterations, deviations, or omissions were detrimental to the interests of the defendant Pacific Surety Company, and did not materially alter the terms or conditions of said contract or bond, or change the contract between the plaintiff and said Lowrey or said Pacific Surety Company."

That the alterations, changes, and omissions were material, within the meaning of the decisions, there can be no doubt. Alcatraz, etc., Ass'n v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 3 Cal. App. 338, 85 Pac. 156; Barrett-Hicks Co. v. Glas, 9 Cal. App. 491, 99 Pac. 856; O'Neal v. Kelley, 65 Ark. 550, 47 S. W. 409; Beers v. Wolf, 116 Mo. 179, 22 S. W. 620.

Because of this finding that these changes were neither material nor detrimental to the surety, the trial court gave judgment for plaintiff, and this appeal has followed.

[2, 3] Appellant here contends that under our statute law, and under our decisions, since the agreement between the owner and the contractor, the terms of which agreement measure the surety's rights and liabilities under its contract, were changed in a material respect without the consent of the surety, he is released from his obligation. Respondent contends that the trend of modern decision no longer favors those sureties who enter into such contracts for compensation and as a business; that as to them the rule of law permitting a guarantor to stand upon the letter of his contract is no longer in force; that the law governing insurers is the law which should be applied to them; and that in applying such law, to be relieved, they must not only show a variation, and a material variation, of the terms of the contract upon which their own contract of surety was based, but must further show that such material variation was injurious. Undoubtedly, there is authority for such a view, and many of the cases so holding will be found collated and discussed in the note to Cowles v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 98 Am. St. Rep. 838, and in Frost Guaranty Insurance, § 4 et seq. It would serve no profitable purpose to analyze these decisions, nor to search the laws of the states which have rendered them to determine whether or not the courts were, as this court is, bound by positive statutory declaration upon the subject, for in view of our own Code provisions such a discussion could have no value. It would be but a declaration by this court as to what it might think the law should be, but it could in no wise control our law as it actually is written. Our Code speaks with absolute finality upon the subject. Section 2819 of the Civil Code provides that a guarantor "is exonerated, * * * if by any act of the creditor, without the consent of the guarantor, the original obligation of the principal is altered in any respect." See, also, Civ. Code, § 2840, applying the same rule to sureties. Our decisions construing these sections uniformly hold that, if there has been such a change in the contract in any (material) respect, the inquiry there ends and the guarantor is exonerated, and that it is not a subject of inquiry whether the alteration has or has not been to his injury. Cadenasso v. Antonelle, 127 Cal. 382, 59 Pac. 765; Tally v. Parsons, 131 Cal. 516, 63 Pac. 833; Davisson v. East Whittier Land Co., 153 Cal. 85, 96 Pac. 88; Tuohy v. Woods, 122 Cal. 665, 55 Pac. 683; Dunne Investment Co. v. Empire State Surety Co., 27 Cal. App. 208, 150 Pac. 405, 411. It is to be noted, then, that neither our statute law nor our decisions under it have ever recognized that there is any distinction between a compensated and uncompensated surety or guarantor, nor between a corporate surety and an individual surety, nor between a corporation or an individual engaging in the business of suretyship or guarantyship for compensation and a corporation or individual who enters into a like contract without compensation. To impose such distinctions, while sections 2819 and 2840, Civil Code, read as they now read upon the books, would not be to interpret and to enforce the written law, but to make new law in hostility to it. It is for the Legislature, and not for the courts, to modify our statute law, if the lawmaking body shall believe that its former declarations touching the rights and liabilities of sureties and guarantors should be modified in respect to those sureties and guarantors who become such for compensation.

The judgment appealed from is therefore reversed.

APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1010(1) — REVIEW — FINDINGS OF FACT.

In action by wife to cancel deed made to her husband, held, under evidence, that finding that conveyance was duly delivered to defendant in accordance with plaintiff's agreement so to do at the time she acquired title will not be disturbed on appeal.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Willis I. Morrison, Judge.

Action by Edith Eells against George Eells. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, she appeals. Affirmed.

Edith D. McKinley, for appellant. Williams & Rutan, of Santa Ana, and George P. Adams, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. In this action plaintiff sought a decree quieting her alleged title to certain real property described in the complaint, and also asked that a deed which purported to convey the same property to defendant be canceled and annulled. The court denied her the relief sought, and gave judgment in favor of defendant, from which, and an order denying her motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

The action grows out of the following facts: The parties are husband and wife. At the time of the marriage in 1909 defendant, the husband, owned 19½ acres of land, upon which, at the request of plaintiff, he declared a homestead. He exchanged 9½ acres of this land for property in the city of Los Angeles, consisting of a house and lot, constituting the subject of suit, which was owned by one Susan A. Hobbs, who on December 17, 1912, conveyed the same to plaintiff as her separate estate. On February 12, 1913, plaintiff signed and acknowledged a deed conveying to defendant this property so acquired from Hobbs. The chief question involved concerns the delivery or nondelivery of this deed of conveyance, wherein defendant was named grantee.

The contention of plaintiff, supported by her testimony, is that the deed was so executed by her, not with the intention of a present delivery thereof to her husband, but with the purpose, in case of her death, of saving her estate the expense of administration, and that he secured possession of the deed by wrongfully abstracting the same from where she had placed it, between the mattresses of her bed. On the other hand, it was alleged in the answer, and testimony was offered in behalf of defendant which clearly tended to prove, that he was inexperienced and unfamiliar with legal instruments and their effect, while plaintiff was an attorney of several years' experience in the laws of conveyancing and familiar with matters relating thereto, and during her marriage had acted for defendant in the conduct and management of all such matters; that at the time of the exchange of the properties she assumed charge thereof, and stated to defendant that, if the title to the Hobbs property was placed in her name, she could manage the same and collect the rents thereof to better advantage, and, if so conveyed to her, she would, for his protection, immediately execute and deliver to him a deed to the property; that defendant, relying upon his wife's representations, and having implicit confidence in her expressed purpose to convey the property to him, consented to the lodgment in her of the title to the Hobbs property; that in compliance with her agreement so to do she, on February 12, 1913, made and delivered the deed to him, at the same time advising that no record thereof be made until after her death; that thereafter she took the instrument from a drawer, where he had deposited it for safe-keeping, and secreted it between the mattresses, from where he, upon finding it, took the same and had it recorded; and that the property so conveyed by Hobbs to plaintiff with defendant's consent in exchange for the 9½ acres of land was never intended by him to be the subject of a gift to plaintiff. All of these facts the court found to be true, in accordance with the evidence so offered on behalf of the defendant.

Appellant, who appears in propria persona, devotes much of her brief in an endeavor to show that the findings above referred to, and particularly that as to the delivery of the deed, are not supported by the evidence. The contention is wholly without merit. The most that can be said is that there is a sharp conflict between the testimony of the parties touching the matters, and the court, as it was fully warranted in doing, gave the greater weight to the testimony of defendant than it did to that of plaintiff. It thus appears that defendant's ownership of the property, as found by the court, is based upon a conveyance thereof duly executed and delivered by plaintiff to defendant in accordance with her agreement so to do, made at the time when in her own name she acquired title to the Hobbs property. This being true, it is immaterial whether or not other findings relating to plaintiff's alleged fraudulent acts in procuring the deed, and want of consideration paid therefor by her, are supported by the evidence. Conceding the absence of fraud on her part, and that her abandonment of the homestead declared by the husband constituted a part of the consideration for the Hobbs deed, it could not, under the circumstances shown, affect the judgment. Appellant has filed a voluminous brief devoted to a discussion of abstract questions of law not here involved, and to matters proper for the consideration of the trial court, and which it is presumed to have considered in determining the weight to be given the conflicting evidence.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Gavin W. Craig, Judge.

Lon Hadley was convicted of murder, and appeals from judgment and from order denying motion for new trial. Affirmed.

Wellington W. Judd, of Los Angeles, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Robert M. Clarke, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HENSHAW, J. Defendant, a colored man, was charged with the murder of John McGovern. He was found guilty, and the death penalty was imposed. He has taken his appeal from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] Certain rulings of the court in admitting and rejecting evidence are complained of. We are aided by no discussion of counsel pointing out either the error or the injury of these rulings. The brief limits itself to the bare statement that "the court erred" in sustaining this objection or in overruling that objection. This court has in numerous instances declined to consider objections so presented. People v. Woon Tuck Wo, 120 Cal. 294, 52 Pac. 833; People v. McLean, 135 Cal. 306, 67 Pac. 770; People v. Creeks, 141 Cal. 529, 75 Pac. 101. Nevertheless, owing to the gravity of the case, we have examined the record with care, and in none of the instances complained of do we find a ruling which would justify, much less demand, a reversal of the case. Some of these rulings were eminently sound. Others were rulings on evidentiary matters of trifling consequence. One only calls for specific consideration. The facts of the crime are that the defendant, about 20 minutes past 8 o'clock of the evening of April 3d, was in the act of burglarizing the home of the deceased, who at the time was absent. The deceased returned to his residence while the defendant was endeavoring to effect an entrance. He went to an outbuilding and picked up an axe and walked toward his house. This act of the deceased is explained by witnesses, who said that such was his practice, as McGovern thought that by taking the axe into his house at night burglars would have a less ready means of forcing an entrance. However, as he approached his door the defendant shot him twice and fled. His dead body was found in his yard the next day. Mrs. Young, a neighbor, who heard the shots, went to her window and saw a colored man, whom she identified as this defendant, "sneaking along the front of McGovern's house." This man climbed the fence and made his escape by a devious route. These were the circumstances of the homicide as testified to by Mrs. Young, though she did not know until the next day, after the body had been discovered, that McGovern had in fact been killed. The defense offered the testimony of one Compnext, for the purpose of showing that under the conditions existing upon the night and at the time of the homicide Mrs. Young could not have identified the defendant. It is extremely difficult to follow this examination from the record; as frequent references are made to a map showing the position of shrubbery, trees, and fences. It is therefore impossible in many instances to pass upon the pertinency of the evidence and the soundness of the rulings. Thus, as exemplars, the witness is asked, "Do these trees extend in such a way as to completely shadow, and did they at the time that this crime was alleged to have been committed, did they extend so as to completely shadow this down here?" The objection was sustained upon the ground that the question called for a conclusion of the witness. Of course, if the witness in fact knew, it was no more an objectionable conclusion than if he had been asked whether it were light or dark. Again he is asked, "Is there any point at which to your knowledge the electric light shines in there?" This would seem to call for a mere declaration of fact. But an objection was sustained to it as calling for a conclusion of the witness, and "no foundation laid." "Is Bay street a dark street?" is another question that was objected to as calling for a conclusion, and the objection upon that ground was sustained. Throughout the whole examination of this witness great stress seemed to be laid upon the fact that "no foundation was laid," though it does not appear that defendant's counsel was enlightened, nor yet is this court enlightened, as to precisely what was meant by this. Thus the court said:

> "Counsel, you will have to lay a foundation before you can ask any of these questions."

However, later in the examination the matter is illuminated by this statement of the prosecuting attorney:

> "Mr. Helms. At this time, perhaps, it would be well to state that counsel is apparently attempting to lay a foundation—I do not know, but I assume, that he is attempting to lay a foundation—I do not know, but I assume, that he is attempting to lay a foundation to show that either this witness or some other witnesses some time this month performed or attempted to perform some sort of an experiment down in the vicinity, or in the premises indicated, and that the purpose of that experiment would be to show that either this witness or some other witness with a similar group of facts, possibly as accurately reproduced as they could at that time reproduce them, undertook to determine whether or not some person, this witness or somebody else, located in the premises of Mrs. Young or approximately a similar position to that which Mrs. Young, according to her testimony, must have occupied on the night of the shooting—
> "The Court. Capt. Helms, I do not see how you can expect to stop counsel from putting on his evidence. * * *

> "Mr. Helms. The point of the objection on that question, your honor, is that at this season of the year, as is well known, a tree may be in full leaf, it may be in full leaf six weeks or two months ago but where a period of two months has elapsed the leafing of a tree in the spring of the year, and especially of a deciduous tree such as those trees evidently are, and not being citrus fruit trees, without any question there is a continual variation from week to week in the condition of the leafage. A sprout that will be that long will sometimes in three or four days become a foot long, a tender green sprout, the new growth, especially in the spring season. Objects that could perhaps be seen through the tree two months earlier in the spring could not at all be discerned through the leafage of the same tree, although at both times the tree might be in full leafage. For that reason, I was about to make the remark before, I think counsel will see that it is impossible to reproduce the conditions the same where we are dealing with growing matter. If the matter were a stone wall or wooden walls even that could be shown to be in the same condition, there might be a possibility of reproducing conditions, but suppose he reproduces physical conditions, then he has to reproduce a person with exactly the same capacity of vision that Mrs. Young had before he has the conditions the same as her observation."

[2] The court did not rule upon this statement, but it is quite apparent that the prosecuting attorney believed that unless the "experiment" touching the ability of one person to recognize another was carried out under identical conditions, even to the last leaf on the tree, with those which obtained when the witness Mrs. Young testified that she identified the defendant, the evidence was inadmissible. Of course such is not the law. Nor did the court rule that such was the law. And while it might well have shown a greater liberality in permitting counsel for the defense, manifestly inexperienced, to introduce his evidence, it cannot be said that the stringency of the court's rulings worked any hardship to appellant.

[3] Counsel next complains of all the instructions which the court gave and of all which it refused to give. But specifically complaint is made that the court instructed the jury that, if the death of a person results from the act of another while such other "was engaged in perpetrating or attempting to perpetrate robbery, burglary, or mayhem, in which case the fact that the killing was accidental is immaterial." The objection to this instruction is that it "called to the attention of the jury the fact that the defendant was charged with murder during an attempt to commit burglary." Such in fact was the case, and such in fact was the evidence, and that the instruction is sound in point of law is beyond doubt. People v. Milton, 145 Cal. 171, 78 Pac. 549; People v. Jones, 160 Cal. 370, 117 Pac. 176; People v. Witt, 170 Cal. 104, 148 Pac. 928.

[4] The defendant confessed the crime. The court refused to give the following instruction:

> "You are instructed that the fact that the questioning was done by police officers presents an important item for consideration in determining whether or not the confession was of a free and voluntary character."

In People v. Quan Gim Gow, 23 Cal. App. 507, 138 Pac. 918, the Court of Appeal in its general discussion quotes from Bram v. United States, 168 U. S. 557, 18 Sup. Ct. 192, 42 L. Ed. 568, to the following effect:

> "Whatever be the rule in this regard in England, however, it is certain that, where a confession is elicited by the questions of a policeman, the fact of its having been so obtained it is conceded may be an important element in determining whether the answers of the prisoner were voluntary."

An effort was here made to have this embodied into the form of positive law for the instruction of the jury. There is no warrant in the court's so doing. People v. Siemsen, 153 Cal. 387, 95 Pac. 863; People v. Luis, 158 Cal. 189, 110 Pac. 580. To have done so would have been a dangerous invasion of the rights secured to litigants against instructions by a court to a jury upon matters of fact. People v. Hawes, 98 Cal. 648, 33 Pac. 791; People v. Keith, 141 Cal. 686, 75 Pac. 304; Estate of Blake, 136 Cal. 311, 68 Pac. 827, 89 Am. St. Rep. 135.

[5] The following instruction which the court gave is complained of:

> "In determining the intention of the defendant at the time of the transaction complained of, it is important to consider the means used to accomplish the killing. The intent or intention is manifested by the circumstances connected with the offense and the sound mind and discretion of the accused."

This precise instruction, however, has been declared to be a sound exposition of the law in People v. Besold, 154 Cal. 369, 97 Pac. 871, and People v. Wilkins, 158 Cal. 530, 111 Pac. 612.

The judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

1. MECHANICS' LIENS 🔑164(2) — BUILDING CONTRACT—EXECUTION IN WRITING.

Building contract, after describing work to be done, provided that all should be performed conformably to drawings and specifications by named architects, signed by parties, which were intended to be filed therewith, and which were identified by signatures of the parties. The document was filed in recorder's office, and three sets of specifications were filed with it, general specifications referring to construction of building in general, not referring to electric wiring or garage, specifications for electric wiring, and specifications for garage. The general specifications bore initials of the contractor, placed by him on each sheet, but did not have signature of the owner, except she wrote her initials on the fifth page. The same initials were placed on other sheets of the general specifications by one not the owner, but having the same initials, without authority from her and not in her presence. Wiring and garage specifications were neither signed nor initialed by the owner or contractor, but the owner's initials had been placed thereon by party with same initials acting under no authority from owner. When the several specifications were initialed they were not attached to the signed contract nor to each other. Later they were fastened together and filed for record by some person other than contractor. Held, that the contract was void because not in writing as required by law, so that materialman was entitled to have lien.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 289.]

2. Appeal and Error ⟹925(2) — Presumptions Favoring Court Below — Setting Aside Stipulation.

In suit to enforce a materialman's lien, where the parties stipulated on trial that the contract was in the form required by the lien law and recorded prior to commencement of the work, evidently in order to place before the court facts about which there was no controversy, and later plaintiff was allowed to amend by adding to its complaint a statement of the facts regarding the form of the contract on account of which plaintiff sought to attack its validity, and it was agreed that the court should first hear and dispose of the invalidity of the contract, the appellate court must assume, nothing appearing to the contrary, that the conduct of the trial under the amended pleadings, and the actual receiving and considering of evidence on the new issues, was understood by parties and court as having set aside the stipulation, and that the court was no longer bound thereby.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Finlayson, Judge.

Suit by the L. W. Blinn Lumber Company, a corporation, against Alice B. Cohn, L. B. Cohn, and John Rebman. From a judgment limiting its lien, plaintiff appeals. Judgment so far as appealed from reversed, and trial court directed to amend the judgment to enforce plaintiff's lien as claimed for the full amount of the balance due as shown by the findings.

E. S. Williams, of Los Angeles, for appellant. W. O. Morton, Harry A. Hollzer, and C. B. Morton, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. On December 5, 1910, the defendant Alice B. Cohn as owner, and defendant John Rebman, as contractor, signed a document purporting to be a contract for the construction of an apartment building and garage on land of Mrs. Cohn in the city of Los Angeles. The writing provided that the whole of the work to be performed thereunder should be completed by the 1st day of April, 1911. This was not done, and on the 12th day of September, 1911, the buildings were not yet completely constructed. The owner took possession and proceeded to complete them, and they were fully and actually completed on the 30th day of October, 1911. Pursuant to a contract made with Rebman, the plaintiff furnished lumber to be used and which was used in the construction of those buildings, and on account thereof there became due to the plaintiff the sum of $9,180.61, balance unpaid of the value of the materials thus furnished. The court granted judgment against Rebman for that sum, with interest thereon at 7 per cent. per annum from October 3, 1911, together with $1.90 for cost of verifying and recording its claim of lien and its costs of suit herein. Plaintiff's claim of lien enforceable against the owner's property was allowed in the sum of only $5,962.65, with costs. The plaintiff has appealed from that part of the judgment which thus limits the extent of its lien.

Appellant claims that the building contract between Mrs. Cohn and Rebman was invalid because it was not in writing as required by law, and that therefore the plaintiff was entitled to have a lien for the full value of the materials furnished by it. The contract, after describing the work to be done, provided as follows:

> "All of which work shall be done and performed conformably to the drawings and specifications by Messrs. Neher & Skilling, architects, and signed by the parties hereto, which are intended to be filed herewith in the office of the county recorder of said Los Angeles county, and which are identified by the signatures of the respective parties hereto."

On December 10, 1910, that document was filed in the recorder's office of Los Angeles county, and at the same time there were filed with it three sets of specifications: (1) General specifications referring to the construction of the apartment building in general, but not including any reference to electric wiring or to any garage; (2) specifications for electric wiring; (3) specifications for garage. The general specifications bore the initials of John Rebman, placed by him on each sheet thereof. They did not have the signature of Mrs. Cohn, except that she wrote her initials, "A. B. C.," on page 5 thereof. The same initials, "A. B. C.," were placed on the other sheets of the general specifications by one A. B. Cohn, not the owner, Alice B. Cohn, without authority from her and not in her presence. The electric wiring specifications and the garage specifications were neither signed nor initialed by the owner nor by Rebman, but the initials "A. B. C." had been placed thereon by the said A. B. Cohn acting under no authority from Alice B. Cohn. At the time when the several specifications were initialed as above stated, they were not attached to the signed contract nor to each other. Afterwards they were fastened together and filed for record by some person other than and in the absence of John Rebman. Rebman did not sign or initial the specifications, except as above stated, and he never examined the same before they were recorded or after they were fastened together or after he signed and initialed the same as above stated.

Under decisions heretofore made and which fully state the rule and its reasons, it must be held that the purported contract is "wholly void," and the contention of the plaintiff must be sustained. Donnelly v. Adams, 115 Cal. 129, 46 Pac. 916; Donnelly v. Adams, 127 Cal. 24, 59 Pac. 208; West Coast Lumber Co. v. Knapp, 122 Cal. 79, 54 Pac. 533; San Francisco Lumber Co. v. O'Neil, 120 Cal. 455, 52 Pac. 728; Howe v. Schmidt, 151 Cal. 436, 90 Pac. 1056; Hartwell v. Ganahl Lumber Co., 8 Cal. App. 733, 97 Pac. 901. Respondents also rely upon Hartwell v. Ganahl Lumber Co., supra, and claim that the facts of this case are substantially like that case in which the validity of the contract was sustained. But the analogy does not hold. In that case the court upon the evidence before it held it as a presumption that the contract was signed by the owner and contractor in the condition in which it came to the court, to wit, with the plans and specifications attached thereto; and there was oral evidence that it was so signed. In that case also the specifications contained a statement describing them as specifications relating to a building to be erected for the named owner, together with a description of the lot on which the building was to be constructed. In the case at bar the findings of the court declare, as above stated, that the specifications and contract were not together when the contract was signed. It further appears that the electric wiring and garage specifications, although they contain the name of the owner and the names of the architects, do not contain any reference to the location of the land upon which the work was to be done.

[2] Respondents endeavor to avoid an adverse decision upon this branch of the case by suggesting that at the trial it was stipulated that the contract was in form required by the lien law and recorded prior to commencement of the work as required thereby, including the specifications and plans attached. It is true that such stipulation was made at the opening of the trial. The complaint at that time consisted of two counts, neither of which attacked the validity of the contract. The stipulation, therefore, evidently was made in order to place before the court facts about which there was no controversy, but which were necessary in order to present in connection therewith the facts about which controversy then existed. At a later time in the trial the plaintiff was allowed to amend its complaint by adding thereto a statement of the facts to which we have referred and on account of which the plaintiff sought to attack the validity of the contract. Since nothing appears to the contrary, we must assume that the further conduct of the trial under the amended pleadings, and the actual receiving and considering of evidence upon the new issues thus framed, was understood by the parties and by the court as having set aside the above-mentioned stipulation, and that the court was no longer bound thereby. Indeed, the bill of exceptions states that:

> "Thereupon it was agreed that the court should first hear and dispose of the issue of the invalidity of the contract."

The other principal ground of appeal presented by counsel for plaintiff assumes the validity of the building contract. In view of our decision against the validity of that contract, it becomes unnecessary to pass upon other questions.

That portion of the judgment from which the plaintiff, L. W. Blinn Lumber Company, appealed is reversed, and the trial court is directed to amend its judgment so as to recognize and enforce the lien of the plaintiff as claimed by it for the full amount of the balance due to it, as shown by the findings of fact.

GABBS v. COUNTRYMAN et al. (Civ. 2044.)

MORTGAGES ⚷25(3)—CONSIDERATION.

Plaintiff held defendant's note, secured by pledge of stock. Such note having matured without payment, it and the pledge were returned, and a note and mortgage executed and delivered by defendant to plaintiff. Held, that the cancellation of the previous note and return of the pledge were sufficient consideration for the note and mortgage.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; A. E. Graupner, Judge.

Suit by Milton F. Gabbs against R. H. Countryman and others, in which the defendant filed a cross-complaint. From judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying a motion for new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Walter M. Willett and R. H. Countryman, both of San Francisco, for appellants. Chickering & Gregory, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is a suit to foreclose a mortgage given to secure a promissory note executed by the defendants. Foreclosure was ordered against the mortgaged property, and defendants appeal from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

There is no merit in the first point, that the case was improperly or irregularly transferred from the department of the superior court to which it was originally assigned to the department of the court in which it was heard and determined.

Equally without force—savoring even of frivolity—are the objections to the rulings of the court on the admission and rejection of evidence.

The defendants in their answer and cross-complaint pleaded that there was no consideration for the execution of the note and mortgage, and they now contend that the finding of the trial court against them on that issue is not sustained by the evidence. This position is not well taken. The record shows that the plaintiff gave to the defendant R. H. Countryman the sum of $13,000 in consideration for a certain interest in the rentals of two buildings—the Delbert block and Countryman building—to be erected on the west side of Van Ness avenue in San Francisco shortly after the fire in April, 1906. Thereafter plaintiff became dissatisfied with the investment, and sold his interest in said rentals or buildings to said defendant, taking in exchange therefor the latter's promissory note for $14,072.50, secured by a pledge of 42 shares of the capital stock of the R. L. Radke Company. The note matured March 26, 1909. Nothing was paid upon it, and thereupon the note and the stock pledged as security for its payment were returned to Countryman, and the note and mortgage in suit were executed and delivered to the plaintiff. The consideration therefore for this note and mortgage, it is obvious, was the cancellation of the previous note and the return of the pledge, and the consideration for the first note was the relinquishment by plaintiff of any interest in the buildings, and the consideration for his interest in the buildings was the payment by him of the sum of $13,000 in cash to Countryman for such interest.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

POHLMANN v. PATTY, County Clerk.

(Civ. 2348.)

1. Elections 🔑115—Registration of Voters—Formal Defects in Affidavits.

Where county clerk of county, in making affidavits of registration of qualified voters, failed and neglected to enter fact that person being registered could read the Constitution in English, and could write his or her name, which was in fact the case, and failed to enter in other affidavits the number of the room and the floor or number of the room or floor occupied by the affiants, by receiving such affidavits and accepting them for registration purposes more than 30 days prior to an election to be held in a city, and by holding them in his office, together with the other affidavits of registration constituting the great register of the county, without objecting to their sufficiency when they were presented, and when he received them, the county clerk makes the certificates a part of the great register, and, having done so, he is without power to cancel the certificates or to withhold them from use in the election, and is without power thereby to deprive the registered voters of the right to vote at the election, since the clerk's acceptance of the certificates amounts to a judgment making them a part of the great register, though they are formally defective.

2. Elections 🔑108—Affidavits of Registration—Cancellation—Statutes.

The instances specified in Pol. Code, § 1106, setting forth the instances in which it is made the duty of the county clerk to cancel entries of registration of voters, do not include the cancellation of affidavits of registration on account of defects of form, or on account of failure of the affidavits to contain answers to questions as to whether affiant could read the Constitution in English, etc., which, under section 1097, should have been answered; the provisions of the latter section being directory and not mandatory.

3. Elections 🔑106—Affidavit of Registration—Refusal to Receive—Formal Defects—Statute.

County clerk might refuse to receive an affidavit of registration of a qualified elector defective in that it does not contain answers to questions as to whether affiant can read the Constitution in English, etc., required by Pol. Code, § 1097. In determining the sufficiency of affidavits, the clerk's acts are of a judicial nature, and, before accepting them, it is his duty to pass upon the certificates and see that they are sufficient in form.

4. Elections 🔑108—Affidavits of Registration—Alteration by Clerk to Supply Formal Defects—Statute.

After accepting affidavits of registration of qualified voters so that they have become a part of the great register, the county clerk is without authority to change the affidavits by supplying omitted entries as to whether affiants can read the Constitution in English, etc., matters which, under Pol. Code, § 1097, should have been answered.

Petition for mandamus by Frank Pohlmann against L. R. Patty, as County Clerk of San Bernardino County. Peremptory writ of mandate ordered to issue.

Ralph E. Swing and Frank T. Bates, both of San Bernardino, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. On petition of Frank Pohlmann, an alternative writ was issued to L. R. Patty, as county clerk of the county of San Bernardino, requiring him to appear and show cause why a peremptory writ of mandate should not issue directing him to transmit, as part of the great register of the county of San Bernardino, certain affidavits of registration to the boards of election appointed to hold and conduct an election called to be held in the city of San Bernardino on the 9th day of April, 1917. Without any formal return, the respondent appeared personally before this court and stated that he is ready and willing to submit to such order as the court shall make; it being understood that the decision will be made upon the facts alleged in the petition.

For more than 30 days prior to the 9th day of April, 1917, the petitioner, and each of the other persons whose names are set forth in two certain exhibits attached to the petition, registered as qualified electors of the city of San Bernardino by subscribing and swearing to the affidavit of registration provided for that purpose by the respondent county clerk, and then and there answered each and every question asked of them. At the time of so registering, each of said petitioners was a resident of the precinct from which he registered. At said time, respondent failed and neglected, and has since failed and neglected, to enter in the affidavit of registration of each of the persons named in Exhibit A the fact that such person being registered could read the Constitution in the English language and could write his or her name. In fact, each of said persons could read the Constitution in the English language and could write his or her name. Respondent failed and neglected to enter in the affidavit of registration of each of said persons whose names appear in Exhibit B the number of the room and the floor or number of the room or floor occupied by said persons. Prior to the filing of this petition, the petitioner demanded that the respondent make the omitted entries in each and all of such affidavits of registration, but respondent refused to make such entries or correct such affidavits of registration. The respondent contends that each of said registrations is void and illegal, and that it forms no part of the great register of said county, and threatens to take and remove each of said affidavits of registration from the great register of said county, and threatens to withhold said affidavits of registration and not send or transmit the same or any of them to the boards of election appointed to conduct an election to be held in the city of San Bernardino on the 9th day of April, 1917. The petitioner maintains this proceeding for and on behalf of himself and the numerous persons whose names appear in said exhibits.

The affidavits in question showed all the qualifications of the electors as required by sections 1096 and 1097 of the Political Code, except as above stated. They have been regularly received and are in the hands of the clerk as affidavits of registration made by qualified electors. It is not contended that any reason exists why they should not be transmitted to the boards of election of the several precincts, except on account of those formal defects.

[1-3] It is our opinion that by receiving said affidavits of registration and accepting them for registration purposes at the times when presented and holding them in his office, together with the other affidavits of registration constituting the great register of San Bernardino county, without objecting to their sufficiency at the time when they were presented and when he received them, the county clerk made those certificates a part of the great register of said county. Having done so, he is without power to cancel those certificates or to withhold the same from use in the election to be held, and is without power thereby to deprive those registered voters of the right to vote at the election. Section 1106 of the Political Code sets forth the instances in which it is made the duty of the clerk to cancel entries of registration of voters. The instances there specified do not include the cancellation of an affidavit of registration on account of any defects of form, or on account of failure of the affidavits to contain answers to questions of the character hereinabove specified which, under the provisions of section 1097 of the Political Code, should have been answered. The provisions of the statute affecting the matters in question are directory and not mandatory. We do not doubt that the clerk might refuse to receive a defective affidavit, and it might be his duty to so refuse. The law places in his hands the business of receiving affidavits of registration and making up the great register. In determining the sufficiency of the affidavits, his acts are of a judicial nature, and before accepting them it is his duty to pass upon the certificates and see that they are sufficient in form. His acceptance of the certificates amounts to a judgment making them a part of the great register. Thereupon the qualified voter becomes entitled to have his name upon the great register, and the clerk is not vested with authority to thereafter remove it therefrom. If subsequently there should occur any facts of the description contained in section 1106 of the Political Code, that section states that the clerk must cancel the registration, or, if any facts occur which result in a judgment of cancellation of a registration, it may be eliminated thereby as provided by section 1109 of the Political Code. In the absence of any of those conditions, the clerk may not interfere with the legal effect of any registration of a voter, and it is his duty to send the affidavits of registration to the boards of election as provided by law.

[4] Referring to the complaint of petitioner that respondent has refused to alter the affidavits of registration referred to in the petition by supplying the omitted entries therein, we are of the opinion that the county clerk is without authority to change them after they have been accepted and have become a part of the great register. The statements contained in such affidavits are the evidence furnished by the voter upon which the clerk has acted in receiving the voter's name for registration.

It is ordered that a peremptory writ of mandate issue to the respondent, directing that he furnish and transmit to the boards of election appointed to hold and conduct said election in the city of San Bernardino, as part of the great register of said county, the affidavits of registration referred to in the petition.

REECE et ux. v. RHOADES et ux. (No. 870.)

(Supreme Court of Wyoming. June 11, 1917.)

1. ACCOUNT 🔑7—PROSPECTIVE PARTNERSHIP—MISAPPROPRIATION.

Where parties entered into an agreement to form a partnership at a later time, and some of the parties furnished money for the use of the prospective partnership, and the other parties misappropriated the funds, it was not essential to an accounting that the partnership have been actually formed regardless of the erroneous naming of the relationship in the petition as a partnership.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Account, Cent. Dig. §§ 20, 21.]

2. ACCOUNT 🔑7—EQUITABLE RELIEF.

Where parties entered into an agreement to form a partnership and some of them furnished money which the others used in purchasing cattle to be owned by the partnership, and later they sold the cattle under a claim of sole ownership, the parties furnishing the money were entitled to equitable relief.

3. JOINT ADVENTURES 🔑1—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

A joint adventure partakes of the nature of a partnership and is governed substantially by the same rules of law, the principal distinctions being that a joint adventure usually relates to a single transaction, though it may comprehend the business continued for a period of years, and that one party may sue the other at law for a breach of the contract or a share of the profits or losses or for contribution for advances without precluding a suit in equity for an accounting or for a dissolution, and a joint adventure contract need not be express.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑273(9) — SCOPE OF REVIEW—PRESERVATION OF EXCEPTIONS.

A mere general exception to findings of fact and conclusions of law made in accordance with a request therefor will not present for consideration an objection that the findings are imperfect or their sufficiency as a compliance with the statute upon a request for a separate statement in writing of findings of fact and conclusions of law.

Error to District Court, Park County; Carroll H. Parmelee, Judge.

Suit by C. J. Rhoades and wife against Arthur Reece and wife. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

E. E. Enterline, of Billings, Mont., W. L. Walls, of Cody, and W. E. Mullen, of Cheyenne, for plaintiffs in error. W. L. Simpson and J. H. Van Horn, both of Cody, and Lonabaugh & Wenzell, of Sheridan, for defendants in error.

POTTER, C. J. This action was brought in the district court by the defendants in error, C. J. Rhoades and B. A. Rhoades, seeking equitable relief, including an accounting, the appointment of a receiver, and a judgment for the amount found to be due the plaintiffs to be paid out of certain property referred to in the petition as partnership property. There was a general denial of the material averments of the petition, and a trial by the court resulted in granting some of the relief prayed for. The case is here on error, but without the evidence; the errors assigned relating to the sufficiency of the petition and findings of fact to sustain the conclusions of law and judgment or authorize the relief demanded or granted.

The petition alleges and the court found that on the date thereof the plaintiffs and defendants entered into the following written agreement:

> "Livingston, Mont., April 25, 1912.
> "This an article of agreement for and between Arthur Reece and Alice Reece, his wife, parties of the first part and C. J. Rhoades and B. A. Rhoades his wife, parties of the second part, wherein the parties of the first part are owners or controllers of a body of land held under different grants, namely, homestead desert claims and leases, etc., controlling mountain range and water filings and rights (as per description attached) do hereby bargain and agree to become and entertain parties of the second part as full and one half interest copartners in all lands grants leases and holdings real estate and personal property for a consideration of six thousand dollars ($6,000.00) to be paid by parties of the second part, in installments best suited to all parties on or before October 1, 1915; one thousand dollars ($1,000.00) of this amount to be paid on or before June 1, 1912, of which shall be used to pay all outstanding acts, and debts of first parties: the remaining $5,000.00 to be invested on the ranch or in live stock and improvements and shall become a part of this said whole property as controlled by this agreement under the same agreement (copartnership) as herein afore mentioned. Parties of the second part further agree to share equally in expenses or all moneys actually expended for ranch improvements and stock purchased."

After setting forth this agreement, the petition refers to it as a partnership agreement and alleges due performance by the plaintiffs of everything required of them thereby, that they had paid to defendants thereunder various sums of money and turned over to them cattle of the value of $1,700, and contributed under the agreement, with the knowledge and consent of defendants, in money and cattle an amount in excess of $6,000; that the defendants had failed and refused and were unable to perform the same and had made default therein, except that they had delivered to the plaintiffs a relinquishment of a certain land entry made under the laws of the United States; that on or about October 15, 1915, in disregard of the agreement, the defendants took exclusive possession and control of the real and personal property "of said copartnership," and ever since have claimed sole ownership thereof, and the right to sell, dispose of, and incumber the same, and divert the money so acquired to their own use; that they have failed and refused to account to the plaintiffs "for any part of the partnership" property or effects or for moneys furnished them by the plaintiffs and expended by the defendants or converted to their own use, and have converted to their own use moneys furnished by the plaintiffs for carrying out the objects mentioned in the agreement; that the defendants threaten and are about to sell the cattle aforesaid and appropriate the proceeds thereof to their own use, in disregard of the rights of the plaintiffs; that defendants have failed and neglected to expend any money in the improvement of the ranch, except a small amount furnished by plaintiffs, or to expend for stock any of the money furnished by the plaintiffs; that the cattle aforesaid were purchased by the plaintiffs and turned over to the defendants "under said copartnership agreement"; that by reason of said acts and omissions of the defendants the plaintiffs have and are greatly and irreparably damaged; that defendants and each of them are insolvent, and the plaintiffs have no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy at law.

Relief is prayed substantially as follows: That the partnership be dissolved, and a receiver appointed of all the personal property of the partnership; that the defendants be required to deliver to such receiver all books of account, checks, and memoranda in their possession relating to the business, dealings, or transactions of the partnership; that an account be taken of all the partnership business, dealings, and transactions, and of the moneys paid by the plaintiffs in relation thereto; that the live stock be decreed to the plaintiffs; that the defendants be enjoined from interfering with the partnership property and effects; that upon an accounting the amount due the plaintiffs be found and the same paid out of the partnership property, and the remainder of such property, if any, be apportioned between the parties according to their respective interests as may be found by the court, and such other relief as may be just and equitable in the premises.

It appears that on the same day that the petition was filed, January 8, 1916, a receiver was appointed and he was directed to take possession of all property belonging to the parties to the action, including all books of account and papers bearing upon the partnership transactions of the parties, and the parties were ordered to deliver to the receiver all of the property of the partnership or claimed by either party as partnership property. There is no report of the receiver in this record, but it appears from the findings that he had taken possession of certain personal property, and directions are given thereby and by the judgment for disposing of the same.

As above stated the evidence is not before us, but the court stated in writing its findings of fact and conclusions of law, pursuant to a request therefor. Owing to the length and narrative form of such findings and conclusions a recital of the facts as found will be confined to the essential or more prominent facts, but deemed sufficient to show generally the relation and conduct of these parties, omitting several merely incidental matters important only as part of the history of the business relations of the parties following the making of the agreement aforesaid, and as tending to explain the continuance thereof without a more definite understanding.

It is recited in the findings as a preliminary statement that it is conceded by counsel that the case "is a remarkable one in many respects, particularly in regard to the very crude methods of doing business exhibited by the parties." The case is a remarkable one. Although the written agreement aforesaid recites that the defendants (described in the agreement as parties of the first part) "are owners and controllers of a body of land held under different grants, namely, homestead desert claims and leases, etc., controlling mountain range and water filings and rights," the court finds that the only land owned or controlled by the defendants was a homestead entry of one of them, Arthur Reece, indefinitely marked on account of defective surveys, upon which he had not been able to make final proof because of the failure of the government authorities to file amended plats showing the definite location of the same, but that immediately prior to the date of the agreement said Arthur Reece and C. J. Rhoades, one of the plaintiffs and a dentist by profession residing in Kansas City, Kan., met and visited the former's ranch in Park county, who then pointed out to the latter the land claimed by him, and other land which he had in mind to acquire title to through desert and other entries, the location of mountain range, and other advantages for running stock; whereupon propositions were discussed for entering into a partnership, and with that in view that they went to Livingston, Mont., where the defendant Alice Reece then was, and entered into the written agreement aforesaid. It is also found that, outside of said homestead entry, a permit for the use of a reservoir site, and a rejected desert application of Alice Reece, there were no filings, entries, or rights of any kind by either of the defendants to any land in the vicinity of the ranch.

It is found, however, that the plaintiffs learned of such condition in the spring of 1914, and then ceased to expect or require a conveyance to them by defendants of any rights under the land laws or of any lands, but made unsuccessful efforts to enter land originally believed to be part of defendants' holdings, to acquire a home thereby and further the contemplated project of engaging in the stock business in that locality; that C. J. Rhoades also after that time applied for and obtained a reservoir permit to irrigate his contemplated homestead, upon the same site covered by the permit of Arthur Reece which had expired by limitation.

Notwithstanding this situation as to the lands claimed by defendants to have been owned or controlled by them, the plaintiffs, as the court finds, made the payments provided for in the agreement, the specific finding in that respect being as follows:

> "That payments had been made to the defendants by the plaintiffs in cash or in goods furnished to them or bills paid for them by the plaintiffs in the total sum of $5,901.26; that the plaintiffs claim payments in excess of the sum of $6.000, the chief difference in accounts being in this, that the plaintiffs allege the furnishing of one horse in the amount of $140, and a sulky plow in the amount of $31.75, the receipt of which the defendants deny. The property above referred to is at hand and in the hands of the receiver and can be returned to the plaintiffs. Other charges not acquiesced in by the defendants are of slight amount and can be rejected by the court, thus accepting as correct the statement of the defendants as to the amount of the property furnished and received. The above amount included $1,700 paid by the plaintiffs for the purchase of some cattle on August 27, 1914, from John Dahlem and branded in the brand then owned by Arthur Reece, to which he subsequently, on the 4th day of September, 1914, transferred a one-half interest to Charles J. Rhoades, one of the plaintiffs herein."

The court further finds that at least $1,000 was paid and applied for the purpose mentioned in the written agreement, viz. toward the discharge of the debts of the defendants, "but that said sum was insufficient to pay all of said debts, and that the defendants constantly importuned plaintiffs for more money to be applied to that purpose," and that numerous other sums were furnished by the plaintiffs for such purpose, and a large portion paid after the payment of the $1,000 aforesaid "was furnished to the defendants in compliance with their repeated requests and demands for living expenses, for the support and education of their children, for excursions, medical treatment, and various other purposes aside from any matters contemplated by the original agreement, with the full knowledge of the plaintiffs of the purpose for which the money was solicited, and of the fact that it was being applied for purposes entirely different from those contemplated in the agreement." But the court also finds that the plaintiffs frequently remonstrated with the defendants for such diversion of the money and protested against its being done; that these protests and remonstrances were met by explanations, importunities, and promises that when the present object should have been accomplished the defendants would then be in a better position to carry out the original purpose of their contemplated partnership, and that both parties would profit thereby; that the plaintiffs accepted such promises and acquiesced in the delays and diversion of said money, believing, however, that the total amount of their payment would in the end inure to their benefit and enable the partnership business to be carried on to better advantage; that they did not agree to the ultimate and complete appropriation by the defendants of the right and benefit of all such payments, without expectation of return to themselves.

It also appears from the findings that during the period of such payments the defendants gave the plaintiffs their notes for some of the money so advanced, viz. one note for $800 dated June 28, 1912, one for $800, dated December 5, 1912, and one for $1,600, dated November 18, 1913, securing the note of June 28, 1912, by a chattel mortgage upon a team and other farm property of the defendants; that on or about September 4, 1914, at or about the time of the transfer to the plaintiffs of a half interest in the cattle brand of defendants, the plaintiffs returned to the defendants the chattel mortgage aforesaid and the note for $1,600, with the intention of canceling and releasing the same, and retained the other two notes; that in January, 1915, the plaintiffs purchased hay paying $100 therefor, which was used for feeding the cattle purchased as aforesaid, and in June and July, 1915, other stated amounts for grazing the cattle on the forest reserve and for putting up hay for the cattle, and that during that summer C. J. Rhoades and Arthur Reece each worked in the hayfield in putting up hay for the use of said cattle; that the written agreement aforesaid does not seem to have been regarded by either of the parties as establishing a partnership relation between them at the time, but that they apparently expected to become associated as partners in the future, having in view large schemes for conducting a live stock, tourist, and guide business; the tourist and guide business having been considered by them after entering into the written agreement; that Arthur Reece frequently wrote to C. J. Rhoades during the period aforesaid describing the condition of affairs at the ranch and in the county, suggesting projects for investment, "and portraying in gorgeous terms the future and profitable progress of their business"; that in one letter, in August, 1912, suggesting the purchase of horses and saddles which would be needed in the tourist business, he wrote:

> "Everything I buy will be partnership stuff. I'll give you credit for one-half and note also as we talked."

And in another:

> "Well, pard, tell Mrs. Rhoades for me that I think you folks are making fifty per cent. on every dollar invested up here so far. Our place will sell for double what I let you in for, as soon as it is proved up on."

During the season of 1915, the findings state, there were more acute contentions between the parties, the defendants demanding that plaintiffs furnish more cattle to be run with those previously purchased, and a bill of sale to them for a one-half interest in the latter, the plaintiffs complaining of the diversion by defendants of a large part of the money paid them from the purpose intended by the written agreement, and of the branding of the cattle with the brand of defendants, but that until the latter part of the summer or early autumn of 1915 the cattle that had been purchased as aforesaid were treated by the parties as the property of both plaintiffs and defendants, with equal interest therein, and that such was the intention of both parties when the cattle were purchased; that finally, some time in the fall of 1915, the defendant Arthur Reece informed the plaintiffs that said cattle belonged to him, and that the plaintiffs had no interest therein, that he had sold some of them and the proceeds belonged to him. And the court finds that said Reece had sold five head of the cattle and converted the proceeds ($245) to his own use, and had butchered one head.

In substance, the material conclusions of law of the trial court are as follows: That the written agreement aforesaid was not one constituting a partnership at the time, but was an agreement to enter into a partnership; that the parties did not become partners at the time of signing the agreement, and at that time did not own or possess any property as a partnership, but their agreement was for a partnership in the future when there might be property to come under it; that none of the property in the receiver's possession can be considered as partnership property, except the cattle and hay; that whatever copartnership existed between the parties at any time "existed only by virtue of the purchase of property to be held in the contemplation of the parties as partnership property, and embraced in such agreement as might be made for the handling of such property"; that until the purchase of the cattle aforesaid no property had been bought by defendants as contemplated by the original agreement, but all moneys paid them by plaintiffs had been converted to their own use until, on August 27, 1914, through the joint efforts and negotiations of the plaintiffs and defendants, and through the payment of money by the plaintiffs, the cattle aforesaid were purchased "as and for partnership property, and that said cattle, together with the increase thereof, constitute the only property purchased and owned and acknowledged by both parties to be partnership property; that as a matter of law, the said property having been purchased through the efforts of both parties with the intention that such property should become partnership property, and that purchase having been made from the proceeds of moneys provided by the said agreement of April 25, 1912, to be paid by the plaintiffs to the defendants for the purpose of investment in partnership property, a partnership was then and there as a matter of law created between the parties hereto with respect to said cattle in which each party had and has an undivided one-half interest, saving and excepting, however, that the said partnership so as above formed in contemplation of law by the acts of the parties in pursuance of the previous agreement to enter into a partnership may have acquired as partnership property the ownership of certain hay heretofore fed and now being fed to said cattle and designed by both parties for that purpose"; that, the court having jurisdiction for one purpose will determine all issues submitted to it, and the mutual claims of the parties, particularly the claim of plaintiffs for money paid pursuant to the written agreement, though not an equitable matter, having been submitted to the court, with evidence thereon on behalf of both parties, the same may be determined and settled in this action; that the plaintiffs are entitled to an account as to the application of their payments under the agreement; that of the total amount paid by the plaintiffs, viz. $5,901.26, the following sums, amounting to $3,111.74, were applied as contemplated by the agreement: $1,000 toward the discharge of the debts of defendants; $250 expended in real estate improvements; $1,700 expended in the purchase of cattle; $161.74 expended for labor, hay, and taxes; that the balance, $2,789.52, was misapplied by the defendants, and appropriated to their own use; that defendants are accountable to the plaintiffs for that amount, in which, if it had been properly applied, plaintiffs would have been entitled to a one-half interest; that defendants are also chargeable for the money received for the five head of cows sold by them, in which plaintiffs are entitled to a one-half interest, making the total amount due the plaintiffs from the defendants $1,517.26.

The court then concludes by finding generally for the plaintiffs; that the receiver was properly appointed to take charge of the partnership property; that certain personal property in his hands belonged to the plaintiffs and should be returned to them; that certain other personal property in his hands is the individual property of defendants and should be returned to them; that 57 head of neat cattle, as described by the receiver, and the hay mentioned by him, as well as the cattle brand, are partnership property, and should be sold by the receiver in the manner provided by law for the sale of property upon execution; that the receiver care for the cattle until the sale, and be authorized to incur all necessary expense for feeding and handling them; that the two notes of defendants for $800 each, being merged in the judgment, be canceled; and that the proceeds of the sale of the cattle be divided equally, one-half to be set aside for the plaintiffs, and the remaining one-half applied: (1) To payment of the costs of the action, the receiver's costs and expenses incident to the care and sale of the property, and his compensation; (2) to the payment of the sum of $1,517.26 found due to the plaintiffs; (3) the balance, if any, to be delivered to the defendants. Judgment was thereupon entered in favor of the plaintiffs for the said sum of $1,517.26 and costs, and ordering the sale of the cattle in the receiver's hands and distribution of the proceeds as aforesaid, and that the partnership then existing be dissolved. There was a general exception by defendants to each and all the findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the judgment.

[1] The principal contention of the defendants, plaintiffs in error here, seems to be that the facts found by the trial court do not show a partnership between the parties, and therefore furnish no ground for an accounting, the appointment of a receiver, or other equitable relief. It was not necessary for the plaintiffs below to show the existence of a partnership to give them a right to an accounting and the other relief granted as to the money paid by them and misapplied by the defendants and the property jointly owned. The petition alleges the making of the written agreement aforesaid and the performance thereof by the plaintiffs on their part, the payment of the money thereby required, including the purchase of cattle of the value of $1,700 with the knowledge and consent of defendants, the conversion by the defendants to their own use of the money so paid without accounting therefor, and their taking exclusive possession and claiming sole ownership of the joint property. It is true that the petition refers to the agreement as a partnership agreement and to the relation between the parties as a partnership. But if upon the facts alleged and found by the court the plaintiffs would be entitled to an accounting and the other relief asked and granted as to the money and property involved, it is immaterial that the relation between the parties may have been erroneously named in the petition or alleged to be a partnership. 1 Cyc. 437; Coward v. Clanton, 122 Cal. 451, 55 Pac. 147; Marston v. Gould, 69 N. Y. 220; Kahn v. Central Smelting Co., 102 U. S. 641, 26 L. Ed. 266; Valdes v. Larrinaga, 233 U. S. 705, 34 Sup. Ct. 750, 58 L. Ed. 1163; Shirley v. Goodnough, 15 Or. 642, 16 Pac. 871. And we think it clear that, whatever the effect of the written agreement or the subsequent conduct and transactions of the parties as to providing for or creating a partnership, and if it be conceded that said agreement was for a partnership at some future time only, a fiduciary relationship was established by the payment of money by the plaintiffs under the agreement and the circumstances stated in the findings entitling them to an accounting; the court having found that the greater part of the money was not applied by the defendants as provided or contemplated by the agreement. 6 Pomeroy's Eq. Juris. §§ 931-933; 1 Cyc. 427; Darrah v. Boyce, 62 Mich. 480, 29 N. W. 102; Petrie v. Torrent, 88 Mich. 43, 49 N. W. 1076; Wilson v. Kennedy, 63 W. Va. 1, 59 S. E. 736; Templeton v. Bockler, 73 Or. 494, 144 Pac. 405; King v. Barnes, 109 N. Y. 267, 16 N. E. 332.

[2] But the court found that certain cattle had been purchased by the parties with money furnished by the plaintiffs under the agreement, with the intention of both parties at the time of the purchase that such cattle should be the property of plaintiffs and defendants with equal interests therein, that the cattle were thereupon treated and cared for by said parties as their joint property, and that Arthur Reece, one of the defendants, transferred to C. J. Rhoades, one of the plaintiffs, a half interest in the brand belonging to him with which the cattle were branded. And the court found as a conclusion of law that a partnership was created as to said cattle. We do not construe that finding as holding that the partnership was created or existed merely by operation of law without an agreement of any kind, but that a partnership was to be inferred from the intention and conduct of the parties in connection with the written agreement providing for the investment of a greater part of the money to be paid thereunder in live stock and improvements. We think it unnecessary to consider very closely whether the findings of fact are sufficient to justify that conclusion. The parties were at least co-owners of the cattle, and the plaintiff had expended money, and both of the parties' time and labor jointly, in caring for and providing feed for them; and such joint ownership, under the circumstances of the case and the claim of defendants of sole ownership and their threat to sell and retain the proceeds for their own benefit, would, we think, authorize equitable relief. Freeman on Cotenancy, § 321; 1 Cyc. 417; 6 Pomeroy's Eq. Juris. § 933.

[3] If not strictly a partnership the relation between the parties as to the cattle might not improperly be considered and treated as a joint adventure, and it would be immaterial that the court called it a partnership, for a joint adventure partakes of the nature of a partnership and is governed substantially by the same rules of law; the principal distinctions being that a joint adventure usually relates to a single transaction, though it may comprehend a business to be continued for a period of years, and that one party may sue the other at law for a breach of the contract or a share of the profits or losses, or for contribution for advances, without, however, precluding a suit in equity for an accounting, or for dissolution. And the contract need not be express, but may be implied from the conduct of the parties. 23 Cyc. 453, 455, 461; Goss v. Lanin, 170 Iowa, 57, 152 N. W. 43; Saunders v. McDonough, 191 Ala. 119, 67 South. 591; McRee v. Quitman Oil Co., 16 Ga. App. 12, 84 S. E. 487. The principles controlling the relation are stated on pages 455 and 456 of 23 Cyc., and in Goss v. Lanin, supra. In such a joint venture fiduciary relations are created between the parties, as in a partnership; and neither of the parties is authorized to appropriate the common property to his own use, without the consent of all his associates, or to deal therewith so as to secure an unfair advantage over those interested with him.

[4] The statement is made and repeated several times in the brief of plaintiffs in error that the trial court found that the written agreement had been abandoned by the parties. We do not so understand the findings. We suppose such statement to be based upon one paragraph to the effect that soon after the agreement was entered into the parties began a course of conduct apparently inconsistent with the agreement. But that must be read and considered in connection with the other findings, which plainly show that the trial court regarded the agreement as continuing in force and as having been complied with on the part of the plaintiffs. Several of the conclusions of law are criticized as a finding of fact rather than of law, or containing findings of fact. But we find in the record no specific exception to the findings or conclusions on that ground. There was merely a general exception. It was held in Hilliard v. Douglas Oil Fields, 20 Wyo. 201, 122 Pac. 626, that a mere general exception to findings of fact and conclusions of law made in accordance with a request therefor will not present for consideration an objection that the findings are imperfect or their sufficiency as a compliance with the statute upon a request for a separate statement in writing of findings of fact and conclusions of law. But we do not regard the fact that some findings of fact may have been blended with the conclusions of law as prejudicial to the plaintiffs in error. Indeed, in some of such instances referred to in the brief the matters complained of as a finding of fact rather than a conclusion of law is but a restatement, though in somewhat different language, of facts found and stated in the findings of fact.

We think it necessary only to say in conclusion that, in our opinion, the facts found by the court clearly present a case for equitable relief and support the relief granted. The judgment will therefore be affirmed. Affirmed.

B. F. GOODRICH RUBBER CO. v. HELENA MOTOR CAR CO., et al. (No. 3764.)

CORPORATIONS ⚷342—DIRECTORS—LIABILITY FOR DEBTS—SUFFICIENCY OF RESIGNATION.

Notwithstanding Rev. Codes, § 3852, authorizing any director or officer of a corporation to resign by delivering or mailing his written resignation to the secretary or president and filing with the county clerk and recorder a duplicate of the resignation, with an affidavit of delivery or mailing, and by publishing notice of such resignation, where a director and secretary of a corporation delivered his written resignation to the president, and thereafter refrained from acting as an officer or director, he was not liable for the debts of the corporation subsequently incurred, because of the subsequent failure of the other directors to file an annual statement, since such resignation would have been sufficient at common law, and the statute does not prescribe an exclusive method.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1486-1488.]

Appeal from District Court, Lewis and Clark County; J. M. Clements, Judge.

Action by the B. F. Goodrich Rubber Company against the Helena Motor Car Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Herman A. Freyler appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

A. P. Heywood and Edward Horsky, both of Helena, for appellant. Wight & Pew, of Helena, for respondent.

SANNER, J. On October 11, 1913, Herman A. Freyler, R. A. De Witt, and Claud Robinson became directors of the corporation, Helena Motor Car Company. Freyler continued to act as such director until December 1, 1913, at which time he entered into a contract for the sale of all his stock in the company and delivered to its president the following writing:

> "Helena, Montana, Dec. 1, 1913.
> "Board of Directors of Helena Motor Car Co., City—Gentlemen: I hereby tender my resignation as secretary and a director of the Helena Motor Car Company, the same to take effect at once.
> "Yours truly, Herman A. Freyler."

Thereafter, and on January 31, 1914, the company became indebted to the respondent in the sum of $173.57, which upon demand it failed to pay, whereupon the respondent brought this action against the company, Freyler, De Witt, and Robinson—joining the latter three because as directors they had failed to file the annual statement required by law and due on January 20, 1914. Freyler resisted the suit, but judgment was entered against him according to the complaint, and from that judgment he prosecutes this appeal.

The contention of the appellant was and is that by virtue of his resignation he had ceased to be a director of the company before the duty to file the annual statement accrued, and therefore cannot be held to answer for the failure in that respect; while the respondent insists that the writing above quoted was ineffective, under section 3852 of the Revised Codes, and therefore Freyler is responsible. The section referred to provides:

> "Any director, trustee or other officer of a corporation may resign his office by delivering to the secretary or president of the corporation, or depositing in the post office, * * * addressed to the corporation, at its principal place of business, his written resignation, and filing in the office of the clerk and recorder of the county where the principal office or place of business of the said corporation is situated, a > duplicate of the said resignation, together with an affidavit of the delivery or mailing of said resignation, as above specified, or an acknowledgment of service thereof and by publishing in two consecutive issues of the official paper of the county where said company may be doing business, a notice of said resignation, and the director, trustee, or other officer shall upon such filing and publication no longer be responsible for any act or default of the corporation, or of the other officers thereof, occurring after the date of said filing: Provided, however, that any director, trustee, or other officer, shall also comply with the by-laws of the corporation relating to resignations of directors or officers. This act shall apply to resident directors of foreign corporations having a place or places of business in this state, as well as to directors and other officers of domestic corporations."

The corporation had no by-laws on the subject, and it is conceded that Freyler did nothing more than to deliver the writing above mentioned to its president and thereafter to refrain from acting as an officer or director of the company. At the common law, however, this would have sufficed (3 Thompson on Corporations, §§ 3886, 4358; Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U. S. 132, 11 Sup. Ct. 924, 35 L. Ed. 662), and therefore was sufficient here, unless the section just quoted prescribes an exclusive method for resigning a directorship. We do not believe that such is its effect. Its language does not clearly indicate an intention to prescribe an exclusive method, but rather indicates a mode which is permissive, designed primarily for cases where the ordinary method may not be available or where positive proof of the resignation may be desired. The section forms no part of the law imposing the duty of filing annual statements (chapter 63, Tenth Session Laws), and there is no special reason to believe that its provisions were enacted for the benefit of creditors. Counsel for respondent suggests that:

> "It prevents a man of great financial prominence, who has become a director in a corporation, from secretly resigning, and permitting creditors to make contracts with the corporation upon the strength of his supposed connection therewith, and using his previous secret resignation as a shield from liability."

But we do not understand that directors are personally liable at all events for the debts of the corporation, or that the creditors deal with a corporation upon the contingent liability of its directors, effective only in case the latter fail to see that annual statements are filed. Least of all can creditors be especially concerned in the mode by which some one, on whose responsibility they could not have relied, has severed his relations with the corporation before their debt accrued or the annual statement was due.

In our opinion, the resignation of the appellant Freyler from the board of directors of the Helena Motor Car Company was sufficient. He had ceased to be a director of the company before the debt evidenced by this judgment was incurred and before the annual statement was due. Failure to file that statement, or cause it to be filed, is therefore not a wrong which can be imputed to him; and as this is the only ground on which the claim of his liability is based, it follows that the right result was not reached in this case.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, and the cause is remanded, with directions to enter judgment for the appellant.

BROCKWAY v. BLAIR. (No. 3768.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑757(3)—BRIEFS—SPECIFICATIONS OF ERROR.

As expressly provided by Supreme Court Rule 10, subd. "b" (123 Pac. xii), where the admission of evidence is specified in the brief as error, the full substance of the evidence admitted should be quoted.

2. CONTRACTS 🔑169—CONSTRUCTION—SURROUNDING CIRCUMSTANCES.

If the language of an agreement is clear and expresses the intention of the parties explicitly, it needs no interpretation; but, if it is not clear and free from ambiguity, the attendant circumstances under which it was made may be examined to ascertain the intention of the parties.

3. EVIDENCE 🔑442(1), 461(1)—PAROL EVIDENCE—AMBIGUITY—INCOMPLETE WRITING.

Under Rev. Codes, §§ 5018, 7873, providing that when the terms of an agreement have been reduced to writing no evidence of the terms thereof is admissible other than the contents of the writing itself, a written agreement between plaintiff and defendant, whereby defendant agreed to furnish automobiles for plaintiff to sell in certain counties for 15 per cent. of the sales, all automobiles to be furnished on deposit of $100, and all orders and specifications to be in Lansing, 10 days prior to shipment, was not unambiguous so as to exclude evidence that it was understood that plaintiff was not expected to complete sales by his own unaided efforts but was to have the assistance of defendant's agents in closing sales, as the writing appeared to be nothing more than a brief memorandum of certain points of the agreement, specifying no prices or terms of sale and not making it clear whether cars were to be ordered from defendant or directly from the factory.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑757(4)—BRIEFS—SPECIFICATIONS OF ERROR.

The Supreme Court would be justified in refusing to consider an assignment of error complaining of the giving of an instruction not set out as required by Rule 10, subd. "b" (123 Pac. xii), with respect to specifications of error in the briefs.

5. TRIAL 🔑296(2)—INSTRUCTIONS—CURE BY OTHER INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for commissions on sales of automobiles under an agreement whereby plaintiff was to receive assistance from defendant's agents in closing sales, an instruction, authorizing recovery if plaintiff was instrumental in making any sale, though too indefinite standing alone, was not misleading, where the court further charged that in order for plaintiff to recover the jury must find that he was the moving cause of the sale being effected, and that the sale would not have been made had it not been for his solicitation and efforts.

6. TRIAL 🔑295(1) — INSTRUCTIONS — CONSTRUCTION AS A WHOLE.

Every paragraph of the charge is to be read with the context, and all the instructions considered together as constituting a single charge.

Appeal from District Court, Yellowstone County; Geo. W. Pierson, Judge.

Action by B. G. Brockway against H. B. Blair. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Miller & O'Connor, of Livingston, for appellant. Nichols & Wilson, of Billings, for respondent.

HOLLOWAY, J. In this action, plaintiff seeks to recover commissions alleged to be due upon the sale of three automobiles, under the following written agreement:

"This agreement made and entered into this 5th day of May, 1913, by and between H. B. Blair, of Livingston, and B. G. Brockway, of Billings, Montana, as follows: The said first party agrees to furnish Reo automobiles for the said second party to sell in Yellowstone and Carbon counties in the following manner: The said second party to get fifteen per cent. (15) of sales. Said first party to furnish all automobiles on deposit of one hundred dollars ($100.00) each, at time of order. All orders and specifications to be in Lansing ten days prior to shipment. H. B. Blair, First Party,
"By R. H. Bishir.
"B. G. Brockway, Second Party."

The circumstances under which a car was sold to Allard, one of the purchasers, will illustrate the three sales involved in this controversy. Cettergren was Brockway's agent at Laurel, and Bishir and Green were Blair's agents who worked to some extent in that vicinity. Cettergren testified that he made several trips to see Allard concerning the sale to him of a Reo car; that he demonstrated the car to Allard several times; that he took Bishir to Allard, and Bishir demonstrated the car to him; that afterwards and on the day Allard expressed his intention to purchase a car he introduced Green to Allard; that a sale was then completed by Green, who delivered the car to Allard. On cross-examination, the witness said:

"I know that Mr. Green would not have sold the car if it hadn't been for me, and I think I would have sold the car if it hadn't been for Green. Mr. Allard said he was ready to buy a car before Mr. Green spoke to him."

From the fact that a general verdict was returned in favor of plaintiff, we must assume that the jury accepted this testimony as true, so far at least as it tends to disclose the part which Brockway's agent played in effecting the sale. It is apparent that the efforts of Cettergren alone did not produce the sale, neither did the unaided efforts of Blair's agent effect it. The sale resulted from their combined efforts.

[1] Upon the theory that the agreement does not in terms expressly cover the case, the court permitted evidence to be introduced to the effect that it was understood by both parties, at the time the contract was executed, that Brockway was not expected to go out and complete the sales by his own unaided efforts; that, if it was necessary for him to have the assistance of Blair's agents in the community to close or complete a sale, such assistance would be furnished as a part of Blair's obligation under the contract; and that this understanding was carried into effect in making the sales which furnish the foundation for this controversy. The admission of this evidence is specified as error—as violating the provisions of sections 5018 and 7873, Revised Codes, which, so far as applicable here, are to the effect that, when the terms of an agreement have been reduced to writing by the parties, no evidence is admissible of the terms of the agreement other than the contents of the writing itself. "The full substance of the evidence admitted" is not quoted as required by Rule 10, subd. "b," of the rules of this court (123 Pac. xii), and the attention of counsel is directed to the fact that these rules are to be honored by their observance—not by their breach.

It is the contention of appellant that, under the terms of the agreement, Brockway was not entitled to any commission unless and until he made a sale complete in itself or made a contract of sale under which Blair could maintain an action for damages in case the prospective purchaser failed or refused to take the car. In other words, it is appellant's contention that the terms of the contract are explicit; that they interpret themselves and leave no room for the application of rules of construction or the introduction of evidence explanatory of the circumstances under which the agreement was made.

[2, 3] If the sale had been made by the unaided efforts of Brockway or his agent, there could not be any question of plaintiff's right to the commission. If the sale had resulted from the unaided efforts of Blair's agents, Brockway could not lay claim to the commission, for the contract did not give him exclusive territory. But what are the rights of the parties under the contract as they apply, or can be made to apply, to the Allard sale? Sections 5018 and 7873, above, refer to contracts complete in themselves and free from ambiguity and uncertainty. Sections 5025, 5030, 5036, and 5038 provide rules of interpretation where the terms of the agreement fail to explain themselves fully or are ambiguous or uncertain. If the language of the agreement is clear and expresses the intention of the parties explicitly, it needs no interpretation (Ming v. Pratt, 22 Mont. 262, 56 Pac. 279); but, if it is not clear and free from ambiguity, then the attendant circumstances under which the contract was made may be examined to furnish a key to the intention of the parties (Alywin v. Morley, 41 Mont. 191, 108 Pac. 778; Quirk v. Rich, 40 Mont. 552, 107 Pac. 821). We are not prepared to agree with counsel for appellant that the meaning of the language of this agreement is so far free from doubt that it can be said as a matter of law that it furnishes its own interpretation. That the writing does not contain all the terms of the agreement is apparent at once. Neither the price at which the cars were to be sold nor the terms of sale are specified. Certainly, it was not intended that Brockway might fix any price upon the cars or any terms which would suit him or better enable him to sell them. It is uncertain, too, whether Brockway was to order cars from Blair or directly from the factory. Indeed, the writing appears to be nothing more than a brief memorandum of certain points of their agreement, and the court ruled correctly in admitting the evidence.

Upon the facts found, Brockway was entitled to his commission upon these sales, for the parties had agreed that such assistance as was given him was due to him under the contract.

[4-6] The second assignment is that the court erred "in giving defendant's instruction No. 2½." The instruction is not set out as required by Rule 10, subd. "b." The defendant below is the appellant here, and we would be justified in refusing to consider the assignment because of this violation of the rule, or we might content ourselves with saying that a party will not be heard to complain of the action of the court in giving an instruction which he requests; but waiving the failure to observe the rule, and assuming, from the argument presented, that fault is found with plaintiff's offered instruction No. 1, given as instruction No. 4, and that the reference to defendant's instruction No. 2½ is merely an error, it is to be observed that, if instruction No. 4 stood alone and was the sole criterion for determining the circumstances under which plaintiff would be entitled to commission upon a sale in the making of which he received assistance from defendant, then there would be ground for appellant's complaint. The phrase, "was instrumental in making any sale," conveys practically no meaning. It is too indefinite to be of service to the jury in applying the evidence, but one particular paragraph of the entire charge cannot be segregated from the rest. Every paragraph is to be read with the context, and all the instructions considered together as constituting the single charge of the court. Stephens v. Elliott, 36 Mont. 92, 92 Pac. 45; Michalsky v. Centennial Brewing Co., 48 Mont. 1, 134 Pac. 307.

At the instance of defendant, the court gave the following instruction:

> "You are instructed that, in order for the plaintiff to recover by reason of any sale being made by him, you must find that the plaintiff was the moving cause of the sale being effected, and that the sale would not have been made had it not been for the solicitation and efforts of the plaintiff."

The court intended, and the jury must have understood, that these two instructions should be considered together as stating the circumstances under which the plaintiff would be entitled to the commission even though he received assistance from the defendant or his agent in completing the transaction. The two instructions are not incongruous or contradictory. The term "instrumental" is defined by the court to mean such contribution by the plaintiff as that, without it, the sale would not have been made. In other words, the plaintiff must have been the moving cause which produced the sale or the procuring cause of the sale. Armstrong v. Wann, 29 Minn. 126, 12 N. W. 345, approved in Shober v. Blackford, 46 Mont. 194, 127 Pac. 329. We think the jury could not have been misled, and that the evidence is sufficient to make out a case under the rule thus announced.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Affirmed.

KANE v. KANE. (No. 3767.)

1. DIVORCE 🔑303(1), 309—CUSTODY AND SUPPORT OF CHILDREN—MODIFICATION OF DECREE.

Under Rev. Codes, § 3678, providing that in an action for divorce the court may give such direction for the custody, care, and education of the children of the marriage as may seem necessary or proper, and may at any time vacate or modify the same, where a husband applied for modification of a decree making no mention of a child so as to permit him to see the child, and the wife asked that the decree be modified so as to require the husband to contribute to the child's support, the welfare of the child should have been the paramount consideration with the court.

2. DIVORCE 🔑297—CUSTODY AND SUPPORT OF CHILDREN—AGREEMENTS OF PARTIES.

Where on the same day on which a decree of divorce was granted a wife, making no mention of a child, the husband and wife entered into a separation agreement by which the wife was given the custody of the child and agreed to support it, though such agreement was binding upon the parties, it was not binding upon the child or the court, and, notwithstanding such agreement, the court might require the husband to contribute to the child's support, and might permit him to visit the child if the interests of the child would be thereby promoted.

3. DIVORCE 🔑303(3)—CUSTODY OF CHILDREN —MODIFICATION OF DECREE—EVIDENCE.

On an application for modifying a divorce decree, the evidence did not support the wife's contention that by a separation agreement the husband relinquished his right to see the child, or that she understood that he agreed to do so, and that such understanding on her part was a substantial inducement to her to enter into a separation agreement, where she testified that, though the terms of the agreement were fully discussed beforehand, she did not know she was to have the custody of the child until the agreement was finally submitted for her signature.

4. DIVORCE 🔑303(1)—CUSTODY OF CHILDREN —MODIFICATION OF DECREE.

On a husband's petition to modify a divorce decree to permit him to visit a child of the parties, the time, place, and duration of the visits, his conduct during them, and the extent to which he might have the child in his custody were all proper subjects for regulation by the court.

5. DIVORCE 🔑309—SUPPORT OF CHILDREN—MODIFICATION OF DECREE.

Where a husband petitioned the court to modify a divorce decree so as to permit him to see a child of the parties under such regulations as the court might impose, he would be in no position to complain if the court should require, as a condition precedent to his right to visit the child, that he contribute to the child's support.

6. DIVORCE 🔑303(1), 309—CUSTODY AND SUPPORT OF CHILDREN—MODIFICATION OF DECREE.

Where a husband petitioned the court to modify a divorce decree so as to permit him to see a child, and the wife asked that the husband's petition be denied, and that the decree be modified so as to require the husband to contribute to the child's support and it appeared that a separation agreement, giving the wife the custody of the child and requiring her to provide for its support, did not adequately provide for the child's welfare and secure to the parties the rights to which they deemed themselves entitled, the court should have made some appropriate order to meet these ends, instead of merely denying the husband's petition and taking no action on the wife's petition.

7. DIVORCE 🔑299—CUSTODY OF CHILDREN—MODIFICATION OF DECREE.

On a husband's petition for the modification of a divorce decree so as to permit him to see a child, unless he is morally unfit to associate with the child, he should be granted the right asked.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 788.]

Appeal from District Court, Valley County; Frank N. Utter, Judge.

Divorce suit by Margaret A. Kane against Richard H. Kane. From an order denying a petition to modify the decree, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Norris, Hurd & McKellar, of Glasgow, for appellant. Slattery & Kline, of Glasgow, for respondent.

HOLLOWAY, J. On April 10, 1915, Richard H. Kane and Margaret Kane, his wife, entered into a separation agreement which, among other things, provided that the wife, in consideration of $1,500 paid to her, relinquished all claims against the husband and his property, and agreed to support, maintain, and educate the minor child, the issue of the marriage, at her own proper expense and without further cost or expense to the father. On the same day the wife was awarded a decree of divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty, but no mention whatever was made of the child. The father undertook to visit the child, but was prevented by the mother, and on May 20, 1915, he petitioned the court to modify the decree so as to permit him to see the child under such regulations as the court might impose, and to prohibit the mother from removing the child from Glasgow, where both parents then resided. In response to an order to show cause the mother answered, pleading the settlement agreement and alleging that it was understood by both parties to it that the mother was to have the exclusive custody of the child, and that the father was not to enjoy the privilege of visiting it; that the father's visits are intended to and do annoy and vex the mother, and that the father is not a fit or proper person to associate with a child of such tender years. The answer concludes with a prayer that the father's petition be denied, that the decree be modified so as to require the father to contribute to the support of the mother and child, and that the father be compelled to pay an attorney fee on account of the supplemental proceedings At a hearing had, the father and mother testified at length. The court denied the father's petition, but made no order upon the counterpetition of the mother. From the order made, this appeal is prosecuted.

There is not any controversy over the rules of law applicable, and practically no dispute as to the facts developed at the hearing. While there is some evidence which reflects unfavorably upon the father, it seems reasonably certain that it could not have been deemed sufficiently prejudicial of itself to warrant the order which, in effect, denies the father the right to see or communicate with his child altogether. As we understand the testimony, the mother's objection to the father's visits is not grounded upon the latter's moral unfitness to associate with the child, but rather upon the fact that such visits annoy her and interfere with her work, and particularly upon the theory that, since under the separation agreement she is compelled to support the child, the father has no right to visit it so long as he does not contribute to its maintenance, and it must have been this theory which found favor with the court.

[1] We are unable to agree with counsel for respondent as to the character of the proceeding instituted by the father in filing his petition in the court below. Whatever may have been his intention in the premises, what he actually did was to invoke the jurisdiction of the court to modify the divorce decree so as to provide for the custody, control, and education of the child (subjects omitted altogether from the decree as originally rendered), as authorized by section 3678, Revised Codes. It would be difficult to conceive of a legal proceeding to regulate the father's visits to the child, independently of an order providing for its custody and control. Likewise the counterpetition of the mother, in legal effect, had the like purpose in view. It invoked the jurisdiction of the court to modify the decree so as to provide for the support and maintenance of the child. Under these circumstances the welfare of the child should have been the paramount consideration with the court. Brice v. Brice, 50 Mont. 388, 147 Pac. 164.

[2] Though the separation agreement is binding upon the parties to it and regulates their rights and obligations inter sese, it is not binding upon either the child or the court. If its provisions for the care of the child are inadequate or become inadequate, the father may be called upon to supplement them by further contributions, notwithstanding the agreement by the mother releasing him from further costs or expenses. The child is the ward of the court, and, even if the parents agreed that the father should not enjoy the privilege of seeing his offspring, the court may nevertheless authorize him to visit it if the interests of the child will be thereby promoted.

[3] The evidence does not support the mother's contention that the father relinquished his right to see the child, or that she understood that he agreed to do so, and that such understanding on her part was a substantial inducement to her to enter into the separation agreement. She testified that though the terms of the agreement were discussed fully beforehand, she did not know that she was to have the custody of the child until the agreement was finally submitted for her signature.

[4, 5] The conditions under which the father's visits may be made, the time, place, and duration of them, his conduct during such visits, and the extent to which he may have the child in his custody are all proper subjects for regulation by the court. It cannot be said that by the modification sought, the father gains a distinct advantage without any concomitant burden. When he submitted to the jurisdiction of the court, he was there for any proper order the court might make, and if the court requires him, as a condition precedent to his right to visit his child, that he make further reasonable contributions to its support, he will not be in any position to complain.

[6, 7] Since both father and mother applied for such modification of the decree as would provide for the child's welfare as well as secure them in the rights to which they deem themselves entitled, and since it is apparent that the provisions of the contract are inadequate for either purpose, we think the court was called upon to make some appropriate order to meet those ends. Unless it can be said with reasonable certainty that the father is morally unfit to associate with the child, the dictates of humanity call for such regulations as will permit him to see his own offspring. "It must be borne in mind that the tie between parent and child is one of the most binding in human life, one which the law of nature itself has established. No legislation, no judicial interpretation of legislation, should lightly disregard the reciprocal duties of this relationship." State ex rel. Giroux v. Giroux, 19 Mont. 149, 47 Pac. 798.

In our judgment, this record presents a case wherein the court failed to exercise its discretion when it should have done so, rather than a case wherein it abused its discretion.

While the court might, with propriety, forbid the mother to remove the child from the jurisdiction of the court, there was no such showing made, if indeed there could be, which would justify the court in compelling the mother to reside permanently in the same city as the father may choose as his place of residence.

The order is reversed and the cause is remanded, with directions to the trial court to take such further proceedings as will result in a proper modification of the decree, in conformity with the views herein expressed. Reversed and remanded.

1. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ⟹147—COMPENSATION—CONTINGENT FEES—VALIDITY OF CONTRACT.

Rev. Codes, § 6422, provides that the compensation of an attorney is governed by agreement, express or implied, which is not restrained by law. Section 7153 declares that the measure of compensation of attorneys is left to the agreement of the parties. Sections 6397 and 6398, imposing certain restraints on attorneys, do not mention a contract contingent upon the success of the litigation. Held, that the effect of the provisions of sections 6422 and 7153 is to abolish the common-law doctrine of champerty and maintenance as to contracts for compensation between attorney and client, except as it is retained and modified in sections 6397 and 6398, so that a contract between an attorney and client for a fee contingent upon the success of the litigation, which would necessarily include a search for proper evidence and bona fide witnesses, is valid.

2. Contracts 🔑129(3)—Validity—Legality of Object.

A litigant may also employ a layman to search for legitimate evidence and bona fide witnesses for a compensation contingent upon the success of the litigation.

3. Contracts 🔑103—Construction—Legality.

The fact that the obligee may abuse a contract and make it operate to the public injury does not in itself invalidate it, and parties are entirely free to contract as they please so long as the particular agreement is not prohibited by law and does not contemplate the doing of any illegal act.

4. Contracts 🔑153—Construction—Rule.

In construing contracts the obligation is upon the courts to give them such interpretation as will make them lawful if this can be done without violating the intention of the parties, and a contract will be upheld unless it must receive such interpretation as will compel the conclusion that it contravenes public policy or some express provision of law.

Appeal from District Court, Lewis and Clark County; J. M. Clements, Judge.

Action by Andrew J. Haley against Matilda Hollenback. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Odell W. McConnell, A. J. Galen, and E. G. Toomey, all of Helena, for appellant. Carleton & Carleton, of Helena, for respondent.

BRANTLY, C. J. In this action plaintiff recovered a verdict for $500 and costs. Defendant has appealed from the judgment entered thereon and from an order denying her a new trial. The ground of recovery alleged is a breach of contract.

On April 29, 1910, defendant's son, John Hollenback, was electrocuted by coming in contact with a wire heavily charged with electricity. Hollenback was then in the employ of the Stone & Webster Engineering Corporation, which was engaged in the construction of a dam in the Missouri river, in Lewis and Clark county. Defendant thereafter brought an action against the corporation to recover damages for the death of her son, alleging that it was caused by the culpable negligence of the corporation. This was determined in her favor, the jury awarding her a verdict for $18,000. After reciting the foregoing facts, the complaint herein alleges:

"III. Plaintiff avers that during the prosecution of said action of Matilda Hollenback v. Stone & Webster Engineering Corporation it became and was necessary in order to properly prepare said cause for trial that this defendant, plaintiff in the aforesaid cause of Hollenback v. Stone & Webster Engineering Corporation, should employ some one to hunt up the legitimate and proper evidence which would show how the accident occurred, also to show the negligence of the defendant, if such evidence in fact actually existed, as this plaintiff alleges that it did.

"IV. Plaintiff avers that in view of all the foregoing, and on or about the month of ——, 1910, he made and entered into a contract with this defendant under and by virtue of which he was to search for bona fide witnesses and to hunt up such bona fide, competent, and legitimate testimony as he might be able to obtain to be produced upon the trial of the defendant's said case, and to properly advise and to assist in all reasonable and proper ways this defendant generally in the prosecution of said cause, and that, in consideration of the same, defendant promised and agreed with plaintiff that, if she should recover in her said suit, she would pay plaintiff well for such services.

"V. That in pursuance of the aforesaid agreement plaintiff entered upon the due performance of his said contract with this defendant and devoted a large amount of time in finding and endeavoring to find witnesses who were conversant with the aforesaid facts and who would testify as to the true facts regarding the same upon the trial of said cause; that plaintiff spent considerable sums of money in traveling around and going from place to place in search of evidence. That at one time plaintiff in the due performance of his said duties under said contract made a trip to the city of Butte, in the state of Montana, incurring considerable expense on account of the same. * * *"

It is then alleged that the plaintiff fully performed the contract on his part; that upon recovery of the judgment in her action defendant became indebted to him for the reasonable value of his services; that she had failed and refused to recognize the contract or to pay plaintiff any sum whatever; and that there is due plaintiff the sum of $1,500, with interest and costs. Defendant's general demurrer having been overruled, she answered, joining issue upon all the material allegations of the complaint.

[1, 2] Counsel for defendant assail the integrity of the judgment on the grounds that the contract is void because it contravenes public policy, and that the court erred in admitting and excluding evidence. The validity of the contract was questioned by the demurrer, and, during the trial, by motion for nonsuit and for directed verdict. The contention is that, while a suitor may lawfully employ a layman to search for and find witnesses who know the facts relevant and material to the issue which is or will be brought in controversy, for compensation to be paid without regard to the result, if the obligation to pay compensation becomes binding only upon the event of the suitor's success, the contract is illegal and void, in that it has a tendency and opens a strong temptation to procure perjury. They insist that the agent so employed, realizing that he will receive nothing unless the suitor is successful, will naturally produce or secure witnesses whose testimony will win the suitor's case. Hence the contract alleged comes within the class of those denounced by this court in Quirk v. Muller, 14 Mont. 467, 36 Pac. 1077, 25 L. R. A. 87, 43 Am. St. Rep. 647, and Hughes v. Mullins, 36 Mont. 267, 92 Pac. 758, 13 Ann. Cas. 209.

In the first of these cases the plaintiff had obligated himself to furnish such evidence as would win the suit. In the second the plaintiff had undertaken to furnish evidence which would produce results favorable to the suitor in one or both of two pending suits, viz.: (1) Win one or both of them upon trial; or (2) put the plaintiff in such a position that he could force a favorable settlement of one or both of them. All the courts, so far as their decisions have been called to our attention, or we have examined them, hold such contracts void. Mr. Justice De Witt, in Quirk v. Muller, supra, quoted with approval the rule as stated by Mr. Bishop, as follows:

> "The mere tendency of a contract to promote unlawful acts renders it illegal, as against the policy of the law, without regard to any circumstances indicating the probable commission of such acts." Bishop on Contracts, § 476.

In 6 Cyc. at page 864, it is said:

> "By the common law, and in most of the states which have adopted the common law or enacted statutes on the subject, an agreement by a third person other than an attorney to defray the expenses of a suit in which he has no interest, or to give substantial support in aid thereof in consideration of a share of the recovery, is champertous."

On the same page it is further said:

> "An agreement to furnish such evidence as shall enable the party to recover a sum of money, or other thing, by action, and to exert influence for procuring evidence to substantiate the claim on condition of receiving a portion of the thing recovered, is champertous."

The contract under consideration in this case, however, does not fall within the class of those considered in Quirk v. Muller or Hughes v. Mullins, supra, nor within any of the cases cited in support of the text quoted from Cyc. Plaintiff did not agree to furnish evidence that would establish defendant's claim, nor was he to have any portion of the possible recovery. No authority has been called to our attention, nor have we been able to find any, which holds such a contract open to objection because it contravenes public policy. Under the common law in England, a contract by an attorney to conduct an action for compensation contingent upon recovery is champertous and void. Hilton v. Wood, L. R. Eq. 432; Earle v. Hopwood, 7 Jur. N. S. 775. In some of the states this rule has been recognized and enforced. Ware v. Russell, 70 Ala. 174, 45 Am. Rep. 82; Lafferty v. Jelley, 22 Ind. 471; Roberts v. Yancey, 94 Ky. 243, 21 S. W. 1047, 42 Am. St. Rep. 357; Martin v. Clarke, 8 R. I. 389, 5 Am. Rep. 586. In some of these cases the contract of the attorney included also a stipulation that he would pay the costs of the litigation. This element, however, does not seem to have been regarded as determinative of the invalidity of the contract. Other authorities hold that such a stipulation is invalid. Croco v. Oregon Short Line Ry. Co., 18 Utah, 311, 54 Pac. 985, 44 L. R. A. 285. As the contract in this case does not include such a stipulation, the question whether it would be lawful in this state is not here considered or determined.

By the current of authority a contract for contingent compensation is held valid. Smits v. Hogan, 35 Wash. 290, 77 Pac. 390, and citations in note to this case in 1 Ann. Cas. 299. In this state, except in so far as they are prohibited by statute, attorneys are free to enter into such contracts with their clients for compensation as they choose. Section 6422 of the Revised Codes declares:

> "The compensation of an attorney and counselor for his services is governed by agreement, express or implied, which is not restrained by law. * * *"

Section 7153 declares:

> "The measure and mode of compensation of attorneys and counselors at law is left to the agreement, express or implied, of the parties. * * *"

When we come to look for the restraints imposed by law, we find that, aside from those enumerated in sections 6397 and 6398, among which is not mentioned a contract contingent upon the success of the litigant, we do not find any. The effect of the broad provisions found in sections 6422 and 7153 is that they abolish the common-law doctrine of champerty and maintenance in this state relating to contracts for compensation between attorney and client, except in so far as it is retained in modified form in the other sections cited. The Code of the state of Washington contains a provision identical with section 7153 (Ballinger's Code, § 5165). In Smits v. Hogan, supra, the court, after expressing a doubt that the doctrine of champerty ever was in force in Washington, said that, as far as this doctrine relates to the compensation between attorney and client, it must have been repealed by the statute. The same conclusion was reached by the Supreme Court of Utah as to the scope of a similar provision in the Code of that state. Croco v. Oregon Short Line Ry. Co., supra. If such a contract may be made between an attorney and his client, the inquiry arises: Why should it be held unlawful for the client to contract upon the same basis with a layman for such services as the latter may lawfully perform? An action usually cannot proceed without the aid of an attorney. It cannot proceed at all unless the witnesses are found who can testify in support of plaintiff's suit. It cannot be questioned that it is lawful for a litigant to employ another layman at a stipulated compensation, to be paid in any event, to do for him what he could do for himself, viz.: To find the witnesses and to ascertain what the character of their testimony will be. Quirk v. Muller, supra. The physical condition of the suitor may render this course necessary, as where he has been wholly disabled by a personal injury. Add to this that he is penniless and cannot pay for such needed services unless he succeeds in establishing his claim for damages, and the making of such a contract is necessarily the only means by which he can gain assistance. The attorney employed on a contingency in the same case may not have the time nor the disposition to find the witnesses and thus prepare the case for trial. Unless the suitor may employ a layman upon a contingency, he is effectually barred of his right. Does the contract in the latter case have any greater tendency to promote unlawful acts than it has in the other? The attorney may, and frequently does, include in his employment the service of finding witnesses. Does this fact render his contract illegal? We apprehend that no one would assert this. Though the attorney is an officer of the court, he is not for this reason immune from the temptations to which the average man is subject. Besides this, his position affords him greater opportunity to make use of "base appliances" than does that of the average layman. Again, take the case of the penniless suitor. If he employs a stranger to find the evidence and promises compensation in any event, he is within the law. Yet the stranger knows very well that he will not receive any compensation unless the suit is won. This contract in final analysis is in no respect different in its tendency than the one based upon a contingency. In our opinion, no cogent reason can be assigned why, if the one is valid, the other is not equally valid, or why, if the attorney's contract is unobjectionable, that of the layman is not also. The latter has no greater tendency to taint the administration of justice than has the former. The obligation assumed in either case is to perform a legitimate service.

[4] The obligation is upon courts always, in interpreting contracts, to give them such an interpretation as will make them lawful, if this can be done without violating the intention of the parties. In any event a contract will be upheld unless it must receive such an interpretation as will compel the conclusion that it contravenes public policy or some express provision of law. Lawson v. Cobban, 38 Mont. 138, 99 Pac. 128; Dallas v. Douglas, 45 Mont. 114, 122 Pac. 275; Finley v. School Dist. No. 1, 51 Mont. 415, 153 Pac. 1010. The contention of counsel is overruled.

We have examined the other assignments, but find none of them of sufficient merit to deserve special notice.

The judgment and order are affirmed. Affirmed.

1. Bills and Notes 🔑190—Conditional Indorsement—Validity.

Indorsement of a note before delivery to payee may be conditional.[1]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 454, 455.]

2. Bills and Notes 🔑290—Conditional Indorsement—Validity.

Where the indorsement of a note before delivery is conditional, such conditions, to be binding upon the payee, must be accepted by him, made with notice to him, or acknowledged on his part before or accompanying delivery.

3. Bills and Notes 🔑489(6)—Defenses—Conditional Indorsement—Pleading and Proof.

Where a conditional indorsement is relied on as a defense, the fact that the conditions were accepted by or made with notice to or acknowledged on the part of the payee before or accompanying delivery must be pleaded and proved with common certainty.[2]

4. Alteration of Instruments 🔑25—Pleading—Answer—Sufficiency.

In an action on a note, allegations of the defendant guarantors in their answer that they had signed the note in blank, and that the note had subsequently been altered by means of a stamp by the words, "Notice and protest waived, and for value received payment of the within note guaranteed by," and that such stamp was placed upon the note fraudulently subsequent to the signing without knowledge of such defendants, did not sufficiently state such defense, since it is not alleged when or by whom the alleged wrongful stamping is done, and, in view of the fact that plaintiff specifically alleged interest payments by the defendants since the maturity of the note, it was material for the defendants to allege in their answer that the alteration complained of was made not only without defendants' consent or knowledge, but with privity or knowledge on the part of the plaintiff before delivery, and that defendants had not since ratified the alteration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Alteration of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 216-229.]

5. Alteration of Instruments 🔑27(1)—Evidence—Presumptions.

Where a stamping complained of by defendants as an alteration of a note set forth in plaintiff's complaint appears to be regular on its face, without erasures, interlineations, or improper action indicating that it was not fully authorized, the presumption is that the stamping was properly made on the note before the delivery to the plaintiff.

6. ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS ⇐25—RATIFICATION—ACTUAL KNOWLEDGE.

Although a party must have actual knowledge of the alteration of a note before payment to constitute a ratification thereof, where payment is pleaded in the complaint and admitted in the answer without alleging that it was made without defendants' knowledge or consent, ratification is sufficiently implied.

Appeal from District Court, Salt Lake County; F. C. Loofbourow, Judge.

Action by the Farmers' & Stockgrowers' Bank against the Pahvant Valley Land Company and others and Charles A. Welch and others. From a judgment for plaintiff upon the pleadings, defendants Charles A. Welch and others appeal. Affirmed.

Evans, Evans & Folland and Walton & Walton, all of Salt Lake City, and P. H. Neeley, of Coalville, for appellants. Stewart, Bowman, Morris & Callister, of Salt Lake City, for respondents.

CORFMAN, J. This was an action brought in the district court of Salt Lake county by the plaintiff on a promissory note against the defendant Pahvant Valley Land Company, a corporation, as maker, and the 19 other defendants, as guarantors thereof. The complaint is in the usual form, alleging: Execution of the note on the part of the defendant Pahvant Valley Land Company, as maker, and the indorsement thereof by the other defendants guaranteeing payment and waiving notice and protest; that demand was made at maturity upon Pahvant Valley Land Company and the other defendants; that the note has not been paid, except the interest in part; that the plaintiff is the owner and holder of the note; that the note provides for reasonable attorney's fees; and that $1,000 is a reasonable fee to be paid in the suit. Judgment is prayed for $10,000, the principal sum, $761.89, interest, $1,000, attorney's fees, and costs. A copy of the note with indorsements is attached to and made a part of the complaint.

The answer of the defendants here appealing was as follows:

"(1) That prior to the execution and delivery of the said note plaintiff held three certain instruments purporting to be promissory notes executed by the defendant Pahvant Valley Land Company, representing an alleged indebtedness in a sum less than $10,000, and that the plaintiff, for the purpose of enhancing the value to it of the said alleged indebtedness, agreed to advance to the said defendant Pahvant Valley Land Company an additional sum, which, together with the original sum, should amount to $10,000, upon condition that the $10,000 note should receive the indorsements of certain persons among whom were these defendants: that in pursuance thereof, and without any consideration whatever moving to these defendants, they and each of them were induced to, and did, write their names on the back of said note before its delivery to the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff, through its officers and agents, by representations and persuasions induced these defendants to become indorsers on said notes; that at the time of the indorsement of said note by these defendants, as aforesaid, it was represented to each of them that the signatures of certain parties other than those who actually did indorse, to the total number of approximately 30, would be obtained in the same manner as were the signatures of these defendants, and on condition that all such other indorsements should be obtained, and with that distinct understanding, and relying upon said promise and representation, each of these defendants did write his name upon said note as aforesaid, but the said promissory note was not indorsed by the number, nor by the persons whose signatures were to have been thus obtained before these defendants should in any event become liable as indorsers upon said note.

"(2) That these defendants, if bound at all upon said note, were liable as accommodation indorsers, and not otherwise, but that plaintiff did not give notice of nonpayment by the defendant Pahvant Valley Land Company to any of these defendants, and therefore none of these defendants are indebted in any sum whatever to the plaintiff.

"(3) These defendants further allege that an examination by them of the original note upon which they wrote their names in blank as aforesaid has, since they so wrote their names thereon, been altered by the placing thereon of the following words by means of a stamp: 'Notice and protest waived, and for value received payment of the within note guaranteed by'—and that said stamp was placed upon said note fraudulently subsequent to their signing as aforesaid, and without the knowledge or consent of these defendants."

A rely was filed by the plaintiff to the answer.

Before proceeding to a trial, on the day set for hearing in the district court a motion was made by the plaintiff for a judgment on the pleadings, which motion was sustained by the court with the proviso that defendants have until the following day to propose amendments to their answer. Defendants declined to amend their answer, whereupon the court rendered judgment on the pleadings in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants, from which judgment this appeal is prosecuted. The only question for this court to determine therefore, is whether or not the trial court committed error in sustaining plaintiff's motion for a judgment upon the pleadings.

It is conceded that, in a proper case, courts have the inherent power to grant such motions; and it is likewise conceded that, if the answer of the defendants presented a single material issue to be tried, the court erred in granting the motion in question.

It is contended by appellants that their answer presented and raised four material issues, viz.: (1) Conditional indorsement of note; (2) alteration of indorsement; (3) correctness of note; (4) ownership of note. It is affirmatively alleged in the answer of the appellants that their indorsement of the note in question was obtained with the understanding and their reliance upon the representation and promise that others than themselves were to indorse the note whose signatures were never obtained.

[1-3] It has been held by this court in the case of State Bank of Utah v. Burton-Gardner Co., 14 Utah, 420, 48 Pac. 402, cited and relied upon by appellants in their brief, that such a defense, when properly pleaded, of course, is sufficient; and we think the rule of law as in that case enunciated is the proper one, and is in harmony with the great weight of authority. The difficulty, however, presented by the appellants' pleading in the case at bar is whether or not they have stated facts sufficient to enable the trial court to permit them to go to trial upon such an issue. Before a defense can be successfully made that an indorsement in blank of a promissory note was conditional, it must be shown that the conditional indorsement was accepted by, or was made with notice to, or acknowledged on the part of, the payee before or accompanying the delivery; and it necessarily follows that before proof of such a defense can be offered the facts constituting the defense must be pleaded with common certainty. Flint v. Nelson et al., 10 Utah, 261, 37 Pac. 479; State Bank v. Burton-Gardner Co., supra; Carter v. Moulton, 51 Kan. 9, 32 Pac. 633, 20 L. R. A. 309, 37 Am. St. Rep. 259; Humphreys v. Crane, 5 Cal. 173; Dunham v. Travis, 25 Utah, 65, 69 Pac. 468.

Appellants also made the contention that the note in question has been materially altered since the placing of their names thereon by the words, "Notice and protest waived, and for value received payment of the within note guaranteed by," being written above their signatures, and that said words were stamped upon said note fraudulently and without the knowledge and consent of the appellants.

[4] Again, we are confronted with the question: Have the appellants by their answer stated facts sufficient to entitle them to proceed to the trial of the issue sought to be raised by the allegations of their answer? It is to be observed that appellants' answer signally fails to state when or by whom the alleged wrongful stamping of the words complained of was done. It may be conceded that, under all the authorities, and the statutory law of this state as well, the defense claimed by appellants, when sufficiently pleaded, raised an issue to be tried and submitted to the trial court or the jury properly determining the facts from the evidence submitted; but in the case at bar we think the court was amply justified in ruling that the appellants here had not sufficiently stated such a defense by their answer to the plaintiff's complaint.

In view of the fact that plaintiff specifically alleged in its complaint that interest payments had been made by the defendants at divers times and for stated amounts since the maturity of the note in question, it then became material for the appellants to say in effect by their answer, before they could rely upon it as a defense, that the alteration complained of was made, not only without appellants' knowledge and consent, but that the alteration had been made by the plaintiff, its privity, or with knowledge on the part of plaintiff, before delivery, and, further, that appellants have not since acquiesced in or ratified the alteration. These matters were material allegations, without which the answer of the appellants was insufficient and did not constitute a defense to the plaintiff's complaint.

[5] The stamping complained of by appellants as an alteration of the note set forth in plaintiff's complaint appears to be regular on its face, without erasures, interlineations, or improper action indicating that it was not duly authorized. Therefore the presumption, as held by the great weight of authority, is that the stamping was properly made on the note before delivery to the plaintiff. Towles v. Tanner, 21 App. D. C. 530; Galloway v. Bartholomew, 44 Or. 75, 74 Pac. 467, 1 R. C. L. p. 1041, and cases cited in note.

[6] Assuming that the note was materially altered, also the facts stated in the answer when and by whom the alteration was made, it further appears from the plaintiff's complaint that interest payments were made from time to time covering a period of approximately six months after the maturity of the note, thus in effect pleading ratification on the part of the appellants, as held by the great weight of authority. Tiedeman on Commercial Paper, § 396; Joyce, Defenses to Commercial Paper, § 150; Holyfield v. Harrington et al., 84 Kan. 700, 115 Pac. 546, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 131; Divide Canal & Reservoir Co. v. Tenney, 57 Colo. 14, 139 Pac. 1110. Of course, the rule is, as stated in appellants' brief, that a party must have actual knowledge of the alteration before payment would constitute a ratification; but when, as here, payment is set forth in the complaint, and admitted in the answer, without alleging it was made without appellants' knowledge or consent, ratification, to our minds, is sufficiently implied. 2 C. J. p. 1258.

[7] The general rule of pleading alteration of a written instrument under the Code requires that, where the instrument is declared upon in its altered form, as here claimed by appellants, the answer should be in the form of a general denial of all the material allegations of the complaint, or a specific denial of the execution of the instrument sued on, or a specific statement of the facts relied upon for a defense. 2 C. J. p. 1261. The answer of the appellants in the case at bar did not meet these requirements.

We have carefully reviewed the authorities cited by appellants in their brief, and, after doing so, we do not think they support their contention that the trial court erred in sustaining the plaintiff's motion for a judgment on the pleadings, especially after affording the appellants the opportunity to propose amendments to their answer and their declining to do so. Therefore the judgment of the trial court must be affirmed, with costs to respondent.

It is so ordered.

Under Comp. Appeal from District Court, Utah County; A. B. Morgan, Judge.

Action by Freeman Tanner against W. D. Beers, as State Engineer. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Booth & Booth, of Provo, for appellant. Dan B. Shields, Atty. Gen., and O. C. Dalby and Jas. H. Wolfe, Asst. Attys. Gen., for respondent.

FRICK, C. J. The plaintiff commenced this action against the defendant as state engineer of the state of Utah. In the complaint it is, in substance, alleged that the plaintiff, on the 23d day of July, 1908, made an application to the defendant, as state engineer, pursuant to the laws of this state to appropriate 10 second feet of the unappropriated waters of the Provo river; that notice of the application was published as required by our statute on the 23d day of January, 1914, and the publication was completed on the 23d day of February following; that a protest against the granting of said application upon various grounds was duly filed with the state engineer by the Provo Bench Canal & Irrigation Company, hereinafter called the company, on the 9th day of March, 1914; that on the 16th day of June, 1915, the state engineer "without sufficient reason rejected the application of the plaintiff"; that by reason of the rejection of said application the plaintiff is "deprived of a substantial right." The plaintiff prays judgment:

> "That the said defendant, as state engineer aforesaid, be ordered by the court to grant the application to plaintiff to appropriate said water, and that the plaintiff be granted general relief in the premises."

A copy of the application filed with the state engineer is attached to and made a part of the complaint. The application is too long to be inserted here. It must suffice to say that it was made to appear therefrom that the plaintiff sought to appropriate 10 second feet of water which he alleged was being lost and wasted by seepage by reason of the imperfect condition of a certain ditch owned and used by said company of the length of about 7,000 feet, and which water, plaintiff alleged, he intended to save by puddling and improving the bottom and sides of the ditch aforesaid, and by that means to save said 10 second feet of water from being lost and wasted and to use the same for a beneficial purpose. What plaintiff proposes to do in that regard is stated in his application in the following words:

> "From the point of diversion of the Provo Bench Canal described on page 1 the Provo Bench Canal & Irrigation Company conduct a stream of water, which fluctuates during the irrigation season from an extreme low flow of 30 cubic feet per second to an extreme high flow of 116 cubic feet per second. This stream of water for a distance of approximately 7,000 feet runs along the step sloping east border of Provo Bench, over coarse boulders and gravel, through which much of the water seeps and is wasted. It is the intention of the applicant to improve the grade of the canal so that the depth of water in the canal section will be uniform and puddle the bottom and sides of said canal so as to reduce seepage waste to a minimum. The water saved by these improvements the applicant claims the right to appropriate and use on the lands heretofore described. In order to determine the losses in that portion of the canal that is to be improved, a record of canal flow at the entrance and exit of said portion is now being made, and will be continued for such length of time as the state engineer may deem sufficient to determine the seepage losses in said portion."

The action was originally commenced against the state engineer alone. The company was, however, permitted to intervene upon its own application. Both the state engineer and the company filed general demurrers to the complaint. The district court sustained the demurrers and dismissed the complaint. The plaintiff appeals.

The only ruling that is assailed by the assignments of error is the one relating to the demurrer interposed by the state engineer, and hence we shall confine our remarks to that demurrer.

The state engineer rejected the application for the reasons stated by him, which, giving them in his own language, are as follows:

> "I am herewith returning your application 1976, which calls for ten second-feet of water from Provo river, the granting of which was protested by the Provo Bench Canal & Irrigation Company on March 9, 1914, the application having been this day rejected. The application contemplates saving water by improving the Provo Bench Canal, by improving the grade of the canal and puddling the sides and bottom. The state engineer has not the power to grant an applicant a right to go onto a private canal and improve it for the purpose of saving the water lost by seepage, and therefore he has no jurisdiction over an application of this nature; hence its rejection."

The law defining the duties of the state engineer, which was in force when plaintiff made his application, is found in Comp. Laws 1907, § 1288x10, which reads as follows:

> "All applications which shall comply with the provisions of this title and with the regulations of the state engineer's office shall be filed and recorded in a suitable book kept for that purpose; and it shall be the duty of said engineer to approve all applications made in proper form and which are not in conflict with prior applications, or where the proposed use will not impair the value of existing rights. But, where there is no unappropriated water in the proposed source of supply, or where the proposed use will conflict with prior applications, or with existing rights, it shall be the duty of the state engineer to reject such application."

The rights of the applicant, in case he is dissatisfied with the action of the state engineer, are defined by Comp. Laws 1907, § 1288x14, which at the time of plaintiff's application read as follows:

> "Any applicant or protestant who is dissatisfied with the action of the state engineer may bring an action in the district court of the county in which the point of diversion of the water proposed to be appropriated is situated, for the purpose of adjudicating the questions involved between the applicant and protestant. Such action must be brought within sixty days of notice of the action of the state engineer, and if not brought within that time, the engineer shall proceed in accordance with the action taken thereon by him. But if such action be brought within said time, notice thereof shall be filed with the state engineer, and thereafter he shall take no further action upon such application or protest until the rights of the parties shall be determined by mutual agreement among themselves or by the courts. Upon the final determination of the case by the courts, a copy of the decree shall be filed with the state engineer, and thereupon he shall proceed in accordance with such decree."

Both of the foregoing sections have since been amended, and, as amended, will be found in Laws Utah 1911, pp. 4 and 143. The amendments or changes are, however, not material to this action.

When plaintiff's application and what he proposed to do are read and considered in connection with the foregoing statutory provisions, it seems clear that neither the state engineer nor the district court had power to grant what plaintiff demanded. To our minds it is equally clear that this court is powerless to grant his prayer to which we have hereinbefore referred. While plaintiff's purposes to save water and to apply the same to a beneficial use are to be commended, yet there is no power vested in the state engineer to grant plaintiff's application in view that there is no unappropriated water unless and until plaintiff succeeds in preventing the loss by seepage as proposed by him. We cannot find any power in the statute whereby the state engineer may permit the plaintiff to enter upon the company's ditch and to improve the same so as to prevent the alleged waste through seepage. If the company is unnecessarily wasting water to the detriment of the plaintiff, it may well be that he may go into court and commence a proper action, and, if he can, in such action, establish the fact that the company is unnecessarily wasting water to his detriment or damage that the court will require the company to cease its unnecessary wasting of water. It may also be the case—yet we know of no precedent to that effect, and plaintiff has cited none—that in case a water claimant shows that water in substantial quantities is unnecessarily lost or wasted through seepage or otherwise by reason of an imperfect condition of a prior appropriator's ditches, that such loss or waste can be prevented by making the bottoms and sides of such ditches impervious, and that the claimant, at his own cost and expense, and at a proper time, is able and willing to so improve and repair said ditches as to prevent the loss or waste of water, if he be permitted the right to appropriate and use the same, the court, in a proper action, may have the power to make such order as will be necessary to give the claimant the right to enter upon the ditches and to repair and improve them so as to prevent the loss and waste of water, and to give him the right to appropriate such water and to apply it to some beneficial use. But, even though such power be deemed to exist in a court under our statute, respecting which we express no opinion, yet it is very clear that no such power is vested in the state engineer. If, therefore, no such power is vested in that officer by law, neither the district court nor this court can require him to do that which the law does not authorize.

The district court therefore committed no error in sustaining the demurrer.

The judgment is therefore affirmed, with costs to respondent.

Appeal from District Court, Tooele County; Geo. G. Armstrong, Judge.

Action by J. J. Tanner against Henry Johnson. From a judgment of nonsuit and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Remanded, with directions to grant a new trial.

Evans, Evans & Folland, of Salt Lake City, for appellant. L. L. Baker and W. S. Marks, both of Tooele, for respondent.

CORFMAN, J. Plaintiff brought this action against the defendant in the district court of Tooele county to recover damages alleged to have been sustained because of the renunciation of an oral executory agreement. Briefly stated, the complaint alleges that an agreement was entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant whereby the defendant employed the plaintiff to thresh the grain raised upon defendant's farm for the season of 1915; that the grain was to be threshed on or about October 1, 1915, in consideration of which the defendant was to pay to plaintiff a reasonable toll of 8½ bushels for each 100 bushels or fraction thereof threshed; that on or about the 14th day of September, 1915, the defendant repudiated the contract thus entered into, to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $300, for which sum plaintiff prayed judgment and costs.

The answer, in substance, admits the agreement, and affirmatively alleges that plaintiff represented to defendant he would thresh his grain in a first-class manner, and with a machine that would do first-class work so that there would be little, if any, loss, and that the grain would be threshed at the agreed time without unnecessary delay; that defendant canceled and terminated the contract on or about September 10, 1915, on receiving information from various sources that the machine with which plaintiff intended to do the threshing did not do satisfactory work, in that it did not thresh grain clean, and that large losses were being sustained by various persons for whom plaintiff had threshed and was threshing; that great delays were continually occurring which caused great expense and annoyance for any person for whom plaintiff attempted to thresh grain; and that plaintiff sustained no loss whatever by reason of defendant not permitting plaintiff to thresh his grain.

At the trial, which was to the court without a jury, the defendant, in brief, testified, when called as a witness for the plaintiff, that he employed plaintiff to thresh the grain raised in 1915, and afterwards canceled the employment; that the grain raised by him in 1915 was threshed by another than the plaintiff, and that the value of the toll for the threshing would have amounted to $194 at the price fixed under his agreement with plaintiff; that it was the understanding that if the plaintiff was to do the threshing he was also to do the threshing for others in the vicinity; that plaintiff threshed for defendant in 1914, and had inquired how the defendant liked the job. "I told him it was very good. He then asked me, he says, 'Could I have your threshing for 1915.' I said, 'Yes; if your job is as good as it has been this year you can have it.'"

The plaintiff testified in his own behalf that the net profit to him would have amounted to $122, and that there was no understanding between him and the defendant that he was to do the threshing for others in the vicinity.

At the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence a nonsuit was granted on the application of the defendant. A motion for a new trial was made and denied. Plaintiff appeals.

[1] The only question for this court to determine is whether the plaintiff, when he rested at the trial, had, under the admissions of the pleadings and the evidence, established a prima facie case. It is to be observed that the answer of the defendant admits the contract sued upon with some slight qualifications; that while it was still in force and effect he "canceled and terminated" it before performance "believing" that the plaintiff's machine would not do satisfactory work; and that prior to the date plaintiff was to have threshed the grain the former notified the latter that he would not permit him to thresh the grain. It is also to be observed from the record that the plaintiff's evidence clearly established the value of the tolls for the threshing of defendant's grain for the season covered by the contract at the contract price agreed upon between plaintiff and the defendant to be $194, and that the plaintiff's net profit, after deducting the expenses of doing the threshing, would have amounted to $122.

[2, 3] It is contended by the defendant that the contract in question was purely an executory contract subject to termination at any time by either party, and because of the defendant having notified the plaintiff of its termination before the time fixed by its terms for performance the plaintiff was precluded from recovering in his suit for damages. With this contention we cannot agree. We think the plaintiff's proof, coupled with the expressed admissions of the defendant's answer in the case, absolutely preclude a judgment of nonsuit. The plaintiff here sued to recover damages for breach of an executory contract. The theory on which the case was tried, and what was clearly established by the plaintiff's evidence, when defendant interposed a motion for nonsuit, was that the plaintiff had sustained a net loss of $122, after deducting all legitimate expenses, by reason of the defendant's refusing to permit the plaintiff to perform the contract. The rule of law applicable in such cases, as laid down by all the text-writers and clearly established by the adjudicated cases, may be best stated in the language of 1 Suth. Dam. 66, cited in plaintiff's brief, as follows:

> "Where a party has contracted to perform labor from which a profit is to spring as a direct result of the work done at the contract price and is prevented from earning this profit by the wrongful act of another party, its loss is a direct and natural result which the law will presume to follow the breach of the contract; and he is entitled to recover it without special allegations in his declaration; the amount of damage may be established by showing how much less than the contract price it will cost to do the work or to perform the contract."

The authorities cited by defendant in his brief (Davis & Rankin v. Bronson, 2 N. D. 300, 50 N. W. 836, 16 L. R. A. 655, 33 Am. St. Rep. 783; Danforth v. Walker, 37 Vt. 239; Moline Scale Co. v. Beed, 52 Iowa, 307, 3 N. W. 96, 35 Am. Rep. 272; and Thomas v. Clayton Piano Co., 151 Pac. 543) are not in point. These cases simply hold that under an executory contract one party has the power to stop performance by subjecting himself to the payment of such damages as will compensate the other party for being stopped in the performance on his part, the same theory under which the plaintiff was seeking to recover from the defendant in the case at bar when defendant's motion for nonsuit was interposed. In the Utah case above mentioned the cases cited by defendant herein were referred to. In that case the plaintiff sought to recover from the defendant the full stipulated contract price after notice of repudiation, and this court, speaking through Mr. Justice Frick, said:

> "But where, as here, it is made to appear that the contract was renounced before the time for performance had arrived, the plaintiff cannot sue upon the theory that he had fully performed, and is therefore entitled to recover the amount stipulated in the contract. Ordinarily, under such circumstances, the plaintiff can only recover the damages he suffered by reason of the renunciation of the contract up to time of notice of renunciation. * * * It is true that the damages may equal the amount stipulated in the contract under certain circumstances."

Again in a late case, Holland-Cook Mfg. Co. v. Con. W. & M. Co., 161 Pac. 922, this doctrine is fully sustained by this court. In that case suit was brought for the recovery of damages for breach of contract by reason of the defendant refusing to receive three carloads of silos which it had ordered from plaintiff, the defendant having breached the contract by renouncing the same before performance. The opinion in that case says:

> "Where, as here, the article contracted for is not in esse, but is to be manufactured, and the purchaser refuses to comply with his contract, the seller is not bound to manufacture the article and tender it to the purchaser, but he may sue the purchaser for damages for breach of contract, and the measure of damages and of his recovery is the difference, if any, between the cost of manufacturing the article or property purchased and the price agreed to be paid therefor by the purchaser; in other words, the profits that the seller would have derived from the contract in case the purchaser had fully performed the same is the measure of damages."

We are therefore of the opinion that the contention of the plaintiff that the trial court committed error in entering a judgment of dismissal of plaintiff's case on motion of defendant for nonsuit is fully sustained under the authorities and the record here, and that the case should be remanded to the district court of Tooele county, with directions to grant a new trial.

It is so ordered; appellant to recover costs.

2. EVIDENCE 🔑444(6) — CONDITION PRECEDENT TO EXECUTION OF NOTE.

Under the Negotiable Instruments Act (Laws 1899, c. 83), as between original parties, defendant could prove allegations of his answer that note sued on was delivered upon condition.

3. BILLS AND NOTES 🔑452(3) — DEFENSE — WANT OR FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION.

In payee's action on a note, evidence was admissible to substantiate answer alleging want and failure of consideration in view of Comp. Laws 1907, § 1580, allowing such defense, as against any person except a holder in due course.

4. CORPORATIONS 🔑76—SUBSCRIPTIONS—VALIDITY—PROFITS FROM CORPORATE STOCK.

Agreement that plaintiff would look to profits from stock in payment for such stock purchased for himself and defendant in consideration of defendant managing the business was neither illegal nor unreasonable.

5. BILLS AND NOTES 🔑92(1)—WANT OF CONSIDERATION.

If plaintiff agreed to look to profits of stock in payment for such stock purchased for himself and defendant in consideration that defendant manage the business, he had no personal claim against defendant, and there was no consideration for a note given by defendant to secure such payment.

Appeal from District Court, Weber County; N. J. Harris, Judge.

Action by Charles H. Smith against W. D. Brown. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions to grant new trial.

Boyd, De Vine & Eccles, of Ogden, for appellant. Jno. E. Bagley, of Ogden, for respondent.

FRICK, C. J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover upon a promissory note. The complaint is in the usual form. The defendant, in his answer to the complaint admitted "the execution" of the note, but denied its delivery, and denied "the indebtedness therein alleged." Among other things, the defendant also averred in his answer that "said note was given without consideration"; that it was given "by reason of the fraudulent representations of the plaintiff," setting forth the circumstances in detail. The defendant also averred that several months prior to the execution of said note the plaintiff, by certain promises, induced the defendant to enter into the business of selling and handling grain and other farm products; that to accomplish the plaintiff's purpose in that regard a corporation known as the Western Grain & Brokerage Company was organized; that before said corporation was organized it was agreed that plaintiff would subscribe for 7,500 shares of the capital stock of said corporation of the par value of $1 each; that 3,750 shares of the said 7,500 shares should be issued in the name of the defendant; that the number of shares was thereafter increased so that both the plaintiff and the defendant each held 3,900 shares of the capital stock of said corporation; that it was agreed that the plaintiff should advance all the money to pay for said capital stock, and that the defendant should manage and conduct the business affairs of said corporation, and that plaintiff was to be repaid the amount advanced by him for said 3,900 shares of defendant's stock out of the first profits derived from said business, and "not otherwise"; that, in addition to the money plaintiff advanced for the stock as aforesaid, he also agreed to furnish such additional funds as might be necessary to carry on the business of said corporation; "that thereafter the plaintiff herein requested of the defendant the execution of some written agreement showing the conditions herein set forth, and under which this defendant accepted and held such stock, and that prior to the execution of the note herein the plaintiff turned over to the defendant, in pursuance of such agreement, all of said stock; that such an agreement was prepared, but never executed, and that after consideration the plaintiff desired and requested that the defendant herein execute a note for the amount, par value, of such stock, together with interest, the same being the note in question, but with the agreement and understanding between the parties hereto at such time that such note would simply be an evidence of the amount to be paid by the defendant from the profits of such business, and that, relying upon said representations of the plaintiff herein, and the further statement at such time by the plaintiff that unless such note was executed so that he would have some evidence of the amount due from the defendant to the plaintiff that he would not advance further and necessary funds to carry on such business, that, relying upon such representations, and not otherwise, the defendant executed such note; that thereafter the plaintiff absolutely refused to advance sufficient and necessary funds to successfully and properly carry on said business, as agreed upon by all of the parties in interest, and as a result thereof said company become indebted and insolvent, and its affairs were entirely closed up, and that there were not sufficient assets to pay any of the stockholders therein any distributive share or dividend above the indebtedness of said company"; that the defendant, relying on plaintiff's said promises, entered into the business relations aforesaid, and thereafter managed said business and executed said note for the reasons stated, and not otherwise. While the answer contained other averments, yet the foregoing are sufficient to show the nature of the defenses relied on. While the plaintiff filed a reply, yet, under our statute, no reply was either necessary or proper. It is therefore unnecessary to make further reference to the pleadings.

At the trial the defendant assumed the burden of proof and opened the case. When he attempted to establish the averments of his answer by the testimony of the defendant and other witnesses plaintiff's counsel, as appears from the bill of exceptions, interposed the following objection:

"Mr. Bagley: I object to that. I object to it on the grounds that it is immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent and as an attempt to vary and contradict the terms of a written instrument.

"The Court: Objection sustained."

The defendant duly excepted.

The foregoing objection was interposed and sustained to every question asked by the defendant's counsel and to all offers to prove the averments of the answer made by them. The defendant was thus not permitted to introduce any evidence in support of the averments of his answer, and the court directed the jury to return a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the amount of the note with accrued interest. Judgment was entered accordingly, and the defendant appeals.

[1] Defendant's counsel contend that the court committed manifest error in excluding the proffered evidence. They insist that, in view of the averments contained in the answer, they were entitled to show that the note in question was delivered upon an express condition and that it was given without consideration. While the answer is somewhat inartificially drawn and several defenses are intermingled, yet, when the averments contained therein are considered and are given the liberal construction required by our statute, the answer is sufficient to permit the defendant to prove the following state of facts: That long prior to the making of the note the plaintiff had induced the defendant to become a stockholder in a certain corporation which was organized for plaintiff's benefit; that the plaintiff was to subscribe and pay for a certain amount of the capital stock of said corporation, one-half of which was to be issued in the name of the defendant, and the defendant was to manage and conduct the business affairs of said corporation; that the plaintiff was to be repaid the amount he had advanced for the stock issued to the defendant out of the first profits derived from the business of said corporation, and not otherwise; that the plaintiff had also agreed to advance all further sums of money that might be necessary to carry on said business if any was necessary; that he afterwards refused to do so unless the note in question was made; that the note was made and delivered to the plaintiff as evidence of the amount of money he had advanced for the capital stock issued in the name of the defendant and partly because the plaintiff had refused to advance the money he had promised to advance to carry on the business, and which money the plaintiff continued to refuse to advance unless the note was executed by the defendant, and that, after the note was executed, plaintiff nevertheless refused to advance any money, with the consequences set forth in the answer. If, therefore, the jury should have found, as under the issues they might have found, if the evidence supported the averments in the answer, that those were the facts and the conditions upon which the note in question was actually made and delivered, we cannot conceive upon what theory the plaintiff should prevail in the action. Certainly not as a matter of law.

[2] Under the Negotiable Instruments Act (Laws 1899, c. 83), which is in force in this state, it is settled beyond controversy that as between the original parties it may always be shown that a promissory note was delivered upon condition, or that it was made without consideration, or that the consideration had failed in whole or in part. In 1 Daniel, Neg. Insts. § 68a, the prevailing rule under the Negotiable Instruments Act is stated thus:

> "The conflict of authority on the question whether a bill or note can be shown to have been delivered upon a condition precedent is settled in those states which have adopted the statute, whereunder the rule is recognized that a person may manually deliver an instrument, though it be in the form of commercial paper, to another, on its face containing a binding obligation in præsenti of such person to such other, with a contemporaneous verbal agreement that it shall not take effect until the happening of some specified event, and that the paper as between the parties will have no validity as a binding contract till the condition shall have been satisfied."

The foregoing doctrine has been followed by this court in the very recent case of Martineau v. Hanson, 155 Pac. 432, and cases there cited. In addition to the cases cited in the foregoing opinion, we especially refer to the following as directly in point under the issues presented in defendant's answer: Oakland Cemetery v. Lakins, 126 Iowa, 121, 101 N. W. 778, 3 Ann. Cas. 559; Paulson v. Boyd, 137 Wis. 241, 118 N. W. 841. In both of the cases last cited defenses in their nature similar to those set up in defendant's answer were held good as between the parties to the notes there in question. See, also, Julius Kessler & Co. v. Perelius, 107 Minn. 224, 119 N. W. 1069, 131 Am. St. Rep. 459, and Union Inv. Co. v. Epley, 164 Wis. 438, 160 N. W. 175. While the question of conditional delivery is not made as clear as it might be in the answer in this case, yet the question is, to some extent at least, involved, and the defendant had a right to have the jury pass upon the evidence to determine that question.

[3] The question whether there was any consideration for the note in question, or whether there was a failure of consideration in whole or in part, was, however, squarely presented by the averments contained in the answer. Upon that question our statute, Comp. Laws 1907, § 1580, provides:

> "Absence or failure of consideration is matter of defense as against any person not a holder in due course, and partial failure of consideration is a defense pro tanto whether the failure is an ascertained and liquidated amount or otherwise."

Referring again to 1 Daniel, Neg. Insts., in section 193 the author says:

> "Under the statute it is competent to show, under a plea of partial or total failure of consideration, that the purchaser was induced to execute the instrument sued on by false and fraudulent representations of the seller as to the quality, quantity, value, or character of the property which formed the consideration that moved the contract, as that is one mode of showing a failure of consideration, and the title of a person who negotiates commercial paper is defective when he has obtained any signature thereto by fraud, and if the party so defrauded be relieved from liability thereon, it has been held that such fraud makes such paper voidable by all the other persons who signed it, though they did not participate in and were ignorant of such fraudulent conduct at the time they signed it."

[4] Now, under the averments in the answer, it was relevant to prove that in consideration that the defendant should manage and conduct the business of the corporation he was not to become personally liable to the plaintiff for the purchase price of the capital stock issued in defendant's name, and that the plaintiff, in order to compensate himself for the amount he had advanced for that stock, should receive the profits until he was fully repaid the purchase price of that stock. Such an agreement, if entered into, certainly was not illegal nor unreasonable. Every person who subscribes for corporate stock must rely either upon the increase of the par value or price of the stock or on the dividends to be derived from the business as compensation for the money advanced for the stock.

[5] If the plaintiff, as averred by the defendant, therefore had agreed to advance the purchase price of the stock in consideration that the defendant should personally manage and conduct the corporate business, and had agreed to look to the profits of the business to compensate himself for the amount of money he had advanced for the stock which was placed in defendant's name, he had no personal claim against the defendant, and there was no consideration as between plaintiff and the defendant for the note in question.

[6] True, defendant has averred in his answer that plaintiff promised to advance additional money to carry on the corporate business, and that he would not advance any unless the defendant executed the note in question, and such advancements, if made, constituted part consideration for the note. We do not know what induced those averments in the answer, since from what had been averred before it was quite clear that there was no consideration for the note. We say this because the averments in the answer are clearly to the effect that plaintiff had promised to advance any further sums of money that might be necessary to conduct the business as a part of the original agreement between the parties. If that were true, then plaintiff was already bound to furnish such an amount of additional money as was reasonably necessary to carry on the business. As a matter of law, therefore, he could not impose new conditions upon the defendant. It is elementary that where a party is already bound to do a particular thing, but refuses to do it until the adverse party enters into a new promise without any additional independent consideration, the latter promise is not binding, since it is without consideration. If it be assumed, however, that the defendant executed the note in consideration that the plaintiff should furnish additional money to carry on the business, yet it is also averred in the answer that the plaintiff utterly refused and failed to comply with that promise. The consideration in that respect, if it constituted such, therefore wholly failed. We may therefore view the transactions set forth in the answer from any angle we wish, and if the facts pleaded are true, the defendant, and not the plaintiff, should prevail. As a matter of course we cannot say whether the facts pleaded are true or not true. All that we now pass on is that the defendant had the right to present the evidence in support of his averments to the jury whose province it was to determine whether they were true or not true.

The judgment is therefore reversed, and the cause is remanded to the district court of Weber county, with directions to grant a new trial and to proceed with the case in accordance with the views herein expressed; appellant to recover costs.

1. ADVERSE POSSESSION 🔑70—HOSTILE POSSESSION—SUFFICIENCY.

Where J., the purchaser of the north half of a lot, took possession of a strip which he believed to be such north half and constructed a dwelling house thereon, but about the time he moved away a purchaser of the south half of the lot took actual possession of such strip, collected rent from the tenants, made substantial and valuable improvements, erected a fence, and paid all water taxes and all taxes, general and special, assessed against the land and the improvements for 13 years, the owners of the north half being assessed with no improvements, he acquired title by adverse possession, as his conduct was not only consistent with the theory that he owned such strip, but inconsistent with the theory that his occupation was that of a trespasser or as agent of the owners of the north half.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 394–414.]

2. BOUNDARIES 🔑37(3)—EVIDENCE—WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY.

In an action involving a dispute as to the boundary between the north and south halves of lot 2 in a block of four lots numbered from the south, which contained more land than that shown on the official plat of the city, wherein defendant, owning lot 1 and the south half of lot 2, claimed that the surplus was a part of the street bounding the block on the south as originally surveyed and platted, evidence held to support findings in favor of defendant's claim as to the location of the line, and to show that plaintiffs thereby received the land they bought.[1]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 186–191.]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑657(2)—VACATION OF PORTION OF STREET — PERSONS PREJUDICED.

The city did not exceed or abuse its power to the prejudice of plaintiffs by waiving whatever title or right it had to such surplus.

4. COSTS 🔑4 — STATUTORY PROVISIONS — STRICT CONSTRUCTION.

As costs were not recoverable at common law and the right to costs is purely statutory, statutes authorizing them are strictly construed (citing Words and Phrases, Costs).[2]

5. COSTS 🔑203—COST BILL—TIME FOR FILING AND SERVING.

Under Comp. Laws 1907, § 3350, providing that the party in whose favor judgment is rendered and who claims his costs must deliver to the clerk and serve upon the adverse party within five days after the verdict or notice of decision of the court or referee a memorandum of the items of his costs and necessary disbursements, the filing and service of the cost bill before the entry of the finding and decree was not a substantial compliance with the statute, and the cost bill should have been stricken.[3]

Appeal from District Court, Salt Lake County; T. D. Lewis, Judge.

Action by John A. Houghton and another against Lester U. Barton. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed and remanded, with directions to modify.

This is an action to quiet title to a portion of lot 2, block 19, plat E, Salt Lake City survey, Utah. Block 19, of which the land in dispute forms a part, is bounded on the south by Third North street, formerly called Plum street; on the north by Fourth North street, formerly called Peach street; on the east by Wall street; and on the west by North Main street, formerly called Oak street. Block 19, as platted, consists of a tier of four lots. The lots, commencing at the south end of the tier, are numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4. According to the official plat of Salt Lake City, filed April 2, 1888, the width of each of the four lots north and south is as follows: Lot 1, 5 rods; lot 2, 7 rods; lot 3, 10 rods, and lot 4, $12^{4}/_{10}$ rods. It is conceded that block 19 in a northerly and southerly direction contains approximately 52 feet of surplus ground. The defendant contends that the 52 feet of surplus ground is the south end of the block and abuts on Third North street, and that the distance from the north side of the street to the north boundary line of lot 2 is approximately 250 feet. Plaintiffs, on the other hand, insist that the distance between these points is 198 feet—12 rods. And they, in effect, claim, if we correctly understand their position, that the 52 feet of surplus ground lies between the north boundary line of lot 2 and the south boundary of lot 4. That is, lot 3, which the maps and plats in evidence of block 19 show to be 10 rods only in width in a northerly and southerly direction is in fact a little in excess of 13 rods in width.

John A. Houghton, one of the plaintiffs, testified in part as follows:

> "I owned the north half of lot 2, and if there was any excess up there it was either in lot 3 or we had a quitclaim deed to it. * * * I don't know where the excess is. I said I owned everything between the south half of lot 2 and 4. Where the boundaries of lot 3 are I don't know. If there is any excess in there I claim it."

Plaintiffs allege in their complaint, and in their reply to defendant's counterclaim, that they and their predecessors for more than 7 years last past have owned and possessed all of the south half of lot 2 in said block 19, described as follows:

> "Commencing at a point 140.25 feet north, 28 deg. 8 min. west of the southwest corner of lot one (1) in said block, said southwest corner of said lot one (1) being 26.13 feet east and 22.5 feet north of the present monument located at the intersection of Main and Third North streets in Salt Lake City; running thence northwesterly along Main street 57.75 feet; thence east parallel with the south boundary line of lot one (1) to Wall street; thence southeasterly along Wall street to a point 57.75 feet northwesterly along said Wall street from the northeast corner of Margaret L. Taylor's land, and from the northeast corner of said lot one (1); thence west parallel with the south boundary of lot one (1) to place of beginning."

Defendant, in his answer and counterclaim, among other things, alleges that he and his predecessors, for more than 20 years next preceding the commencement of this action, have owned and have been in the actual possession of the following described property in block 19, plat E, Salt Lake City survey:

> "Commencing at a point 26.13 feet east and 22.5 feet north from the present monument located at the intersection of what is called Main and Third North streets, Salt Lake City, Utah, running thence north 24 deg. 8 min. west 192.12 feet; thence east on a line parallel with the monument line on Third North street aforesaid 216.78 feet; thence south 30 deg. 11 min. east 115.60 feet to the northeast corner of Margaret L. Taylor's land; thence west along the north line of Margaret L. Taylor's land and parallel with the monument line on Third North street aforesaid 81.55 feet to the northwest corner of said Margaret L. Taylor's land; thence south 75.4 feet to the southwest corner of said Margaret L. Taylor's land; thence west and parallel with the monument line on Third North street aforesaid 114.815 feet to the place of beginning."

It is further alleged:

> "That during all of said time defendant and his predecessors have occupied, cultivated, and improved said property and have subjected the same to ordinary use; that they have maintained and protected the same by substantial inclosures, and have paid all the taxes that have been levied and assessed against the same according to law; that such possession, during all of said time, has been continuous, perpetual, peaceable, and without interference or disturbance of any character, and has been open and notorious and adverse against these plaintiffs and all the world."

He also alleges that plaintiffs' cause of action is barred by the provisions of Comp. Laws 1907, § 2859, which reads as follows:

> "No action for the recovery of real property, or for the possession thereof, shall be maintained, unless it appear that the plaintiff, his ancestor, grantor, or predecessor was seised or possessed of the property in question within seven years before the commencement of the action."

On the issues presented by the pleadings the trial court made the following findings of fact:

"(1) That in 1887, one Ezra Jarvis purchased and received an executed deed, transferring to said Ezra Jarvis, the north half of lot 2, block 19, plat E, Salt Lake City survey, situated in Salt Lake county, Utah; and the said Ezra Jarvis immediately took possession of certain property in said block, and believed by the said Ezra Jarvis to be the said north half of said lot and block, and upon which said Ezra Jarvis constructed a brick dwelling house consisting of two rooms.

"(2) That in about the year 1889 one Hyrum Barton entered into the possession of the following described property in Salt Lake county, Utah, to wit [describing the property above mentioned in defendant's counterclaim].

"(3) That upon the said property described, possession of which was taken by said Hyrum Barton, and near the northwest corner of the same, was situated the said brick house which was constructed by said Ezra Jarvis. That upon taking possession of the said property, including the said brick house, the said Hyrum Barton constructed fences around and inclosed the same, and that since about the year 1890 the defendant herein and his predecessor, Hyrum Barton, have been in the actual, open, undisturbed, peaceable, and notorious possession of the said property, claiming the same as owners thereof, and planted thereon rose bushes and trees, and constructed and maintained fences thereon and constructed and maintained buildings, and also the said Hyrum Barton constructed reservoirs and irrigation ditches to be used for the purpose of irrigating the vegetation on the said property; * * * and that during all of said periods, and up to the time of the trial of this action, defendant and his predecessors in interest have held continuous, perpetual, undisturbed, and peaceable possession of said property, and claim to be the owners thereof as against the plaintiffs in this action and all other persons whomsoever. * * *

"(5) That for a period of more than 7 years immediately preceding the commencement of this action the plaintiffs, nor either of them, nor their predecessors in interest, nor any of them, at any time, have been seised or possessed, or in possession, of the said property hereinbefore described, or any part thereof.

"(7) That in the year 1899 the property whereon the said house constructed by said Ezra Jarvis was situated, and which said land is hereinbefore specifically described, and which the said Hyrum Barton was then in possession of, together with the said house, was assessed to Hyrum Barton, and thereafter continuously and to and including the year 1909, the said property, together with the said house, was assessed to Hyrum Barton, and that he, the said Hyrum Barton, and his successors in interest paid the taxes on the said property for each and every year, and remained in possession thereof, claiming to be the owners thereof.

"(8) That in the year 1901 the said Hyrum Barton died, and that thereupon this defendant, together with the other heirs of the estate, entered into and held possession of the said property, claiming the same exclusively and by right of absolute ownership in fee, and paid all taxes assessed against the same, including taxes for sewer, water tax, and general tax; and that in the year 1912 the defendant laid cement sidewalks in front of the said property, both where the same abuts on Wall street and where the same abuts on Main street.

"(9) That the plaintiffs are owners of the north half of lot 2, block 19, plat E, Salt Lake City survey, Salt Lake county, Utah, and that the defendant is the owner and is entitled to the possession of the south half of lot 2, said block, plat, and survey, and that the dividing line between the said properties should be located as follows: Commencing at a point north 24 deg. 8 min. west 192.12 feet from the southwest corner of block 19, plat E, Salt Lake City survey as now claimed, and which said corner of block 19 is 26.13 feet east and 22.5 feet north of the present monument located at the intersection of what is known as Main and Third North streets. From said point of beginning running east 216.78 feet more or less to Wall street on a line parallel with the monument line on Third North street as now established."

The conclusions of law and the decree made and entered by the court are responsive to, and in conformity with, the findings of fact.

To reverse the judgment plaintiffs prosecute this appeal.

Booth, Lee, Badger & Rich and I. B. Evans, all of Salt Lake City, for appellants. Stokes & Bagley, of Salt Lake City, for respondent.

McCARTY, J. (after stating the facts as above). Numerous errors are assigned by appellants, but we do not think any of them contain sufficient merit to warrant discussion except those based on the alleged insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings of fact and the decree, and the assignment of error directed to the ruling of the court denying appellant's motion to strike out respondent's cost bill.

The record shows that one Margaret Thomas deraigned title through mesne conveyances to all of lot 2 from Daniel H. Wells, mayor of Salt Lake City, Utah, who obtained the patent from the United States government for the lands covered by and included within the aforesaid plat E, Salt Lake City survey. The patent of Mayor Wells bears date June 1, 1872. In the deed from Wells, and in all subsequent transactions conveying or incumbering the north half of lot 2, as shown by the abstract of title in evidence, the property is described by merely referring to it as "the north half of lot 2," etc. In fact, appellants, in their printed brief, say the "chain of title from the mayor's deed in 1873 to the deed to plaintiffs in 1909, the parcel of land here involved, is constantly designated as 'the north half of lot 2, block 19, plat E, Salt Lake City survey.'" And the same is true of the chain of title to the south half of lot 2, block 19. On June 20, 1887, Margaret Thomas conveyed to Ezra Jarvis, by warranty deed, the north half of lot 2, hereafter referred to as the Jarvis property. The evidence, without conflict, shows that at the time this deed was executed, and when Jarvis went in possession of ground in block 19 which he believed to be the land described in his deed, the south end of block 19, for a distance of 5 rods north of Third North street was inclosed by fence; that one Wahlquist was the owner of, and resided on, the land enclosed, that the balance of the ground in block 19 was vacant and unimproved, and that there were not stakes or monuments indicating the location of lot 2 other than the fence mentioned. Solomon F. Kimball, Wahlquist's grantor, testified that he owned lots 1 and 2 in 1875 or 1876; that in 1877 he sold lot 1 to Wahlquist; that at that time there were no houses, fences, or improvements of any kind, in block 19; that he and Wahlquist located the boundaries of lot 1; that the south boundary line, as located by them, was in line with the fence on improved property on the west side of Third North street, which was opposite lot 1. He also testified in part as follows:

> "I had a plat with me at that time: Lot 1 was five rods wide according to the plat. * * * In fixing [locating] the lot * * * we took no measurements at all from the north side of the property, or from the north end of block 19. We measured the south side and the west side."

On this point Wahlquist gave evidence which was substantially the same as that given by Kimball. He also testified that he erected a dwelling house on the property in 1878 and fenced it in 1879; that he erected the fence on the boundary lines as located by him and Kimball at the time he took possession of the lot; that he resided on the property from 1878 until 1888, a period of 10 years, when he disposed of it and moved away; that when he vacated the premises the fence he erected in 1879 was still there and in good condition.

Jarvis was a witness for appellants and testified in part as follows:

> "We ascertained where the north half of lot 2 was located by measuring from the south line of lot 1. I measured 12 rods to the north from the southwest corner. * * * The corner was indicated by a fence which went clear around lot 1. * * * Wahlquist at that time lived on lot 1. The corner of that old fence that Wahlquist showed me as the corner of lot 1 was in the same place as it is now. * * * We measured from the southwest corner of lot 1 as the fence there indicated. We allowed 5 rods to lot 1 and then measured off 7 rods more," for lot 2.

Jarvis went in possession of the north half of lot 2 as thus located soon after the execution of the deed from Margaret Thomas to him. He erected a brick dwelling house on the property, and constructed a picket fence on what he claimed to be the north boundary of the lot commencing at a point 198 feet (12 rods) north from the southwest corner of the block running east, and about two-thirds of the distance between North Main and Wall streets. Jarvis further testified that:

> "No one was living on the south half of lot 2 while I was there. It was not inclosed, and there were no improvements on it. There were no improvements of any kind on lot 2, except what I put there. * * * All that property east and north of me was unimproved. * * * We made some measurements as to the location of the fence this morning. * * * The 12-rod measurement took us 6 feet north of the fence now standing north of my property. It is my opinion that the fence as it now stands is not on a line with the fence as I built it. It is about 7 feet further to the south than where I built it."

Jarvis, on March 31, 1888, deeded the property to Morris R. Evans, and soon thereafter vacated the premises. About the time Evans purchased the Jarvis property one Hyrum Barton purchased and moved onto lot 1, where he resided until his death, which occurred in September, 1901, a period of about 13 years. Evans was a witness for appellants, and testified that immediately after he purchased the Jarvis property in 1888 he rented it to a man by the name of Solomon. He further testified:

> "If I remember correctly the Solomon rents were paid to me, but he was behind, and I just told him to get out. My impression is that he went out of the house. Later on Mr. Barton took the rents. It is possible that Mr. Barton may have collected some of the Solomon rents. I couldn't say. * * * I don't remember that I collected any after he moved out."

On July 12, 1898, the Salt Lake Valley Loan & Trust Company, a corporation, hereinafter called trust company, acquired the legal title to the north half of lot 2, and in June, 1909, the trust company, by warranty deed, conveyed the property to Houghton and Bothwell, appellants herein.

While the official map of plat E, bearing date of April 2, 1888, shows, as herein stated, block 19 to be 34 $^4/_{10}$ rods in length north and south, the evidence, nevertheless, shows, eliminating this map, that the distance between Third North and Fourth North streets is, because of the surplus ground in the block, approximately 37 $^5/_{10}$ rods. There are, however, plats, files, of the city engineer's office admitted in evidence, one of which bears date of June 29, 1885, that show the excess or surplus ground in the block. It also appears from the tracing on some of these maps that this excess or surplus ground was a part of Third North street as the same was originally platted and laid out.

On February 28, 1896, Hyrum Barton acquired by deed the legal title to the south half of lot 2 in block 19. The undisputed evidence shows that Hyrum Barton, from about the time he moved onto block 19 until his death in 1901, collected rents from the different tenants who lived in the Jarvis house during that time.

Matthew W. Wilson, one of the tenants referred to, was called as a witness, and testified in part as follows:

> "I knew Hyrum Barton in his lifetime. During the summer of 1897, from about * * * May until September I rented from him. * * * The house I lived in [referring to the Jarvis house] was a small two-room brick house. * * * When I rented that place I made arrangements with Hyrum Barton. * * * When I paid rent I paid it to Mr. Barton."

[1] Hyrum Barton not only collected rents from the tenants, but he took actual possession of the Jarvis property and made substantial and valuable improvements thereon, consisting in part of a large barn, a watering trough, chicken coops, etc., all of which were erected east and southeast of the house. He also erected a board fence east of the house and extending north and south across the property between the house and the improvements mentioned. He, at his own expense, laid and maintained a pipe line connecting the house and yards with the city's water mains and supplied the house and premises with water. And the evidence shows that from the year 1901 to and including the year 1909, respondent and his predecessors in interest paid all water taxes assessed against the property. The evidence also shows that he constructed water ditches which were used in irrigating trees and shrubbery from year to year planted on the lot by him and members of his family. During several years of this time his plural wife lived in the house. The east end of the lot was used by Barton mainly as a yard for his chickens and domestic animals, and the barn and other improvements (outbuildings about the yard) were used for watering, feeding, and sheltering them. The barn later was "turned into * * * a carpet, mattress cleaning factory." and on October 25, 1910, was destroyed by fire. We think Hyrum Barton's entire course of conduct relating to the Jarvis property from the time he acquired the legal title to the south half of lot 2, as shown by the great weight of the evidence, was not only consistent with the theory that he owned it, but was inconsistent with the theory that his occupation of the premises was that of a trespasser, or, as counsel for appellants seem to contend, as agent of Evans. In fact, the evidence is undisputed that his claim of ownership and possession of the ground in block 19, from the north side of Third North street to the fence line immediately north of the Jarvis house, was so open and notorious that the entire premises were known, and generally spoken of by his neighbors in that vicinity, as the "Barton property."

The record shows that from the time the trust company acquired title (July 12, 1898) to the north half of lot 2 until it was deeded to appellants (June 1, 1908), a period of nearly 10 years, there were no houses or other improvements on block 19 north of the Jarvis property. This is important, as it tends to show by whom the taxes assessed against the Jarvis property during those years were paid. The assessment rolls of Salt Lake county for the year 1899, to and including the year 1911, show that the south half of lot 2 was assessed to Hyrum Barton. The land was assessed at $500 for each of these 13 years, and the improvements were assessed at from $135 to $150 for each of the years to and including the year 1909. No assessment was made on improvements for the year 1910. For the year 1911 the improvements, designated "found," were assessed at $100. The evidence shows that "found," as used in the assessment rolls, means "foundation." The evidence shows that in the year 1911 all that remained of the Jarvis house was the foundation and a part of the walls. During this period of time the north half of lot 2 was assessed to the trust company, and at no time during these 13 years was the trust company assessed for improvements on any part of lot 2. We, therefore, think it clearly appears that respondent and his predecessor, Hyrum Barton, not only possessed, occupied, and claimed to own the Jarvis property during the 13 years ending 1911, but paid all taxes, both general and special, assessed against the property during that time.

Assuming, for the sake of argument, but not conceding, that the boundary lines of lot 2 are where appellants claim them to be, few cases, if any, can be found where the facts show a more complete acquisition of title by adverse possession than that acquired and asserted by respondent in this case, as shown by the undisputed evidence.

[2] Moreover, the undisputed evidence shows that appellants have the amount of land, the title of which is not in dispute, that their own evidence, testimony, shows they purchased in block 19; and, should they prevail in this action, they would be adjudged to be the owners of land which they at no time either purchased or possessed. Counsel for appellants seem to deny this, if we correctly understand their position. We think the maps and plats of block 19, in evidence, considered in connection with the evidence of Houghton, one of the appellants, to which we have referred, clearly show this. Furthermore, the evidence, without conflict, shows that the respondent, in the year 1911, at his own expense, laid a cement walk commencing at the southwest corner of block 19 and extending north along the west side of, and contiguous to, his property, a distance of 192.12 feet, to the point or place which the trial court found and adjudged to be the northwest corner of the south half of lot 2. From that point he further extended the cement walk north 224.92 feet, or approximately 13½ rods, to the point or place which, according to the maps and plats in evidence, the correctness of which is not questioned, is the northwest corner of lot 3. John A. Houghton, one of the appellants, paid respondent for laying the 224.92 feet of walk.

As we have pointed out, the record shows that lot 3, as platted, is 165 feet (10 rods), and the north half of lot 2, which is south of and contiguous to lot 3, is 3½ rods in width in a northerly and southerly direction. This evidence alone accounts for all the land that appellants purchased and obtained a legal title to in block 19.

Counsel for appellants in their printed brief say that, because respondent and his predecessors in interest treated and acquiesced in the south line marked by Wahlquist's fence as the south boundary of lot 1, block 19, which was established by Kimball and Wahlquist, and which was used as a starting point by Thomas and Jarvis, he ought not now be permitted to say "that line is further north." The decisive question, however, here involved is the location of the boundary of lot 2 with reference to adjoining properties. As we have pointed out, the evidence shows that lot 2 on the north joins and is contiguous to lot 3; that not later than 1896 Hyrum Barton went into possession of all of the land in block 19 extending from Third North street north to a point on North Main street 192.12 feet from the southwest corner of the block. The only inference that can be fairly drawn from the evidence is that Hyrum Barton, when he acquired the legal title to the south half of lot 2, either continued to maintain the fence built by Jarvis north of the house, or, about that time, moved the fence and reconstructed it about 6 feet nearer the dwelling. In either event he evidently maintained the fence where he claimed the dividing line between the north half and the south half of lot 2 to be. On this point Jarvis testified in part as follows:

> "My best recollection is that my fence was 12 or 14 feet north of my house. * * * I am satisfied to-day that this [the fence] is not built on the same line, but that it is moved 6 feet further south. This fence is not on the same line as the fence what I built in 1887."

Other witnesses testified that the fence at the present time is on the line where the fence erected by Jarvis stood. This apparent conflict in the evidence is unimportant, because the court held that the dividing line of the north half and the south half of lot 2 is where the fence now stands. The evidence, what there is on the point, tends to show that most, if not all, of the surplus ground in block 19 was a part of Third North street as the street was originally surveyed and platted, but was never used by the public as a street highway. That is, this surplus ground was a part of the street on paper only. The more recent plats made by the city of the block show that the dimensions of lot 1 have been enlarged so as to include the excess ground.

[3] Counsel for appellants contend that the "city could not do any such act." If not, why not? As we have pointed out the evidence, without conflict, shows that respondent and his predecessor, Hyrum Barton, for more than 15 years (the great preponderance of the evidence shows 20 full years) claimed to be the owners, and were in the exclusive possession of the south end of block 19 (except the southeast corner of the block referred to in the pleadings as the property of Margaret Taylor) from Third North street northerly 192.12 feet to a point a few feet north of the foundation of the old Jarvis house on lot 2. Moreover, the evidence shows that respondent in recent years, erected an apartment house on the ground which the evidence, what there is on the point, tends to show was formerly a part of the street as the street was originally platted by the city. There is evidence tending to show that appellant Houghton, in the year 1909, was advised that the surplus ground was contiguous to and abutted on Third North street. On this point respondent testified as follows:

> "I had a conversation with Mr. Houghton regarding the improvements in 1909. * * * Mr. Houghton told me I was foolish to make improvements on these premises because I was in the street. He referred to what is designated as the Wahlquist property. I was making improvements there."

Under these circumstances we are not prepared to say that the city exceeded or abused its power to the prejudice of appellants by waiving whatever title or right it may have had to the surplus ground.

The complaint made here, stripped of all sophistry, verbiage, and redundancy, is the refusal of the trial court to find and adjudge that this ground, which was formerly a part of Third North street, is located in the middle of the block between lots 2 and 4, and thereby increase the dimensions of lot 3 to the extent of the area of the surplus ground, which the evidence tends to show is 12 rods south of the lot. It is too plain to admit of serious discussion that a judgment in favor of appellants would have that effect.

Counsel for appellants, in support of their contention that the court erred in holding that the dividing line between the north half and the south half of lot 2 is north of the place where the Jarvis house stood, cite and rely on the following decisions of this court: Leland v. Bourne, 41 Utah, 125, 125 Pac. 652; Moyer v. Langton, 37 Utah, 9, 106 Pac. 508; Young v. Hyland, 37 Utah, 229, 108 Pac. 1124; Binford v. Eccles, 41 Utah, 453, 126 Pac. 333. We think the doctrine announced in those cases, in so far as it is applicable to the facts of this case, supports the findings and judgment of the trial court. As we have pointed out, the evidence, without any substantial conflict, shows that respondent and his predecessor, Hyrum Barton, have been in open and undisturbed possession of the Jarvis property for approximately 25 years next preceding the commencement of this action, and during more than 15 years of that time, maintained a fence, or the remnants of a fence, commencing at a point 192.12 feet northerly from the southwest corner of the block to a point about 6 feet north of the Jarvis house, and extending east along the northern boundary line of the Jarvis property for about 80 feet.

The court's findings of fact and conclusions of law and decree were filed and entered December 1, 1915. Respondent filed his cost bill November 23, 1915, eight days before the finding and decree were entered. Appellants moved the court to strike the cost bill on the ground that it was prematurely filed and served. The court denied the motion. The order of the court denying the motion is assigned as error.

[4] Costs were not recoverable, in fact were unknown at common law. The right, therefore, to tax and recover costs in an action or proceeding is purely statutory. 11 Cyc. 24; 5 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 108; 7 R. C. L. 781; 2

[5] Comp. Laws 1907, § 3350, provides:

> "The party in whose favor judgment is rendered, and who claims his costs, must deliver to the clerk, and serve a copy upon the adverse party, within five days after the verdict or notice of the decision of the court or referee, or, if the entry of the judgment on the verdict or decision be stayed, then before such entry is made, a memorandum of the items of his costs and necessary disbursements in the action or proceeding."

The statutes of California (Fairall's Code of Civ. Proc. § 1033) and also the Montana statutes (section 7170, Code Civ. Proc. 1907), providing for the recovery of costs in civil actions, and the provisions of the Utah statute herein set forth, are identical. In Chapin v. Broder, supra, the Supreme Court of California says:

> "The recovery of costs is a matter regulated exclusively by statute, and the mode pointed out for that purpose must be strictly pursued."

In the case of Sellick v. De Carlow, above cited, the cost bill was filed four days before the decision, and the California court, in that case, held that the trial court erred in denying a motion to strike out the cost bill. The Supreme Court of Montana, in the case of State v. District Court, 33 Mont. 533, 85 Pac. 368, says:

> "Costs, as costs, are allowed only by statute, and can be collected only by the method pointed out by the statute [citing authorities]. When, therefore, the party claiming costs has failed to claim them as directed by the statute, his right to them has not attached, and the court has no other power in the premises than to strike out and disallow them on motion of the adverse party."

This doctrine is approved by this court in the case of Smith v. Alford, supra. In that case the present Chief Justice, speaking for the court, says:

> "Costs are a creature of the statute merely, and the Legislature, who alone has the power to grant them, may likewise impose the conditions upon which they are to be allowed."

One of the conditions imposed by statute in this state in cases of this kind where the entry of the judgment is not stayed is that the cost bill "must be delivered to the clerk" and a copy served "upon the adverse party within five days after the * * * notice of the decision of the court." In the case at bar this was not done, but, on the contrary, the cost bill was filed and served, as stated, eight days before there was a decision or judgment in the case. This was not a compliance, or a substantial compliance, with the requirements of the statute. The trial court, therefore, erred in denying the motion to strike out the cost bill.

For the reasons stated, the judgment is affirmed on the merits. The cause, however, is remanded, with directions to the lower court to modify the judgment by disallowing the costs taxed by respondent. Each party to pay his own cost on this appeal.

CORFMAN, J., concurs.

FRICK, C. J. (concurring). Appellants' counsel vigorously assail the findings of fact, and insist that they are not supported by the evidence. They further contend that, in view that this is an equity case in which we have the power to make or direct findings, we, in view of all the evidence, should make or direct findings in favor of appellants. Speaking for myself, I must concede that the evidence in this case, on some of the questions involved, is not conclusive either way. The rule in this jurisdiction is, however, firmly established that every presumption is in favor of the findings and judgment, and in equity cases as in law cases that presumption prevails until it is overcome by something appearing to the contrary in the record of the proceedings brought to this court. In other words, the burden of showing that the findings and judgment are wrong, rests upon the appellant, and unless he makes it appear with reasonable clearness that the findings and judgment are wrong, or against law, he must fail. As pointed out by Mr. Justice McCarty in this case, what the result should be largely turns upon the question of to which of the parties should be awarded the surplus ground contained in block 19. While, as I said before, the evidence is not conclusive, yet I think the respondent's evidence is more in accord with the court's findings and judgment, and hence the conclusion reached by my Associates is right. I, therefore, concur.

PROVO CITY v. PROVO MEAT & PACKING CO. (No. 3016.)

1. LICENSES 🔑1—"LICENSE TAX"—"OCCUPATION TAX."

A license tax is based on the police power of the state to regulate or prohibit a particular business, and not to raise revenue, while an occupation tax is primarily intended to raise revenue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Cent. Dig. § 1.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, License Tax; Occupation Tax.]

2. LICENSES 🔑16(5)—"BUTCHER."

In Comp. Laws 1907, § 206x86 (Laws 1915, c. 100), empowering cities to license, tax, and regulate the business conducted by merchants, butchers, etc., the word "butcher" includes the occupation of a retail meat dealer.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Butcher.]

3. LICENSES 🔑6(13) — REGULATION OF BUTCHERS.

Under Comp. Laws 1907, § 206x43 (Laws 1915, c. 100), empowering cities to provide for the place and manner of sale of meats, the city has power to impose a license tax upon retail meat dealers.

4. LICENSES 🔑6(2)—REGULATION OF BUTCHERS.

Where power is conferred to regulate a particular business or calling, the power to license is included within the power to regulate.

5. LICENSES 🔑6(13)—DOUBLE TAXATION.

Under Comp. Laws 1907, § 206, as to regulation and taxation of merchants, it is within the power of a city to impose a general merchant's license tax upon one who is engaged in a general merchandising business, including the sale of meats, and further to impose a license tax upon his business of selling meat.

Appeal from District Court, Utah County; A. B. Morgan, Judge.

The Provo Meat & Packing Company was convicted of selling fresh meat without a license, and it appeals. Affirmed.

Jacob Evans, of Salt Lake City, for appellant. Jacob Coleman, of Provo, for respondent.

FRICK, C. J. The defendant, a corporation, was charged with carrying on "the business of selling fresh meat at retail and wholesale" in the city of Provo "without having first taken out and procured the municipal permit and license" required by the ordinance of said city. The defendant was convicted by the city justice of the peace. It appealed to the district court of Utah county where, upon the stipulation of facts hereinafter set forth, it was again convicted, and now presents the record on appeal to this court.

The stipulated facts, omitting the formal parts, in substance, are:

> That the city of Provo had theretofore duly passed two ordinances both of which were in force when the action was commenced, copies of which are attached to the stipulation of facts and will be hereinafter referred to; "that the defendant, on the 12th day of April, 1915, and for a long time prior thereto, was engaged in and carrying on business on Academy avenue, a public street of said Provo City; that in conducting said business, the said defendant carried for sale and sold a general stock of merchandising, including fresh meats at retail and wholesale, fish, green groceries, fruits, vegetables, canned goods, cheese, bread, butter, eggs, soda water, and other articles of food, and in connection therewith and as a part thereof said defendant carried for sale and sold hardware and other articles of general household usefulness; that said business was carried on as one general business, in one building, with only one front entrance, and under one general management: that the money derived from the sale of the various articles hereinbefore mentioned was deposited in one general account to the credit of the said defendant, and the said business, although different articles of merchandise were sold, was carried on and conducted as one general business, but said defendant does not slaughter within said city; that the said defendant before carrying on said business, to wit, on March 3, 1915, as aforesaid, procured from the said plaintiff a general merchant's license for the year 1915 under the provisions of that certain ordinance of said Provo City a copy of which is hereto attached and marked 'Exhibit A,' which said license was in full force and effect on the said 12th day of April, A. D. 1915; that said business was being carried on and conducted in the manner aforesaid by the said defendant on the said 12th day of April, 1915, without first procuring a license from said Provo City to sell fresh meat at retail and wholesale as provided in that certain ordinance of Provo City passed on the 25th day of March, 1915, a copy of which is hereto attached and marked 'Exhibit B'; that the said defendant, on said 12th day of April, 1915, and at all times, was ready, able, and willing and offered to pay the plaintiff for a city license either under the provisions of Exhibit A or B, as said Provo City may elect, but said city refused to allow said defendant to carry on his said business in the manner hereinbefore stated, unless the said defendant would take out and pay a city license under the provisions of both of said ordinances, which the defendant refused to do."

One of the ordinances provided for a tax on merchants who carried on business in Provo City. The stocks of merchandise were divided into 22 classes, ranging from $200, the lowest, to $500,000, and over, the highest. Those merchants who carried a stock of merchandise in excess of $500,000 constituted the first class, and were required to pay an annual tax of $400. Those who carried a stock in excess of $400,000 constituted the second class, and were required to pay an annual tax of $350, and so on down to the merchant who carried a stock of $200, who was required to pay an annual tax of $10. The ordinance was, in all respects, like the one passed on by this court in the case of Salt Lake City v. Christensen Co., 34 Utah, 38, 95 Pac. 523, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 898. The ordinance imposing the foregoing tax contained the following provision:

> "A merchant is one whose business is to buy and sell merchandise for gain or profit, but a merchant's license shall not include a butcher's or meat market license, nor authorize the licensee to buy or sell meats, other than canned or cured." (Italics ours.)

The ordinance directly in question here, and under which appellant was convicted, so far as material, reads:

> "It shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to engage in the business of slaughtering, slaughtering and selling, or selling fresh meat at wholesale or retail within the corporate limits of Provo City, Utah, without first making application for and procuring a permit and license so to do, as herein provided."

The ordinance provides for a license fee of from $15, the lowest, to $35, the highest.

The appellant was required to pay a license fee or tax of $35.

We have referred to the foregoing ordinances for the reason that appellant's counsel insists that the city of Provo can require his client to pay a tax under only one of said ordinances, and, in view that it had required it to pay under the merchants' ordinance, the city cannot require payment under the meat dealers' ordinance. We shall refer to this objection again hereinafter.

Our Constitution (article 13, § 12) provides:

> "Nothing in this Constitution shall be construed to prevent the Legislature from providing a stamp tax, or a tax based on income, occupation, licenses or franchises."

[1] As pointed out in the case of Salt Lake City v. Christensen Co., supra, the merchant's ordinance imposes a tax which is in the nature of an occupation tax rather than a license tax or license fee. The term "occupation tax" is, however, sometimes also applied to a license fee or license tax, and thus some confusion has at times arisen concerning the meaning of the two terms. Properly speaking, a license fee or a license tax comes within and is based upon the police power of the state to regulate or to prohibit a particular business. Such a fee or tax is primarily intended to regulate a particular calling or business, and not to raise revenue, while an occupation tax is primarily intended to raise revenue by that method of taxation. Our statute (Comp. Laws 1907, § 206x86), as amended by Laws Utah 1915, p. 168, confers power upon the cities of this state—"to raise revenue by levying and collecting a license fee or tax on any private corporation or business within the limits of the city and regulate the same by ordinance. All such license fees and taxes shall be uniform in respect to the class upon which they are imposed." In subdivision 38, § 206, supra, after providing for the licensing of various occupations, callings, and businesses, it is also provided that cities shall have the power "to license, tax, and regulate the business conducted by merchants, retailers, shop and store keepers, butchers, druggists," etc., and subdivision 43 of the same section also confers power upon cities "to provide for the place and manner of sale of meats, poultry, fish, butter, cheese, lard, vegetables, and all other provisions, and regulate the selling of the same."

[2] Appellant's counsel contends that neither one of the provisions to which reference has just been made confers power upon the city of Provo to impose the license fee or tax in question here. He contends that his client does not come within the term "butchers," and that such a power is not conferred in subdivision 44 aforesaid. While it is true that, in some cases, it has been held that meat dealers are not included within the term "butcher" or "butchers" in a license statute, yet in other cases it is held that the term "butcher shop," includes meat dealers. In Wiest v. Luyendyk, 73 Mich. 661, 41 N. W. 839, the Supreme Court of Michigan held that the terms "butcher shop" and "meat market" were commonly used as synonyms. In 6 Cyc. 261, it is said that the word "butcher" "may, and often does, include the person who cuts up and sells the meat." In 1 Stroud's Judicial Dictionary ([Eng.] 2d Ed.) 239, it is said:

> "The business of a 'butcher' is carried on within the meaning of a restrictive covenant if raw meat be sold on the premises though the animals be slaughtered elsewhere; and so the exposure of pork meat for sale is carrying on the business of 'pork butcher.'"

[3] In Green v. State, 56 Ark. 386, 19 S. W. 1055, the term "butcher shop" was held to include a place where meats were sold, although the animals from which the meat was obtained were slaughtered elsewhere. While it is quite true that the occupation of a butcher is mentioned in the statute we have quoted, yet we think that term also includes a dealer in meats. Such is, no doubt, the modern application of the term. But even though it be assumed that the appellant is not included within the term "butchers" in the statute we have quoted, yet its business is clearly included within subdivision 43, § 206, supra, which we have quoted in full.

[4] Counsel, however, insists that that subdivision only provides for the place and manner of sale of meats, etc. The contention is not tenable. The statute as clearly provides for the regulation as it does for the place and manner of sale of meats. Where power is conferred to regulate a particular business or calling the power to license is included within the power to regulate. In 3 McQuillin, Mun. Corps., § 989, the author says:

> "The prevailing rule is that under power to regulate, the municipal corporation may license and charge a reasonable fee, to cover the expense of regulation, especially concerning those occupations wherein regulation and supervision appear necessary or desirable for the public good. Thus, under power given the city to provide for the inspection and to regulate the sale of meats, power to tax for revenue the occupation of selling them is not given, but such fees and charges as are necessary to cover the cost of inspection and police supervision may be imposed."

Now, we have pointed out that, under our Constitution, both an occupation tax and a license fee or tax may be imposed. We have also shown that the Legislature of this state has clearly conferred both the power to impose an occupation tax for revenue purposes and to impose a license fee or tax for the purpose of regulation under the police power, and hence the objection of want of power must fail.

[5] No lawyer, we think, will question the necessity of regulating the sale of fresh meats. Nor will any lawyer in this day and age deny that there is a clear distinction between the right to raise revenue by taxing occupations and the right to impose a license fee or so-called license tax for the purpose of "regulating" a particular business or calling. The courts, we think, all hold that where the purpose of the ordinance or statute is to regulate, under the police power, the amount of the license fee or tax must be reasonable, and may not exceed the reasonable cost of preparing and issuing the license and the reasonable expenses of inspection and supervision. In this case we are, however, relieved from the duty of passing upon the reasonableness of the fee or tax in question, since counsel, at the hearing, admitted that the amount imposed was not unreasonable. Counsel, however, further contends that, inasmuch as the appellant has paid the amount of the tax demanded from it under the merchant's ordinance, for that reason it cannot also be required to pay under the meat dealer's ordinance. In that connection it is argued that the city is merely attempting to split up appellant's business into distinct parts or elements and to tax each part separately. In support of the argument counsel cites and relies on what is said by the author in 3 McQuillin, Mun. Corps., § 1003, which reads as follows:

> "A municipal corporation cannot, by ordinance, under the delegated general power to tax privileges, segregate the several elements of right that accrue to the citizen under one taxable privilege, as recognized, defined and declared by law, and tax each of such elements as a separate and distinct privilege of its own creation, as, for example, by dividing several privileges into many and requiring separate licenses to sell special articles which necessarily belong to one legal privilege, and which the law permits to be sold under one license. To express the rule in other words, power to impose a license tax upon a business does not authorize a division of the business into its constituent elements, parts, or incidents, and levy a separate tax on each or any element, part, or incident thereof."

In the case at bar appellant, in its general stock of merchandise, has, however, also included several articles which are usually recognized as falling within the power to regulate as a distinct right and quite apart from the right of imposing an occupation tax. Suppose the appellant concluded to add to its general stock of merchandise large or considerable quantities of explosives, such as gun or giant powder, or dynamite, together with other explosives, and that all of those had been included in the value of its stock of merchandise under the merchant's ordinance, could it, nevertheless, successfully contend that Provo City could not require it to pay a fee for a license, or permit, to deal in and sell such explosives? True, such explosives are inherently dangerous, but that fact does not affect the power to regulate, but merely the degree or extent of regulation. While explosives affect the public safety, meats, and especially fresh meats, all know, may seriously affect the public health. In this day and age, and especially in cities and towns, it is quite as necessary to regulate the one as the other. It is apparent, therefore, that to require a merchant to pay a license for the privilege of dealing in fresh meats in no way affects the city's right to impose an occupation tax upon his stock of merchandise, including his meats. The license fee is imposed to defray the cost and expenses of issuing the license and of inspection and general supervision. That is not double taxation in any sense. Neither is it dividing or splitting the business into separate parts or distinct elements. Moreover, a mere cursory reading of the cases cited by Mr. McQuillin in support of the text we have quoted, namely, Re Sims, 40 Fla. 432, 25 South. 280, Canova v. Williams, 41 Fla. 509, 27 South. 30, and Southern Express Co. v. Rose Co., 124 Ga. 581, 53 S. E. 185, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 619, will at once disclose that the license fee in question here is clearly distinguishable from the license taxes which were sought to be enforced in those cases. The question, therefore, is not one of power to impose and enforce the tax in question, but it is one of policy, with regard to which this court has no power to speak.

The objections urged by appellant's counsel are therefore without merit, and the judgment should be affirmed, with costs to respondent. Such is the order.

HUBBELL v. FORSYTH et al. (No. 13731.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑173(5)—SUBMISSION OF ISSUE NOT PLEADED.

In an action for damages by the assignee of a lumber company against its remote grantors because of failure of the title on which the lumber company had based its right to a condemnation fund under the warranty deed from the grantors, where defendants pleaded delivery of the deed to the lumber company, and that, at the time of commencement of the condemnation proceedings, the lumber company was the owner of the land in fee simple by mesne conveyances, and further pleaded that the final award of the condemnation fund to third persons was not due to any infirmity in the title of the lumber company, defendants will not be heard in the Supreme Court on appeal to say that there was no delivery of the deed to the lumber company, and that its title is other than that alleged in their pleadings, since a party on appeal will not be allowed to submit an issue contrary to that pleaded by him below.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑173(5) — ISSUES IN LOWER COURT—WAIVER OF OBJECTION.

In such action, plaintiff having pleaded his assignment from the lumber company, it was incumbent upon defendants, if they desired to question the company's right to make the assignment for its failure to pay license fees to the state, to have raised the question by appropriate plea in the trial court, and, they not having done so, the objection is waived.

3. JUDGMENT 🔑672—PARTIES CONCLUDED—CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS.

In condemnation proceedings, where a lumber company's remote grantors filed a petition and answer joining with the lumber company and praying that the condemnation fund be paid to it, and that claims of other parties be held to have been adjudicated in prior proceedings, and also filed a second pleading or petition in which they pleaded alone and prayed the same relief, and the prayer of such petitions, so far as decreeing the rights of the lumber company to the fund, was granted, and the decree was appealed from, and notice of appeal served on the attorneys who appeared of record for the company's grantors, the latter were parties in the trial court and on appeal to the proceeding in which rights to the condemnation fund were litigated, and judgment establishing the right of other parties as against the lumber company was conclusive against them.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Cowlitz County; Edward H. Wright, Judge.

Action by B. L. Hubbell against C. E. Forsyth and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. N. Pearcy and John T. McKee, both of Portland, Or., for appellants. B. L. Hubbell, of Kelso, for respondent.

MORRIS, J. This is the final chapter of the proceedings detailed in Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. Smith, 68 Wash. 269, 122 Pac. 1057, and State ex rel. Smith v. Superior Court, 71 Wash. 354, 128 Pac. 648. It having been finally determined that the Smiths were entitled to the fund arising out of the condemnation proceedings by the railway company, the Gruber Lumber Company withdrew from the land and subsequently assigned to respondent its claim against Forsyth for damages because of the failure of the title upon which the lumber company had based its right to the condemnation fund under a warranty deed from Forsyth and wife to the lumber company.

Appellants first contend that the covenant of seisin embraced in the deed to the Gruber Lumber Company is a mistake and by cross-complaint sought to reform the deed in this respect. There is no evidence upon which this claim can be successfully based. The record is ample in sustaining the refusal of the lower court to so find and in denying reformation.

[1] It is next contended that there was no delivery of the deed due to the fact that Mrs. Forsyth died between the making and the delivery of the deed. At the time of the execution of the deed, the amount due upon the sale of the land had not been fully paid. It is evident that Mrs. Forsyth executed the deed and delivered it to her husband to be by him delivered to the grantee upon full payment of the land, and upon such payment being made the deed was delivered. This suggestion of any infirmity in the title of the lumber company is first raised by appellants in their brief on this appeal. In their answer below they pleaded delivery of the deed to the lumber company and that at the time of the commencement of the condemnation proceedings the lumber company was the owner of the land in fee simple by mesne conveyances. They further pleaded that the final award of the condemnation fund to the Smith heirs was not due to any infirmity in the title of the lumber company. With such a record appellants will not be heard here to say that there was no delivery of the deed to the lumber company and that the title of the lumber company is other than that alleged in their pleadings. A party upon appeal will not be allowed to submit an issue contrary to that pleaded by him below.

[2] Respondent's rights as assignee of the Gruber Lumber Company are attacked upon the ground that his assignor, the lumber company, had failed to pay its license fee to the state. The only reference in the record to any nonpayment of license fees due to the state is testimony from one witness that none had been paid since 1912. Respondent having pleaded his assignment from the lumber company, it was incumbent upon appellants, if they desired to question the right of the lumber company to make the assignment because of its failure to pay the license fees subsequent to 1912, to have raised the question by appropriate plea in the trial court.

[3] It is next contended that appellants are not bound by the final judgment establishing the rights of the Smith heirs as against the lumber company. Two pleadings were filed in the condemnation proceedings on behalf of the Forsyths. In the first, called "petition and answer," they joined with the Gruber Lumber Company and prayed that the condemnation fund be paid to the lumber company and that claims of certain other respondents be held to have been adjudicated in prior proceedings. In the second pleading, called "petition," they pleaded alone and prayed the same relief. The prayer of those petitions, in so far as decreeing the rights of the Gruber Lumber Company to the fund, was granted by the lower court. The decree was appealed from to this court, and notice of appeal served upon attorneys who had appeared of record for the Forsyths. These facts, among others that might be mentioned, establish beyond question that the Forsyths were parties both below and on appeal to the proceedings in which rights to the condemnation fund were litigated. Being parties, final judgment establishing the rights of the Smith heirs as against the lumber company is conclusive against them.

Other contentions are discussed in the briefs, but we find them without merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

GENERAL MARKET CO. v. POST-INTELLIGENCER CO., Inc. (No. 13805.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 4, 1917.)

1. LIBEL AND SLANDER 🔑7(15)—ACTIONABLE WORDS — IMPUTING VIOLATION OF FOOD LAW.

A publication that food owned by plaintiff market company had been condemned is not libelous per se as charging a violation of the pure food law, Rem. Code 1915, § 5453 et seq., prohibiting the sale or keeping for sale of unfit food, since the publication charges merely the ownership of unfit food.

2. LIBEL AND SLANDER 🔑9(7)—ACTIONABLE WORDS—INJURING PLAINTIFF'S BUSINESS.

A publication, falsely stating that certain food condemned by state was owned by plaintiff market company, is not actionable per se as naturally tending to injure plaintiff's business; there being no charge that plaintiff was selling, intended to sell, or even had the goods in its possession.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, King County; Everett Smith, Judge.

Libel action by the General Market Company against the Post-Intelligencer Company, Incorporated. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. H. Bolen, of Seattle, for appellant. Hughes, McMicken, Dovell & Ramsey, of Seattle, for respondent.

FULLERTON, J. This is an action for libel. The amended complaint of the plaintiff, omitting the caption and conclusion, is as follows:

"I. That during all the times herein mentioned the plaintiff, General Market Company, was and now is a corporation, created, organized, and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Washington, and having its principal place of business at Seattle, King county, Wash., and having paid its license fee for the current year to the state of Washington.

"II. That the plaintiff is the owner and operator of a large and profitable public market, known as the Westlake Public Market, or more generally known throughout the city of Seattle and the state of Washington as the 'Westlake Market,' located at Fifth avenue, Westlake avenue and Pine street, in the city of Seattle, King county, Wash., where food products and fruits of all kinds are kept, offered for sale, and sold to the general public of said city of Seattle and state of Washington; and was and now is dealing with the general public as its patrons throughout said city and state.

"III. That the defendant Post-Intelligencer Company, Inc., is a corporation of the state of Washington, owning and operating and publishing a daily, morning newspaper, known as the Post-Intelligencer, having a large general circulation throughout said city of Seattle and state of Washington.

"IV. That on the 4th day of March, 1916, the defendant published in said newspaper called the Post-Intelligencer the following words of and concerning the plaintiff in its trade and business: 'Tons of Food Found Unfit for Consumption. Property Owned by Storage Company and Westlake Market Condemned by State. Food products of several tons weight, including 3,300 pounds of cheese, 103 boxes of oranges, and 3½ barrels of salt herring, were seized and destroyed in the last week as unfit for human consumption by Will H. Adams of the State Department of Agriculture. The Diamond Ice & Cold Storage Company owned 2,700 pounds of the cheese, and the Westlake Market owned the remaining 600 pounds. The oranges were shipped to the Produce Distributors Company of Seattle, from California. Part of the shipment was sent to Everett and part to Victoria. The Everett shipment was traced and also condemned. The herring were seized in Everett.'

"V. That the defendant meant thereby the Westlake Public Market, and it was so understood by the readers of its morning newspaper, the Post-Intelligencer, to be the Westlake Public Market.

"VI. That the said publication was false and defamatory.

"VII. That the said false and defamatory words were published of and concerning this plaintiff, and was so understood and meant by this defendant, and was so understood by the readers of its morning newspaper, the Post-Intelligencer.

"VIII. That the plaintiff has been injured in its reputation and business and trade by reason of said false and defamatory publication to its damage in the sum of $50,000."

To the amended complaint the defendant interposed a general demurrer, which the trial court sustained. The plaintiff elected to abide by its complaint, whereupon the court entered a judgment of dismissal with costs. This appeal followed.

There are certain words which, when spoken or published of or concerning another, are actionable per se. This means that they are actionable without allegation or proof of an actual injury, because their natural, necessary, and proximate consequence is to cause injury to the person of whom they are spoken or published, thus giving rise to a conclusive presumption of law that an actual injury was caused thereby. What words are so actionable is not always easy of determination, and many confusing and conflicting decisions on the question can be found. It is the general concensus of opinion, however, that words are so actionable which charge the commission of a punishable crime, or which tend to injure a person in his occupation, trade, business, or profession. Since the appellant has not in his complaint alleged special damages, it must be held, if it is to be held that its complaint states a cause of action, that the words complained of therein are actionable per se.

[1] The appellant contends that the words are thus actionable under either or both of the general rules stated. It is said that the words published charge the commission of a crime because of the pure food and drug act (Rem. Code, § 5453 et seq.), which makes it a misdemeanor to sell, offer for sale, have in possession with intent to sell, or manufacture for sale, any article of food which is adulterated within the meaning of the act. But it is manifest, we think, that the article as published does not charge the appellant with doing any of these things. The charge is that a certain quantity of cheese, with other articles of food, was seized and destroyed as unfit for human consumption, by an official of the State Department of Agriculture, and that a part of the quantity of cheese was owned by the appellant. There is no charge that it sold the cheese, offered it for sale, held it in possession with intent to sell, or manufactured it for sale. It is not even charged that the appellant held it in possession. All that is charged is ownership. While the right of possession usually follows ownership, actual possession need not, and to charge the one is not to charge the other. But, even if possession were charged, it would not be to accuse it of crime. The appellant by its own affirmative allegations is a vendor of perishable food products. It would be strange indeed if, among its general stock of products, it did not at all times own and possess something that is unfit for human consumption; this because of the natural tendency of such products to decay, and the practicable inability to make selections when purchases of stock are made. But these are not acts the statute makes criminal. The statute punishes those who willfully purchase and vend the prohibited products, not those who own them from the necessities of the case but do not vend or offer to vend them.

[2] Whether the publication is actionable per se, because tending to injure the appellant in its business, is a more difficult question; but we think this was also correctly determined by the trial court. The article bears evidence on its face that it was a news item, reciting the activities of the State Department of Agriculture for the preceding week. Its general truthfulness is not negatived by the complaint; that is, it is not negatived that the department named did seize and destroy as unfit for human consumption the quantity of cheese, oranges, and salt herring mentioned therein. But the complaint is that the article falsely set forth as a fact that 600 pounds of the cheese so seized and destroyed were owned by the appellant. A hasty reading of the complaint might seem to indicate otherwise, but it will be observed that it is alleged that the false and defamatory words were published of and concerning the appellant, and the only thing published of and concerning the appellant is that it owned 600 pounds of the 3,300 pounds of the cheese seized and destroyed. The question then narrows itself to this: Is it libelous per se to publish that certain food products, which were seized and destroyed by a public health officer as unfit for human consumption, were owned in part by a certain person when such person did not in fact own any part of them?

It must be remembered when the question is considered that the publication contains no charge of the violation of a criminal statute, no charge that the vendor offered the goods for sale, held them for sale, intended at some future time to sell them, or had them in possession. For all that appears in the publication, the goods may have been purchased at some distant place under an order calling for wholesome and edible products, and seized by the health officer while in the course of shipment, or while they were in some warehouse or depositary before they were examined or delivered to the appellant. Indeed, this would seem a natural inference from the language of the article. The exact weight of the cheese seized is given, and the number of pounds owned by each of the parties named as owner is likewise given; the inference naturally following that the cheese was in one bulk and owned in the proportions stated by the persons named. Nor is there a charge that the appellant knew of the unwholesome condition of the cheese, and there is no presumption that a dealer in food products knows the condition of all the goods that it owns. He must know, or at least is presumed to know, the condition of such products as he sells or offers for sale to others; but it is common knowledge that a dealer in such products must buy from other dealers or from producers, often without inspection or the chance of inspection, and no one would suppose, we think, that, because such a dealer was found at some time to be the owner of an unwholesome food product, he was dealing in such products, or was in any way unworthy of trust or confidence. The natural, necessary, and proximate consequence of mistakenly and untruthfully publishing a charge of such a dealer that he was such owner cannot therefore be to injure him in his business, and it must follow that the publication of such a charge is not actionable per se. This is not to deny that injury may follow such a publication; it is but to deny that injury naturally or necessarily follows it. If injury does follow the publication, the injured party is not without remedy; he has but to allege and prove actual damage in order to recover.

The learned counsel for the appellant has industriously collected a large number of cases touching the law of libel. These we think it unprofitable to review. It would be to do no more than emphasize a condition already confessed, namely, that the courts are widely divergent on the question as to what matters published will constitute libel actionable per se.

The judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

BAUMGARTNER et al. v. CITY OF RENTON. (No. 13704.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑358(3)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION.

Under a contract between a city and plaintiffs to pave and brick a certain avenue, the provision that city engineer shall in all cases determine the amount of work to be paid for and that his estimates shall be final and conclusive, subject to approval of council, when construed with the provision that no improvement shall be deemed complete until city engineer shall have filed a statement to that effect, but neither said statement nor acceptance of the work by the engineer shall prevent the city from thereafter making claim for uncompleted or defective work if the same is discovered within two years, did not make approval of work by city engineer binding and conclusive on both parties, and city, in a suit by plaintiffs within two years to recover a balance of agreed consideration, was entitled to judgment on its cross-complaint for money expended to remedy a defective construction which plaintiffs failed to relay according to contract.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑358(3)—CONTRACT FOR PAVING—DECISION OF ENGINEER—CONCLUSIVENESS.

If a city in a contract for paving an avenue makes in explicit language the decision of the engineer as to compliance final, his decision is conclusive on the parties.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑365 — CONTRACTS FOR IMPROVEMENTS — DEFECTS — ESTOPPEL.

Defendant city was not estopped from questioning the sufficiency of the work because its inspector and engineer who were on the ground permitted the defective work to be performed.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, King County; Kenneth Mackintosh, Judge.

Action by A. J. Baumgartner and another, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Baumgartner & Mongin, against the City of Renton, in which the City filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment for the City, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Tucker & Hyland, of Seattle, for appellants. Daniel Gaby, of Renton, and Bradford, Allison & Egan, of Seattle, for respondent.

FULLERTON, J. In the early part of the year 1913, the plaintiffs, A. J. Baumgartner and S. F. Mougin, as copartners, entered into a contract with the city of Renton to pave with brick a certain portion of First Avenue North in that city for the sum of $12,833.76. The paving was all laid by the contractors on December 20, 1913, and 70 per cent. of the contract price paid; the remainder being retained pending the settlement of certain lien claims for labor and material. The contractors afterwards satisfied these claims, and the balance due, with the exception of $500, was ordered paid by the city council. The retention of this last-mentioned sum was due to the fact that a portion of the paving was not laid in accordance with the specifications and would have to be relaid to comply therewith, the estimate of the city engineer being that the sum retained would be sufficient to cover the expense. This arrangement was satisfactory to the plaintiffs, and they agreed to do the relaying as part of their contract. The actual doing of the work was delayed until March 1, 1915, at which time, after an agreement with the city council, appellants started the work, tearing up certain portions of the paving; but after tearing it up they at once relaid it as it was, and refused to do anything more. The city thereupon relaid the pavement so as to remedy the defective construction, at an expense to the city of $1,569.83. The plaintiffs then brought this action against the city to recover the $500 balance on their contract price for the pavement. The city set up a cross-complaint, alleging damages in the sum of $1,569.83 as a result of the failure of plaintiffs to perform their contract according to its terms. The court found for the defendant in the full sum claimed on its cross-complaint, and gave judgment therefor, directing that the defendant credit on the judgment the $500 cash retained by the city out of the contract price, leaving a balance due defendant from plaintiffs in the sum of $1,069.83. The plaintiffs appeal.

The appellants first contend error in the following finding of fact made by the court:

> "That plaintiffs entered upon the performance of said contract and pretended to perform the same. That defendant paid to plaintiffs, as it was required by said contract to do, all the sums due and payable prior to the final and full payment, and thereafter paid to plaintiffs all but the sum of $500 on the whole contract price. That said sum of $500 was retained by defendant after investigation by plaintiffs and defendant of the facts as then understood to exist relative to the pavement, and was considered as being, and was then estimated to be, a sum sufficient to relay said defective portions of said work: but said work had been so carelessly and negligently performed by plaintiffs, without knowledge or consent of defendant, and without any warning thereof to defendant, that plaintiffs did not comply with the contract, in this, they did not use the size of roller required to prepare the ground for laying the pavement, the materials used were of inferior quality, the brick ill shaped, the sand was unwashed, the top layer of bricks was improperly rolled, the interstices between the bricks were largely filled with sand, instead of with proper grouting, producing a weak bond, the specifications were not complied with in the preparation of the grouting, either in the proportion of sand and cement used, in the methods of mixing, or in the methods of putting the grouting between the bricks, with the result that the spaces between the bricks of the wearing surface layer of the pavement were only partially filled with the grouting, and, in making the necessary repairs to the street and in relaying defective portions thereof, it became necessary to repair and relay the larger part of said pavement, all of which was done in a reasonable, prudent, and proper manner at a total cost of $1,069.83 over and above said $500, the whole cost to defendant being the sum of $1,569.83, all of which was paid on or before July 1, 1915, by defendant."

The evidence covers a number of pages of the statement of facts, and it would be unprofitable to review it here. Its examination, however, satisfies us that it fully supports the finding.

[1] The appellants next contend that the approval of the city engineer was binding and conclusive upon both parties, and neither the city nor the plaintiffs could go behind his decision. This contention is founded upon the following clause of the specifications made a part of the contract between the parties:

> "To prevent all disputes and litigation it is further agreed that the city engineer shall in all cases determine the amount of work to be paid for under the contract for this improvement, and his estimates and decisions shall be final and conclusive, subject to the approval of the city council."

[2] It is settled law in this jurisdiction that, where a contract for public work makes in explicit language the decision of the engineer final as to the performance of a contract, such decision is conclusive on the parties.

"But to make such a certificate conclusive, plain language in the contract is required. It is not to be implied." McQuillin, Mun. Corp. § 1938.

If there were no such provision in the contract, the contract itself would not preclude the city from recouping in damages for a breach of contract. Assuming that the provision set out above is sufficient standing alone to make the engineer's decision as to the completion of the work final, we find it modified by a further stipulation in the contract, namely:

> "No improvement shall be deemed completed until the city engineer shall have filed with the city clerk a statement declaring the same to have been completed. But neither said statement nor any acceptance of said work by the city engineer shall prevent the city from thereafter making claim for uncompleted or defective work if the same is discovered within two years from the completion and acceptance of the work."

This provision clearly modifies the one relied upon by the appellants, and makes the engineer's certificate conclusive only as to uncompleted and defective work discovered later than two years after the completion and acceptance of the work. As this defect was discovered within the two years, the city was entitled to make claim for it.

[3] The appellants further contend that the respondent is estopped from questioning the sufficiency of the work for the reason that its inspector and city engineer were on the ground, saw the manner in which the work was being performed, and permitted it to go on. But the contract itself furnishes an answer to this contention. By the contract the city reserved, not only the right to inspect the work while it was in progress, but the right to make claim for any defective work within two years after the contract work should be completed. The purpose of this was to protect itself against any incompetence or negligence on the part of its inspectors. The appellants engaged in the work knowing that their failure to properly perform it would not be excused because of the failure of the inspectors to see that it was performed according to the stipulations. There can therefore be no estoppel within the time limited from the fact that the work of inspection was indifferently performed.

The judgment is affirmed.

J. I. CASE THRESHING MACH. CO. v. SCOTT et al. (No. 13803.)

1. SALES ⟹441(3) — WARRANTY — BREACH — EVIDENCE.

A satisfaction slip, which the buyer of machinery signed after work thereon by the seller's expert, being without consideration, is not conclusive, but only evidence, on the question of the warranties being satisfied or breached.

2. Sales 🔑288(4)—Contract—Notice of Defects.

That the written notice by buyer to the seller of defect in the machinery was not within the ten days provided by the contract does not prevent the buyer relying on breach of warranty and rescission, the seller at all stages having notice of the defects, and that being the only purpose of the provision.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 821.]

3. Sales 🔑287(1)—Rescission by Buyer—Return of Property—Contract.

Machinery having been received by the buyers on cars, provision of the contract for its return by the buyer, in case of defect not remedied breaching warranty, to place where it was received, is either so ambiguous or unreasonable as to be unenforceable.

4. Sales 🔑279—Contract—Divisibility.

Under contract of sale of steam plow and engine, providing that the order is divisible as to each machine and attachment, and that failure of a separate machine to fill the warranty shall not affect buyer's liability for any other, the plow fulfilling the warranty and being capable of use with any kind of traction engine, the buyer must pay therefor, notwithstanding breach of warranty as to the engine.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 783–792.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Douglas County; R. S. Steiner, Judge.

Action by the J. I. Case Threshing Machine Company against W. H. Scott and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Modified.

Cade & Barrows, of Wenatchee, for appellants. Crollard & Crollard, of Wenatchee, for respondent.

HOLCOMB, J. Action by respondent J. I. Case Threshing Machine Company, hereinafter called the company, against appellants W. H., C. E., and L. H. Scott, to recover on three promissory notes and to foreclose a chattel mortgage on a certain steam plowing outfit.

Some time in March, 1913, one Wharf, an agent of the company, called at appellants' farm for the purpose of selling to them a plowing outfit. He examined the soil and recommended the machine finally sold as being adapted to plow that particular soil. These negotiations culminated in a written agreement of sale, dated April 8, 1913, the material portions of which are as follows:

"J. I. Case Threshing Machine Company, Racine, Wisconsin:

"You will please ship or deliver on or before the —— day of —— at once (or as soon thereafter as you can furnish for transportation or delivery), to Wenatchee or other convenient station in the state of Washington in care of Wells & Morris for the undersigned purchaser the following goods: One Case 80 horse power simple steam engine straw trac burning, * * * with the usual fixtures and extras furnished as part of its regular equipment. Also for the above machinery 1–10 bottom 14" Case hand lift eng. gang plow stubble btm. fuel bunkers & 12" extension rims on engine, 1 headlight, 1–16 bbl unmtd eng tender, tank pump & hose.

"In consideration whereof, purchaser will receive same on cars on arrival subject to the warranty below printed and pay freight and charges thereon and pay to your order $3,325.00 as follows: Cash $——, and execute notes on company's blanks with approved security, as below, with interest at 8 per cent. per annum from date until maturity and 10 per cent. per annum from maturity until paid; note for $1,108.00 due November 1st, 1913; note for $1,108.00 due November 1st, 1914; note for $1,109.00 due November 1st, 1915; * * * secured by proper storage, first mortgage on said machinery and earnings thereof, and also ——; and if purchaser fails to pay said money or execute and deliver said notes and mortgage (properly filed or recorded), it is agreed as a condition hereof that the title to said goods shall not pass and this order shall at the company's option stand as purchaser's written obligation having the same force and effect as notes and mortgage for all sums not paid in cash, and the whole amount of purchase money shall be due and payable, and the company shall stand discharged from all warranty. Said machinery is purchased upon and subject to the following mutual and interdependent conditions, and none other, namely:

"It is warranted to be made of good material, and durable with good care, and to be capable of doing more and better work than any other machine made of equal size and proportions, working under the same conditions on the same job, if properly operated by competent persons, with suitable power, and the printed rules and directions of the manufacturers intelligently followed. The condition of the foregoing warranty is that if, after a trial of ten days by the purchasers operating in the manner specified, said machinery shall fail to fulfill the warranty, written notice thereof shall at once be given to the J. I. Case T. M. Company at Racine, Wisconsin, and also to the dealer from whom received, stating in what parts and wherein it fails to fulfill the warranty, and reasonable time shall be given to said company to send a competent person to remedy the difficulty (unless it be of such a nature that a remedy may be suggested by letter), the purchasers rendering necessary and friendly assistance and co-operation, without compensation for labor or material furnished, and the company reserving the right to replace any defective part or parts. If, after giving the notice and opportunity to remedy the difficulty complained of, as above provided, the company fails to send a representative to remedy said difficulty (or to suggest an efficient remedy by mail), or if, upon its attempt to remedy the same, the machinery cannot be made to fill the warranty, the part that fails is to be returned immediately by the purchaser, free of charge to the place where it was received, and the company notified thereof, whereupon the company shall have the option either to furnish another machine, or part, in place of the one so returned, which shall fill the warranty, or to return the notes, or money received for the machine or part so returned, and the contract shall be rescinded to that extent, and no further claim made on the company."

The outfit was delivered to appellants at Wenatchee, on cars, on the date of this instrument, and was removed to appellants' farm, some 12 miles distant. While the evidence is somewhat in conflict as to whether the machine fulfilled the warranty, it cannot be successfully disputed that great trouble was experienced in operating it; in fact, the engine would not generate sufficient steam to haul the plows until the arrival of one of the company's experts named Dunseth, who changed the grate and generated 175 pounds of steam, when a small amount of land was plowed. At that time only eight bottoms of the ten were used and a portion of the time only six, and the plowing that was done was not deep enough. As the wind blew away the straw used for fuel, the plowing was discontinued for the day, and that night at the solicitation of Dunseth the appellants signed a satisfaction slip stating that the machine was working to their satisfaction and filling the warranty. Controversies concerning the return of the machine were had between appellants and the company, and as appellants maintained that the machine failed to do the work that it was warranted to do, they refused to pay the notes and offered to return the outfit. The company thereupon commenced this action for the purpose above stated.

By way of affirmative defenses set up in their answer, appellants alleged that no liability could be fastened on them, since the machine did not meet the warranties made by the company, and because of this the consideration of the notes failed. In reply thereto the company alleged that appellants failed to live up to certain conditions of the contract, and are now estopped to complain of a breach of warranty. The lower court made findings of fact in conformity with the company's version of the evidence, and entered a judgment as prayed.

[1] The only conclusion that can be drawn from the record is that the plowing outfit never did fulfill the warranty or plow appellants' ground in a satisfactory manner. Nor is it seriously contended by the company that it did, but it asserted that appellants, because they signed the satisfaction slip above referred to, are not in a position to complain of a breach of warranty. Appellant W. H. Scott testified that he thought he was signing only a slip to certify that Dunseth's services on that day were satisfactory. In any event this satisfaction slip is not absolutely binding on appellants, as they received no consideration from the company for signing the same. It is nothing more than evidence, more susceptible of proof by reason of its being in writing, but evidence nevertheless to be considered in connection with all the other evidence in determining whether the warranties had been breached. The court found that the testimony indicates that subsequent to the execution of this slip the outfit did not do good plowing, but that the soil and season were not right. The court does not find that the condition of the soil and season was the cause of the poor plowing or prevented the engine from generating steam and developing power, nor could he so find from the testimony.

Appellants assert that this finding brings them within the rule announced in Scott v. Keeth, 152 Mich. 547, 116 N. W. 183, that an acceptance by a purchaser, after a test which leads him to believe the goods satisfactory, does not waive his right of action for a breach of warranty discovered later. While we do not think the instant case falls within the rule in that case, as the warranty there was for a fixed period of time, yet the fact in this case, that it clearly appears, as evidenced by the court's finding, that the outfit did not fulfill the warranty subsequent to the test made by Dunseth, tends to lessen the weight of the satisfaction slip as evidence and to support the testimony of appellant W. H. Scott, that he thought he was signing only a slip to show that Dunseth's services were satisfactory, to such an extent that we think the trial court erred in finding the machine worked to the satisfaction of appellants and was filling the warranty as stated in the satisfaction slip. We are also greatly influenced in reaching this conclusion by the almost undisputed evidence showing that the machine never did furnish power to plow properly or fulfill the warranty.

[2] It is argued that appellants have breached that part of the contract requiring immediate written notice to the company and its local agent of any defect after a ten days' trial. It is difficult to ascertain from the record when this ten-day period should start to run, as the machinery never worked satisfactorily and experts of the company came intermittently to fix it from the time it was first received by appellants to July 10, 1913. We can see no merit in this argument as written notice of the defects was given to the company and its local agents on June 24, 1913, and the company at all stages of the transaction had notice of the defects, as shown by the frequent visits of their experts to appellants' farm, and this was the only purpose of inserting a clause requiring such notice.

[3] Respondent next complains that that portion of the contract requiring the return of the defective machinery to the place where it was received has not been complied with by appellants. The contract provided: "In consideration whereof, purchaser will receive same on cars on arrival subject to the warranty below printed. * * *" In view of this provision and the fact that the machinery actually was received by appellants on case, it is apparent that the provision requiring the return of the machinery to the place where it was received means literally what it says or else it is so ambiguous as to be incapable of enforcement. If it does mean a physical return of the outfit to the cars at some unnamed place, it is unreasonable and unenforceable. Literal compliance would require the purchaser to commit a trespass. Case Threshing Machine Co. v. Huber, 160 Mich. 92, 125 N. W. 66, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 212; Osborn v. Rawson, 47 Mich. 206, 10 N. W. 201. Surely appellants should not be made to negotiate with the railroad company for the right to place the machinery on its property, and no other place of delivery is suggested by the company unless it might be to Wells & Morris, their local agents. But this suggestion cannot avail the company in view of Morris' testimony that he made it a point not to tell appellants where to deliver it.

[4] The court found that the engine is a separate machine from the plow, under the provision of the contract which reads as follows:

> "This order is divisible as to each machine and attachment ordered and the failure of any separate machine or attachment to fill the warranty shall not affect the liability of the purchaser for any other machine or attachment hereby ordered."

Since there is no evidence that the plows did not fulfill the warranty, the company urges that under no circumstances could appellants escape liability for the purchase price of the plow, which the court found to be $700. In spite of counsel's ingenious argument that the plows and engine were inseparable and so contemplated by the contracting parties since they were sold at one time and for one purpose, we are inclined to uphold the trial court's ruling in this respect. The true test seems to be that the different parts are separate and divisible if the part that does fulfill the warranty is useless without the part that fails to do so. In the instant case it is true the plows would be of no use to appellants without some means of pulling them, but obviously any kind of a traction engine capable of generating enough power could be used in pulling the plows, as they are not made to be used with a special kind of an engine and so be incapable of use with any other. In reaching this conclusion we are not unmindful of the case of Womach v. Case Threshing Machine Co., 62 Wash. 661, 114 Pac. 509. In that case the contract construed was practically the same as the one here involved. A threshing machine outfit was sold which included a separator and appurtenances, the separator alone failing to fulfill the warranty, and it was sought to hold the vendee liable for the appurtenances, consisting of a wind stacker, feeder, bagger and spout, and separator brake. It was there held that these appurtenances were but a part of the separator, and would be utterly useless without it as no doubt another separator of the same make and kind would be necessary to render the appurtenances of any use and value whatever. This case is therefore distinguishable on the facts.

Because the trial court found that appellants demanded the cancellation of the notes as a condition precedent to their surrender of the outfit to the company, it is now argued that appellants are precluded from any relief, since the contract expressly gave to the company the option of surrendering the notes or furnishing a new machine, and that by attaching this condition to their offer appellants have precluded the company from exercising this option. It is unnecessary to discuss the legal phase of this question, as we do not think the facts substantiate the court's finding. It appears that on June 24, 1913, appellants sent a written notice both to the company at its home office and to the local agent, stating wherein the machine was defective, and that it was being held subject to the company's order. No condition of any kind was attached to this notice and, in so far as can be ascertained from the record, no action was taken by the company to take possession of the outfit after receiving this notice and prior to the time it is claimed appellants demanded the cancellation of the notes before they surrendered the outfit.

The judgment against appellants is therefore modified by reducing it to the sum of $700, with interest as agreed at 8 per cent. per annum from April 8, 1913, and costs below.

WORKMAN v. ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE. (No. 13795.)

1. INSURANCE 🔑288(1) — MISREPRESENTATIONS.

Under Laws 1915, p. 703, § 1, providing that insured's misrepresentations shall not defeat a policy unless made with intent to deceive, insured's statement that his property had been insured in another company, but he did not know whether such policy was still in effect, does not invalidate a policy prohibiting other insurance, although such other policy was actually in force.

2. INSURANCE 🔑372—MISREPRESENTATIONS—WAIVER.

Insurance Code (Laws 1911, p. 244) § 106, providing for use of the New York standard fire policy, except that insurer may indorse additional provisions upon the policy, does not prevent insurer from waiving a policy provision prohibiting insurance in other companies.

3. INSURANCE 🔑378(3) — KNOWLEDGE OF AGENTS.

Knowledge of a fire insurance agent, authorized to execute and deliver a policy, that the property had been previously insured in another company, will be imputed to the insurer.

4. INSURANCE 🔑378(1)—WAIVER.

Where a fire insurance company was notified through its agent that property had been previously insured in another company, but thereafter issued a policy and accepted premiums, it waived a policy provision prohibiting other insurance.

H. T. Granger, of Seattle, for appellant. Dysart & Ellsbury and C. D. Cunningham, all of Centralia, for respondent.

HOLCOMB, J. In this action respondent demanded and recovered judgment upon a fire insurance policy issued by appellant to the respondent on or about July 9, 1915, insuring the respondent, subject to the terms and conditions of the policy, against loss by fire on a certain 1½-story frame dwelling house situated in the town of Littell, Lewis county, Wash. The policy is for $700, and the complaint shows payment by the respondent of $8.40 as premium, alleges that the dwelling was destroyed by fire on August 21, 1915, and demands judgment for the amount of the policy.

Appellant answered, and, so far as needs be considered on this appeal, set out two affirmative defenses in substance as follows: (1) That the policy sued upon provides that it shall be void if the insured has concealed or misrepresented, in writing or otherwise, any material fact or circumstance concerning the insurance or the subject thereof, and that at the time the policy of insurance sued upon was written the insured represented to the appellant that he had no other insurance upon the property, when in truth and in fact at that time he did have other insurance in the Fireman's Fund Insurance Company in the sum of $800, all of which was unknown to appellant, and had appellant known that there was such other insurance the policy sued upon would not have been issued; that appellant learned for the first time after the fire of the existence of the Fireman's Fund policy, and thereupon tendered to respondent the return of the $8.40 premium received by it, and in connection with the answer deposited in the registry of the court the sum of $8.40 in pursuance of the tender. (2) That the policy sued upon provided as follows: "This entire policy, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed thereon or added thereto, shall be void if the insured now has or shall hereafter make or procure any other contract of insurance, whether valid or not, on property covered in whole or in part by this policy"—and that, at the time the policy of insurance in this case was issued, respondent had other insurance upon the property covered by the policy without the knowledge or consent of appellant.

To these affirmative defenses respondent replied, admitting the existence of the $800 policy in the Fireman's Fund Insurance Company, but denying that it was unknown to appellant, denying that the respondent misrepresented the facts, denying that the appellant would not have issued the policy sued upon if it had known there was other insurance, and denying that appellant first learned of the existence of the Firemen's Fund policy after the fire, and, referring to the second affirmative defense, respondent admitted that there was the other insurance, but denied that the other insurance was without the knowledge or consent of appellant.

The case being tried to the court without a jury, the trial court, after hearing the evidence, made and entered findings of fact and conclusions of law in favor of plaintiff, and, among other things, found in substance that Benedict & Roberts were the agents of the appellant company at Centralia, Lewis county, Wash., and that as such agents they solicited and importuned respondent to take out the policy of insurance which is the subject of this suit, and at the time of and previous to the issuance of the policy respondent stated to the agents of appellant that he did not know whether or not there was another policy of insurance upon the building or not, that an agent in Chehalis, Wash., had been carrying insurance upon the building, and he did not know whether that policy of insurance had expired or not, and did not know that there was another policy of insurance upon the building until after the building was destroyed by fire on the 21st day of August, 1915, and then it was learned by respondent for the first time that there was another policy of insurance upon the building. As a conclusion of law the court concluded that the answers and statements made by respondent as to other insurance upon the building were not made with the intention of defrauding, deceiving, or misleading the agents of the appellant company, and did not prevent the policy of insurance from attaching and becoming a complete policy of insurance.

[1] Two assignments of error are made by appellant, both based upon the affirmative defenses set up in its answer. The first of these is that the policy of insurance issued by appellant is the standard form of policy prescribed by the Legislature, and that this policy does not permit additional insurance, or concurrent insurance, without the written consent of the insurer. It is conceded that the written consent of the insurer to any additional insurance was not given in the instant case. The respondent testified, and the court found, that notice was given to the insurer of the concurrent insurance, as to which respondent did not know whether it had expired or not, and it was afterwards found to exist. The policy in fact was written by the Fireman's Fund Insurance Company on February 25, 1913, for the term of three years from that date, and therefore did not expire until February 25, 1916, and was in force at the time of the destruction of the premises by fire.

The case hinges largely upon an interpretation of section 1, c. 192, Session Laws 1915, amending section 34 of the Insurance Code, as follows:

> "No oral or written misrepresentation or warranty made in the negotiation of a contract or policy of insurance, by the assured or in his behalf, shall be deemed material or defeat or avoid the policy or prevent it attaching, unless such misrepresentation or warranty is made with the intent to deceive. * * *"

In construing the effect of this statute in Woods v. Insurance Co. of Penn., 82 Wash. 563, 144 Pac. 650, we said:

> "This section refers to three conditions which may affect the validity of the policy or in a measure control the rights of the insured and the liability of the insurer under the policy: First. Representations made in negotiations before issuance of the policy with intent to deceive the insurer; second, breaches of warranty or conditions recited in the policy; and, third, the right of the insured to have the policy considered valid, to the extent of the amount of insurance the premium paid would purchase in the absence of a breached warranty recited in the policy."

In connection with this question the only representations made by Workman as to the existence of other insurance were that there had been a policy in another insurance company, represented by an agent named Coffman, in the neighboring town of Chehalis, and that respondent did not have the policy, but that Coffman had it, as he had left it with Coffman, and that he did not know whether the policy had expired or not. Notwithstanding these statements, appellant's agents, being desirous of writing the policy, proceeded without inquiry to write the policy, and retained it in their possession for a considerable time, until respondent had paid the premium. It is evident, therefore, if respondent's testimony is to be believed—and there is no preponderance against it—that he made no representations to appellant's agents which were deceptive or could deceive, and that any representations he made were therefore not made with intent to deceive.

[2] Appellant insists that the Insurance Code of this state, adopted in 1911 (Laws 1911, p. 244), by section 106 thereof, prescribes that no fire insurance company shall write any policy of insurance, except on what is known as the New York standard form; that the provision requiring other insurance, if permitted, to be indorsed or noted upon the policy, was one required by the law of Washington of which all interested parties were bound to take notice, and must be thereby controlled, and that therefore the policy was void, because in contravention of the law; that the defendant cannot read this clause out of the contract. Such a construction of that provision of the Insurance Code would place the entire burden upon policy holders of seeing that the necessary provisions were inserted in or indorsed upon the policies upon delivery to them, and, if there were any omissions made by the insurer or its agents, such omissions would avoid the policy, notwithstanding the innocence of the insured.

In the very recent case of Ramat v. California Ins. Co., 164 Pac. 219, where a policy was issued to the insured without any indorsement in writing permitting other insurance, and it developed at the trial that the insured had other insurance upon the property in two other insurance companies, the same contention being made as in this case that the nonindorsement of permission for concurrent insurance avoided the policy, Judge Fullerton observed:

> "It is argued from this that the statute gives to these provisions of the policy the force of positive law, making them controlling as written; and hence there can be no oral waiver, or waiver by acts, of such provisions, and that there can be no recovery where it is made to appear that there is other insurance on the policy not provided by agreement indorsed on the policy or added thereto. * * *"

He then quotes the section of the Insurance Code relating to oral or written misrepresentation or warranty made in the negotiation of the contract or policy of insurance by the assured or in his behalf, which was heretofore referred to, cited as 3 Rem. & Bal. Code, § 6059—34, and, discussing these several provisions of the statute together, says:

> "The second sentence of the section [above cited], it will be observed, provides that the breach of a warranty or condition in any contract of insurance shall not avoid the policy nor avail the insurer to avoid liability, unless such breach shall exist at the time of the loss and contribute to the loss. Manifestly the provision of the policy, to the effect that the policy should be void if the insured then had or should thereafter procure any other contract of insurance, if not indorsed on the policy, was a condition in the contract of insurance. While it existed at the time of the loss, it is plain that it did not contribute thereto. It would seem to require no argument, therefore, to demonstrate that it was the legislative intent that the breach of such a condition should not avoid the policy. Nor is there anything in the other provisions of the section that would lead to a different result. If the respondent is to be believed, there was no intent or attempt to deceive. He informed the agent of the appellant of the additional insurance, and the policy of insurance was issued to him with full knowledge of such insurance."

It is further observed in that case that:

> "While the language of the section quoted may not meet the precise situation, it is especially provided that it shall be liberally construed, and the plain intent of the statute is that liability for losses shall not be avoided for a mere want of a literal compliance with the provisions of the policy, which do not contribute to the loss or operate to the injury of the insurer."

The only difference between this case and the one above cited is that in that case the insured testified positively that he informed the agent of the insurer, at the time that he applied for the insurance in question, that he had the other insurance, while in this case the testimony is not positive to that effect, but is only to the effect that the insured informed the agents of the insurer that there had been a policy issued upon the same property as to which he did not know whether it had expired or not. In any event, in this case such representations as were made were not false representations, did not deceive, and could not have contributed to the loss. Upon such information as the respondent gave to appellant's agents, it was the duty of the agents either to ascertain whether or not there was any other insurance in force upon the property, or to refuse to write the policy of insurance until they had ascertained whether such insurance was in force.

[3, 4] The agents who wrote the policy were the authorized agents to execute and deliver such policies, and the knowledge that they had from the insured was knowledge to be imputed to the insurer. Having such facts, it either waived the conditions of its policy, or it perpetrated a fraud upon the respondent, when it accepted the premium and continued the policy in force until after the loss occurred. It is advisable, and the better policy, of course, to hold that no fraudulent intent could be imputed to appellant in executing and delivering the policy in question, but that it must be presumed that it by mistake omitted to express the effect of other insurance existing on the premises, or waived that provision, and must be held to be estopped from setting it up. Gray v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 155 N. Y. 180, 49 N. E. 675. We are convinced, therefore, that the policy of insurance issued and delivered to respondent under the circumstances shown in this case was a valid and enforceable policy of insurance, and that the judgment of the lower court is correct.

Affirmed.

GRUBER v. CATER TRANSFER CO.

(No. 13756.)

1. CARRIERS ⇨246 — EVIDENCE — PRESUMPTION.

The presumption is that the driver of a truck used for the transportation of baggage did not have authority to invite or permit persons to ride upon the truck.

2. CARRIERS ⇨244 — CARRIAGE OF GOODS — INJURY TO PERSONS INVITED BY SERVANT.

Where plaintiff contracted with defendant to carry goods for him in a truck which never carried passengers, and defendant sent his servant with such truck, and plaintiff by permission, but without defendant's authority, rode in the car with his goods and was injured by being thrown out of the truck, as defendant had not contracted to carry the plaintiff, it is not liable for his injury.

3. CARRIERS ⇨318(5) — NEGLIGENCE — EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In action for personal injuries received from falling out of defendant's baggage truck driven by its servant, evidence held not to show that the driver was guilty of gross negligence or of wantonly causing plaintiff's injury.

4. CARRIERS ⇨246 — CARRIAGE OF GOODS — CUSTOM—PROOF.

Evidence that one of defendant's drivers of its horse drawn trucks had allowed another driver upon the seat with him, but had never allowed any one to ride upon the back part of his truck where goods were carried, as in the present case, was not evidence of a custom available to plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1275, 1284, 1296.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Spokane County; Walter M. French, Judge.

Action by Martin Gruber against the Cater Transfer Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed, and case dismissed.

Smith & Mack, of Spokane, for appellant.
Roche & Onstine, of Spokane, for respondent.

PARKER, J. The plaintiff, Gruber, seeks recovery of damages for personal injuries which he alleges he received from the negligence of the defendant transfer company in the operation of one of its transfer automobile trucks while he was riding thereon by consent of the driver thereof. Trial in the superior court sitting with a jury resulted in verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff, awarding him damages, from which the defendant has appealed to this court.

Appellant is a corporation engaged in the transfer business in the city of Spokane, using both automobile and horse-drawn trucks in its business. It apparently is not engaged at all in the carrying of passengers. In any event, the automobile truck here in question was in no sense a passenger carrying vehicle nor intended to be used as such, as its appearance plainly so indicated. About 9 o'clock in the morning on April 9, 1915, respondent called the office of appellant by telephone and arranged for it to send a moving truck to his residence to move some trunks and household goods to another part of the city some blocks distant. The contract thus made plainly did not contemplate the transportation of respondent himself. Appellant sent an automobile truck with two of its employés in charge to respondent's residence when it was loaded with the goods respondent desired transferred; the employés being informed of the place where the goods were to be taken. The employés were very familiar with the city, and needed no one to go along and show them the way. The goods being loaded and the truck ready to start upon its journey, respondent said to the driver, "Hadn't I better go up and show you where to put that stuff?" The driver replied, "Yes," "All right," or "Come on." Respondent himself gave these different versions of what the driver then said to him. The driver and the other employé of appellant occupied the seat on the front of the truck, leaving no room for another person to ride there. The sides of the body of the truck were some 18 inches high. The rear end gate was down. A small trunk was on the floor of the truck a foot or two from the rear end. Respondent sat down upon this trunk facing the rear. The truck then proceeded upon its way, and while passing over a crossing raised somewhat above the level of the roadway respondent was thrown or fell out, striking upon his head and shoulders, and causing the injuries for which he here seeks recovery. He claims that he was thrown out as the result of the reckless driving of the truck by appellant's employé. We think no statement of the facts can be made from the record before us more favorable to respondent's contentions than this summary. Indeed, it is respondent's own version, in substance, of the facts.

Appellant by timely and appropriate motions made upon the trial of the case challenged the sufficiency of the evidence to warrant any recovery against it, whatever the negligence of the driver may have been; the principal argument being that respondent was not upon the truck with the knowledge or consent of appellant, and that the driver had no real or apparent authority from appellant to consent to respondent being upon the truck as he was. The refusal of the trial court to so rule as a matter of law is the principal claimed error here relied upon.

It seems to us that the proper disposition of this case is controlled by our decision in Fischer v. Columbia & Puget Sound R. Co., 52 Wash. 462, 100 Pac. 1005. In that case the plaintiff contemplated becoming a passenger upon a freight train of the defendant company to which there was a caboose attached for the carrying of passengers. It was a long train, and plaintiff was near the front end, and it seemed doubtful whether he would be able to walk back to the caboose before the train started. The engineer, noticing this situation, told the plaintiff to get on the engine and ride. The plaintiff did so, and because of defective brakes the crew lost control of the train, resulting in plaintiff's injury, which would not have occurred had the plaintiff been riding in the caboose which was provided for passengers. It was held as a matter of law that the company was not liable because the plaintiff was not upon the engine by consent of the company or any of its agents who had authority to invite him to ride there, and no facts were shown pointing to any real or apparent authority on the part of the engineer to invite the plaintiff to ride there, so that the authority of the engineer in that respect could not become a question for the jury. Judge Gose, speaking for the court, quoted with approval the general rule as stated in Waterbury v. New York, etc., R. Co. (C. C.) 17 Fed. 671, as follows:

> "Undoubtedly the presumption of law is that persons riding upon a train of a railroad carrier, which are palpably not designed for the transportation of persons, are not lawfully there. And if they are permitted to be there by the consent of the carrier's employés, the presumption is against the authority of the employés to bind the carriers by such consent."

In the decision so quoted from, however, the question of implied authority of the engineer to invite the plaintiff to ride upon the engine was, because of the plaintiff's being a shipper of stock on the train and certain proof of custom introduced in evidence, held proper to be left for the jury to decide. After citing and reviewing a number of authorities, Judge Gose concluded the opinion of the court as follows:

> "We conclude, therefore, that the engineer, in inviting the appellant to get onto the engine, did not act within the real or apparent scope of his authority; that the appellant was required to take notice of this fact; that the appellant was not a passenger; that the company owed him no affirmative duty; and that he cannot recover."

[1] It seems to us that the presumption is equally strong in this case that appellant's driver did not have authority to invite or permit respondent to ride upon the truck, especially in the position which he did ride. Nothing could seem plainer than that the nature of the truck and the purpose for which it was being used would tell respondent that appellant never contemplated persons other than its employés riding thereon, and we think there is no evidence in the record which tends to affirmatively show to the contrary. Among the decisions cited and reviewed by Judge Gose in that opinion as lending support to the conclusion reached are Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Michie, 83 Ill. 427; Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Johnson, 3 Okl. 41, 41 Pac. 641; Flower v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 69 Pa. 210, 8 Am. Rep. 251; Snyder v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 60 Mo. 413; Duff v. Alleghany R. Co., 91 Pa. 458, 36 Am. Rep. 675; and Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Lindley, 42 Kan. 714, 22 Pac. 703, 6 L. R. A. 646, 16 Am. St. Rep. 515.

[2] Our decision in Baird v. Northern Pacific Ry. Co., 78 Wash. 67, 138 Pac. 325, might seem to lend some support to respondent's contentions, but in that case an employé of the railway company in accordance with a custom which was known to the company and assented to by it was riding home upon the engine of a work train after working hours, when he was injured by the negligent operation of the engine. That decision goes no further than holding that, these facts appearing in the complaint, it stated a cause of action, and that proof of the alleged facts made the question of the authority of the operators of the engine in allowing him there one for the jury to decide. The following authorities lend support to our conclusion: Robinson v. McNeill, 18 Wash. 163, 51 Pac. 355; Foster-Herbert Cut Stone Co. v. Pugh, 115 Tenn. 688, 91 S. W. 199, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 804, 112 Am. St. Rep. 881; Dougherty v.

Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 137 Iowa, 257, 114 N. W. 902, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 590, 126 Am. St. Rep. 282; Clark v. Colorado & N. W. R. Co., 165 Fed. 408, 91 C. C. A. 358, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 988; Dover v. Mayes Mfg. Co., 157 N. C. 324, 72 S. E. 1067, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 199; Schulwitz v. Delta Lumber Co., 126 Mich. 559, 85 N. W. 1075; Mahler v. Stott, 129 Mich. 614, 89 N. W. 340; Scott v. Peabody Coal Co., 153 Ill. App. 103; Lygo v. Newbold, 9 Wels. & Hurl. (Exch. Rep.) 302. The last-cited case seems to be exactly parallel to the one before us. The decision is well epitomized in the syllabus thereof, which reads:

> "The plaintiff, a person of full age, contracted with the defendant to carry certain goods for her in his cart. The defendant sent his servant with his cart, and the plaintiff, by the permission of the servant, but without the defendant's authority, rode in the cart with her goods. On the way, the cart broke down, and the plaintiff was thrown out and severely injured. Held that, as the defendant had not contracted to carry the plaintiff, and as she had ridden in the cart without his authority, he was not liable for the personal injury she had sustained."

We see no escape from the conclusion that appellant cannot be held liable for the injuries received by respondent, and that it must be so decided as a matter of law.

[3] We do not understand counsel for respondent to seriously contend here that appellant's driver was guilty of gross negligence or of wantonly causing respondent's injury. Indeed, we see no room for such contention in the light of the evidence. Besides, the trial court in its instructions submitted the case to the jury upon the theory of appellant being in no event liable to respondent except upon its failure to exercise ordinary care for his safety, and we do not find in the record any exceptions to these instructions or request for instructions submitting to the jury the question of gross negligence or wanton action on the part of appellant's driver.

[4] We find in the record no evidence worthy of consideration pointing to any custom of allowing persons other than appellant's employés to ride upon its transfer trucks. The only evidence which could have any bearing whatever upon this question was the testimony of one of appellant's drivers of one of its horse-drawn trucks that he had allowed others to ride upon the seat with him. But even he testified that he never allowed any one to ride on the back part of his truck where goods were being carried. This, we think, is no evidence of custom available to respondent.

We conclude that the judgment must be reversed, and the case dismissed.

It is so ordered.

STATE ex rel. BARNES et ux. v. SUPERIOR COURT FOR KITSAP COUNTY et al.

(No. 14014.)

1. Landlord and Tenant 🔑291(9½)—Unlawful Detainer—Bond—Application to Raise—Receiving Evidence.

Rem. Code 1915, § 821, providing that, on hearing of application to raise amount of bond in unlawful detainer action, evidence may be given, is merely permissive; and the court may be as well informed by admissions and statement of counsel as by reception of evidence.

2. Landlord and Tenant 🔑291(9½)—Unlawful Detainer — Striking Additional Bond.

Under Rem. Code 1915, § 821, providing that, if an additional bond ordered to be furnished by defendant in unlawful detainer action be found insufficient after hearing, the sheriff shall forthwith put plaintiff in possession, the bond, not complying with section 820, and being so found insufficient, may be stricken.

3. Landlord and Tenant 🔑291(9½)—Unlawful Detainer—Writ of Restitution.

Rem. Code 1915, § 819, declaring the writ of restitution, to be issued in unlawful detainer action at commencement thereof, returnable in 20 days, is merely a provision for the sheriff returning the writ with his doing thereon within such time, and does not limit its force and vitality to such time, but its life endures till final determination of the right of possession, so that, while it is suspended and held in abeyance by defendants giving a counter bond, it revives and can be enforced on defendant's failing on order to give an additional bond satisfying the statute.

4. Review 🔑3—Other Adequate Remedy—Dispossession Proceedings.

Writ of review will not lie for striking bond of defendants in unlawful detainer action and ordering restitution to plaintiff, there being plain, speedy, and adequate remedy by application under Rem. Code 1915, § 821, for an additional bond from plaintiff, and by appeal with bond staying, under sections 832 and 833, the writ.

Department 2. Original proceedings in review by the State, on the relation of John G. Barnes and another, against the Superior Court for Kitsap County; John S. Jurey, Judge, presiding. Writ denied.

John G. Barnes, of Seattle, for plaintiffs.
McClure & McClure, of Seattle, for respondents.

HOLCOMB, J. This original proceeding in review is prosecuted by relators, seeking to have certain orders of the superior court made in an unlawful detainer action against relators reviewed, revised, or annulled, and the proceedings thereunder stayed. In the original action, one Norris and wife, after service of a notice to vacate, proceeded in unlawful detainer to dispossess relators who held under an alleged written lease. They caused the complaint and special statutory summons in unlawful or forcible detainer to be served upon the defendants and applied for and had issued a writ of restitution at the time of the filing of the summons and complaint, on April 29, 1916, the bond therefor being fixed by the court at $500, which plaintiffs furnished, and the writ was served upon defendants. Within three days thereafter, as provided in section 820, Rem. Code, the defendants furnished a counter bond, which was filed with and approved by the clerk of the court on May 2, 1916. Thereafter, and within 20 days after its issuance as provided by the statute, the writ of restitution was returned by the sheriff into court, together with his acts thereunder. Thereafter a trial was had, in which the verdict of the jury was for the defendants; but the verdict was set aside and a new trial granted by the court. Thereafter plaintiffs in the action gave notice of a motion for an order for additional bond by defendants in the sum of $2,000. On February 9, 1917, the court made an order reciting that:

> The motion above referred to "coming on regularly for hearing upon the application of plaintiffs for an order requiring the defendants Barnes and wife to furnish additional bond in order to stay the writ of restitution issued in the cause, and the court, having heard the argument of counsel, makes the following order: Ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the defendants Barnes and wife furnish and file in said cause within 10 days from date hereof an additional bond in the sum of $1,000, with sufficient surety conditioned in the manner provided by law for the stay of the writ of restitution heretofore issued in said cause, and that, in the event of a failure of said defendants to furnish said bond as aforesaid, the sheriff of Kitsap county, Wash., proceed forthwith to execute said writ of restitution."

On February 19, 1917, relators filed a purported additional bond with but one surety and conditioned as follows:

> "Now, therefore, if the above-named principals shall pay to the above-named plaintiffs such sums as the plaintiffs may recover in this action for the use and occupation of the premises described in the complaint in this action subsequent to the date of the execution and filing of this bond, or any rent found due subsequent to the execution and filing of this bond, together with all damages the plaintiffs may sustain by reason of the said principals' occupying or keeping possession of said premises subsequent to the execution and filing of this bond, and also all the costs of this action incurred subsequent to the execution and filing of this bond, then this obligation to be void."

This bond was not approved by the clerk of the court, and on February 20, 1917, the plaintiffs in that action filed a motion to strike the bond from the files, on the ground that it had not been approved by the clerk of the court as provided by law and that it did not comply with the law nor with the order of the court entered on February 9, 1917; and that on the striking of the bond the sheriff of Kitsap county, Wash., be ordered by the court forthwith to execute the writ of restitution heretofore issued.

On February 24, 1917, the court made an order reciting, among other things, that, having heard the argument of counsel and being fully advised, the bond should be stricken from the records and files, and that the sheriff of Kitsap county forthwith put plaintiffs in the action in possession of the premises described therein; to all of which the relators objected and excepted.

It is contended that these orders were made by the court without any hearings as required by law, and that the order requiring additional bond was made without the introduction of any evidence, and that the life of the writ of restitution had expired, and the court had no power or jurisdiction to order its execution.

By the provisions of section 820, Rem. Code, a counter bond given by defendants to retain possession of premises in an unlawful entry and detainer action is required to be approved by the clerk of the court in such sum as may be fixed by the judge, with "two or more sureties" to be approved by the clerk of the court, and conditioned that they will pay to the plaintiff such sum as the plaintiff may recover for the use and occupation of the premises or any rent found due, together with all damages the plaintiff may sustain by reason of the defendant occupying or keeping possession of the premises, and also all costs of the action. By section 821, Rem. Code, the plaintiff or defendant may at any time, upon two days' notice to the adverse party, apply to the court or judge thereof for an order raising or lowering the amount of any bond in the act provided for. The order complained of here was an order raising the amount of the counter bond to be given by the defendants, and that counter bond given by the defendants was, as we have seen, by section 820, supra, required to be signed by two or more sureties and approved by the clerk of the court and conditioned that they would pay to the plaintiff such sum as the plaintiff might recover for the use and occupation of the premises, and so on. The bond offered and filed by defendants was not executed by two sureties or more, was not approved by the clerk, and was not conditioned as required by the statute.

[1] Neither was it in all cases necessary for the court to receive evidence upon the application for an order raising the amount of the bond. The statute does, indeed, provide that upon the hearing of the application evidence "may be" given. But this is permissive and not mandatory. The court may be as well informed by the admissions and statements of counsel as by any evidence that might be offered; and, this case having been tried before the court, we may assume that the court was as well informed as to the necessities and requirements in regard to additional bond by evidence in the case as by any new evidence that might have been offered.

[2] It is contended by relators that the motion to strike the bond is a proceeding not contemplated by the statute, and that the only procedure available to the plaintiffs in regard to the matter was that provided by section 821, supra, to the effect that:

> "The bondsmen may be required to be present at such hearing if so required in the notice thereof, and shall answer under oath all questions that may be asked touching their qualifications as bondsmen, and in the event the bondsmen shall fail or refuse to appear at such hearing and so answer such questions the bond shall be stricken."

But the statute further provides that:

> "In the event the court shall order a new or additional bond to be furnished by defendant and the same shall not be given within twenty-four hours, the court shall order the sheriff to forthwith execute the writ. In the event the defendant shall file a second or additional bond and it shall also be found insufficient after hearing, as above provided, the right to retain the premises by bond shall be lost and the sheriff shall forthwith put the plaintiff in possession of the premises."

The court gave the defendants 10 days instead of 24 hours in which to give the new or additional bond, and when they offered the new bond they did not procure the approval of the clerk of the court, and they limited its conditions in particular respects so that it could not comply with the terms of the counter bond required by section 820, supra.

[3] Nor is there any merit in the contention of relators that the writ of restitution issued at the time of the commencement of the action had lost its force and vitality because of the passage of more than 20 days after its issuance. The 20-day provision in the statute (section 819, Rem. Code) is merely a provision that the sheriff shall return the writ with his doings thereon within 20 days after its date. The life of the writ endured until the final determination of the right of possession of the premises. When the defendants in possession gave a counter bond and retained possession, they suspended and held in abeyance the writ of restitution, and when, under the statute, the defendants lost their right of possession by failure to comply with the statute, the writ of restitution instantly revived and could be enforced.

[4] We have thus far discussed the merits of the application because of the great earnestness and vehemence with which relators have insisted that the trial court exceeded its authority and jurisdiction in acting upon and striking the bond, and thus worked great injury to relators for which they have no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy. We feel, however, that there should be some discussion of the question of whether or not the writ of review is an appropriate remedy to be used in such a case as this in any event. That question is raised by respondent, but relators strenuously urge that in such a case as this there would be no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law to correct the erroneous acts and proceedings of the court below. It is contended that they would be deprived of possession of the premises in question during the pendency of the appeal and would thus be injured, and that there would be no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy therefor. One answer to this is that, in forcible or unlawful entry and detainer proceedings which are summary statutory proceedings, the law especially provides for the dispossession of occupants upon, a sufficient bond, and provides for the retention thereof by the occupants upon sufficient counter bond. It also provides that either party may at any time, upon two days' notice to the adverse party, apply for an order raising or lowering the amount of any bond in this act provided for. If the defendants are not protected by an adequate bond on the part of the plaintiffs, they have the remedy given by statute to apply for an additional bond and make a proper showing therefor.

Furthermore, the statute, as in other civil cases, provides for an appeal as a matter of course by any party feeling aggrieved by the judgment, and, if by the judgment below the defendant is dispossessed and a writ of restitution has been previously issued, it is provided that the writ shall be stayed by the execution and filing of a bond on appeal by the defendant. Rem. Code, §§ 832, 833. Mere dispossession, especially against the consent of the occupants, as here, does not imperil the legal rights of the occupants dispossessed when it comes to a final adjudication of the matter upon the merits.

We are therefore of the opinion that the writ should not lie, because there is a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law. Denied.

1. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇨243(2)—JUDGMENT—CONCLUSIVENESS—GOOD FAITH.

The contention, in a suit to quiet title to water as against a prior appropriator, that such appropriator's irrigation project was speculative and not in good faith, was foreclosed as against parties to a suit by such appropriator to condemn land for a dam and persons claiming under them by the order of the Supreme Court in such suit directing the entry of a judgment of condemnation, as the question of good faith was involved in that suit and should have been litigated therein.

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⇨135—APPROPRIATION OF WATER—DILIGENCE IN CONSTRUCTING WORKS.

Rem. Code 1915, §§ 6316–6319, provides that as between appropriations of water the first in time is the first in right, requires the posting and filing of notice of appropriation, and provides that the appropriator must commence the construction of his works within three months if the use of the water is by storage and within six months if by diversion, and diligently and continuously prosecute such works to completion unless temporarily interrupted by the elements; that by a strict compliance with such rules the appropriator's rights relate back to the time the notice was posted; but that a failure to comply therewith deprives him of the right to the use of the water as against a subsequent appropriator faithfully complying therewith. Section 6329 gives the owner of nonriparian land the right to condemn land for ditches, canals, and works necessary to divert and convey the water to his lands. Held, that a proceeding by a nonriparian appropriator to condemn land for a dam for its irrigation project was a necessary part of the prosecution of the work, and, if prosecuted diligently and continuously, the time so consumed must be considered as employed in construction work so as to preserve the appropriator's rights, as any other rule would make it practically impossible for any one but a riparian owner to secure water by the doctrine of relation as against a subsequent appropriator, and such rule is not inconsistent with the rule that the right to condemn is dependent upon the right to water, nor does it penalize a subsequent appropriator owning the land sought to be condemned for resisting the condemnation.

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES 🔑135—APPROPRIATION OF WATER—DILIGENCE IN CONSTRUCTING WORKS.

While Rem. Code 1915, § 6319, providing that an appropriator's rights to the use of water relate back to the time his notice of appropriation was posted, upon a strict compliance with the rules stated in the preceding sections, imposes its own rule of strict construction, such strict construction must be reasonable.

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES 🔑128—APPROPRIATION OF WATER—CONSTRUING STATUTES TOGETHER.

Rem. Code 1915, §§ 6318, 6319, as to an appropriator's rights relating back to the notice of appropriation, must be construed with section 6329, authorizing condemnation of land for works, so that the one will not defeat the other; they being in pari materia.

5. WATERS AND WATER COURSES 🔑135—APPROPRIATION OF WATER—DILIGENCE IN CONSTRUCTING WORKS.

Where it was necessary for an appropriator of water to condemn land for a dam for its irrigation project, and its ditches, flumes, and pipe lines would cost far more than the dam and outlet works, the failure to complete all of the project except the dam pending a condemnation suit was not a failure to diligently prosecute the work defeating the appropriator's rights, as the line would have lain idle and deteriorated until the dam site could be secured.

6. WATERS AND WATER COURSES 🔑135—APPROPRIATION OF WATER—DILIGENCE IN CONSTRUCTING WORKS.

Facts held to show that there was no culpable delay which would defeat the rights of an appropriator of water in prosecuting a suit to condemn land for a dam for its irrigation project.

7. WATERS AND WATER COURSES 🔑135—APPROPRIATION OF WATER—DILIGENCE IN CONSTRUCTING WORKS.

Where, in a suit by an appropriator of water to condemn land for a dam for its irrigation project, it delayed from March until the following January to enter findings and a judgment against it in order that its time for appeal might not start to run, but this delay was with the consent of the landowners' attorneys, the landowners and those claiming under them were estopped to claim that such delay defeated the appropriator's rights under its appropriation.

En Banc. Appeal from Superior Court, Grant County; Ralph B. Kauffman, Judge.

Action by the Grant Realty Company and others against Ham, Yearsley & Ryrie and others. From a decree dismissing the complaint, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Cannon & Ferris, of Spokane, and Williamson & Luhman, of North Yakima (Mack F. Gose, of Pomeroy, of counsel), for appellants. Merritt, Oswald & Merritt, of Spokane, for respondents.

ELLIS, C. J. In this action, plaintiffs, claiming as bona fide subsequent appropriators, seek to quiet title to the waters of Moses Lake, in Grant county, as against defendant's claim as a prior appropriator. For a description of Moses Lake, its environs, and outlet, we refer to the very full statement in the case of State ex rel. Ham, Yearsley & Ryrie v. Superior Court, 70 Wash. 442, 126 Pac. 945.

Defendant owns a large tract of land lying southwesterly and 14 to 20 miles from the southerly end of the lake. This is semiarid, but capable of being rendered very productive by irrigation. In the latter part of 1908, Wilbur S. Yearsley, vice president and treasurer of the defendant Ham, Yearsley & Ryrie, a corporation, conceived the idea of using the waters of the lake for irrigating these lands. Investigation was started, and, it being determined that the water could be put on these lands by gravity, the first notice of the appropriation of the waters of the lake by defendant was posted on January 20, 1909, and recorded on January 28th of that year. As investigation proceeded, subsequent notices were posted and recorded on February 8, 1909, and February 23, 1909, July 6, 1910, and July 8, 1910, respectively. Investigation was continued till in August, 1910, defendant's officers were convinced that there was water available to irrigate about 30,000 acres of land. Touching the cost, defendant's engineer made different estimates, varying in amount according to the number of acres to be watered under the respective estimates. The plan was to store in the lake the annual runoff of water, place an intake pipe below the water level, and conduct the water by gravity through 13 or 14 miles of open ditch, pipe, and flume to defendant's lands. At the time of the trial in this case, the engineer had made an estimate for a final plan designed to irrigate 12,000 acres, the total cost of which would be $55 per acre, or $660,000. This plan called for the submersion of a 6-foot intake pipe at an elevation of 1,032 above sea level; the water surface of the lake to be raised by a dam to an eleration of 1,038. By this plan the acreage could be increased to 20,000 without any additional cost per acre. Plaintiffs' experts placed the cost per acre much higher. For the purpose of securing the site for the dam, a condemnation action was commenced and a notice of lis pendens was filed on October 7, 1910. The suit was against the Northern Pacific Railway Company, the record owners of the land sought to be acquired, and R. F. Pettigrew, who held a contract of purchase from the railroad company.

On October 8, 1910, F. H. Nagle, manager of the corporations, plaintiffs in the case now before us, posted notices of appropriation of the waters of Moses Lake with the professed intention of purchasing and irrigating lands around the lake and selling such lands with the water to settlers. For this purpose, plaintiff Grant Realty Company was organized in March, 1911. Nagle testified that the appropriation of water and the work done by him was for the benefit of that company.

The condemnation action was tried in February, 1911, but the findings of fact and judgment entered thereon denying defendant's right to condemn were not filed until January 10, 1912. Hon. R. H. Steiner, the judge before whom it was tried, testified that he had no independent recollection as to when he announced his decision; but refreshing his memory from a book kept by the clerk, which was not introduced in evidence, he concluded that the decision was announced on May 29, 1911. G. M. Ferris, one of the attorneys for the railway company in the condemnation action and one of the attorneys for plaintiffs in the present case, testified that the reason that judgment was not entered until January 10, 1912, was that counsel for Ham, Yearsley & Ryrie requested of counsel for the railway company and Pettigrew "that judgment be not entered in order that his time for appeal might not start to run." No evidence was offered to the contrary.

Soon after the entry of that judgment, an application was made to this court for a writ of certiorari to review it. The writ was granted, and on October 10, 1912, an opinion of this court was filed reversing the action of the lower court and granting the right to condemn. State ex rel. Ham, Yearsley & Ryrie v. Superior Court, 70 Wash. 442, 126 Pac. 945. A petition for rehearing was filed, and the remittitur was not sent down until March 10, 1913. Meanwhile plaintiff in that suit, defendant here, continued its investigation as to the amount of water that would be available, and also constructed some of its ditch line. Yearsley, testifying from the books of defendant, stated that the amount expended in ditch construction was $6,123.33 since the condemnation action was commenced.

Turning now to the work done by plaintiffs, it was first actually started on March 26, 1911. Having become the owners of the land which defendant herein sought as a dam site, plaintiffs constructed a dam thereon to impound the waters for their own project. The intention was to irrigate as much land as the water available would supply. This, based upon knowledge acquired up to the time of the trial herein, was estimated at approximately 15,000 acres. The plan was for the Grant Realty Company, with a capital of $3,000,000, to purchase the lands, secure the water rights, and construct works. The land was to be divided into separate units each to be irrigated by a separate pumping plant. Later, the other plaintiff corporations, each with a capital of $1,000, were organized. To each of these subsidiary corporations was conveyed in return for its stock a tract of land forming a pumping or irrigation unit. These small corporations would sell the land to settlers and operate the plants. At the time of the trial there were eight of these pumping units constructed capable of serving a total of 3,282 acres. Approximately 700 acres were receiving water. In this work there had been expended $226,000, exclusive of the cost price of the land, but including salaries of a manager, bookkeeper, and stenographer amounting to $20,560, and traveling expenses amounting to $13,730.34.

Though the remittitur in the condemnation action was filed in the lower court on March 10, 1913, judgment of the trial court was not entered thereon until September 9, 1913. Defendant accounts for this delay by the statement that, Grant county being a small county, one jury a year usually does the work. This is not denied, and Judge Steiner's testimony tends to confirm it. In any event, shortly after the entry of the judgment on September 9th, the case was noticed for trial and a jury demanded. On October 2, 1913, plaintiffs herein first made their appearance in the condemnation action. On that date they moved to be substituted as parties defendant instead of the railway company and Pettigrew, upon a showing that they had acquired title to the property sought to be condemned. This motion was denied. On October 14th, they moved for leave to file an answer and again for substitution. These motions were also denied. On October 20th, they filed their answer and a motion to abate and vacate an order setting the condemnation action for trial. This answer was subsequently stricken and the motion denied. Thereafter, plaintiffs herein applied to this court for a writ to prohibit the trial court from proceeding with the trial of the condemnation suit without making the requested substitution, whereupon the hearing in the condemnation suit was continued to December 1, 1913. The peremptory writ of prohibition was denied by this court in an opinion filed on November 7, 1913. State ex rel. Grant Realty Co. v. Superior Court, 76

Wash. 376, 136 Pac. 144. On November 21, 1913, plaintiffs made a joint motion to set aside the order theretofore entered striking their answer, to vacate the order of condemnation, to vacate the order fixing the date of trial, and to abate the action. On the same day the complaint in the case at bar was filed directly attacking the right of defendant herein to the waters of the lake. The trial court being of the opinion, as he testified, that the right to the waters of the lake should first be determined, thereafter treated the order setting the condemnation trial for December 1, 1913, as vacated. On April 29, 1914, on motion of plaintiffs herein, an order was entered in the condemnation case granting a stay of the action until the trial of the case at bar, and plaintiffs herein were given leave to subsequently apply for a vacation of the order of condemnation entered pursuant to the remittitur of this court. Thereafter, the plaintiff in the condemnation suit, defendant here, applied to this court for a writ of mandamus to compel the trial court to proceed with the trial of the condemnation suit. On September 26, 1914, this court denied the peremptory writ, stating:

> "That the learned superior court did not abuse its discretion in so controlling the order of the disposition of the two causes as to first cause the question of the right of the respective parties to the waters of Moses Lake to be determined, in view of the possible influence that the disposition of that question may have upon relator's [defendant's] right to acquire and hold the land by right of eminent domain." State ex rel. Ham, Yearsley & Ryrie v. Superior Court, 81 Wash. 690, 695, 696, 143 Pac. 310, 312.

The case now before us was brought to trial, and on July 26, 1915, a decree was entered adjudging to defendant the prior right to appropriate the waters of the lake, and dismissing plaintiffs' complaint with costs. Plaintiffs appeal.

Appellants contend: (1) That respondent has not prosecuted its project in good faith, but merely as a speculation; and (2) that respondent by lack of diligence has lost its right to claim a priority of water right by relation under the statute, Rem. Code, §§ 6318 and 6319, as against appellants who are subsequent appropriators of the waters of the lake.

[1] 1. We shall devote little space to the question of good faith. Every extensive irrigation project is, in a sense, essentially speculative. So far as the record shows, respondent's project is not more inherently speculative in its nature than that of appellants. Yearsley testified in substance that in the spring and summer of 1910 he entered into negotiations with Pettigrew and the Armours, of Chicago, with a view to uniting Pettigrew's and respondent's interests and a financing of the project by the Armours; that through the influence of Brumder Bros., of Milwaukee, the Armours were dissuaded from taking any interest in the matter; that he then attempted to interest the Brumders in respondent's project, but they gave him to understand that they had plenty of money and would proceed with their own project regardless of respondent's claims, whereupon respondent commenced the action to condemn for a dam and intake site. It is true that Yearsley testified that when he was negotiating with the Armours he supposed he was selling out, but from the entire evidence we are satisfied that he did not mean this literally, but in the arrangement as then contemplated he and his associates expected to retain an interest. At any rate, all this was before the appellant corporations had been launched by the Brumders, and this court subsequently (70 Wash. 442, 126 Pac. 945) ordered the entry of a judgment permitting a condemnation as against the railway company and Pettigrew, under whom appellants claim title to the land subject to the condemnation suit. Obviously, the question of respondent's good faith up to that time was foreclosed as to Pettigrew and the railway company in that proceeding, and also as to appellants who claim title to the land under those parties. It is true appellants claim title to the water of the lake by an independent appropriation, but that can make no difference. The question of respondent's good faith was as essentially involved in the condemnation suit as it is in this suit, and was or should have been litigated in that suit.

[2] 2. The statute of this state governing the appropriation of waters is founded upon the Arid Region Doctrine of appropriation as distinguished from the common-law rule of riparian rights. That doctrine is based upon the custom of miners in the early days in California, under which the first taker of water on public lands for a beneficial use was accorded the better right. Under that rule, the completed diversion, if diligently accomplished, related back to the initial work so as to cut out intervening claimants. Statutes such as ours are, in the main, but declaratory of this Arid Region Doctrine, with the added requirement of an initial statutory notice to the date of which the appropriator's rights shall relate on condition that he commence work within a given time and prosecute it diligently and continuously to completion and apply the water to a beneficial use. Our statute, reference being to Rem. Code, provides, in section 6316, that, "as between appropriations, the first in time is the first in right." In section 6317, it prescribes the character of the notice and provides for posting and filing the same. It then provides:

> "6318. If said use is by storage, the appropriator must, within three months after the notice is posted, commence the construction of the works by which it is intended to store the same. If said use is by diversion, the appropriator must, within six months after the notice is posted, commence the excavation or construction of the works by which it is intended to divert the same; it being herein expressly provided that such works must be diligently and continuously prosecuted to completion, unless temporarily interrupted by the elements.

> "6319. By a strict compliance to the above rules the appropriator's rights to the use of the water actually stored or diverted relates back to the time the notice was posted; but a failure to comply therewith deprives the appropriator of the right to the use of the water as against a subsequent appropriator who faithfully complies with the same."

It is manifest both from the custom which is its basis and from the terms of the statute that a claimant can invoke the rule of relation declared in section 6319 only by a compliance with the rule of diligence laid down in section 6318. What constitutes a sufficient compliance with that rule of diligence is the dominant question in this case. Appellants contend that the diligent and continuous performance of the actual physical work of construction and diversion to completion is a sine qua non, evitable only by the statutory excuse of temporary interruption by the elements. Respondent urges that delays in the actual work occasioned by litigation, especially if waged with the adverse claimant, must be excused. It seems to us that neither position is wholly correct. The first is too narrow, the second too broad.

It has usually been held that any matters not incidental to the enterprise itself, but rather personal to the appropriator, such as pecuniary inability, sickness, and the like, are not circumstances excusing great delay in the construction of the works necessary to actual diversion and use of the water. Ophir Silver Min. Co. v. Carpenter, 4 Nev. 534, 97 Am. Dec. 550; Rio Puerco Irr. Co. v. Jastro, 19 N. M. 149, 141 Pac. 874; 2 Kinney, Irr. & Water Rights (2d Ed.) § 739; 1 Wiel, Water Rights (3d Ed.) § 383.

From an assumed analogy, appellants argue that litigation is never an excuse. But to create the analogy it must be assumed that all litigation is purely personal to the litigant. The assumption is faulty. Condemnation for a site for an impounding dam or intake by an appropriator who does not own such a site is just as much matter incident to the enterprise to which the dam or intake is an essential as is the actual construction of the dam or intake. It would be simply idle to confer, as our statute does confer, upon the owner of nonriparian lands the right to condemn for such purpose if the time necessarily consumed in the condemnation must be entered in red on the ledger of diligence, and thus defeat his right of priority by relation, which the statute as a whole was intended to give. If time necessarily consumed in condemnation must be charged as time lost through lack of diligence under the statute, then every enterprise in which the condemnation of a site for diversion works is necessary is a defeated enterprise at its inception and the statutory right to condemn is not a right, but a snare. The right to condemn is dependent upon the initiation of the right to use the water by valid notice of appropriation, since it is an incident to the diversion of the water. Whatever the general rule, such is the law of this case as declared by this court on the original review. 70 Wash. 442, 126 Pac. 945. It is there said:

> "The relator's right to acquire this land by condemnation rests upon its right to the water which it proposes to use in its irrigation project. That is, if it has lawfully acquired by appropriation the right to so use the water, it then has the right to acquire the land by condemnation in aid of its irrigation project. Otherwise, it has no such right to so acquire the land, since its public use of the land rests upon its ability to use it as a part of its irrigation works, and of course, it can have no irrigation works if it has no water therefor."

It follows that the prosecution of the condemnation proceeding is a necessary part of the prosecution of the work to completion in order to enable respondent to invoke the doctrine of relation. It follows further that, if respondent has prosecuted the condemnation for its dam site "diligently and continuously," the time so consumed must be considered as employed in construction work. In the nature of the case, it is time just as necessary to the work of impounding and diversion as is the time necessary for the actual physical construction of the dam. The condemnation suit, therefore is not matter of excuse from performance of the work, but is itself matter of performance. Any other view would make it virtually impossible for any one but a proprietor of riparian lands to secure water for irrigation by the doctrine of relation as against a subsequent appropriator who actually takes the water pending suit to condemn a site for a dam or intake by the appropriator who first initiated his right by valid statutory notice. If the rule contended for by appellant is correct, then all that a riparian owner, whose property includes the only feasible site for diversion, would have to do, would be to ignore the nonriparian first appropriator's notice of appropriation and divert and use the water while the first appropriator was prosecuting his action to condemn the site for diversion. Such a construction would make the statute defeat itself. But appellants argue that respondent is trying to occupy two inconsistent positions: First, that the right to condemn exists because of the initiated water right; and, second, that the water right is perfected by the exercise of the right to condemn. We fail to see the inconsistency. Under the statute, the right to take the water as against a subsequent appropriator does depend in terms upon the initial notice of appropriation through the rule of relation. That is to say, the actual taking relates back to the original notice so as to defeat intervening appropriations of the same water. Such is the express declaration of the statute. Section 6319. If therefore the prime physical essential for the taking, namely, a site for diversion works, can only be acquired by condemnation, the final perfection of the water right so as to attach by relation as of the date of its initiation is essentially and necessarily dependent on the exercise of the right to condemn. This is not only a self-evident fact, but it is recognized by another section of the statute itself, section 6329, which gives to the owner of nonriparian land the right to condemn for right of way for any ditches, canals, and works necessary to divert and convey the water to his lands. It must not be forgotten that the very purpose of the statute is to abolish the doctrine of riparian rights by giving effect to the doctrine of relation through diligence in construction in favor of the owner of nonriparian land as well as the owner of riparian land. Equality of rights can only be attained by an equality of means. When this fact is clearly grasped, the two propositions, that the right to condemn exists because of the initiated water right and that the water right is perfected through the exercise of the right to condemn, are plainly not only perfectly consistent, but their existence in correlation is inevitable in every case where condemnation is necessary to the completion of the enterprise.

[3, 4] It may be conceded, as urged by appellants, that the statute of relation imposes upon the courts its own rule of strict construction. But even a strict construction must be a reasonable construction. It is elementary that statutes in pari materia must be construed together. So construing the statute of relation (sections 6318 and 6319), and the statute giving the right of condemnation (section 6329), no construction can be reasonable which would make the provisions of the one defeat those of the other. In every view of the matter, therefore, time reasonably consumed in the condemnation must be construed as time necessarily consumed in the performance of the work of construction, hence not delay to be excused by a showing of interruption by the elements or otherwise.

It is also urged that to excuse the delay caused by the condemnation suit, though that delay may have been largely occasioned by appellants' intrusion into the litigation, would be to penalize appellants for asserting their legal rights in a lawful way. It is true, as persuasively argued by appellants, that a landowner whose land is sought to be taken by condemnation has a perfect right, both legal and moral, to resist such condemnation in the courts, and that such resistance is not to be classed in the category of wrongful physical resistance or unlawful obstruction. But the only legitimate purpose of such resistance in the courts is to prevent the taking of his land—not merely to delay that taking. It follows therefore that, if he ultimately fail to defeat the right to condemn, he cannot claim any advantage from the delay occasioned by his attempt. He cannot defeat the condemnation on the ground of such delay and thus rob his adversary of an established right. So long as the condemnation suit is prosecuted with reasonable diligence, then, however long it may take to complete the condemnation, the rights of the parties to the water must be measured as of the date when the condemner posted and filed his notice of appropriation, else the doctrine of relation can never exist where condemnation is necessary.

While we have been cited to no decision and have found none on a statute and facts exactly parallel with those here presented, we have, by independent search, found two decisions which in principle seem to us to support the views here expressed. The present water code of Oregon provides for a change from the old form of procedure to a new and different method of initiating water rights, but it saves to persons or corporations whose appropriations had been initiated under the old law their rights as prior appropriators on condition that they, in compliance with the old law, "commence the construction of works for the application of the water so appropriated to a beneficial use, and thereafter prosecute such work diligently and continuously to completion." A corporation so claiming under the old law was charged with abandonment for lack of such diligent and continuous prosecution. The delay was caused by litigation and efforts to secure a right of way and reservoir site. The court said:

> "A delay caused by litigation and efforts by an irrigation company to obtain a right of way for irrigation ditches and reservoirs is not a ground for forfeiture of its rights. Pringle Falls Power Co. v. Patterson, 65 Or. 474, 128 Pac. 820, 132 Pac. 527. Such proceedings, instead of showing an abandonment, indicate that the company is fighting for the purpose of carrying forward the project." In re Willow Creek, 74 Or. 592, 644, 144 Pac. 505, 522.

Obviously, the court, without saying so in hæc verba, did in effect construe litigation necessarily incident to the prosecution of the enterprise, as a part of the construction work which the statute expressly said should be "prosecuted * * * diligently and continuously to completion." It treated the delay so occasioned as a thing sufficiently accounted for, rather than a thing to be excused.

The other case involved the question of diligence under a statute of California which provided that within 60 days after posting his notice the claimant of a water appropriation must commence construction of the diversion works and must prosecute the work diligently and uninterruptedly, and that by a compliance with those provisions the claimant's right to the use of the water relates to the time of posting the notice. The claimant in that case posted notices of appropriation of water flowing from certain abandoned artesian wells on public land, and commenced to construct ditches for diversion within 60 days, but was enjoined from entering on the lands for further work by a homesteader who had located on the land shortly after the posting of the notices of appropriation. The water claimant brought an action to establish her right to the water. She was defeated and appealed. The decision of the trial court was reversed. Touching this interruption in the work, the appellate court said:

> "Having capped the wells, and enjoined appellant from entering upon the land to complete the ditch, by means of which she sought to divert the water to the place of intended use, respondents are in no position to assert that appellant has failed to prosecute the work with diligence and become an actual appropriator." De Wolfskill v. Smith, 5 Cal. App. 175, 182, 89 Pac. 1001, 1003.

While that decision apparently rests on the ground of estoppel, it is clear authority for our view that, though a subsequent appropriator has a perfect right to defend his possession in the courts, the only legitimate purpose of his defense is to defeat the prior claimant's right, not merely to delay its consummation, and that any delay caused by such litigation cannot be asserted as lack of diligence or otherwise as against the prior appropriator so as to defeat his right to claim priority by relation.

[5] The further claim that respondent has lost its water right by the failure to complete all of its project except the dam pending the litigation is not tenable under the evidence. The dam and outlet works will cost about $65,000; the ditches, flumes, and pipe lines about $595,000. The interest on that sum since the commencement of the condemnation suit, October 7, 1910, at 4 per cent. to this time, would amount to nearly $150,000. This all to no purpose, since the line must have lain idle till the dam site could be secured, and the ditches, flumes, and wooden pipes without water would have probably so deteriorated as to require a practical reconstruction when the dam site shall be secured. The law of diligence is not a rule of unreason and waste.

[6, 7] The question of diligence, as it seems to us, is thus reduced to the inquiry whether or not the condemnation suit has been prosecuted with reasonable diligence under all the attendant circumstances. A detailed discussion of the record and evidence on this question would unduly extend this opinion, already too long. Most of the delays are accounted for by the three resorts to this court on different phases of the litigation, and by the fact that there is only one jury term a year in Grant county where the suit is pending. We are satisfied that there has been no culpable delay in the prosecution, unless it be respondent's failure to have judgment entered on the trial court's original decision of May 29, 1911 earlier than January 10, 1912. That delay, however, as proven by appellants themselves, was consented to at the time by their predecessors in interest. Had that consent been withheld, we must assume that the judgment would have been entered promptly on the court's decision. By their consent appellants' predecessors would certainly be estopped to claim any advantage from that delay. Because of their privity in title appellants should be held equally estopped. Indeed, the record furnishes reason to believe that even then appellants' promoters, the Brumders, were the real parties in interest.

Finally, appellants contend that in any event respondents' project is not feasible. That question, however, was essentially in issue when the order for condemnation was entered in the original suit. We then held that there was a sufficient showing of feasibility. True, we said that "the only unsolved problem seems to be as to the amount of water that can be so accumulated and stored." 70 Wash. 459, 126 Pac. 945. But we were nevertheless then satisfied that there was "little doubt of the practicability of relator's project." The evidence now before us upon this question is extremely conflicting. Assuming it still an open question, we are not convinced that the project is not feasible for the irrigation of about 12,000 acres.

WORDEN et ux. v. WORDEN et al.
(No. 13825.)

1. Husband and Wife 🔑264—Ownership of Property—Evidence.

Evidence held to show that property which the husband agreed to devise to his nephew in return for care and support was the husband's separate property in which the wife had no interest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 916.]

2. Husband and Wife 🔑254 — "Separate Property"—Sale—Effect.

If the husband acquires lands with money belonging to him before his marriage, such land is his "separate property," and other land purchased with the proceeds thereof is also his "separate property."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 897–899.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Separate Property.]

3. Husband and Wife 🔑36—Contracts—Validity.

Where the husband and wife on separation had each deeded certain property to the other, a subsequently executed instrument reciting such conveyances and confirming them, since it did not in fact affect community property, need not have seals attached to the makers' signatures, conceding that Rem. Code 1915, § 8751, abolishing private seals, did not apply to conveyances of community property.

4. Husband and Wife 🔑278(2)—Contracts—Validity.

Such contract was not void as against public policy.

5. Husband and Wife 🔑271—Contracts—Validity—Consideration.

A mutual contract of husband and wife, by which each released to the other certain community property to become the other's separate property, did not require the further payment of money as consideration.

6. Deeds 🔑41—Description—Sufficiency.

Conceding an agreement between husband and wife allotting respective shares in community property to have been a conveyance, its recital granting "all community right, title and interest in and to all real estate situated in the state of Washington, the record title of which may be in the name of the party of the first part," was fully adequate to identify the land, especially as between the parties.

7. Wills 🔑58(2) — Contract to Devise — Execution—Evidence—Sufficiency.

Evidence held sufficient to show oral contract by which testator agreed to devise certain land to plaintiff in return for care and support.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 165.]

8. Wills 🔑58(2) — Contract to Devise — Execution—Quantum of Proof.

To establish oral agreement to devise land in consideration of care and support, where the will as made contained the devise agreed upon, does not require the same degree of convincing evidence as cases wherein the confirmatory will was not made.

9. Frauds, Statute of 🔑129(6)—Specific Performance 🔑41—Agreement to Devise Land—Enforcement.

It is within equity jurisdiction of courts to compel specific performance of a promise to devise land in consideration of a parol agreement already proved and partly performed, since part performance would take the contract out of the statute of frauds.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. § 314; Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 120–123.]

10. Frauds, Statute of 🔑133—Wills 🔑58(1)—Contract to Devise—Part Performance—What Constitutes—Admissibility in Evidence.

While execution of a will is not in itself sufficient as part performance to take an oral contract to devise lands out of the statute of frauds, the will is admissible in evidence in support of other evidence tending to establish the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. §§ 293–298; Wills, Cent. Dig. § 164.]

11. Wills 🔑67 — Contracts to Devise Lands—Theory of Enforcement.

Where testator agreed to devise land to plaintiff in consideration of care and support, and plaintiff went upon the land and worked thereon and made improvements and cared for the testator, but the will failed, the heirs who took the intestate property merely held as trustees for plaintiff.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Whatcom County; Ed E. Hardin, Judge.

Suit by Robert Worden and wife against Earl Worden and others. Decree for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded, with instructions.

R. J. Nightingale and H. S. Nightingale, both of Bellingham, for appellants. Hurlbut & Neal, of Bellingham, for respondents.

FULLERTON, J. On January 12, 1914, Ata Worden executed his last will and testament, devising to his nephew Robert Worden the south half, and to his nephew Elmer Worden the north half, of the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 15, township 39 north, range 2 west, W. M. The will also provided that his horses should go to Robert Worden, and his notes and mortgages to the brother of the testator Dudley Worden, his cattle should be distributed equally between Dudley Worden, his nephews Robert and Elmer Worden, and the two wives of the nephews, and the residue of his estate of whatever nature should go to his nephews Robert and Elmer and to his brother Dudley equally. The will further provided:

> "In making this, my last will and testament, I am not unmindful of my wife Nellie Worden, but do not care to leave her anything, and mention her here simply to show that she was not forgotten by me in making this my last will."

Ata Worden died July 20, 1914, and his will was duly probated on August 7, 1914. His widow, Nellie Worden, learning that Earl Worden Chafee (formerly Earl Worden) and Lloyd C. Worden, two sons by a former marriage, were living, notified them of their father's death, and on September 14, 1914, a contest of the will was instituted by the widow and these two sons. Upon the hearing of this contest, the will was set aside, on the ground that it failed to name or provide for such sons, and the estate declared intestate. The court in probate refused to pass upon the claim of the widow to a community interest in the estate left by Ata Worden. Robert Worden and Jennie Worden, his wife, thereupon brought an action against the heirs, widow, and executor of Ata Worden to enforce performance of an alleged oral agreement to devise to Robert the south half of the 40 acres described in the will. Among other things, the complaint set up an instrument executed by Ata Worden and Nellie Worden on June 19, 1911, declaring that all real estate held by the parties was the separte property of the one in whose name it was standing, and that all property thereafter acquired should be the separate property of the one acquiring it. The answer set up as an affirmative defense that this instrument was obtained by deception and fraud and that there was no consideration to sustain it. This was denied in the reply, which also alleged that no instrument was ever recorded by defendant Nellie Worden claiming any community interest in the property of Ata Worden, that she had received and retained all of her share of the community property under a division agreement with her husband, and that she was estopped to claim a community interest in the property in controversy. On the trial, the court found that the defendant Nellie Worden had a community interest in the property, that Ata Worden made no contract to devise his property, and that plaintiffs had made improvements on the property to the value of $185, and had rendered personal services to the decedent to the value of $645, and that the rental value of their use and occupation of the land was $230, leaving a net amount due plaintiffs of $600. Decree was rendered denying specific performance of the oral agreement, quieting title in Nellie Worden to an undivided one-half, and in Earl Worden Chafee and Lloyd C. Worden, the sons of Ata Worden, to an undivided one-fourth each, awarding plaintiffs judgment for $600, and making the same a lien on the land. The plaintiffs appeal, assigning as error certain findings of fact and conclusions of law of the court, the refusal to make findings and conclusions requested by plaintiffs, and the making of its decree based thereon.

The appellants claim that the following finding made by the court is contrary to the evidence:

> "That the property hereinbefore described or mentioned and all the property in which the said Ata Worden was interested at the time of his death was acquired during the time of the marriage relation with the defendant Nellie Worden and by the joint efforts of the said husband and wife, and was the community property of the said Ata Worden and said defendant Nellie Worden."

The evidence shows that Ata Worden and Nellie Worden were formerly residents of the state of Michigan and intermarried there in the year 1884. At the time of marriage, Nellie Worden possessed no property, and Ata Worden was possessed of property which, prior to his removal to the state of Washington in 1889, he sold for $2,500. Of this money, the sum of $400 was applied in paying off a $300 mortgage on a 30-acre farm in Michigan belonging to the parents of his wife, Nellie, and $100 was given them in cash. The title to this land in the year 1907 seems to have been vested in the Wordens, but the evidence does not clearly disclose how it was acquired other than by this payment out of Ata Worden's separate funds. The balance of the proceeds of his sale of his own Michigan property to the extent of from $1,800 to $2,000 was laid out in the purchase and equipment of a 22-acre farm in Skagit county, Wash., on which the parties made their home. Domestic trouble arising between the parties, they agreed to separate and divide their holdings. Accordingly, on June 10, 1907, Nellie Worden quitclaimed to Ata Worden the 30-acre farm in Michigan, waiving all claim for dower and Ata Worden quitclaimed to Nellie Worden the home farm in Skagit county, reciting his intention to convey all community interest in that property. Nellie Worden remained in possession of the Skagit county property as her home, farming it with the help of a hired man and retaining all the revenues therefrom. Ata Worden left for Whatcom county, where he took up his residence, and husband and wife never thereafter lived together. Shortly after the division of property, Ata Worden exchanged the Michigan land for a farm near Lynden, in Whatcom county, which he subsequently sold, and the proceeds of the sale were invested in another farm in Ten Mile township. Since there was nothing of record in Whatcom county showing his right to transfer real estate as sole owner, it was always necessary to get his wife to sign his deeds, so he had her join him in the execution of a deed purporting to convey to one another all community interest that each might have in the real estate held by the other. This agreement is as follows:

> "This agreement made and entered into this 19th day of June, 1911, by and between Ata Worden, sometimes known as 'Atta Worden,' the party of the first part, and Nellie Worden, the wife of said Ata Worden, the party of the second part, witnesseth: That whereas, the above-named parties are husband and wife; and whereas, differences have developed making it impossible for said parties to longer live together, and said parties having agreed to live separately:
> "Now, therefore, in consideration of the mutual promises made herein, the one to the other, the said parties do agree that hereafter the said parties will live separate and apart from each other, and that any and all property which may be acquired by either of said parties shall be considered as the sole and separate property of the party acquiring the same, and relieved of any and all interest which the other party to this agreement might have by reason of the community existing between the parties hereto.
> "Said party of the first part does hereby grant, bargain, sell and convey unto the said party of the second part all of his community right, title and interest in and to all real estate situated in the state of Washington and now standing in the name of the party of the second part, and the said party of the second part does hereby grant, bargain, sell and convey unto the said party of the first part all of her community right, title and interest in and to all real estate situated in the state of Washington the record title to which may be in the name of the said party of the first part.
> "It is mutually agreed by and between the said parties, and it is the intention of the parties hereto, that from this day henceforth the said parties shall each have the right to acquire and sell property and to transact business in all manner the same as if the parties hereto were unmarried persons.
> "In witness whereof, the said parties have hereunto set their hands and seals this 19th day of June, 1911. Ata Worden.
> "Nellie Worden.
> "Witness: H. C. Thompson."

This was filed for record August 1, 1911, and duly recorded in the records of Whatcom county. Having sold his farm in Ten Mile township, Ata Worden, on January 30, 1912, invested the proceeds in a farm near Ferndale, Whatcom county, described as the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 15, township 39 north, range 2 east, W. M., comprising the land in controversy in this action. Here Ata Worden lived alone and cultivated the land until December, 1913, when, owing to his impaired physical condition, he was compelled to call his nephew Robert Worden to his assistance.

[1, 2] We think this evidence clearly establishes that the lands in controversy were the separate property of Ata Worden. So far as the evidence discloses, the Michigan land was his separate property at the inception of its ownership. But conceding that his wife had an interest therein, she conveyed it to him absolutely by her deed of June 10, 1907, an instrument which she nowhere questions. This was given by her in exchange for a deed making her the separate owner of a farm that had been bought with the money of Ata Worden in which she had no community interest. The Michigan land being the separate property of Ata Worden, the farm near Lynden acquired by him in exchange for his Michigan farm would also be separate property. The land in controversy through all mesne conveyances is shown to be the proceeds of property originally held in separate ownership, and under the rule in this state the original character of property held by a married person attaches to the proceeds of that property.

In U. S. Fidelity & G. Co. v. Lee, 58 Wash. 16, 107 Pac. 870, we state the rule as follows:

> "Where property is acquired during marriage, the test of its separate or community character is whether it was acquired by community funds and community credit, or separate funds and the issues and profits thereof. * * *"

See, also, In re Deschamps' Estate, 77 Wash. 514, 137 Pac. 1009; Guye v. Guye, 63 Wash. 340, 115 Pac. 731, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 186.

But if there were any doubt as to the separate character of the property in this state acquired with the proceeds of the Michigan land conveyed to him by his wife in 1907, that doubt is completely dispelled by the execution of the instrument of June 19, 1911, in which Nellie Worden purported to convey to Ata Worden "all of her community right, title and interest in and to all real estate situated in the state of Washington, the record title of which may be in the name of" Ata Worden. Recognizing the effectiveness of this instrument as a declaration against any community interest, respondent Nellie Worden attacked it from every angle. She pleaded that it was procured by fraud and deception and without consideration. She testified there was no money consideration, but there was no evidence of fraud introduced. Before the trial court it was urged that the instrument was invalid under Rem. Code, § 8766, because the signatures of the parties were not sealed as required by that statute; that the contract was void as being against public policy, in that it was given in consideration of the dissolution of the marriage relation and that it attempted to convey a community interest by a general instead of by a specific description. The trial court held that the instrument was contrary to public policy, and hence void and without force or effect for any purpose.

[3] Under the facts in this case, the instrument dealt only with the separate property of the parties. The land in Nellie Worden's name was her separate property by reason of the deed of 1907 from her husband. The land in Ata Worden's name was his separate property because it was the proceeds of what was concededly separate property belonging to him. The object of executing the instrument was that it might be placed of record in Whatcom county, so that Ata Worden as a married man would not be under the necessity of procuring his wife's signature to every transfer of real estate made by him, and the evidence discloses he was an active trader. It is nothing more than confirmatory of the titles standing in their respective names as constituting separate property. It amounts to notice to the world of the separation of husband and wife, and of an agreement between them that all after-acquired property acquired by either shall be the sole and separate property of the party acquiring it. As the instrument does not in fact affect community property, there was no necessity that seals be attached to the signatures of the makers, even if we were to concede that Rem. Code, § 8751, abolishing private seals, was not operative as to conveyances of community property between husband and wife. See Powers v. Munson, 74 Wash. 234, 133 Pac. 453.

[4] Further, we think the trial court was in error in holding the agreement of June 19, 1911, void as against public policy. It merely recited the inability of husband and wife to live together, with their agreement to live separately, and was an adjustment of property rights in view of that situation of affairs.

> "* * * The great majority of the American decisions distinguish between agreements for future and agreements for immediate separation, holding that agreements for separation of husband and wife are valid if made in prospect of an immediate separation, but illegal if they provide for a possible separation in the future. * * *" 9 Cyc. 520.

[5] The agreement itself recites the consideration upon which it was based, and any claim of Nellie Worden that Ata Worden failed to pay her any money for entering into it is wholly without merit. The instrument is strong declaratory evidence against interest on the part of Nellie Worden.

[6] Objection is made that this agreement between the spouses is insufficient because it attempts to convey by general, instead of specific, description of the land. If it were in fact a conveyance, it recites that Nellie Worden "does hereby grant, bargain, sell and convey unto said party of the first part [Ata Worden] all of her community right, title, and interest in and to all real estate situated in the state of Washington, the record title of which may be in the name of said party of the first part." Such description was fully adequate for the purpose of identifying the land intended, especially as between the parties. Butrick v. Tilton, 141 Mass. 93, 6 N. E. 563; Harvey v. Edens, 69 Tex. 420, 6 S. W. 306; Brown v. Warren, 16 Nev. 228; First Nat. Bank v. Hughes, 10 Mo. App. 7.

We do not think it necessary to invoke the principle of estoppel in this case, although there are circumstances sufficient to preclude the assertion by the widow of a community interest in the land. She not only executed the two deeds declaring to the world she had no interest in lands in Ata Worden's name, but she has failed to make and file for record a declaration of a community interest in any lands held by him. She has also taken and farmed for seven years the improved land given by him to her, and taken to herself all the revenue thereof. She had knowledge that Robert Worden and wife were living on and farming the land and taking care of her enfeebled husband with the understanding that Robert was to have the land on her husband's death, yet she failed to notify him that she claimed a community interest in the property, or to file for record a public declaration to that effect. We think it is clear from the evidence that the land devised by Ata Worden was his separate property in which his wife Nellie Worden is not entitled to assert any community interest.

[7] We think, also, the finding of fact that "Ata Worden during his lifetime did not make an agreement with plaintiffs to leave them or either of them any property by last will and testament," was contrary to the evidence. The agreement was an oral one, and Robert and Elmer Worden and their wives, as parties to the contract with the decedent, Ata Worden, were precluded from testifying to its terms, as was also the attorney who drew the will from testifying to the purpose of the testator in executing it. There is, however, abundant testimony of other witnesses as to declarations of the decedent that he intended to leave his land to his two nephews for taking care of him in his old age and during his helpless condition, and also of declarations that he had made the will for that purpose. Robert Worden took possession of and operated the south 20 acres as if it were his own, and made permanent improvements which the court found were of the value of $185, besides farming the land and sharing the proceeds with his uncle. The court also found that the care and assistance rendered the uncle by Robert Worden and his wife were of the value of $645. Dudley Worden, the brother of the testator and father of Robert Worden, was present at the time the agreement between uncle and nephew was entered into. He testifies:

> "Ata said: 'Robert made a proposition to support me for this 20 we are living on, and the stock and farming utensils. What do you think about it?' And I said, 'I think it is up to you parties. If you agree to it, I think it is all right.' And he said, 'Do you think he would?' And I said, 'I think he would.' And he said: 'You know Robert is under age. Do you think he would do it?' And I said, 'I think he would do it if he said he would, and, as far as I am concerned, I am willing to assist him what I can in that.' And he said, 'All right, let's talk it over together,' and he told me to call Robert in. Ata said to Robert, 'I was telling your father the proposition you made me about taking this 20 and supporting me.' And Robert said, 'Yes, I told him I would take and support him for this 20, and the stock, and things that went with it to work it with. I am ready to do it, and I am doing it.' And Ata said: 'Now, your father says that he thinks it is all right. Now, Robert, you go ahead and work this 20 just as if it was your own, and I will see you have it when I am done with it, so you will get it when I am done with it.' And Robert said: 'All right. Father hears this, so it is all right.' That is about all the conversation of that of any importance at that time."

The same witness testified of a later conversation with Ata Worden concerning the matter, as follows:

> "He wanted to know how was the best way to fix it up, and he wanted to know what I thought about it, and I said: 'I don't know. If Robert is to have this, you had better see a lawyer; of course, he needs some papers.' And he said: 'I guess I will make a will. I don't like to deed it while I am living. I would like to keep it in my own name while I am living.' * * * About the 11th of January, 1914, * * * he went over to Elmer's, and he was talking about making out papers, he was getting so bad. Ata stayed with Elmer, and next day Ata and Elmer come down here [Bellingham] and had the will made out, * * * and going home he said: 'I made out the papers to-day. I made out a will. Robert gets the south 20.' And he said: 'I can't talk very well. Elmer can tell you about it.'"

Edward W. Swanson, a merchant of Ferndale, testified of a conversation with Ata Worden, as follows:

> "I raised the question of Robert Worden, about his wanting to open an account and establish a line of credit because he was taking care of the old man, and I asked him about this, and Ata Worden told me that it would be all right, because he was going to take care of him and he would have the place. Just before that, I said, 'That is mighty nice, Robert staying there and taking care of you,' and he said, 'Yes, it is, and he will have the place.' That is about the extent of the conversation."

Joe Joyt testified:

> "Ata said he would give Robert 20 acres of land if he would take care of him, because he had to have somebody take care of him."

Harold Williams testified:

> "I knew Ata Worden. I was at his place working for Robert in 1913, about November. I stayed there two weeks, cutting poles and doing general farm work. Ata told me he intended to give Robert Worden that home place and also Elmer Worden the other 20 for taking care of > him the balance of his days. * * * Robert farmed the place and built a fence and a woodshed and wagon shed. I helped him build the woodshed. Robert employed me and paid me."

William Carr testified:

> "I stopped at that farm in April, 1914, to trade or sell horses to Bob. I talked with Ata Worden. * * * He said: 'I am not able to do anything, Billie, any more. In fact, I can't cook my own meals. I have to have somebody here, you know, and I got the boys on here, and if they will go ahead and farm this thing, and do what is right, there is a good living in it for all of us, and when I get done with it it shall be the boys'.'"

Carl R. Lange testified:

> "One time I went to see him [Ata Worden] about some sacks, and Robert and I went in the house and talked with the old gentleman about the sacks. He said, 'Whatever Robert does is satisfactory to me.' * * * So whatever Robert did was a go; he was satisfied."

Thomas H. Edwards testified:

> "I was township assessor in 1914, and went there [Worden's farm] to assess in March or April. I went there to assess Ata Worden, and of course asked for general information, and he said the place belonged to Bob, and referred me to Bob for the information I desired. I examined the improvements. Robert built a woodshed and a couple of wells, and built a barn, and built an addition to the barn and a wagon shed. He made these before Ata Worden died."

Mrs. Mae Houser testified:

> "I knew Ata Worden and visited them the evening before Christmas [1913]. * * * He spoke of leaving his property to his two nephews Elmer and Robert. He said they would have a good home after he was gone, and I said, 'Do you intend leaving the property to the two boys Elmer and Robert?' and he said, 'Yes, providing they care for me as long as I live.' * * * I said that would be nice for the boys, and he said they were good boys and had been taking care of him, and if they took care of him as long as he lived the property would be theirs."

[8] There was no rebuttal testimony as to the agreement between uncle and nephew for the passing of the south 20 acres, nor of the testimony as to the making of the will in carrying out that agreement. The will itself is strong confirmatory proof that such an agreement was entered into. A case of this kind would not require the same degree of convincing evidence as those cases where no will had been made in conformity with an alleged oral contract. Here the will as actually made fully corroborates the other evidence. We think the trial court should have found that the oral contract to devise by will was entered into.

The case of McDowell v. Lucas, 97 Ill. 489, presents a case where an oral contract that a son should have certain lands on the death of the father was sustained upon evidence almost parallel to that in this case. The court said:

> "Here was a payment of the purchase money by four or five years' labor, which the son rendered to the father after he was of age, followed by an actual possession of the premises and the making of lasting and valuable improvements thereon, under and in pursuance of a verbal contract to convey the title. The concurrence of these things, when clearly established, has always been regarded as sufficient to authorize a court of equity to decree a conveyance. Bright v. Bright, 41 Ill. 97; Kurtz v. Hibner, 55 Ill. 514 [8 Am. Rep. 665]; Langston v. Bates, 84 Ill. 524 [25 Am. Rep. 466].
> "The fact that William Lucas paid his father one-third of the crops each year raised on the land, and the latter paid the taxes, does not militate against his right to a decree. Had the payment of rent been unexplained, a different question would have arisen; but it appears, from the testimony, to have been a part of the contract that one-third of the crops should go to the father during his life, and he was to pay the taxes, and at his death the absolute title should vest in the son. The payment of rent, therefore, in this case, does not establish the relation of landlord and tenant between the parties and, tend to prove that William Lucas was not occupying as a purchaser; but, on the other hand, the payment of rent was consistent with the contract under which William Lucas entered into possession of the land."

[9] It has long been recognized as within the equity jurisdiction of courts to compel specific performance of a promise to devise land given in consideration of a parol agreement which has been already proved and partly performed, since part performance would take the contract out of the statute of frauds. Waterman, Specific Performance of Contracts, § 41; Gupton v. Gupton, 47 Mo. 37; Swash v. Sharpstein, 14 Wash. 426, 44 Pac. 862, 32 L. R. A. 796.

[10] While it is the rule in this state that the execution of a will is not sufficient in itself as part performance taking an oral contract out of the statute of frauds (McClanahan v. McClanahan, 77 Wash. 138, 137 Pac. 479, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 461), still we think the will is admissible in evidence in support of other evidence tending to establish the contract. Maddox v. Rowe, 23 Ga. 431, 68 Am. Dec. 535; Brinker v. Brinker, 7 Pa. 53; Moore v. Bryant, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 131, 31 S. W. 223.

In Maddox v. Rowe, supra, a will executed by a father in carrying out an agreement with his son was void for want of the required number of witnesses. The court in that case said:

> "The father made in writing what he thought was his will, and in that writing he said that he gave the two lots of land in controversy to the son. The contract, on his side, was that he should give these two lots to the son. Here, then, is a writing that may serve to help to prove the contract. The case is such, therefore, that it is not left wholly at the mercy of parol evidence. True, this writing was void, as a will, but that did not prevent it from being good, to help to prove the contract."

The case of Hiatt v. Williams, 72 Mo. 214, 37 Am. Rep. 438, is almost identical in its material facts with the case at issue here. The court there said:

> "The object of this suit was to procure a specific performance of an agreement, after the death of the person with whom the agreement is alleged to have been made, upon the ground that the plaintiff had fully performed on his part. The plaintiff was the youngest son of Th. Hiatt, who had four children. In 1858, having provided for his other children, as he supposed, to each of his two daughters having given a share, and his son who went to California, some money, he agreed with plaintiff, his youngest son, that if he would remain upon the homestead and > support his father and stepmother during their lives, and work the farm (180 acres) under the direction of his father, he would convey in fee the homestead to the plaintiff, but not to take effect till he and his wife were dead. This arrangement was claimed and proved. In 1861 the father, with a view to carry out this purpose, which he was told could be best effected by a will, made a will devising this land to plaintiff. In the will, which was drawn up by defendant, Williams, who was a son-in-law of Hiatt, and a justice of the peace, no mention was made of his other children, and consequently, under our statute, it was a mere nullity. In 1866 this paper was delivered to plaintiff by his father, as answering the purposes of the two contracting parties. In 1870 the father died, and in 1873 the stepmother died, during which seventeen years the plaintiff lived on and worked the farm. These facts were stated in the petition and fully supported by the evidence. The circuit court, however, refused to enforce the contract. Upon what ground and for what reasons does not appear. No brief has been filed on the part of the defendant in error, and we have been unable to conjecture upon what ground the decree dismissing this bill was based. The case seems to be identical in principle with the case of Sutton v. Hayden, 62 Mo. 101, and Gupton v. Gupton, 47 Mo. 37, though much stronger in facts than either. The attempt to execute the contract by a will would surely not place the plaintiff in any worse condition than he was before. The will was merely introduced in evidence to support the contract, and it was certainly very strong evidence to show the intent of the father, who doubtless supposed that it would accomplish his purpose. A verbal agreement of this sort, in case of performance on one side, was enforced in the case of Gupton v. Gupton. That case is in effect identical with the present, though infinitely less persuasive in its facts, for here there was an actual service of 17 years. The judgment of the circuit court will be reversed, and that court directed to enter a decree in conformity with this opinion."

It is held in Gupton v. Gupton, 47 Mo. 37, that the surrender of the possession of a farm to a person who takes care of the owner under an agreement to devise it to him in consideration of such care, and the execution of a will to that effect, makes a valid contract. Likewise, it has been held that the taking possession and making improvements under an agreement for the devise of certain land in consideration of caring for the owner until his death is an enforceable contract. Watson v. Mahan, 20 Ind. 223; Mauck v. Melton, 64 Ind. 414; Bird v. Pope, 73 Mich. 483, 41 N. W. 514.

[11] In the case at bar, we have all the elements of part performance justifying the enforceability of an oral contract for the devise of lands. Robert Worden not only went into possession of the land, cleared and cultivated it, and made permanent improvements, but he boarded and cared for an aged man suffering with disease, all under a direct promise that he should have the land at the old man's death. The failure of the will executed in conformity with the contract throws the title to the land to his heirs, the respondents Earl Worden Chafee and Lloyd C. Worden; his wife, Nellie Worden, having no interest because of the prior property agreements between herself and the deceased. These heirs who receive the land because of the failure of the will merely hold as trustees of the trust impressed upon the realty by their ancestor. In a note to section 191 of Pomeroy on Specific Performance of Contracts, the author states:

> "The relief is granted, not by ordering a will to be made, but by regarding the property in the hands of the heirs, devisees, assignees, or representatives of the deceased promisor, as impressed with a trust in favor of the plaintiff, and by compelling defendant, who must of course belong to some one of these classes of persons, to make such a disposition of the property as will carry out the intent of the agreement."

If Ata Worden in his lifetime had conveyed the land to his nephew in discharge of the contract, his heirs would have been bound thereby. The facts in this case show full performance of the oral contract on the part of the appellants and attempted full performance on the part of the decedent by the execution of the will agreed upon, although such instrument proved to be void through failure to conform to statutory requirements. This impressed the land with a trust which his successors in interest are bound in equity to discharge. The law is well settled that the heirs can be compelled to specifically perform the contract of their ancestor to the extent of making a proper conveyance, and, in the event of their failure, that the court has power to appoint a commissioner to make the conveyance. In Dicken v. McKinley, 163 Ill. 318, 45 N. E. 134, 54 Am. St. Rep. 471, it is said:

> "The weight of authority is in favor of the position that a man may make a valid agreement to dispose of his property in a particular way by will, and that such contract may be enforced in equity after his decease against his heirs, devisees, or personal representatives. 22 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 874, and cases cited in note 2; Schouler on Wills (2d Ed.) § 454; Waterman on Specific Per. of Contracts, § 51; Fry on Specific Per. (3d Ed.) § 223; Weingaertner v. Pabst, 115 Ill. 412 [5 N. E. 385]."

In Burdine v. Burdine's Ex'r, 98 Va. 515, 36 S. E. 992, 81 Am. St. Rep. 741, it is said:

> "Strictly speaking, an agreement to dispose of property by will cannot be specifically enforced. * * * Yet courts of equity can do what is equivalent to a specific performance of such an agreement by compelling those upon whom the legal title has descended to convey or deliver the property in accordance with its terms, upon the ground that it is charged with a trust in the hands of the heir at law, devisee, personal representative, or purchaser, with notice of the agreement, as the case may be. 3 Pars. Cont. (6th Ed.) § 406; Hale v. Hale, 90 Va. 728, 730, 19 S. E. 739."

We are satisfied that the findings of fact made by the court, as to the absence of an oral agreement to devise and as to the community interest in the land of respondent Nellie Worden, are contrary to the evidence.

The decree of the lower court will be reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to order the respondents Earl Worden Chafee and Lloyd C. Worden to convey to appellants Robert Worden and Jennie Worden the south 20 acres of the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 15, township 39 north, range 2 east, W. M.; and, in the event of their failure, that a commissioner to make the conveyance be appointed by the court. The executor of the estate of Ata Worden will also be instructed to distribute the personal property of the decedent to the appellants herein in accordance with the terms of the will.

WILLS 🔑67—CONTRACTS TO DEVISE LANDS—THEORY OF ENFORCEMENT.

Where testator agreed to devise land to plaintiff in consideration of care and support, and plaintiff went upon the land and worked thereon and made improvements and cared for the testator, but the will was void, the contract was enforceable against the heirs who took the intestate property.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Whatcom County; Ed. E. Hardin, Judge.

Suit by Elmer Worden and wife against Earl Worden and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded, with instructions.

R. J. Nightingale and H. S. Nightingale, both of Bellingham, for appellants. Hurlbut & Neal, of Bellingham, for respondents.

FULLERTON, J. This case involves the principles of law and much the same facts as those contained in Worden v. Worden, 165 Pac. 501; the oral contract with Elmer Worden for the devise of the north half of the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 15, township 39 north, range 2 east, W. M., being founded on slightly differing evidence.

The evidence shows that appellant Elmer Worden was an older brother of Robert Worden, and a married man; that his uncle Ata Worden, prior to making the contract with Robert to come to the uncle's home and take care of him and the farm, had asked Elmer to make his home there, as the latter and his wife would be able to take proper care of the old man. In the fall of 1913, after the agreement with Robert Worden had been entered into, Ata Worden urged Elmer Worden to quit renting land and to come and build a home on the north half of the former's 40-acre tract, and promised him the land at death if Elmer would do so. Elmer refused to move onto the land and improve it unless his uncle would give him some kind of written evidence that it should be Elmer's at his uncle's death. It was finally agreed between them to go to the county seat for the purpose of executing papers that would make Elmer Worden safe; whereupon the latter agreed to build a house on the north half of the tract, go there to live, and deliver to the uncle two-thirds of the net revenues for his support. They went to Bellingham and consulted a lawyer on January 12, 1914, resulting in the drafting of Ata Worden's last will devising to Elmer Worden the north half of the testator's 40-acre farm and bequeathing to him certain personal property. Elmer Worden thereupon spent a couple of months at work to earn additional money to make improvements on the land. He moved onto the land in March of that year, erecting a couple of tents as a temporary residence for his family while constructing a dwelling house. He at once proceeded to build a frame house and a barn, put up 80 rods of line fencing, together with a garden and chicken fence, sunk a well, and cleared an acre and a half of land. Before these improvements were all completed and on July 20, 1914, his uncle died. The court found that the value of such improvements up to the time of his uncle's death was $550.

The evidence clearly establishes that appellants went into possession of the land and made valuable improvements thereon in consideration of the execution of the will assuring them of title on the death of the uncle. Under the authority of the case cited, this was an enforceable contract against the heirs. See, also, Irwin v. Dyke, 114 Ill. 302, 1 N. E. 913; Bohanan v. Bohanan, 96 Ill. 591; Bird v. Pope, 73 Mich. 483, 41 N. W. 514; Hughes v. Hughes, 72 Ga. 173.

For the reasons given in the case of Worden v. Worden, the decree in this case is reversed, and the cause remanded to the lower court, with instructions to order the respondents Earl Worden Chafee and Lloyd C. Worden to execute to appellants Elmer and Nettie Worden a conveyance of the north half of the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 15, township 30 north, range 2 east, W. M.; and, in the event of their failure so to do that the court appoint a commissioner to make proper conveyance. The executor of the estate of Ata Worden, deceased, will also be instructed to distribute to the appellants the personal property attempted to be bequeathed to them under the terms of the void will of Ata Worden, deceased.

BILLS AND NOTES 🔑161—NEGOTIABILITY—PAYMENT OF TAXES.

Under Rem. Code 1915, § 3392, providing negotiable instruments must contain unconditional promise to pay a sum certain, a note agreeing to pay any taxes assessed upon the note or its mortgage security is not negotiable, although no tax was actually imposed upon either note or mortgage.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Douglas County; R. S. Steiner, Judge.

Mortgage foreclosure action by Coolidge & McClaine against Robert S. Saltmarsh, Margaret Saltmarsh, and William McCowat. From a foreclosure decree, defendant McCowat appeals. Affirmed.

John Pattison, of Spokane, and John W. Hanna, of Waterville, for appellant. Walter & Washington, of Coulee City, and Sam B. Hill, of Waterville, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff Coolidge & McClaine, a corporation, as holder of a promissory note and mortgage executed by Robert S. Saltmarsh and Margaret Saltmarsh, brought an action against them to foreclose the same, making a party defendant also William McCowat, who held a subsequent mortgage covering the same land. The court rendered decree foreclosing the Coolidge & McClaine mortgage. On issues raised between the Saltmarshes and McCowat on the latter's note and mortgage which he held by transfer from the original payee, the court held that the note was a nonnegotiable one and therefore subject, in the hands of McCowat as assignee, to all the defenses which the makers had against the original payee. The defendant McCowat appeals.

The attorneys for both appellant and respondents agree that the only issue in the case is the negotiability of the note, it having been established that it was procured by fraud on the part of D. Ryrie, the original payee, from whom it had been purchased by appellant.

The promissory note, given by Saltmarsh and wife to Ryrie and transferred by him to McCowat, is as follows:

"$2,400.00. Coulee City, Wash., Feb. 25, 1911.

"On the first day of January A. D. 1916, I promise to pay to the order of D. Ryrie, Spokane, Washington, the sum of twenty-four hundred and no-100 dollars, United States gold coin of the present standard of weight and fineness, payable at Spokane, Wash., with interest thereon, in like coin, after maturity, until paid, at the rate of eight per cent. per annum. And in case suit or action is instituted to collect this note or any part thereof, I promise to pay in addition to the costs and disbursements provided by statute such sum as the court may adjudge reasonable as attorney's fees in such suit or action, and to pay, in each year, on or before ten days before the same become delinquent, at said office, the taxes assessed in the state of Washington, upon the mortgage given to secure this note and the debt thereby secured, or upon this note or any part thereof. This note is given for the principal on an actual loan of twenty-four hundred and no-100 dollars, United States gold coin, and is secured by a mortgage on real estate of even date herewith.

"I contract and agree, that if the mortgaged property shall not, in the event of a foreclosure sale thereof, realize sufficient to pay in full the sum due under said mortgage, together with costs and expenses of foreclosure action, a deficiency judgment shall be rendered for any unpaid balance, which I promise to pay.

"No. of Note —— Robert S. Saltmarsh.
"Loan No. 728. Margaret Saltmarsh."

The Negotiable Instruments Act (Rem. Code, § 3392) declares that an instrument "must contain an unconditional promise or order to pay a sum certain in money" in order to be negotiable. The note in question, in addition to being for a sum named, also contains a promise to pay any taxes assessed upon the note or upon the mortgage securing it. We held, in Bright v. Offield, 81 Wash. 442, 143 Pac. 159, that such a provision in the note renders it nonnegotiable. In that case there was involved a provision in the note for payment of taxes, which constituted an implied rather than a direct promise by the maker to pay them. The court there said:

> "Since the amount of these taxes, rates, and assessments is uncertain, the amount of recovery would be uncertain. This provision, therefore, renders the note not merely an unconditional promise to pay a sum certain, but also, in necessary effect, a conditional promise to pay an uncertain sum."

The fact, as urged by appellant, that there was no law in force in this state for the taxation of notes and mortgages, would not detract from the effect of the rule. There always remains a possibility during the life of such contracts that they may be subjected to the liability of taxation, and a promise in the note to pay any taxes thereon would leave the amount to be paid indeterminate and open to conjecture upon the contingency of future legislation. See Carmody v. Crane, 110 Mich. 508, 68 N. W. 268; Walker v. Thompson, 108 Mich. 686, 66 N. W. 584; Smith v. Myers, 207 Ill. 126, 69 N. E. 858; Farquhar v. Fidelity Ins., etc., Co., Fed. Cas. No. 4,676.

The finding and conclusion of the court as to the nonnegotiable character of the note in controversy is in accord with the case cited, and, as the case is controlling, the judgment will stand affirmed.

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑334(1)—OPTION—MEETING OF MINDS—RECOVERY OF PAYMENT.

If minds of parties executing option agreement failed to meet upon question of amount of land to be conveyed plaintiff could recover from defendant amount paid thereunder.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1006(4)—FORMER APPEAL — REVERSAL — NECESSITY OF SUBSTANTIAL ERROR.

After two appeals had previously been taken and four juries had passed on the facts and found in plaintiff's favor, judgment will not be interfered with unless defendant has been prejndiced in some substantial right during progress of trial or in submission of case to jury.

Appeal from District Court, Salt Lake County; T. D. Lewis, Judge.

Action by Charles Tyng against the Constant-Loraine Investment Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Howat, Marshal, Macmillan & Nebeker, and Robert H. Butterfield, all of Salt Lake City, for appellant. Pierce, Critchlow & Barrette, of Salt Lake City, for respondent.

FRICK, C. J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover the sum of $1,000 from the defendant, which plaintiff alleged the defendant wrongfully retained from him. This case has been here on appeal twice before. Tyng v. Constant-Loraine Inv. Co., 37 Utah, 304, 108 Pac. 1109; Id., 154 Pac. 767. Plaintiff recovered in both trials, but the judgments in his favor were reversed on defendant's appeals. On the last trial the plaintiff again prevailed, and the defendant again appeals.

In view of the former opinions, to which we specially refer, and for the reason that both parties in their respective briefs state that "the evidence in this case is practically identical with that introduced on the previous trial of the case," we shall not state more of the record than is absolutely necessary to an understanding of the points decided.

The controversy between the parties arose out of what is termed an option agreement to purchase certain real property in Salt Lake City. The transaction in question, hower, arose between one R. A. Rowan, of Los Angeles, as the president of the defendant company, on the one hand, and the Equity Investment Company, a Utah corporation, upon the other. The plaintiff, however, succeeded to all of the rights of said company by assignment before the action was commenced. The transactions in question here were initiated by one Thomas E. Rowan, a real estate broker of Salt Lake City, by a telegram dated September 4, 1907, which was transmitted to said R. A. Rowan at Los Angeles. The telegram reads:

"Advise cash price west side State, taxes prorated, whether leased."

The telegram was addressed to R. A. Rowan for the reason that the title to the property inquired about was in him. On the following day R. A. Rowan wired as follows:

"Will accept fifty thousand. Property now mortgaged for twenty thousand at five per cent. Leases very short. See Kelsey & Gillespie for exact information."

To that telegram Thomas E. Rowan, on the same day, replied:

"Responsible party offers one thousand for thirty days' option. Recommend."

In response to the foregoing R. A. Rowan wired as follows:

"Will accept one thousand for thirty days' option for property west side State street. Price fifty thousand, subject to twenty thousand mortgage. Balance, thirty thousand, to be paid in cash on or before thirty days from date. Taxes to be prorated. One thousand to be deposited to my credit immediately with National Bank of Republic, they to notify me by wire."

Upon receipt of the foregoing telegram the Equity Investment Company deposited with the bank aforesaid $1,000, and received from said bank the following writing:

"Salt Lake City, Septemebr 9, 1907. Received of the Equity Investment Company one thousand ($1,000.00) dollars as a deposit on account of the purchase price of the following described real property in the county of Salt Lake, state of Utah: [Describing the parcel of ground 55 feet by 165 feet]—which property the Equity Investment Company agrees to buy for the sum of fifty thousand ($50,000.00) dollars, payable as follows: Thirty thousand ($30,000) dollars on or before thirty days from the date of this receipt. The above mentioned deposit of one thousand ($1,000.00) dollars to be applied as a part of said payment, the balance of twenty thousand ($20,000.00) dollars to be covered by a mortgage for that amount now on the property, which mortgage the Equity Investment Company agrees to assume and pay; the property to be deeded by a warranty deed free of all incumbrances except aforesaid mortgage of twenty thousand ($20,000.00) dollars and the general taxes for the year 1907. The Equity Investment Company agrees to pay their proportion of the said taxes from the date possession is delivered to them. This deposit is made with the National Bank of the Republic, and accepted by them under authority of the following telegram from R. A. Rowan: 'Los Angeles, Calif., Sept. 6, 7, 1907. Thos. E. Rowan, Salt Lake City, Utah: Will accept one thousand for thirty days' option for property west side State street. Price fifty thousand to be paid in cash on or before thirty days from date. Taxes to be prorated. One thousand to be deposited to my credit immediately with the National Bank of Republic, they to notify me by wire. R. A. Rowan.' If the Equity Investment Company does not complete the purchase of said property within the time and manner above specified, then this deposit shall be forfeited to the seller as liquidated damages. National Bank of the Republic, by Frank Knox, Pr."

The $1,000 was, in fact, plaintiff's money, and immediately after the deposit was made the Equity Investment Company assigned and delivered the foregoing writing to the plaintiff. It will be observed that in none of the statements does anything appear respecting the dimensions of the property, but in the writing that was given by the bank to the plaintiff the property is described as being 55 by 165 feet.

Pursuant to the foregoing deposit the defendant company, on the 20th day of September, 1907, by R. A. Rowan, as president, and P. D. Rowan, as secretary, executed and transmitted by mail to said bank at Salt Lake City a warranty deed by which it conveyed and warranted to the Equity Investment Company 53½ by 165 feet, and in said deed also quitclaimed all right, title, and interest in and to a strip 1½ by 165 feet adjoining the 53½ by 165 feet aforesaid. On the day before the option expired the plaintiff tendered to the bank the sum of $29,000, being the balance due on the option, and demanded a deed for the property described in the writing he had received from the bank, namely, 55 by 165 feet. The bank, however, tendered plaintiff the deed executed by the defendant as aforesaid, which the plaintiff refused to accept, and demanded a warranty deed for the full 55 by 165 feet, and refused to pay the $29,000 unless and until he should receive such a deed. A deed as requested by plaintiff was, however, refused by the defendant company, and hence this action to recover back the $1,000 deposited as before stated.

On the first appeal the judgment in favor of the plaintiff was reversed upon the ground that the district court had erred in submitting to the jury the question of whether the writing issued by the bank was authorized or ratified by the defendant company in the absence of any evidence to support such an issue. It was, however, also held on that appeal that, inasmuch as the plaintiff sought a recovery upon the writing issued by the bank, which was issued by it without authority and without evidence of ratification, he could not recover upon the contract evidenced by letters and telegrams. On the second appeal the judgment in favor of the plaintiff was reversed upon two grounds: (1) That the district court erred in refusing to submit to the jury the question of whether the minds of the parties had met upon the quantity of ground that was included in the telegrams; and (2) that the court had erred in requiring R. A. Rowan to answer certain questions on cross-examination. The latter objection is, however, entirely eliminated from this appeal. In the opinion on the second appeal the grounds are fully discussed, and, to avoid all controversy respecting what was decided, and the grounds upon which that decision is based, we append the following excerpts from the opinion:

> "A point is made that there is no evidence to show that R. A. Rowan, in sending the telegram, or in anything that he did, acted for the defendant, or that the $1,000 which was paid to the bank was deposited to the credit of the defendant, or for its benefit, or that it received the money, it, in such respect being contended that Rowan acted for himself, and that the money was deposited to his credit and for his benefit. While everything was done in the name of R. A. Rowan, except the making of the deed, which was in the defendant's name, still there is sufficient evidence to justify findings that Rowan acted for the defendant, and that it received the money deposited in the bank. At any rate, the defendant, by making and forwarding the deed to the bank, ratified the transaction to convey whatever west side State street property was owned by it, upon payments being made as specified in the telegrams. The serious question is: What contract in such respect was made? As has been seen, we, on the former trial, held that neither Rowan nor the defendant authorized the bank to make a contract to convey 55x165 feet by warranty, or to make any agreement with respect to the terms of the option, or that either ratified the writing which the bank gave in such particular. We also held that the telegrams which passed between Thomas E. Rowan and R. A. Rowan evidenced the terms of the option. Whether right or wrong, our holding as to that is the law in the case and was binding on a retrial on the same evidence. The evidence as to the bank's authority to give the writing, or as to the defendant's ratification thereof, is the same on this as on the other trial. And so was it regarded by the trial court, and for that reason were all questions as to such authority and ratification withheld from the jury. The writing which the bank gave can therefore not be looked to for the terms of the option. For that we must look elsewhere, primarily to the telegrams. In them we have the offer, acceptance, and terms of the option. Everything therein expressed is sufficiently definite and certain, except the description of the property. The description stated in the telegrams is, 'property west side State street.' That, of course, is ambiguous. It was competent to aid the ambiguity by extrinsic evidence, which the parties were permitted to do. The further question is: Was the ambiguity sufficiently aided to ascertain the intention of the parties as expressed by them in the contract? It is clearly enough shown just where the lot is, and that the defendant owned but one lot on the west side of State street. By extrinsic evidence it also is made to appear that the plat in the recorder's office showed the lot to be 55x165 feet. It, however, is just as clearly made to appear by the abstract books and records of deeds that the title which the defendant had by warranty deed was only to 53½ feet and 1½ feet by quitclaim. It also is made to appear that on the 1½ feet stood a wall of an old two-story house adversely possessed and held by another. To aid the ambiguity 'property west side State street,' we do not think the plat in the recorder's office was alone conclusive as to what was intended by the parties. That, of course, was some evidence of their intention, and some evidence as to what they meant by the language 'property west side State street.' But the abstract book and the records of deeds also were evidence for the same purpose. It is not shown that the plaintiff, before he paid the $1,000, saw the plat in the recorder's office, or the abstract books or records of deeds, or even examined the property to ascertain its frontage, or that he saw Kelsey and Gillespie for information, as was stated in one of the telegrams he could do for 'exact information.' He did see a 'regular real estate man's plat' which showed the property to be 55x165 feet, just as indicated by the plat in the recorder's office. But it is not made to appear that he even saw that before he paid the $1,000. So far as disclosed by the record, it is not made to appear just what information as to the exact number of feet in the lot the plaintiff had prior to, or at the time of, the payment of the $1,000, except as recited in the writing given by the bank that the lot was 55x165 feet, and that a warranty deed was to be given for that much ground. Nor is it made to appear from what source the bank got information as to the number of feet of ground to be conveyed or what induced it to give a receipt calling for 55 feet. Certain it is the telegram pointed to by it in its receipt, as authority to accept the money, gave it no such authority, and, indeed, gave it no authority, to make or specify any of the terms of the option to purchase. And we think the bank by the recital of the telegram in hæc verba, disclosed just what authority it had, that of a mere depository. After the payment of the $1,000, and when the abstract of title was examined by plaintiff's counsel, it was discovered that the defendant had title by warranty to only 53½ feet and a quitclaim to 1½ feet. Then it was that he and his counsel visited the premises and found the wall of the house on the 1½ feet. There, however, is evidence to justify a finding that the plaintiff believed and understood that the defendant was to convey 55 feet by warranty deed. That is supported by the bank's receipt, which, while not competent, because unauthorized, to show the terms of the option, nevertheless, as it was seen and relied on by the plaintiff when the $1,000 was paid, was competent, with other matters, to show how he regarded the ambiguity and understood the contract as to the number of feet which, by its terms, was to be conveyed by warranty. But, since it is not made to appear that the defendant or Rowan, its president, had, prior to plaintiff's refusal of the defendant's tender, knowledge of the terms of the bank's receipt calling for a conveyance of 55 feet by warranty, the receipt was not evidence to show either the terms of the contract or in what sense the defendant understood them with respect to the ambiguity. We also think there is other evidence to justify a finding that the plaintiff, by the ambiguity, believed and understood that 55 feet of ground was to be conveyed by warranty. On the other hand, there is evidence to show that, had he, before he paid the $1,000, inspected the records to ascertain what 'property west side State street' the defendant had, the exact number of feet which it owned and was capable of conveying by warranty could have been ascertained, and thus he could have known just what the defendant meant by the phrase 'property west side State street.' Thus, when the extrinsic evidence is looked to, the meaning of the ambiguity 'property west side State street' is about as doubtful as it was before.

"Upon the record we deduce these propositions: Since the writing given by the bank was neither authorized nor ratified, there is no sufficient evidence to justify a finding that the defendant had agreed to convey 55 feet by warranty, or that it, by the ambiguous phrase, meant, or intended, to convey any other or different property than was owned and tendered by it. Hence the court erred in submitting the case to the jury on the theory that the defendant had agreed to convey 55 feet by warranty and in binding the jury as was done, that to render a verdict for the plaintiff the jury was required to find that the defendant had agreed to convey 55 feet by warranty. As to the plaintiff's understanding of the ambiguity, and in what sense he regarded the contract, there are two views. One is that he understood and regarded it in the sense that the defendant understood it and as tendering by its conveyance whatever property was owned by it on the west side of State street. If so, then the minds of the parties met; then did the defendant tender a deed in accordance with the agreement; and then was there no breach and no obligation to return the $1,000. The other view is that the plaintiff understood the ambiguity to mean a conveyance by warranty of 55 feet. If so, then the minds of the parties did not meet; then was there no contract; and then was the plaintiff entitled to a return of the $1,000 paid by him, not on the theory of any breach of contract, but of money had and received. And for that reason was the defendant not entitled to a direction of a verdict. On such view—the view that the minds of the parties had not met as to what was agreed to be sold and conveyed, and therefore, if the jury so found the facts, the plaintiff was entitled to a return of the $1,000—the plaintiff asked to go to the jury; and, as appears by his requests, that was the only view on which he asked a submission of the case. The court refused the requests or to submit the case on such theory, but, as has been seen, submitted it on the theory alone of whether the parties, independently of the recitals in the bank's receipt, and especially as evidenced by the telegrams, had entered into an agreement to convey 55 feet by warranty, or only 53½ feet by warranty and 1½ feet by quitclaim. Notwithstanding there are no cross-assignments, and no request or motion in the court below on behalf of the plaintiff to direct a verdict in his favor, he nevertheless, in defense of the verdict and judgment, urges an affirmance, on the theory embodied in his refused requests. Since this is a law case in which our power to review, except jurisdictional matters, is restricted to assignments of error, and where we may not, as in equity, look into the evidence to determine the correctness of the judgment, and as there was no motion nor request to direct a verdict in plaintiff's favor, nor even any assignment presenting the rulings refusing his request, our power to affirm the judgment on the theory of money had and received is doubtful, even though on a review of the evidence it should appear that such a direction, had it been asked, would have been justified. But looking into the record as we have, we, as already indicated, are of the opinion that the evidence is not so conclusive as to have entitled the plaintiff to such a direction had such a request been asked or motion made. So too, apparently, was the case regarded by the plaintiff himself, and hence asked for no such direction as matter of law, but for a submission as matter of fact. Thus is it apparent that to now affirm the judgment on the theory urged would be to infringe upon the right to trial by jury and to uphold the judgment upon a wholly different theory from that on which the case was submitted. The judgment therefore must be reversed, and the case again remanded for a new trial."

[1] Upon the last trial the district court submitted the issue to the jury as suggested in the foregoing opinion, and the jury found that issue in favor of the plaintiff. The jury having found that the minds of the parties did not meet upon the question of the number of feet that were included in the telegrams referred to, the defendant company, as suggested in the opinion on the second appeal, had no right to retain plaintiff's $1,000. Notwithstanding that issue has finally been settled by the jury in plaintiff's favor, the defendant, on its present appeal, nevertheless, again presents all the questions argued on the former appeals, with others added. Barring the assignments relating to the admission and exclusion of evidence, and a few other unimportant ones, all the questions now argued have been disposed of on the two former appeals, and no good purpose could be subserved in rearguing those questions here. If, as the jury found, the minds of the parties did not meet upon some essential elements, then it must follow that no contract was entered into by the parties, and hence the defendant retains the $1,000 of plaintiff's money without right or authority of law. That is practically all that is left of this case.

[2] The court fully and fairly submitted all questions of fact to the jury, and, in view that four juries (the first verdict was set aside by the trial court) have now passed on the facts, and all have found in favor of the plaintiff, the litigation should not be prolonged unless the defendant has been prejudiced in some substantial right during the progress of the trial or in the submission of the case to the jury. It is, however, due to defendant's counsel to say that many of their assignments, and a large part of their argument, are based upon the theory that there was an enforceable contract or agreement entered into between the parties. In view that such theory is not the correct one, the exceptions to the instructions and the assignments relating to the refusal of the court to charge as requested are without merit.

Nor are the assignments relating to the admission and exclusion of evidence meritorious. Without going into further detail, it must suffice to say that a careful examinaof the record discloses nothing which would authorize us to interfere with the judgment in favor of the plaintiff a third time.

The judgment is therefore affirmed, with costs to the plaintiff.

WHEELWRIGHT v. ROMAN. (No. 2906.)

1. Trusts 🔑81(2)—Resulting Trusts—Payment of Consideration for Conveyance to Another.

Where a wife held title to property real and personal of which her husband was the sole owner, part of which had been inherited by the husband and conveyed to the wife, and part of which had been purchased with his money and title taken in her name, for business convenience and for lawful purposes, and the wife by unequivocal acts and conduct clearly indicated that she always recognized the rights of her husband and that the equitable title to the property was in him and made deeds to him of such property, the property was held by her in trust for the husband.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 116.]

2. Trusts 🔑70—Resulting Trusts—Husband's Property Held by Wife.

Where a wife held title to the sole property real and personal of her husband in trust for his benefit and made deeds and assignments of mortgages to the husband which were not registered and of which she retained possession, and all members of the family including a daughter, who delivered such deeds and assignments to the husband after the death of the wife, understood that the property was held for the sole benefit of the husband, whether or not the deeds were sufficiently delivered at time of execution, the property after her death belonged to the husband.

3. Appeal and Error 🔑80(4)—Judgments Appealable.

A decree ordering a defendant to deliver to administratrix property real and personal conveyed to him by the intestate and account to her for the interest he may have collected on the notes, mortgages, etc., was a final and appealable judgment, since the provision for an accounting did not affect the finality of the judgment.

4. Judgment 🔑252(5)—Prayer for General Relief—Relief Awarded.

Where a husband was sued by the administratrix of his wife for property conveyed to him by instruments executed by intestate of which he received possession after her death, although the answer contained a prayer for general relief only, defendant was entitled to such specific relief as the pleadings and the evidence authorized.

5. Appeal and Error 🔑1176(1)—Review—Disposition of Cause.

Where it was more convenient to make and enter conclusions of law and judgment in the district court, the Supreme Court will do no more than indicate and direct what the findings, conclusions of law, and judgments shall be, and remand.

Appeal from District Court, Weber County; N. J. Harris, Judge.

Action by Mary M. Wheelwright, as administratrix of the estate of Gertrude Roman, deceased, against Daniel B. Roman. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Joseph Chez and David L. Stine, both of Ogden, for appellant. Halverson & Pratt, of Ogden, for respondent.

FRICK, C. J. The plaintiff, as the administratrix of the estate of Gertrude Roman, deceased, brought this action in equity against the defendant. The purpose of the action was to require the defendant to assign to the plaintiff, as administratrix of said estate, certain notes and mortgages which she alleged were the property of the deceased at the time of her death; to require him to account for the interest he collected on said notes and mortgages; to cancel the deeds to certain real estate, which were made by the deceased in her lifetime, in which the latter conveyed to the defendant the real estate therein described, and which plaintiff alleged, in her complaint, were not delivered to, but were wrongfully obtained by, the defendant; and that such real estate be declared the property of said estate. Plaintiff also prayed for general relief.

The defendant, in his answer to the complaint, set forth the facts concerning the ownership of said real estate and said notes and mortgages in detail. He, among other things, in substance alleged that the title to the real estate described in said deeds was placed in the name of the deceased for a special purpose, and that she held the same in trust for his use and benefit; that the notes and mortgages mentioned in the complaint were made in the name of the deceased for convenience merely, and all of said notes, and mortgages were duly assigned to the defendant by said deceased during her lifetime; that the deceased in her lifetime also made the deeds to the real estate referred to in the complaint and delivered the same to the defendant. He also specially alleged that he furnished the whole consideration or purchase price for the real estate described in said deeds and for the notes and mortgages described in the complaint, and that the deceased held all of said notes and mortgages, together with said real estate, in trust for the defendant and for his use and benefit. The defendant prayed judgment that the plaintiff take nothing by her complaint, and for general relief.

The pleadings are very long and go into great detail with respect to the transactions involved, but we think the foregoing, when supplemented by the statement of facts which follows, will sufficiently indicate the nature and purpose of the action and the defenses set up by the defendant, and also sufficiently indicate the issues involved.

There is little, if any, conflict in the evidence, and the questions to be determined are largely questions of law rather than fact.

The substance of the evidence is to the effect that Gertrude Roman, the deceased, was the wife of the defendant; that she died intestate in Weber county, Utah, on May 1, 1910; that the plaintiff was appointed administratrix of the decedent's estate on December 8, 1913; that this action was commenced September 1, 1914; that the deceased and the defendant lived together as husband and wife for many years and had reared a family of six children, five of whom were living at the time of trial in Ogden City, Utah; that in June, 1888, the father of the defendant before the former's death conveyed to the latter by warranty deed a portion of the real estate described in the complaint; that the defendant, thereafter, in 1889, sold a part of said real estate, and thereafter, with the proceeds thereof, purchased other parcels of the real estate described in the complaint; that in October, 1896, the defendant, without consideration, conveyed a part of the property which was conveyed to him by his father to the deceased; that in August, 1894, the defendant purchased, with his own money, other parcels of the real estate described in the complaint, all of which were also conveyed to the deceased without consideration as aforesaid; that thereafter, on the 13th day of May, 1899, the deceased made certain deeds in which she conveyed all of the foregoing real estate to the defendant, and said deeds were made to avoid the expenses of administration; that no manual delivery of said deeds was ever made to him, but the deceased continued in possession thereof during all of the time from May, 1899, to the time of her death in 1910; that after her death one of the daughters of the deceased and the defendant delivered said deeds to the defendant, and he then had them recorded in the records of Weber county; that during the period from about 1893 or 1894, up to the time of the death of the decedent, the defendant had loaned considerable money to citizens of Ogden; that he could not read or write, except to write his own name; that the deceased, upon the other hand, could read and write readily, and all of the notes and mortgages, amounting to $9,500, were taken in her name because she was more capable of transacting the business than was the defendant; that all of the notes and mortgages described in the complaint were made as aforesaid, and the deceased during her lifetime made assignments of all of them, but said notes and mortgages, together with the assignments thereof, were all in her possession at the time of her death; that the whole of the money represented by the notes and mortgages in question, as well as the consideration for all of the real estate described in the complaint, was the money of the defendant, and the deceased did not contribute anything except her services as aforesaid; that the deceased, on numerous occasions, and to divers persons, declared that the real estate and the notes and mortgages in question belonged to her husband, the defendant, and that she held the title thereof for business reasons, or for convenience merely.

The foregoing is a mere outline of the principal facts, and, to avoid repetition, we shall, in the course of the opinion, refer to some other matters more in detail.

A trial to the court resulted in findings of fact and conclusions of law in favor of the plaintiff. The court entered judgment declaring that the deceased was the owner of all of said real estate at the time of her death, that at said time she also was the owner of all of the notes and mortgages, and that the defendant surrender all of said notes and mortgages to the plaintiff, as the administratrix of said estate, and to account to her for any interest he had theretofore collected and for the rents and profits derived by him from said real estate since the death of the decedent. The defendant appeals from the judgment. In his assignments he assails the findings of fact as being contrary to the undisputed evidence and insists that the conclusions of law and judgment are contrary to law.

[1] Counsel for the defendant, in their brief, with much vigor, contend that, notwithstanding the fact that the deeds to the real estate in question and the assignments of the mortgages described in the complaint were in the possession of the deceased at the time of her death, yet they all were intended to be, and were as a matter of law, delivered to the defendant, and that he was lawfully possessed thereof, and that the equitable, as well as the legal, title to all of said real estate, as well as the said notes and mortgages, was in the defendant at the time of his wife's death, and the same always was, and now is, his property. Counsel cite many cases in which they contend it is held that, under facts substantially like those in this case, the delivery of the instruments there in question was sufficient in law. Among other cases that they cite and rely on are the following: Walker v. Green, 23 Colo. App. 154, 128 Pac. 855; Matson v. Johnson, 48 Wash. 256, 93 Pac. 324, 125 Am. St. Rep. 924; Gage v. Gage, 36 Mich. 229; Newton v. Bealer, 41 Iowa, 334; Somers v. Pumphrey, 24 Ind. 239-240; Dukes v. Spangler, 35 Ohio St. 119; Stone v. Duvall, 77 Ill. 475; Tabor v. Tabor, 136 Mich. 255, 99 N. W. 4; Dyer v. Skadan, 128 Mich. 348, 87 N. W. 277, 92 Am. St. Rep. 461. While in at least some of the foregoing cases, under facts and circumstances in many respects similar or analogous to those in the case at bar, the appellate courts sustained the findings of the trial courts that the instruments there in question were intended to be and were delivered, yet it must be conceded that, while the facts and circumstances in the case at bar indicate a clear intention on the part of the deceased to vest the title and ownership of all the property in question in the defendant, the evidence is also clear that, so far as the deeds to the real estate are concerned, there never was an actual or manual delivery of them to the defendant until after the death of the deceased. In view that the undisputed facts and circumstances make the case at bar a border-line case upon the question of delivery, and for the reason, as will hereinafter appear, that those same facts and circumstances leave practically no room for doubt that the deceased held the title to all of the real estate as well as to all of the notes and mortgages in question in trust for the defendant, it becomes unnecessary for us to express, and hence we do not express, an opinion upon the question of whether the acts and conduct of the deceased constituted a delivery of the deeds and notes and the assignments thereof to the defendant.

We therefore proceed to a consideration of whether the deceased held the property in question in this case in trust for the use and benefit of her husband, the defendant. Upon that question, the evidence, as before stated, is practically undisputed that the defendant was the sole owner of all of the property in question, and that the title to the real estate was placed in the name of the deceased for convenience and for lawful purposes. What is true with respect to the real estate is likewise true with respect to the notes and mortgages. Again, the unequivocal acts and conduct of the deceased clearly indicate that she always recognized the rights of the defendant, and that the title to the property, that is, the beneficial or equitable title, was in him. The mere fact that she made the deeds by which she conveyed the real estate to her husband, and that she made all of the assignments of the notes and mortgages, although not delivered, nevertheless constitutes strong evidence that she constantly recognized the fact that the property was not her own. Plaintiff's counsel, however, point to the fact that there is ample evidence to show that the deeds and assignments were made for the purpose of avoiding the trouble and expense of administering upon the decedent's estate. A sufficient answer to that contention, however, is that, if that had been the purpose of the deceased, why was the whole of the real estate conveyed and all of the notes and mortgages assigned to the husband of the deceased, the defendant? Administration of the estate could just as well have been avoided by conveying the real estate and by assigning the notes and mortgages to her husband and their children in the proportions she desired to have them divided among them, as to convey all of the real estate and all of the notes and mortgages to her husband, the defendant. The fact, if it be a fact, however, that the deeds were made for the purpose of avoiding the expense incident to administering the estate, in no way either affects or weakens the controlling fact that the deceased held the title to all of the property in question in trust for the defendant.

[2] When the foregoing circumstances are considered in the light of the numerous declarations of the deceased during her lifetime, and up to within a short time of her death, then, as we before stated, there is little, if any, room to doubt that she held all of the property in question in trust for her husband. One witness, in referring to the declarations of the deceased concerning the real estate in question (quoting from the bill of exceptions), in part testified:

> "She [the deceased] said the property was all Mr. Roman's, he inherited it from his father, and she didn't have anything to say without Mr. Roman's consent, she was merely a business man, that is, understood the business better than he did, and consequently she attended to the business, and she had some of her property in her name on that account, because she was attending to his business and he didn't read or write very good, and she understood it, and it was much better in her name than it would be in his, that is, to transact business, but that was his property, because he wouldn't sell it, he said he was going to keep it for his sons."

In referring to the other parcel of real estate included in the deeds referred to in the complaint, the witness testified:

> "The property here in town, she [the deceased] told me it belonged to Mr. David Roman, that is, Mr. Roman's father, and just prior to his death he deeded it to him the [defendant]."

The witness further said:

> "She told me that the place in town belonged to her husband, that they would come and live in town if they would sell the farm—they called that their home, and they would sell the farm and live in town, but Mr. Roman objected on account of having three or four boys. He wanted to save it for the boys."

Another witness, who transacted business for the deceased, testified that, in referring to the money that was being loaned, and which is represented by the notes and mortgages in question, the deceased said:

> "The money we are placing out is my husband's money—my husband's money which I am placing out in my name."

The witness testified "that was the sum and substance of the conversation" he had with the deceased. The same witness testified that the assignments of the note and mortgages were all made in accordance with "her instructions."

Another witness testified that the deceased, in referring to the making of the loans, said: "She done the business; she said she done the business for Roman," the defendant.

Some time before her death, the deceased exhibited all of the notes and mortgages, together with the assignments thereof, and the deeds to the real estate in question, to one of her daughters, and the daughter testified that her mother then said:

> "Come here. I want to show you these papers. I want you to know how I fix these, and I am going to have all of them fixed. In case anything happens to me, you can always carry on the business with papa."

The same witness and one or two others also testified that the deceased told them that she wanted the daughter to transact the business for her father the same as the deceased had been transacting it in the past.

There were other witnesses who testified to other declarations of the deceased by which she clearly and unequivocally indicated that she at no time claimed ownership of the property in question, or any part of it, and that she always regarded it as her husband's property, and that all of it was placed in her name for convenience and for legitimate and lawful purposes, and that she held the title thereof for his use and benefit. Indeed, the whole trend of the evidence, that is, the great weight and effect thereof, is as above indicated. It should also be remembered that the deceased was suddenly stricken with paralysis, and, while she lingered for some days, yet she never regained consciousness after she was stricken, and died in an unconscious condition. She was thus prevented from giving any directions or making any disposition of the property in question other than she had made.

The testimony of the several witnesses respecting the declarations and statements made by the deceased is not disputed. Counsel for defendant insist that, under the undisputed facts and circumstances, it was the duty of the trial court to declare, as a matter of law, that the deceased held all of the property in question in trust for the defendant. Counsel cite and rely upon the following, among other, cases in support of their contention: Taylor v. Morris, 163 Cal. 717, 127 Pac. 66; Fanning v. Green, 156 Cal. 279, 104 Pac. 308; Cooney v. Glynn, 157 Cal. 587, 108 Pac. 506; Silvey v. Hodgdon, 52 Cal. 363; Dorman v. Dorman, 187 Ill. 154, 58 N. E. 235, 79 Am. St. Rep. 210; Culp v. Price, 107 Iowa, 133, 77 N. W. 848; Faylor v. Faylor, 136 Cal. 92, 68 Pac. 482; Bailey v. Dobbins, 67 Neb. 548, 93 N. W. 687; Akin v. Akin, 268 Ill. 324, 109 N. E. 268; Endsley v. Taylor, 143 Ga. 607, 85 S. E. 852; Leroy v. Norton, 49 Colo. 490, 113 Pac. 529; Dieckman v. Merkh, 20 Cal. App. 605, 130 Pac. 27; Odell v. Moss, 137 Cal. 542, 70 Pac. 547. In some of the foregoing cases the question arose as between husband and wife; in others, between father and child; and, in others still, between brother and sister. The evidence respecting the trust in each one of the foregoing cases was much less convincing than is the evidence upon that question in the case at bar. In view of the importance of the question involved, we shall take the liberty of quoting from a few of the foregoing cases.

In Cooney v. Glynn, supra, in the course of the opinion the law is stated thus:

> "It has been established by a number of decisions in this state that where confidential relations exist between two parties, and one of them executes a conveyance of real estate to the other, upon a parol promise by the other that he will hold it for the benefit of the grantor, or for the benefit of some third person in whom the grantor is interested, there being no other consideration for the conveyance, a trust arises by operation of law in favor of the grantor, or in favor of the third person, for whom the property is to be held. It is the violation of the parol promise which constitutes the fraud upon which the trust arises. If made in good faith, and if it is of a continuing nature, the performance of it for a time does not prevent a trust from arising when it is broken and repudiated."

In Bailey v. Dobbins, supra, the Supreme Court of Nebraska states the rule in the following words:

> "Generally speaking, where the purchase money of land is paid by one person, and the title is taken in the name of another, the party taking the title is presumed to hold it in trust for him who pays the purchase price. The reason given for this rule is that the party who pays the money is presumed to intend to become the owner of the property, and the beneficial title follows such intention. This presumption, however, does not arise where the legal title is taken in the name of some person for whom the purchaser is under a legal or moral obligation to provide. In such case, the presumption arises that the conveyance was intended as an advancement to the nominal purchaser. The foregoing will be recognized as elementary. Whether the conveyance be to a stranger, or to one for whom the purchaser is bound to provide, the presumption arising therefrom is not of law, but of fact, which may be rebutted by evidence tending to show that the intention of the purchaser was different from that to be inferred from the bare fact of such conveyance. This, also, is elementary. Hence, in either case, when it appears that the purchase money has been paid by one person, and the title taken in the name of another, the question is whether it was intended that the one to whom the conveyance was made should take the entire estate, or that the one paying the purchase price should hold the equitable title to the property. When the intention in that behalf is ascertained, the courts will give it effect, if possible."

In Dorman v. Dorman, supra, the law is stated in the headnotes in 58 N. E. 235, thus:

> "Where a husband purchases land, and takes the deed therefor in the name of his wife, the burden of proof to establish a resulting trust in his favor as against her heirs, and to rebut the presumption that such conveyance was intended as an advancement to the wife, is on the husband.
> "A husband purchased land, and paid the consideration therefor, but took the deed in the name of his wife. He made permanent improvements on the land, paid the taxes, and exercised complete control over it, and he and the wife occupied the premises for a time. The land constituted the principal part of his estate, and he had a family of small children. The wife had said that the land was deeded to her in trust for the husband. Held sufficient to show a resulting trust therein in favor of the husband."

It is also made clear in the foregoing cases that there is little, if any, room for the presumption insisted on by plaintiff's counsel that the property in question was transferred to the deceased as an advancement. Indeed, all the facts and circumstances in the case at bar rebut such a presumption.

We thus have a case where all the property in question was clearly shown to have been the sole property of the defendant; where the reason why it was held in the name of the deceased is clear and reasonable; where the deceased, during her lifetime and during a long period of years, many times declared the true origin of her title, and that the property was not hers, and that she held the title thereto merely as a matter of convenience for the use and benefit of the defendant, her husband; where the acts and conduct of the deceased in making the deeds to the real estate and the assignments of the notes and mortgages, when viewed in the light of her declarations, clearly indicate that she never did claim, or intended to claim, the property, or any of it, as her own, but always regarded it as the property of her husband, the defendant. The daughter who delivered the deeds and the assignments of the mortgages to her father after the mother's death also clearly understood that she was merely effectuating the well-grounded and long-continued purposes of her mother, the deceased. It would seem that all of the other members of the family must have joined in the conclusions of the daughter just referred to, in view that no application for administration was made until more than 3½ years after the mother's death and that this action was not commenced for nearly a year after plaintiff was appointed administratrix of the mother's estate. Nor, in view that the true condition of things was known by all concerned, was there any reason for the delay aforesaid. The defendant has now reached the age of upwards of 70 years. So far as the record discloses, he has no other property than the property in question. The evidence also shows that, although the defendant had no education, yet he is possessed of a natural instinct and ability to make money, and that it was largely, if not entirely, due to his efforts that the property in question was accumulated. Under the undisputed facts and circumstances, therefore, it would be a reproach both to the courts and to the law if, in his old age, he could be deprived of the use of his own property, and would be required to stand by and see his estate administered during his lifetime by another. Of what use are constitutional guaranties respecting the rights of property, if they may be disregarded by the courts?

In our opinion, the district court committed manifest error in holding that the property in question was the property of the deceased at any time, and especially at the time of her death, and in refusing to enforce the trust.

[3] Plaintiff's counsel further contend that, in view that the judgment requires an accounting to be made by the defendant, for that reason the judgment is not final, and hence not appealable. The contention is not tenable. What is required from the defendant is a part of the final judgment. The defendant appeals from that part, as well as from all other parts. The judgment is not interlocutory, but is final and conclusive respecting all matters covered thereby. The mere fact that the defendant is ordered to deliver the property to the plaintiff and to account to her for the interest that he may have collected on the notes and mortgages, etc., does not affect the finality of the judgment. If authority be required upon a proposition as elementary as the one now under consideration, the following cases will be found directly in point: Johnson v. Northern Trust Co., 184 Ill. App. 549; Allison v. Drake, 145 Ill. 500, 32 N. E. 537; McMurray v. Day, 70 Iowa, 671, 28 N. W. 476; Adams v. Sayre, 76 Ala. 509.

[4] Finally, the question arises whether the defendant can be given proper relief, in view that general relief is prayed for in the answer without praying for the specific relief, to which, in view of the foregoing opinion, he is entitled. That, in case general relief only is asked, any relief that is supported by the pleadings and the evidence may be granted, is well settled. In Rollins v. Forbes, 10 Cal. 299, the rule is stated thus:

> "If the specific relief asked cannot be granted, such relief as the case stated in the bill authorizes may be had under the clause in the prayer for general relief."

To the same effect are Ross v. Purse, 17 Colo. 24, 28 Pac. 473; Davis v. Davis, 9 Mont. 267, 23 Pac. 715; Kleinschmidt v. Steele, 15 Mont. 181, 38 Pac. 827; 1 Suth. Code Pl. & Pr. 111.

[5] In view that it is more convenient to make and enter conclusions of law and judgment in the district court, we shall do no more than indicate and direct what the findings, conclusions of law, and judgment shall be.

The findings of fact and conclusions of law, so far as inconsistent with this opinion, are set aside, and the judgment reversed. The cause is remanded to the district court, with directions to make findings of fact and conclusions of law in conformity with the views expressed in this opinion, and to enter judgment requiring the plaintiff, as administratrix of the estate of Gertrude Roman, deceased, to execute and deliver to the defendant a proper deed of conveyance to all of the real estate described in the complaint that is in controversy in this action, and, in case said administratrix refuses to make such a conveyance, to direct that the judgment or decree entered shall constitute such conveyance; that the court adjudicate and declare the title to said real estate to be in the defendant and that he is the owner thereof, and that the title thereto be quieted in him; that the defendant be declared to be the sole owner of all the notes and mortgages in controversy; and that the administratrix also be required to execute and to deliver to the defendant proper and sufficient assignments to all of the notes and mortgages aforesaid.

It is further ordered that, in case there are sufficient assets in said estate, the costs and expenses of this appeal be by the district court ordered to be paid out of said estate, and, if there are no assets in said estate, then it is ordered that neither party to this appeal recover costs.

(No. 884.)

1. DEDICATION 🔑37 — HIGHWAYS—ACCEPTANCE—GRANT.

Under Rev. St. U. S. § 2477 (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 4919), providing that the right of way for the construction of highways over public lands not reserved for public use is hereby granted, the grant may be accepted by the public without action by the public authorities, and continued use of the road by the public for such a time and under such circumstances as to clearly indicate an intention to accept the grant is sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dedication, Cent. Dig. §§ 73, 74.]

Comp. Laws 1876, c. 102, § 1, as amended by Laws 1877, p. 135, was repealed by Laws 1886, c. 99; and Laws 1895, c. 69, § 1, stating the requisites of acquisition of public highways, recognize the right of the public without action of the authorities to accept a grant of a highway over public lands.

3. HIGHWAYS 🔑6(1)—DEDICATION—ACCEPTANCE—GRANT.

Where public highway is granted it is not essential to establish the acceptance thereof that the public use it for the ordinary prescriptive period, and time is material only as an element to be considered with the character of the use and the convenience of the public.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Cent. Dig. § 8.]

4. DEDICATION 🔑45—HIGHWAYS — ACCEPTANCE—GRANT—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Evidence held to make a question for the jury whether a highway across public lands granted by Rev. St. U. S. § 2477 (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 4919), was accepted by the public.

5. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT 🔑22(1)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

The declarations of the agent are inadmissible alone to show the agency.

6. DAMAGES 🔑112—MEASURE OF DAMAGES—INJURY TO CROPS.

The measure of damages for injury to or destruction of crops is the value of the crops in the condition they were in at the time and place of the injury or destruction.

7. DAMAGES 🔑188(1) — EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held insufficient on which to base a determination of the damages suffered by crops by driving sheep across them.

8. DAMAGES 🔑217—MEASURE OF DAMAGES—NECESSITY OF INSTRUCTION.

An instruction as to the measure of damages in an action for damages for trespass is necessary to the correct assessment of damages.

Error to District Court, Uinta County; John R. Arnold, Judge.

Action by the Hatch Bros. Company against Joseph Black and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed and remanded.

Payson W. Spaulding, of Evanston, and Bagley & Ashton, of Salt Lake City, Utah, for plaintiff in error. B. M. Ausherman, of Evanston, for defendants in error.

BEARD, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff in error against the defendants in error to restrain defendants from obstructing an alleged highway, and for damages for preventing plaintiff from passing over said road with its sheep. Defendant denied that the road was a public highway, and filed a cross-petition claiming damages for trespass on their lands by plaintiff. The case was tried to a jury, resulting in a verdict and judgment in favor of defendants and against plaintiff for $916.04 and costs, from which judgment plaintiff brings error.

It appears that on April 27, 1912, defendant Joseph A. Black made a homestead entry on certain lands in section 24, township 13 north, range 121 west, in Uinta county, and that on July 30, 1912, defendant Joseph Black made a homestead entry on certain other lands in said section; that the road in question extended across a part of the said homestead entries of defendants, and extended a number of miles on either side of said lands; that in 1912 or 1913 defendants fenced their lands, and during the years 1912, 1913, 1914, and 1915, cultivated a part of said lands jointly and were equally interested in the crops raised thereon. They alleged in their cross-petition that during said years plaintiff had maliciously and repeatedly driven its sheep upon and across said land, injuring and destroying the crops of grain growing thereon to their damage in the sum of $2,000, and claiming exemplary damages in the sum of $20,000. Plaintiff replied, joining issue on the matters pleaded in the cross-petition. The plaintiff appears to have abandoned its claim for damages, and on the trial sought only to have defendants enjoined from obstructing the road and from preventing plaintiff free passage thereon across defendants' lands. The court denied an injunction, and gave judgment as above stated.

Many rulings of the district court are assigned as error, but they may be grouped and considered under a few heads:

1. Over the objection of plaintiff the court instructed the jury:

> "That under the laws of the state of Wyoming, the only publicly traveled roads in Wyoming, not officially established, declared to be public highways, are those designated as highways on government maps or plats in the record of a land office of the United States in said state of Wyoming."

And in the next paragraph of the instructions the jury was told that:

> "There being no evidence to the effect that said road was established in some manner recognized by the laws of the state, the alleged trail or highway over and upon the homesteads of the defendants is not a regularly constituted public road or public highway, and cannot by you be so considered."

The plaintiff in a number of instructions, couched in different language, requested the court to instruct the jury to the effect that by the act of Congress of July 26, 1866 (14 Stat. 253, c. 262 [U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 4919]), the right of way for the construction of highways over public lands, not reserved for public use, was granted, and that such grant might be accepted by the public without action by the county authorities, by the public generally traveling the same as a public road, intending thereby to appropriate and use the same as a public highway; and if the jury found from the evidence that the road in question had been so used by the public for a great number of years prior to defendants' homestead entries, and while the same was public lands of the United States, not reserved for public use, such use by the public would constitute it a public highway, and the public would have the right to travel the same without interruption or molestation on the part of defendants. The court refused to so instruct, to which refusal plaintiff excepted.

[1] The statute relied upon by plaintiff is section 2477, U. S. Statutes, 6 Fed. St. Annotated, p. 498 (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 4919):

> "The right of way for the construction of highways over public lands, not reserved for public uses, is hereby granted." Act July 26, 1866.

The grant is unconditional and contains no provision as to the manner of its acceptance. We think it is quite well settled that when land is granted for a right of way for a public highway, the grant may be accepted by the public without action by the public authorities. The continued use of the road by the public for such a length of time and under such circumstances as to clearly indicate an intention on the part of the public to accept the grant has generally been held sufficient. More especially so if it is made to appear that to interrupt the use would inconvenience the public. It must be borne in mind that it is not a question of the establishment of a highway by prescription which is here in question, but the acceptance of a grant; and therefore it does not depend so much on a definite length of time of use as upon the character of the use, taking into account the needs and convenience of the public, as manifesting an intention on its part to accept the grant. The Supreme Court of Colorado in Sprague v. Stead, 56 Colo. 538, 139 Pac. 544, after quoting the United States statute, said:

> "This was an express dedication for a right of way for a road over the land belonging to the government not reserved for public use. The acceptance of such grant while the land was a part of the public domain may be effected by public use. An appropriation in this manner is made with the consent of the owner previously given, and when confined to a reasonably certain and definite line creates an easement for the purposes of a highway, and subsequent entrymen and claimants take such land subject to that easement"—citing Montgomery v. Somers, 50 Or. 259, 90 Pac. 674; Murray v. City of Butte, 7 Mont. 61, 14 Pac. 656; McRose v. Bottyer, 81 Cal. 122, 22 Pac. 393; Bequette v. Patterson, 104 Cal. 282, 37 Pac. 917; Wallowa County v. [2] By an act of the territorial Legislature approved December 9, 1869 (Comp. Laws 1876, c. 102, § 1), it was enacted that:

> "All roads within this territory shall be considered public highways, * * * which have been, or shall hereafter be, used and traveled by the public, so that the same would, according to the course of the common law, be deemed public highways."

Said chapter 102 was amended in 1877 (S. L. 1877, p. 135), giving the board of county commissioners power to adopt and appropriate to county and public use any road or route publicly traveled, and when so adopted and appropriated was declared to be a public or county road to all intents and purposes. By chapter 99, S. L. 1886, said chapter 102 as amended was repealed, and it enacted that:

> "No county road shall be hereafter established, * * * except by authority of the county commissioners of the proper county: Provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect the validity of any act done or right accrued under and by virtue of the law hereby repealed."

By section 1, chapter 69, S. L. 1895, all roads that were designated or marked as highways on government maps or plats in any land office of the United States, and which have been publicly used as traveled highways, and which have not been closed or vacated by order of the county commissioners, were declared to be public highways, thus recognizing as public highways roads which the government surveyors found to be traveled and used as such at the time of the survey, and without action by the county commissioners. The government survey of this land was shown to have been made prior to January 6, 1876. We discover nothing in these several statutes, as we understand them, prohibiting the public from accepting the grant of the right of way; but on the contrary, they appear to recognize that right.

[3] The decisions are not harmonious as to the time the public use must continue to constitute an acceptance of the grant by the public; some courts holding that it must be for the same length of time as would be necessary to acquire a right of way by prescription over privately owned lands, while others hold that the length of time of the user is not controlling and may be for a shorter period. The latter holding, we think, is supported by the better reasoning. Title or right by prescription implies adverse user, while we are here considering a case where the use is not adverse, but the appropriation and use of the land is with the consent and by an express grant of the owner. Time, therefore, becomes material only as an element to be taken into consideration together with the character of the use and the necessities or convenience of the public in determining the question of the acceptance of the grant. Counsel for defendants cites and places much reliance upon the case of Commissioners v. Patrick, 18 Wyo. 130, 104 Pac. 531, 107 Pac. 748. But the court was there considering the question of the establishment of a highway over private lands by prescription, and the question of the federal grant was not involved in the case. In this case there was evidence introduced to the effect and tending to prove that the road in question had been traveled and used by the public as a public highway as early as 1875 or 1876, and from that time continuously until it was closed by defendants in 1912 or 1913. That those using the road had done considerable work thereon by making dugways, constructing bridges, etc.; one witness testifying that he had spent about $500 on it about 1891.

[4] It was a question for the jury to determine, upon proper instructions, whether the grant of the right of way had been accepted by the public, prior to defendants' homestead entries, so as to establish the road as a public highway which the public had a right to use and to have remain open and unobstructed. Whether such an acceptance of the grant by the public would impose upon the county the burden of keeping the road in repair is not involved in the case, and has not been considered. We think the court erred in giving the instructions complained of, and in refusing to instruct, in substance, as requested by plaintiff.

[5] 2. Over the objection of plaintiff, the defendants were permitted to introduce evidence of statements made by persons in charge of certain of the sheep, claimed to have damaged the crops, as to whom the sheep belonged, and by whom such persons were employed, without other evidence of the agency of such persons than their declarations. That was error. Before statements or declarations of an alleged agent are competent and admissible in evidence against a principal, the agency must be established; and it is a familiar rule of evidence that agency cannot be established by the declarations of the alleged agent.

[6, 7] 3. It is contended that there was no competent evidence of the amount of damages, if any, suffered by defendants. The evidence consists of testimony that the crops for the years 1912, 1913, and 1915 were damaged. We fail to find any evidence of the value of the crops for 1912. For 1913 the defendant Joseph Black testified that he estimated the crop for that year at 700 bushels of grain, while on practically the same ground in 1914 they had 1,800 bushels; but there was no evidence of the value of the grain other than his statement that the damage to the crop was $500. For 1915 he testified that the damage to the grain was $700; that they had a good prospect for a crop. How a jury could arrive at the correct measure of damages from the evidence, we are unable to see. The measure of damages for injury to, or destruction of, crops is the value of the crops in the condition they were in at the time and place of the injury or destruction. Lester v. Highland Boy Gold Mining Co., 27 Utah, 470, 76 Pac. 341, 101 Am. St. Rep. 988, 1 Ann. Cas. 761; Teller v. Bay & River Dredging Co., 151 Cal. 209, 90 Pac. 942, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 267, 12 Ann. Cas. 779, and note. The amount of such damages is for the jury to determine from the facts proven, and not from the opinion of the parties or witnesses. "The reason for this rule is that it is the province of the jury to estimate the damages upon the facts as shown by the evidence, and the only end accomplished by the admission of such opinions and conclusions is the substitution of witnesses for jurors and of theories for facts." 4 Enc. of Evidence, 12 et seq., and cases there cited.

[8] As the judgment will have to be reversed and the case remanded for a new trial, it is proper to call attention to the fact that the jury was not instructed as to the measure of damages. Such instruction was necessary to a correct assessment of damages if any were awarded. Some other matters have been assigned as error, but we do not deem them important, and they will not likely arise upon another trial.

For the reasons stated, the judgment of the district court is reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

Reversed.

1. Appeal and Error 🔑627(1)—Transcript on Appeal—Jurisdiction.

A failure to file and serve transcript on appeal within the time specified by the rules of this court does not divest this court of jurisdiction.

2. Appeal and Error 🔑799 — Failure to File Transcript—Motion to Dismiss.

Where a motion to dismiss for failure to file transcript within the time specified by rule 26 of the rules of this court [153 Pac. xi] is made upon notice, and a showing is made in opposition to such motion, the showing should be sufficient to justify the court in reinstating the case if it had been previously dismissed without notice.

3. Appeal and Error 🔑627(2), 799—Failure to File Transcript—Dismissal—Diligence.

Where, upon appeal to this court, a transcript has not been filed within the time limited by the rules, such appeal will be dismissed upon motion, in the absence of a sufficient showing of diligence. Facts examined, and showing of diligence in the prosecution of the appeal held to be insufficient.

Appeal from District Court, Lincoln County; F. J. Cowen, Judge.

Action by Adelhaid Wolter against B. Church and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Appeal dismissed.

Bissell & Helman, of Shoshone, for appellants. A. L. Fletcher, of Richfield, for respondent.

RICE, J. This cause comes on at this time upon a motion to dismiss the appeal. Several grounds for dismissal are urged, but it will only be necessary to consider the one relating to the failure of the appellants to file and serve transcript within the time limited by rule 26 of the rules of this court.

In this case the judgment was entered by the trial court on the 23d day of October, 1916. The appeal was perfected on the 8th day of January, 1917, and on the 21st day of March this motion to dismiss the appeal was filed. At the time of the motion the transcript had not been filed and served, and no extension of time for filing and serving the same had been applied for or granted.

[1] It has been decided in this state that failure to file and serve transcript on appeal within the time specified by the rules of this court does not divest this court of jurisdiction. Stout v. Cunningham, 29 Idaho, 809, 162 Pac. 928.

[2] By rule 29 [153 Pac. xi], such appeal may be dismissed without notice. A case so dismissed may be reinstated during the same term, upon good cause shown, on notice to the opposite party. In cases where the motion to dismiss for failure to file transcript within the time specified under rule 26 is made upon notice, and a showing is made in opposition to such motion, the showing should be sufficient to justify the court in reinstating the case if it had previously been dismissed without notice. In the absence of such a showing, the case will be dismissed.

[3] The principal showing of diligence in this case consists in setting forth the effort of appellants' attorney to procure the money from one of the appellants with which to pay the clerk and reporter for transcribing the record. The affidavit, however, sets forth that the clerk of the court and the official reporter did not require their fees in advance, but always informed the appellants' attorney that he might get the money from his clients before they would require payment. The affidavit does not state that these officers misled him with regard to the preparation, filing, and service of the transcript on appeal.

[4] This showing would have been proper in support of an application for an extension of time within which to file the transcript. It does not present a sufficient excuse for failure to obtain an extension of time within the limit allowed by rule 26. It is not shown that appellants' attorney ever sought to obtain an extension of time within which to file the transcript, nor is it shown that there was any excuse therefor, except that appellants' attorney "may have relied too implicitly upon his past ability to get extensions of time for filing of transcripts, through stipulations with opposing counsel at any time." Unless a valid excuse be shown, an appellant relying upon a stipulation that the time for filing the transcript may be extended must obtain such stipulation before the 60 days expire in order to show due diligence.

In this case, we think the showing of due diligence is not sufficient, and that the appeal must be dismissed. Costs awarded to respondent.

Real estate may be attached under and by virtue of a writ of attachment issued out of a justice's or probate court.

Where real estate was levied upon and attached pursuant to a writ of attachment issued out of the probate court, and judgment was rendered in favor of the attaching creditor and an abstract thereof filed with the clerk of the district court, and thereafter the land was purchased at a sale in execution of such judgment, the interest of the purchaser is prior to a lien obtained by reason of an attachment levied upon the land, which was issued out of the district court after the issuance of the writ out of the probate court, but before the rendition of the judgment and the filing of the abstract thereof.

Appeal from District Court, Adams County; Ed. L. Bryan, Judge.

Action by Anna Hanson against Ira A. Brown, in which respondents, Frank H. Morrison and another intervened in order to determine priority of attachment liens. Judgment for interveners, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

MORGAN, J. It appears that on September, 4, 1913, the Council Lumber Company instituted an action against Ira A. Brown in the probate court of Adams county and, on the same day, caused to be issued therein a writ of attachment. Pursuant to the writ, and on the same day, the sheriff levied upon and attached the real estate in controversy, being the property of Brown. Thereafter judgment was rendered against him, and on March 21, 1914, an abstract thereof was filed with the clerk of the district court and execution issued. Pursuant to the execution, the sheriff levied upon the property, and on April 18, 1914, sold it to respondents. On February 23, 1914, appellant instituted an action against Brown, in the district court of the Seventh judicial district, in and for Adams county, and, on the same day, caused to be issued a writ of attachment pursuant to which the sheriff levied upon and attached the real estate in controversy. On May 4, 1914, respondents filed, with the court's permission, their complaint in intervention in that action, setting forth their claim of title to the land and asking that it be adjudged to be prior to the claim of appellant. Appellant demurred to the complaint in intervention, her demurrer was overruled, and, having failed to answer, her default was duly entered. Whereupon the court found the facts as above set forth, and on April 12, 1915, rendered judgment as prayed for by respondents. This appeal is from that judgment.

It will be seen that the writ of attachment upon which appellant bases her claim to the property was levied upon the land prior to the filing of the abstract of judgment of the probate court, but subsequent to the issuance of the writ of attachment by that court, and the levy upon the land made pursuant thereto.

[1] The question presented here is: Can real estate be attached pursuant to a writ of attachment issued out of the probate court? To properly determine this question, reference must be made to our Constitution and statutes conferring jurisdiction and authority upon such courts within this state. Section 21, art. 5, of the Constitution provides:

> "The probate courts * * * shall have * * * jurisdiction to hear and determine all civil cases wherein the debt or damage claimed does not exceed the sum of five hundred dollars, exclusive of interest. * * *"

Section 4629, Rev. Codes, provides:

> "In all civil suits, and within its civil jurisdiction, all proceedings in the probate court, the process, provisional remedies and supplementary proceedings, and the rules of practice, pleading and procedure, shall be the same as is provided by law for justices' courts."

Therefore it is necessary to examine the provisions of our statutes concerning writs of attachment issued from justices' courts.

Sections 4686, 4687, and 4688, Rev. Codes, provide when and how writs of attachment may issue from such courts, and nowhere in these sections or, in fact, in the provisions of our entire Codes, is it even intimated that land may not be levied upon by authority of a writ of attachment issued out of a justice's court. In fact, the opposite conclusion is to be deduced from section 4688, which provides that the writ be directed to the sheriff or any constable of the county, requiring him to attach and safely keep all of the property of the defendant, not exempt from execution. Section 4689 is:

> "The sections of this Code providing for attachments out of the district court, except as in this chapter expressly provided, are applicable to attachments issued out of justices' courts, the necessary changes and substitutions being made therein."

Therefore no prohibition against writs of attachment issued from justices' courts being levied upon land having been made in the said chapter of the Code dealing with provisional remedies, they are authorized to issue such writs under and by virtue of which all property subject to levy pursuant to writs issued from the district court may be attached. There is no statute, or reason, inconsistent with the jurisdiction of justices' courts in this particular. It is true that section 4645 provides that parties to an action in a probate or justice's court cannot give evidence upon any question which involves the title to or possession of real property, nor can any issue presenting such question be tried by such court, and, where it appears that such question is involved, the probate court or justice of the peace must suspend all further proceedings in the action and certify the same to the district court; but it does not follow that, by issuing a writ of attachment, in execution of which the sheriff levies upon real estate, a probate court, or justice of the peace, will, necessarily, hear evidence upon a question, or try an issue, involving title to or possession of real property. The mere fact that such a writ issues and is levied upon real estate will not change the character of the evidence to be introduced at the trial. Bush v. Visant, 40 Ark. 125.

[2] It is true that, under the provisions of section 4736, a judgment rendered in a probate or justice's court creates no lien upon the lands of the defendant until an abstract of the same is filed and docketed in the office of the clerk of the district court; but in this action respondents do not claim a lien initiated by the judgment, but rather by the attachment. Where land is attached prior to judgment in the probate or justice's court, the lien thereby created is merged with the lien of a judgment in favor of the attaching creditor, an abstract of which is subsequently filed and docketed, and the lien resulting from such merger has priority as of the date of attachment in the same manner as in case of judgments and attachments procured in actions in the district court. Therefore, when respondents purchased this land at the sale in execution of the judgment rendered in the probate court, they purchased it clear of any claim of appellant arising subsequent to the date of the levy under authority of the writ of attachment from that court, for the levy of the writ of attachment issued out of the district court, upon which appellant bases her claim, was subsequent to the levy relied upon by respondents. First Nat. Bank v. Lieuallen, 4 Idaho, 431, 39 Pac. 1108.

Appellant cites the case of Wilson v. Madison, 58 Cal. 1, urging that it supports her contention that a writ of attachment from a justice's court cannot be levied upon land; but that case merely holds that, where a writ of attachment has been issued from a justice's court and a levy thereof is made upon land, and before an abstract of the judgment is filed, as provided by law, a homestead declaration upon the premises is filed by the judgment debtor, the land cannot be sold upon execution of the judgment. This is so because, under the laws of California, lands covered by homestead declarations are subject, not to prior attachments, but to prior judgments. This has been held in the case of McCracken v. Harris, 54 Cal. 81, where the attachment issued from the district court prior to the declaration of homestead. The court held, in that case, that, the declaration having been filed before judgment, it was not subject to the lien of attachment. It is evident, therefore, that the decision in the case of Wilson v. Madison, supra, was not based upon the theory that a writ of attachment issued out of a justice's court could not become a lien upon real estate.

The case of Dewey v. Schreiber Imp. Co., 12 Idaho, 280, 85 Pac. 921, is also cited by appellant in support of her contention that the probate court had no jurisdiction to issue a writ of attachment to be levied upon real estate. In that case it was held that by section 21, art. 5, of the Constitution, probate courts were not given power to try or determine cases in equity, and that a statute purporting to confer upon them the power to foreclose mechanics' liens, mortgages, and other liens on real property was unconstitutional and void. That decision has no bearing upon this case, because in issuing the writ of attachment the probate court was not proceeding in equity, but was merely making use of a provisional remedy given by the statutes in aid of an action at law.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed. Costs are awarded to respondents.

APPEAL AND ERROR ⟹345(1)—TIME FOR FILING DEMAND FOR RECORD—STATUTE.

Ten days' time allowed "after notice of decision" denying motion for new trial "or other termination" of such a motion for filing demand for record under Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, or for serving proposed bill of exceptions under section 650, commences to run immediately upon trial court's failure to pass on motion within three months allowed by section 660 after verdict or service on the moving party of notice of the court's decision; written notice of the decision not being essential, and the law itself giving actual notice.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by George D. Bornschein and others against George W. Whitaker. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. On motion to dismiss appeal. Appeal dismissed.

Eugene F. Conlin, of San Francisco, for appellant. G. Gunzendorfer, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The ten days' time "after notice of decision" denying a motion for new trial or "other termination" of such a motion, within which a party may file demand for record under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure, or may serve a proposed bill of exceptions under section 650, Code of Civil Procedure, commences to run immediately upon the failure of the trial court to pass on the motion within three months after the verdict of the jury or service on the moving party of notice of decision of the court. Section 660, Code Civ. Proc. Written notice of the decision denying the motion is not essential under these particular statutory provisions. Actual notice only is required, and in the event of such a termination of the new trial proceeding, as we have stated, the law itself gives the notice.

It follows that no valid proceeding for a record in lieu of a bill of exceptions, or for a bill of exceptions, was ever instituted, and consequently that the time for filing transcript on appeal in this court expired before the making of this motion.

This conclusion necessitates the dismissal of the appeal.

The appeal is dismissed.

1. JUDGMENT 🔑461(5)—EQUITABLE RELIEF—FRAUD—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In suit to set aside a judgment quieting title to a parcel of land, evidence held insufficient to establish the fraud, alleged by plaintiff, that defendant falsely stated in his complaint and affidavit that he was the owner in fee of the property, and that the statement was at the time known by him to be false and untrue.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Adolphus E. Graupner, Judge.

Action by James Otis, surviving trustee under the will of A. C. Whitcomb, deceased, and the decree of distribution made in the estate, against Louis Zeiss. From a judgment against him on granting of defendant's motion for nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Olney, Pringle & Mannon and J. R. Pringle, all of San Francisco, for appellant. Tum Suden & tum Suden, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment entered against him upon the granting of defendant's motion for a nonsuit.

The action was brought to set aside a judgment obtained by the defendant, Zeiss, quieting title to a parcel of land in the city of San Francisco, described as "city slip lot No. 19." The action in which Zeiss had obtained this judgment was one brought under the provisions of the McEnerney Act, so called (Stats. 1906, p. 78). The ground upon which the plaintiff in this action sought to set aside such judgment was that it had been obtained by fraud. City slip lot No. 19 is part of a tract of land which in March, 1851, belonged to the state of California. In that month the Legislature passed an act (Stats. 1851, p. 307) granting said tract to the city of San Francisco for 99 years. The complaint alleges that this leasehold interest, described as the "city title," became vested in the defendant, Zeiss, and that the reversion, described as the "state title," was conveyed, in November, 1855, to one Callaway, and has since, by mesne conveyances, become vested in the plaintiff as trustee. The action brought by Zeiss to quiet his title was commenced by him on August 22, 1906, on which day he filed his complaint, accompanied by the affidavit required by the statute. The fraud charged is that Zeiss falsely stated in said complaint and affidavit that he was the owner in fee of the property in question, and that such statement was at the time known by him to be false and untrue. The affidavit also contained the statement that Zeiss did not know of any person who claimed an interest in the property, and this statement is alleged to have been false, and made with intent to deceive the court and induce it to give him judgment as prayed by him. Judgment in the action brought under the McEnerney Act was given and entered on the 19th day of December, 1906, and plaintiff alleges that he had no knowledge of the pendency of said action or of the judgment therein until April 1, 1908.

The answer denies a number of the allegations of the complaint, and particularly those alleging fraud on the part of the defendant. The motion for nonsuit was based on the ground that the various allegations of fraud had not been proven.

[1] We may assume that the complaint charged the kind of fraud which would afford ground for setting aside a judgment valid on its face. So assuming, we are nevertheless bound to hold that the plaintiff failed to introduce any evidence tending to establish the fraud alleged. It was stipulated, for the purposes of the present appeal, that plaintiff had shown "the outstanding title, viz. the state title, in himself." The essence of the charge against Zeiss is that he knew that the state title was outstanding, and intentionally concealed this fact in order to mislead the court into making a decree declaring him to be the owner of the land.

Here the proof fails. The only witnesses called by plaintiff were the defendant himself, and his attorney, Mr. Otto tum Suden. Zeiss testified that he had purchased the lot in 1893 at a referee's sale in a partition suit. At the time of making the purchase he applied for and obtained a loan from the German Savings & Loan Society, and gave a mortgage on the property to secure the same. Zeiss knew nothing of any outstanding claim, and bought the land believing that the title was good. The title was searched by the bank which made the loan. "I supposed all the time," he testified, "I was getting a good title when I bought that property." After purchasing, he improved the property. He never heard of any claim against it until after he obtained his McEnerney decree. He had paid all the taxes since buying the lot.

There is nothing in all this to warrant even a suspicion that Mr. Zeiss himself had any intimation of an outstanding claim against the property. As he testified, he fully believed that he was acquiring a title in fee simple, and his conduct comported with that belief. It is sought, however, to charge him with constructive knowledge of the state of the title, because, as it is claimed, Mr. tum Suden, who acted as his attorney at the time when he made the purchase, was, or ought to have been, aware of the fact that his client was acquiring only the leasehold interest, or "city title." Here again the evidence fails. Zeiss, on his direct examination, testified that he had asked tum Suden to examine the title for him, and supposed he had done so; also that he had bought the property on tum Suden's advice. Tum Suden had been one of the attorneys in the partition suit in the course of which the sale to Zeiss had been ordered. But Zeiss further testified that he did not know whether or not tum Suden had examined the title, or had ever seen the abstract. Zeiss made the arrangement for the loan with the German Bank, and "depended on them to do the rest." Tum Suden himself testified that he had never seen the abstract, but that the title had been examined by Mr. Goodfellow on behalf of the German Bank. While he (tum Suden) knew the distinction between a city title and a state title, he supposed that Zeiss was acquiring the state title. It is argued that because Mr. tum Suden was an attorney in the partition suit, he must have known the true state of the title. But there is no evidence to warrant this conclusion. It is not alleged in the complaint, and there is no evidence, that any of the instruments affecting the state title, except the original conveyance to Callaway, were of record. The proceedings in the partition suit are not shown in the transcript. Nor are we advised by the bill of exceptions what were the contents of the abstract which was examined at the time of Zeiss' purchase. We cannot assume, in order to support a charge of fraud, that these undisclosed documents contained evidence of an outstanding title. The appellants argue that the deed to Zeiss, which was approved by tum Suden, shows on its face that only a qualified interest was being conveyed. But they have failed to incorporate this deed into their bill of exceptions, and the statement therefore has no support in the record.

The argument of the appellants seeks to impute to Zeiss constructive knowledge of information said to have been obtained by tum Suden while the latter was acting as attorney for other clients. Zeiss was not a party to the partition suit.

[2] While the knowledge of an attorney is the knowledge of his client (6 C. J. 638; Mabb v. Stewart, 147 Cal. 413, 81 Pac. 1073), the principal will ordinarily be charged with constructive notice only where the knowledge of the attorney has been gained in the course of the particular transaction in which he has been employed by that principal (6 C. J. 639). This rule is not without exceptions. Pom. Eq. Jur. § 672. But "it seems conceded on all hands that clear and satisfactory proof that the knowledge of the former transaction was present in the mind and memory of the agent at the time of the second transaction is necessary in order to bind the principal in such second transaction by constructive notice of the prior information of the agent." Wittenbrock v. Parker, 102 Cal. 93, 103, 36 Pac. 374, 24 L. R. A. 197, 41 Am. St. Rep. 172. There is no such proof here, where the only affirmative evidence is that the agent did not know the alleged fact at all, and it is sought, on vague and incomplete premises, to infer that he might have had notice of the fact.

[3] It is elementary that fraud is not presumed, but must be proven. The appellant relies upon the rule laid down in Parsons v. Weis, 144 Cal. 410, 77 Pac. 1007, that, where the question at issue is the state of the adverse party's mind, only slight evidence is required in the absence of a full disclosure by such party of the facts peculiarly within his own knowledge. Here, however, both Zeiss and his attorney did testify fully to all such facts. A finding of fraud in this case would have no support beyond that of shadowy and unsubstantial inferences which are in conflict with all the direct testimony.

The judgment is affirmed.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Proceedings in the matter of the estate of Eliza Davis, deceased, by Eliza E. Carpenter, for removal as administratrix of Sarah Lavinia Lee, and for her own appointment as such. From orders denying both prayers, the plaintiff appeals. Appeal from order refusing to remove trustee dismissed. Order denying application for letters reversed.

Wise & O'Connor, of San Francisco, for appellant. Louis Horwitz, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Two appeals are here presented. The first is an appeal from an order denying the application of Eliza E. Carpenter for letters of administration upon the estate of Eliza Davis, deceased. The other is an appeal from an order denying the petition of Eliza E. Carpenter for the removal of the respondent, Sarah Lavinia Lee, from her office as trustee appointed by the court, under the will of Eliza Davis, deceased, and for the appointment of some other person in her stead.

Eliza Davis died testate on March 2, 1894, being then a resident of San Francisco. By her will the entire estate was devised to two trustees, namely, Joseph Donahue and Adam Grant, in trust, as follows: First, to convert the estate into money; second, to pay debts; third, to divide the residue of the estate into five equal parts and pay one-fifth to each of three of her children named, provided they should be discovered by the trustees within two years from the date of her death, to pay another fifth to her son Augustus Davis, and out of the remaining one-fifth to pay the respondent, Sarah Lavinia Lee, a daughter of the decedent, also known as Lavinia Lee, $40 per month during her natural life, and at her death the balance of said one-fifth to be paid to her children. It was further provided that if the trustees failed to discover the three first-mentioned children of the testatrix within two years from the death of the decedent, the shares given to them should be paid over to the other children, Augustus Davis and Sarah Lavinia Lee, but that the share of Sarah Lavinia Lee was "to be always subject to the above provision to pay it to her in monthly sums of forty dollars, during her life, and the remainder of her share, if any, to her said children, as aforesaid."

The will was duly probated and Adam Grant was appointed executor thereof. He died in 1898, and C. C. Webb was then appointed administrator with the will annexed. Webb died in 1903 and no successor or other general administrator of the estate has ever been appointed.

[1] The trustees were unable to discover either of the three children first mentioned. Augustus Davis died before the death of the testator leaving no children, or other living descendants, or wife, surviving. By the death of Augustus Davis without lineal descendants, the disposition to him lapsed. Civ. Code, §§ 1343, 1310. As to that portion there was intestacy. It is not necessary to the decision of this case to determine precisely the effect of these provisions. It is sufficient to note that the children of Sarah Lavinia Lee have a vested interest in the one-fifth part out of which, according to the first provision, she was to receive $40 per month during her life, and that they have a vested interest in one-half of the three-fifths conditionally given to the three undiscovered children, the effect being that her half of this three-fifths would be consolidated with the fifth directly given to her, and that out of the whole thereof she was entitled to receive only $40 per month during her life, and that the residue and remainder of that part of the estate would go to her children at her death.

The records in the estate were all destroyed by the conflagration of April 18, 1906. In 1910, by proceedings duly had, the record was restored. The two persons named as trustees in the will died. On November 1, 1910, on the petition of Sarah Lavinia Lee, the court appointed her to act as trustee under the will instead of the persons appointed by the will. The petition for the appointment of a trustee included an application for the appointment of a special administratrix of the estate, and thereupon the court also made an order appointing the said Sarah Lavinia Lee special administratrix of said estate, "with special and full power to collect and receive from the Pennsylvania Fire Insurance Company all money due on any policy of fire insurance, or due on any contract or for any reason, and to collect and preserve all the goods, chattels, debts, and effects of the decedent and to preserve from damage, waste and injury, the real estate." She gave bond as required by the order, and thereupon letters of special administration were issued to her, authorizing her to "collect and take charge of the estate of said deceased, and to exercise such other powers as may be necessary for the preservation of said estate." Thereafter she filed her final account as special administratrix, and the same was settled, showing a balance of money in her hands of $1,362.66. Afterwards, on April 4, 1913, said Sarah Lavinia Lee filed a petition for the final distribution of said estate. In pursuance thereof, the formal notice required by law having been given, the court, on April 23, 1913, made an order purporting to distribute the whole of said estate absolutely to the said Sarah Lavinia Lee.

[2] Eliza E. Carpenter is one of the children of said Sarah Lavinia Lee, and as such has a vested interest in the estate, under the terms of the will. She was therefore entitled to letters of administration thereon unless some other person having a better right applied for letters in opposition to her. On May 28, 1915, she filed a petition for the letters of administration here in question, and a petition for the removal of Sarah Lavinia Lee as trustee. Opposition to the petition for administration was made by Sarah Lavinia Lee, on the ground that there was no estate to be administered, and on the further ground that Eliza E. Carpenter was unfit to act in that capacity. Sarah Lavinia Lee, being the daughter of the decedent, was first entitled to letters, but as she did not apply therefor in opposition to the petition of Eliza E. Carpenter, the latter was entitled to administer. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1350a, 1377. Upon the trial the allegation in the opposition, to the effect that Eliza E. Carpenter was an unfit person to act as administratrix, was withdrawn, and the petition for administration was denied, upon the theory that there was no estate to be administered. The contention of the appellant is that the court erred in its conclusion that the estate had been lawfully distributed. This is the principal question for consideration. The theory of the appellant is that there can be no distribution of an estate upon which there is no general administration, that the appointment of Sarah Lavinia Lee as special administratrix was merely for the special purpose mentioned in the order and in her letters as such, that it did not constitute her the general administratrix of the estate, and that after the death of Webb, and until general letters of administration de bonis non were granted, the court was without power or jurisdiction to make distribution thereof.

No rights of third parties are involved in the question as here presented and there is no claim that the petitioner has been guilty of laches sufficient to warrant a refusal of the appointment.

[3] We think this point is well taken. The powers of a special administratrix are drawn from the statute. "By our law he has the powers enumerated by statute, each and all of which pertain to the collection and preservation of the estate, and 'such others as are conferred upon him by his appointment.' Though the language above quoted is broad, its limitations are apparent. It is no general grant. It does not authorize the court to obliterate the distinctions between general and special administrators. The additional powers are only such as are incident to those designated, or in line with them." Estate of Welch, 106 Cal. 432, 39 Pac. 806. In accordance with these principles it was held in that case that the court had no authority, while there was a special administrator in charge of the estate and during the time when the general administration was suspended, to make a partial distribution. The court said:

> "If partial distribution can be decreed under section 1415, so also may general distribution, and all the distinctions between general and special administrators be thus swept aside. This was not the design of the lawmakers."

These principles are decisive of this case. If there can be no partial distribution during a time when there is no general administrator in office, much less can there be complete distribution. The decisions concerning errors made by the court in deciding a matter over which it has jurisdiction are not in point. The jurisdiction here involved is not that general probate jurisdiction which every superior court possesses under the Constitution, but a jurisdiction to pronounce a particular judgment in a particular estate. The superior court has general jurisdiction of matters of probate. The superior court of the city and county of San Francisco had and still has, in a certain sense, jurisdiction over the estate of Eliza Davis, deceased. But after the death of Webb, the administrator with the will annexed, it did not have further jurisdiction to proceed to close and distribute the estate until it had first appointed a successor to Webb in the general administration. The decree of distribution made under these circumstances was therefore of no effect. The court still retained jurisdiction of the estate, and it had the power, and it was also its duty, to appoint some one to take charge of the property and make the distribution in the regular manner provided by law. Estate of Pina, 112 Cal. 14, 44 Pac. 332.

[4] We find that the appeal from the order refusing to remove Sarah Lavinia Lee as trustee is not supported by any authenticated record. Consequently we cannot consider it on the merits. Her claim, which she asserted in opposition to the application for letters of administration, that she is the absolute owner is, of course, inconsistent with her duty as trustee, but it is not determined in her favor by the refusal of the court to remove her. The proper course, with reference to the appeal from that refusal, is to dismiss it. We are not to be understood as holding that such an order is appealable. It is not included in the list of orders and judgments made appealable by sections 963 and 1701 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The appeal from the order refusing to remove Sarah Lavinia Lee as trustee is dismissed.

The order denying the application for letters of administration is reversed.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thos. C. Denny, Judge.

In the matter of the Estate of David Ayers, deceased. From a decree of distribution, Charles Ayers, individually and as executor, appeals. Both appeals dismissed.

W. F. Cowan, of Santa Rosa, for appellant. J. R. Leppo and D. R. Gale, both of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. David Ayers died on the 30th day of June, 1912, survived by a daughter, Anna Mary Ross, and three sons, Charles Ayers, G. Lemuel Ayers and Clarence L. Ayers. On July 30, 1912, a paper was admitted to probate as the last will of said decedent. Charles Ayers and G. Lemuel Ayers were named in the will as executors and letters testamentary were issued to them. By the will the testator gave certain cash legacies to five grandchildren, and to Anna Mary Ross and Clarence L. Ayers. He also devised certain real property to two of his sons. In addition, he devised to Charles Ayers and G. Lemuel Ayers his "ranch on the Santa Rosa and Sebastopol road, Charles taking the east half thereof and G. Lemuel taking the west half thereof," the testator's intention, as expressed in the will, being to divide the ranch equally as to acreage, without regard to improvements. All the live stock, vehicles, and harness on the ranch, as well as any money or other personal property remaining after satisfying other legacies, was bequeathed in equal shares to the said four children of the testator. On July 29, 1912, Anna Mary Ross, Charles Ayers, G. Lemuel Ayers, and Clarence L. Ayers entered into an agreement for the division of the estate. By this instrument it was provided that 20 acres of the ranch above mentioned should be set off to Anna Mary Ross, and that the residue of money and personal property, over and above the legacies, should be divided equally among the three sons, no part thereof to go to Anna Mary Ross. The agreement described the 20 acres which were to go to Anna Mary Ross, and two parcels of about 40 acres each (comprising the rest of the ranch), which were to go to Charles and G. Lemuel, respectively. The 20-acre piece was at the easterly end of the ranch. In October, 1913, G. Lemuel Ayers, one of the executors, filed his petition for distribution, setting up the making of this agreement, and asking that the estate be distributed in accordance with its provisions, in so far as they conflicted with the terms of the will. Charles Ayers filed a petition, asking that the estate be distributed in accordance with the will. Anna Mary Ross filed an answer to the latter petition, setting up the making of the agreement. Charles Ayers then filed an answer to the petition of G. Lemuel Ayers, and to the answer of Anna Mary Ross. In this pleading he made allegations designed to show that his consent to the agreement entered into by the four children of David Ayers had been obtained by means of menace exercised by Anna Mary Ross, and that he had rescinded the agreement. The court below sustained the demurrers of Anna Mary Ross and G. Lemuel Ayers to this answer, and made its decree distributing the estate in accordance with the terms of the agreement. From this decree Charles Ayers, individually and as executor, appeals.

[1-3] The respondents move to dismiss the appeals. It is well settled that an executor has no standing to question, by means of an appeal, the division of the estate among the beneficiaries or heirs. Bates v. Ryberg, 40 Cal. 463; In re Wright, 49 Cal. 550; Roach v. Coffey, 73 Cal. 281, 14 Pac. 840; In re Williams, 122 Cal. 76, 54 Pac. 386.

The motion to dismiss the individual appeal is based upon the ground that, since the making of the decree, the appellant has been in the possession and enjoyment of all of the real and personal property distributed to him, and that, having thus accepted the fruits of the decree, he is not in a position to maintain an appeal from it.

By affidavits the moving parties show that immediately after the making of the decree of distribution, all of the distributees received and took possession, respectively, of all of the property distributed and awarded to them. Included in this was the sum of $630.83 in cash, of which Charles Ayers received one-third, i. e., $210.27, no part of said residue having been paid to Anna Mary Ross. The ranch described in the will contained a little over 100 acres, of which 20 acres were distributed to Anna Mary Ross, and two parcels, each containing 40.18 acres, to Charles Ayers and G. Lemuel Ayers, respectively. Charles Ayers, it is stated in these affidavits, has, ever since the making of the decree, been in possession of the 40.18 acres so distributed to him. Since the entry of such decree, the wife of said Charles Ayers has recorded a declaration of homestead covering said 40.18 acres. Furthermore, said Charles Ayers and his wife have executed two mortgages upon said tract to secure the payment of two notes for $1,200 and for $3,000, respectively. Both of said mortgages have been recorded, and the latter still remains unsatisfied of record.

The counter affidavit of the appellant does not deny the material facts thus stated. He deposes "that he has not, by conveyance, acquiescence, estoppel, or otherwise, conveyed any interest that he may have in said estate to any other person." He does not deny, however, that he has been in possession of the 40.18-acre tract, and he admits, in express terms, the execution of the two mortgages. With respect to the personal property, he denies that it was accepted or received by him, "with the idea of defeating the rights of any other person in case said decree of distribution shall be set aside or reversed." This evasive statement is, in effect, an admission of the receipt of the money. The force of the admission is not qualified by the affiant's disclaimer of an intent to defeat the rights of others.

"The right to accept the fruits of a judgment and the right of appeal therefrom are not concurrent. On the contrary, they are totally inconsistent. An election to take one of these courses is therefore a renunciation of the other." In re Shaver, 131 Cal. 219, 63 Pac. 340; In re Baby, 87 Cal. 200, 25 Pac. 405, 22 Am. St. Rep. 239; San Bernardino County v. Riverside County, 135 Cal. 618, 67 Pac. 1047; Turner v. Markham, 152 Cal. 246, 92 Pac. 485; Bunting v. Haskell, 152 Cal. 426, 93 Pac. 110; Walnut Irrig. Dist. v. Burke, 158 Cal. 165, 110 Pac. 517.

Where, however, the appellant is concededly entitled to that which he has accepted, but is claiming something more, he is not precluded from maintaining an appeal for the purpose of establishing his greater claim. San Bernardino County v. Riverside County, supra; Walnut Irrig. Dist. v. Burke, supra. The appellant seeks to bring the case within this limitation of the rule. But the facts do not fit the claim. Under the will the appellant was entitled to the east half of the ranch, and G. Lemuel to the west half. Under the agreement, carried into the decree, Mrs. Ross obtains 20 acres of the east half, leaving the remaining 80 acres to be equally divided between the appellant and his brother, G. Lemuel Ayers. The appellant's 40 acres, therefore, include 10 acres which, under the will, would have gone to his said brother. Not only has he gone into possession of land to which, under the will, he would not have been entitled, but he has incumbered it by a mortgage. Similar considerations apply to the personal property. Under the will, the residue of cash would have gone to the four children in equal shares. Under the decree Mrs. Ross received none of it, and the appellant took one-third, instead of the one-quarter which would otherwise have come to him.

Both appeals are dismissed.

are the same as those set up by him in the probate proceeding. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend. The record contains a document entitled "Judgment by the Court," and from this judgment the plaintiff appeals. It may well be questioned whether the entry in question constitutes a judgment, or is merely an order sustaining the demurrer, and therefore not the subject of an appeal. But passing this point, it appears that, since the taking of the appeal, the controversy has been decided against the appellant's claims by the granting of a decree of distribution in accordance with the terms of the agreement. It further appears that the appellant has accepted the benefits of this distribution. Upon these grounds respondents move to dismiss the appeal.

The decree of distribution having become final by our order dismissing the appeal therefrom, the matters there determined against this appellant are no longer open to question. He is not therefore in a position to question the correctness of the adjudication in favor of the validity of the agreement. In re Blythe, 108 Cal. 124, 126, 41 Pac. 33. Having accepted the benefits of that adjudication, he cannot appeal from the present judgment, which, like the decree of distribution itself, rests upon a basis which is inconsistent with the maintenance of the position asserted by the complaint.

APPEAL AND ERROR ⚿345(1)—TIME FOR APPEAL—STATUTE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 941b, requiring notice of appeal to be filed within 60 days after entry of judgment, provided that, if proceedings on motion for new trial are pending, the time for appeal shall not expire until 30 days after entry in the trial court of order determining motion "or other termination," the quoted phrase refers to section 660, making court's failure to decide motion within three months "after the verdict of the jury or service on the moving party of notice of a decision of the court" equivalent to a denial of the motion; hence it was immaterial that the notice of intention to appeal was filed before notice of decision of the court, since the statute relates to the power of the court, and not merely to the rights of the appealing party.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Rebecca J. Moore and another against Henry Strayer and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. On motion to dismiss appeal. Motion denied.

M. B. Butler, of Pasadena, for appellants.
Tanner, Taft & Odell, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. The judgment from which plaintiffs and cross-defendants appeal was entered on May 1, 1916. Appellants, without waiting for service of notice of the decision of the court (which notice, as shown by the record, was in fact duly served on June 23d), served and filed their notice of intention to move for a new trial on May 15th, which motion, pursuant to notice given of the time of hearing thereof, was made July 3d. The court, however, made no ruling thereon until September 18th, on which date it made a formal order denying the motion. Respondent's contention is that the motion was denied by operation of law three months after the filing of the notice of intention, which expired on August 15th, and hence the notice of appeal filed October 17th was too late.

We do not so construe the statute. Section 941b of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that notice of appeal shall be filed within 60 days after entry of judgment, provided, however:

> "If proceedings on motion for a new trial are pending, the time for appeal from the judgment shall not expire until thirty days after entry in the trial court of the order determining such motion for a new trial, or other termination in the trial court of the proceedings upon such motion."

The words "other termination" include by way of reference the denial of the motion by operation of law as provided in section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure, where it is said:

> "The power of the court to pass on motion for new trial shall expire within three months after the verdict of the jury or service on the moving party of notice of the decision of the court. If such motion is not determined within said three months, the effect shall be a denial of the motion without further order of the court."

Under this provision the three months' time, within which the court was empowered to act upon the motion, did not commence to run until "service on the moving party of notice of the decision of the court." This notice, as we have seen, was not served until June 23d, which date marks the time from which to measure the three months' period within which the court was vested with jurisdiction to pass upon the motion. If the rights of the party appealing were alone to be considered, the giving of the notice of intention might, as to him, be construed as a waiver of service of notice of decision, but the provision relates to the power of the court, jurisdiction of which to pass upon the motion is divested only by the service of notice of decision followed by the lapse of a period of three months, during which it is empowered to act on the motion for a new trial. It thus appears that the time within which the court was, under the provision of section 660, supra, required to act upon the motion, did not expire until September 23d. The act of the court in making the order denying the motion was had on September 18th, which was five days before the expiration of the three months from service of the notice of decision.

It follows that the notice of appeal served on October 17, 1916, was within the time specified therefor.

The motion to dismiss is denied.

In re WISE'S ESTATE. (L. A. 4505.)

1. Executors and Administrators 🔑24 — Right to Appointment—Public Administrator.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1365, stating the order of precedence of applicants for letters of administration, the public administrator takes precedence of "any person legally competent" who is not entitled to letters by virtue of relationship, and the grantee of a person entitled as heir or next of kin has no right in preference to the public administrator.

2. Executors and Administrators 🔑17(2, 7)—Right to Appointment — Public Administrator.

Where the heirs are nonresidents, they are not entitled to administer under Code Civ. Proc. § 1369, and hence cannot nominate the administrator.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. R. Guy, Judge.

Proceedings in the matter of the estate of Mary O. Wise, deceased. From an order denying the petition for letters of administration, A. C. Mouser appeals. Affirmed.

A. C. Mouser, of San Diego, in pro. per. Hamilton & Lindley, of San Diego, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The appellant, A. C. Mouser, appeals from an order of the superior court denying the petition of two nonresidents, heirs of the decedent, for letters of administration upon the estate of Mary O. Wise, deceased, to Mouser, and granting letters thereon to Edwin Reed, who was the public administrator of the county of San Diego. Mary O. Wise died intestate seised of real property situated in said county. The only fact by virtue of which the appellant claims the right to letters is that, since the death of the decedent, he has received a conveyance from one of her heirs purporting to convey to him all of the right, title, and interest of said heir in a part of the said real property of which Mary O. Wise died seised. The said heir was not and is not a resident of the state of California.

[1, 2] The right to letters of administration upon the estate of one who dies intestate is controlled by section 1365 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under that section, persons are entitled to letters in the following order:

> "1. The surviving husband or wife, or some competent person whom he or she may request to have appointed. 2. The children. 3. The father and mother. 4. The brothers. 5. The sisters. 6. The grandchildren. 7. The next of kin entitled to share in the distribution of the estate. 8. The public administrator. 9. The creditors. 10. Any person legally competent."

The opening clause declares that relatives are entitled to administration only when they are entitled to succeed to the personal estate. It will be seen that the public administrator takes precedence of "any person legally competent" who is not entitled to letters by virtue of relationship. There is no provision that the grantee of one of the persons entitled as heir or next of kin shall have the right in preference to the public administrator. As the heirs were nonresidents, they were not entitled to administer. Code Civ. Proc. § 1369. Hence they could not nominate. Estate of Beech, 63 Cal. 458. It follows that the appellant had no right to letters, and that the court below properly refused to grant the petition as against the public administrator, who also applied for such letters. There are cases holding that where a person dies testate and the executor named in the will fails to apply for letters, the court, under section 1323 of the Code of Civil Procedure, may appoint "any other person interested in the will" who petitions therefor, and that this gives authority to appoint the grantee or assignee of a person who takes under the will. In re Bergin, 100 Cal. 376, 34 Pac. 867; Estate of Engle, 124 Cal. 292, 56 Pac. 1022. These cases have no application to the rights of persons to administer upon the estate of an intestate.

It is unnecessary to consider the respondent's objection to the transcript.

The order is affirmed.

PAYNE v. CUNNINGHAM. (L. A. 4011.)

Contracts 🔑229(2)—Building Contract—Superintendence.

A building superintendent's contract that the superintendent should be paid 10 per cent. upon the cost provided the buildings were completed for an amount not exceeding a certain sum, and providing that "should he fail to keep within the above-mentioned maximum cost then no charge should be made for such superintendence for such excess," did not, in case the cost exceeded the maximum sum, release the owner from obligation to pay the percentage charged on such maximum sum, but relieved him from paying the percentage only as to the excess above such sum.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Wellborn, Judge.

Action by John A. Payne against Rose M. Cunningham, administratrix. From a judgment, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Tanner, Odell, Odell & Taft, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Pendell & Gleason and Schweitzer & Hutton, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. Plaintiff brought this action alleging a breach of contract on the part of C. B. Cunningham (now deceased, and for whom his administratrix has, pending suit, been substituted), in that he had failed to complete the alteration and construction of certain buildings within the time and for the amount agreed upon to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $4,000.

With his answer denying the material allegations of the complaint, defendant Cunningham filed a cross-complaint, wherein he alleged that by an agreement in writing plaintiff employed him to superintend the construction and alteration of certain buildings and for his services agreed to pay him upon completion thereof 10 per cent. of the total cost, which cost was $9,848.31, and for which percentage therein, amounting to $984.83, notice of claim of lien was duly filed. For a second cause of action, cross-complainant alleged that under the authority of plaintiff and for his use and benefit he paid out and expended for labor and material used in the construction of said buildings $421.47, no part of which has been paid and for which and the sum of $984.83 he prayed judgment against plaintiff, and asked that the latter sum be declared a lien upon the property, foreclosure of which was sought. The answer to the cross-complaint admitted the making of the contract whereby defendant was to receive 10 per cent. of the total cost of the building, but alleged that by the terms of the contract defendant and cross-complainant agreed that the maximum cost of the building should not exceed $7,400, and that defendant was to have no compensation for his services if the cost of construction and alteration exceeded said sum. As to the second cause of action, the answer does not deny that cross-complainant, under the authority of plaintiff, paid out for labor and material used in the erection and construction of said buildings the sum $421.47, but merely denies that such sum is due cross-complainant from plaintiff for labor and material used.

The court found that the parties entered into a written contract, the substance of which is as follows: Cunningham was to "obtain bids and subcontracts, for and in the name of the party of the first part (Payne), covering the furnishing of such materials and labor as may be required in the construction and alteration of said buildings, and any and all bids and subcontracts must be approved and signed by the party of the first part." Cunningham agreed "to furnish a bond of two thousand ($2,000) dollars to insure the correctness of materials and the faithful performance of workmanship, also the completion of the construction and alteration of said buildings within the maximum cost of seven thousand four hundred ($7.400.00) dollars, including his compensation for managing the construction and alteration of said buildings, * * * and have the construction and alteration of said buildings completed within (90) days from the date of signing this agreement." Payne agreed "to promptly pay all bills for material and labor when same are accompanied by an order stating the amount of the said bill and signed by the party of the second part (Cunningham)." Payne also agreed to "pay the party of the second part as compensation for his services the sum of ten (10%) per cent. of the total cost of the buildings upon completion, provided the party of the second part completes said buildings within the maximum cost above mentioned. Should he fail to keep within the above-mentioned maximum cost then no charge shall be made for such superintendence for such excess." The court, reciting that oral and documentary evidence was introduced, further found that Cunningham did not agree to complete the construction and alteration of the buildings mentioned in the contract within a maximum cost of $7,400 or any other sum; that he did not give the bond mentioned in the contract; that plaintiff allowed him to proceed with the prosecution of the work without giving a bond; that, while it was true that Cunningham agreed to complete the construction and alteration of the buildings within 90 days from the date of the contract, such agreement was conditioned upon Payne, the owner, complying with certain provisions thereof, among which was one that cross-complainant should be allowed to obtain the bids and subcontracts covering the furnishing of materials and labor, instead of which, however, Payne himself assumed the procuring of such contracts and, in one instance, without cross-complainant's knowledge or consent, let a contract for plumbing which was not completed within the time allowed by the terms of the contract for the entire completion of the construction and alteration of the buildings, and that Payne was not damaged by any delay on the part of Cunningham to complete the building within the time mentioned in the contract; that it is true that the total cost of said construction and alteration was the sum of $9,848.31, and also true that Payne "signed all subcontracts that were in writing and had knowledge of all subcontracts let without writing, and had opportunity to know the amounts thereof, and made no objection thereto until the said buildings were completed, and that during the construction of said buildings he himself was present, observing the said construction and taking part in the ordering of materials and letting of subcontracts"; that Cunningham "entered upon the duties prescribed in said contract and continued to perform said duties until said buildings were entirely completed according to the plans and specifications as modified by plaintiff," for which he has received no compensation; and that Cunningham "paid out for labor and material used in said building over and above the moneys received by him from plaintiff the sum of four hundred and twenty-one and $^{47}/_{100}$ ($421.47) dollars." Claim of lien for the $984.83 was duly filed.

Upon these findings the court rendered judgment denying plaintiff's right to recover anything upon his complaint, and, as to defendant, likewise denied recovery upon the cross-complaint of her intestate other than an award of $10 costs. From judgment so denying her the relief prayed for, cross-complainant prosecutes this appeal upon the judgment roll alone, claiming that upon the findings she is entitled to judgment.

The court in express terms found that Cunningham did not agree that he would complete the construction and alteration of the building for a sum not exceeding $7,400, and, conceding the contract ambiguous in this respect, we must assume the interpretation thereof thus given on the oral evidence introduced to be correct. The provision in the contract to the effect that plaintiff would pay Cunningham 10 per cent. upon the cost provided the structures were completed for an amount not exceeding $7,400, read in connection with the sentence following it that "should he fail to keep within the above-mentioned maximum cost then no charge shall be made for such superintendence for such excess," should not be construed as releasing plaintiff from the obligation to pay the percentage charge on the $7,400 which he agreed to pay, but that as to such excess only no charge should be exacted by Cunningham. To say that, if the building cost $5 more than the $7,400, so specified, Cunningham should receive nothing for his services, would lead to an absurdity. Moreover, it appears that the plans and specifications were modified and changed by plaintiff, and that Cunningham, with the full knowledge of plaintiff who made the contracts for labor and materials, performed the service of superintending the work without objection from plaintiff until the building and alterations were entirely completed according to these modified plans and specifications.

As to the $421.47 alleged by Cunningham to have been paid out by him under the authority of plaintiff for labor and material used in the construction of the buildings and for which a personal judgment is asked, not only is there no sufficient denial of such fact, but the court found the allegations to be substantially true.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to enter judgment upon the findings in favor of cross-complainant upon the first cause of action for $740 with the usual decree for the foreclosure of claim of lien therefor filed, together with judgment in favor of cross-complainant and against plaintiff for the sum of $421.47 upon the second cause of action.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Action by Isabella Taylor against Manuel

J. Avila. From the judgment and an order denying new trial, defendant appeals. Judgment and order reversed.

H. Scott Jacobs, of Hanford, for appellant. Miller & Miller, of Hanford, and Frank B. Graves, of Lemoore, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

The plaintiff sued to establish and quiet title to her alleged right to maintain and use a water ditch extending from a branch of the main canal of the Lemoore Canal & Irrigation Company southerly through the land of the defendant to and over the land of plaintiff. The court found that the plaintiff was the owner of the alleged easement through the lands of the defendant and gave judgment accordingly.

The facts involved can best be shown by a chronological statement. In the year 1903, plaintiff owned 80 acres of land, being the west half of the northwest quarter of section 15, and the defendant, or his predecessors, owned the land immediately adjoining the same on the north situated in section 10. About that time, the ditch in question was constructed. It ran along the eastern edge of defendant's land to and into the plaintiff's tract, and was used to conduct water from said canal to and over the plaintiff's 80-acre tract for its irrigation, being also used by the defendant on his land for a like purpose. In that year plaintiff conveyed to one Gularte the northern 25 acres of her 80-acre tract, without reservation. Notwithstanding this conveyance, she thereafter continued to use the ditch as before, for the irrigation of the remaining 55 acres. The court found that this use was under claim of right, adverse to Gularte, and that thereby in the year 1913 she had acquired a prescriptive right to maintain and use said ditch for that purpose. On July 11, 1913, she and Gularte conveyed the said northern 25 acres of land to the defendant. The deed of conveyance described the property conveyed as follows:

> "All that certain lot, piece or parcel of land situate, lying and being in the county of Kings, state of California, and bounded and particularly described as follows, to wit: The north 25 acres of the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 15, township 19 south, range 20 east, M. D. B. & M., together with any and all water rights, ditch rights, or interests in ditches, canals, water or water rights, made use of for the purpose of irrigating or draining said lands or any of said lands above described."

The deed was in the form of a grant, bargain, and sale deed, and purported to be made for the consideration of $10. The actual consideration as it appears from the evidence, was $1,750, which sum was paid by the defendant to Gularte and the plaintiff jointly.

The defendant claims that the finding that the plaintiff had acquired the right to use the ditch, as against Gularte, by the adverse use mentioned, is without support in the evidence. He also claims that, even if it be conceded that a prescriptive title was acquired by the plaintiff, the deed of conveyance executed by the plaintiff and Gularte operated to convey to the defendant the absolute fee in the 25 acres and extinguished any easement therein which plaintiff may have possessed at the time.

[1] There is evidence sufficient to support the finding that the plaintiff, prior to the execution of said deed, had, by prescription, acquired title to the use and maintenance of the ditch over the said 25 acres which was then owned by Gularte. There was evidence to the effect that the plaintiff had continuously used the ditch to carry water from the canal to her land, for its irrigation, for more than five years prior to the execution of the aforesaid deed. The defendant contends that there was no evidence that this use was made under a claim of right, and hence that the use was not of the adverse character necessary to the acquisition of a title by prescription. The court may reasonably have inferred from the evidence that the use was made without consulting Gularte, openly and in the same manner as if the plaintiff had the absolute right to such use. From all these facts, the court might have presumed that the use was under claim of right and adverse. Franz v. Mendonca, 131 Cal. 205, 63 Pac. 361; s. c., 146 Cal. 642, 80 Pac. 1078; Silva v. Hawn, 10 Cal. App. 544, 102 Pac. 952; Evans Ditch Co. v. Lakeside Ditch Co., 13 Cal. App. 119, 108 Pac. 1027. We must assume, in favor of the judgment, that the court did indulge in this presumption. It constituted evidence in the case and was sufficient, in connection with the other evidence, to support the finding of title by prescription.

[2] We see no escape from the conclusion that the conveyance of 1913, by plaintiff and Gularte to the defendant, operated to extinguish all easements which the plaintiff then possessed over the said 25 acres of land.

> "A fee-simple title is presumed to be intended to pass by a grant of real property unless it appears from the grant that a lesser estate was intended." Civ. Code, § 1105.

[3] The rule that a grant, bargain, and sale deed operates to pass the title in fee, unless it contains in itself some limitation, exception, or reservation, and that it estops the grantor thereafter from claiming any right or estate in the land so conveyed, is too well settled to require citation of authority. We find in the above deed no limitation or qualification whatever upon the fee simple estate granted. The plaintiff, having made such conveyance, is estopped from asserting that it did not convey the entire estate in the land described.

[4] The contention of the plaintiff that the last clause of the description, the italicized portion, qualifies the fee-simple estate granted, and, in effect, reserves to the grantor the easement she theretofore had over the 25 acres, for the use and maintenance of the ditch wherewith to carry water across the same for the irrigation of the remaining 55 acres, cannot be sustained. The language is without ambiguity, and its entire purport is to transfer to the grantee all water rights, ditch rights, or interests in ditches, canals, water, or water rights, used to irrigate or drain the said 25 acres. It has no application or effect to reserve any then existing water rights, ditch rights, or other easements over the 25-acre tract for the benefit of the 55 acres. It may be conceded that the italicized clause in the conveyance was unnecessary, since the appurtenances to the land conveyed would pass by operation of law without express mention. Civ. Code, § 1104; Cave v. Crafts, 53 Cal. 140. But the language purports to grant easements to the grantee, not to reserve easements possessed by the grantor. However unnecessary it may have been, it could not by construction be given the opposite effect to that which the language plainly expresses. We are therefore forced to the conclusion that by this deed the plaintiff conveyed away all her interest in the easement over the 25 acres of land which she now seeks to have established, and it operated to defeat her rights, so far as the 25-acre tract is concerned.

The circumstances attending the execution of this deed suggest a probability that the parties intended to include in the deed a reservation in favor of the grantor of the existing easement she then possessed over the 25 acres of land as alleged in the complaint, and that by mutual mistake it was omitted therefrom. But the complaint contains no allegation of such mistake, and it does not seek any reformation of the deed. If any such mistake was made, the plaintiff can only avail herself of the benefits thereof by an appropriate amendment of the complaint when the case again reaches the trial court.

As the record stands, we have no choice but to reverse the judgment and order, and it is so ordered.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; LAWLOR, J.

TRACY v. SMITH et al. (L. A. 3983.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑44—VALIDITY OF CONTRACTS — FALSITY OF REPRESENTATIONS—EVIDENCE.

In an action to rescind a contract to purchase land, and to recover back the purchase price, evidence held sufficient to warrant findings that the vendor's representations as to the condition of a water plant through which the land was irrigated, and that the locality in question was free from frost, and a damaging frost had never been known, were false.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑36(2)—VALIDITY OF CONTRACTS — REPRESENTATIONS — FACTS OR OPINIONS.

Representations by vendors of land planted to citrus trees that a damaging frost had never occurred in the locality, and that the water plant through which the land was irrigated was in a splendid condition, were not mere statements of opinion, but were representations of material existing facts, as to which, since the representations were positive and unqualified, the truth should be established in the form made.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑36(2)—VALIDITY OF CONTRACTS — REPRESENTATIONS — FACTS OR OPINIONS.

While a further representation that the land was absolutely free from frost might, if considered alone, be deemed merely an expression of opinion, the false statement in connection therewith that a damaging frost had never been known in that neighborhood gave the statement that the property was absolutely frostless the character of a statement of fact rather than a mere opinion.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑37(4)—VALIDITY OF CONTRACT—FALSE REPRESENTATIONS —FAILURE TO INVESTIGATE.

The purchaser was not precluded from rescinding and recovering back the purchase price, because of failure to make inquiry, and investigation, the result of which would have disclosed the true condition of the water system, and the fact that severe frosts had occurred, where she was an inexperienced woman, without knowledge of the subject with which she was dealing, and there were no circumstances attending the transaction calculated to arouse her suspicion.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑173(10)—DEFENSES —LACHES—FAILURE TO URGE BELOW.

In a purchaser's action to rescind a contract and recover back the purchase price, laches could not be urged on appeal as a defense, where it was not raised in the trial court.

6. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑123—ACTIONS FOR RESCISSION — LACHES — NECESSITY OF PLEADING.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 434, providing that, if certain objections to the complaint be not taken by demurrer or answer, the defendant must be deemed to have waived the same, an objection to rescission by a purchaser on the ground of laches was waived when not pleaded.

7. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑119—RESCISSION BY PURCHASER—LACHES.

Where a purchaser induced to buy land planted to citrus trees, in July, 1912, by misrepresentations that a water plant, through which it was irrigated, was in good condition, and that damaging frosts had never occurred, did not discover until March, 1913, that her trees were killed by frost, and then learned that heavy frosts had occurred in previous years, and shortly thereafter consulted an attorney under whose advice she immediately took steps to secure redress, and did not learn until after suit was brought of the falsity of the representations as to the water system, there was no bar by laches.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by A. I. Tracy against Wm. M. Smith and another, individually and as a copartnership doing business as Smith & Mizener. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Humphrey Marshall, Jr., and Frederick A. Preston, both of Los Angeles, for appellants. W. C. Shelton, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. Action to rescind a contract whereby plaintiff agreed to buy from defendants for a stipulated sum a five-acre tract of land, planted to one-year old citrus trees, and to recover the sum of $1,500 paid defendants on the purchase price thereof, upon the ground that plaintiff was induced to make the contract and payment of purchase money thereon through and by means of false and fraudulent representations made by defendants as vendors of the same. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff defendants appeal.

It appears without controversy that plaintiff, a widow, having inherited a small sum of money from the estate of a deceased brother, conceived the idea of investing it in an orange grove. She was introduced to defendant D. A. Mizener, who, with Wm. M. Smith, constituted the copartnership of Smith & Mizener, which owned a subdivision of land in Los Angeles county called Orchard Dale. To secure a supply of water for the irrigation of the subdivision they organized a water company, which at the time of the transaction with plaintiff had installed a water system consisting of wells and some twelve miles of pipe lines for the development and distribution of water, shares in which company were allotted to and sold with each tract of land. Plaintiff was shown a lot designated on the map of said subdivision as lot 50 of block 3, containing approximately five acres, which in May, 1912, had been planted to orange trees, and for the purchase of which, together with 10½ shares of stock in said Orchard Dale Water Company evidencing her right to the use of water thereon, she, on July 8, 1912, entered into the contract which it is sought to rescind.

It is conceded that prior to the time that plaintiff entered into the contract the defendant D. A. Mizener represented to her that the Orchard Dale Water Company had then developed an unlimited supply of water amply sufficient for any use which the tract and the lots therein would ever require, and that the plant and water system through and by means of which the water was distributed was perfectly built and equipped and in such splendid condition that, barring minor repairs thereto, the cost of water to the stockholders in said company for the first five years would be the cost of production only, that the land was located in a district that was absolutely frostless, and that damage by frost had never been known in the neighborhood, all of which representations so made to plaintiff by Mizener the court found to be untrue and known by him to be untrue when made. The court further found that plaintiff was a woman of little experience in business and knew nothing of the subjects of representation, other than the statements so made to her by defendant Mizener, upon which she relied believing them to be true, and, because thereof, she was induced to and did enter into the contract.

Notwithstanding the repeated declarations of this court that, where there is a substantial conflict of evidence touching an alleged fact, a finding thereon by the trial court will not be disturbed, appellants attack the findings for want of sufficient evidence to support them.

[1] To quote at length the testimony would be an idle task. Suffice it to say that an examination of the record, while showing a conflict in the testimony offered, exhibits ample evidence tending to prove each and every fact found of which complaint is made. That the locality was not free from frost, but subject to killing frost, appears from the fact, conclusively shown, that all the trees, several hundred in number, planted in the succeeding spring upon said lot, though protected by paper wrappings, were during the winter of 1912-13 killed, and that, contrary to defendant's statement that "a damaging frost had never been known in that neighborhood," evidence was received which strongly tended to prove that during the winter immediately preceding the making of the contract severe frosts occurred in that locality doing great damage to the orchards and destroying many of the newly planted orange trees, all of which facts were well known to Mizener.

The finding that the representations in regard to the supply of water and the condition of the distributing system were untrue is supported by evidence given by Mizener himself, who was a member of the board of directors of the water company. His testimony was to the effect that at the time he made the statements to plaintiff he knew that a large part of the distributing system had deteriorated to an extent that rendered it unfit for use, that it was necessary to immediately replace some 6,000 feet of the main pipe line, and that the condition and quality of the water in one of the wells was such that the use thereof would have to be abandoned, in connection with which was the testimony of the president of the water company to the effect that for a long time prior to September, 1913, the condition of the pipe lines was such that from 15 to 20 per cent. of all the water pumped was lost by leakage, and that in September, 1913, the board of directors determined it to be necessary to make repairs, install new pipe, and develop an additional supply of water at a cost to the stockholders of $25,000. Indeed, it is impossible to perceive how the court could have reached any conclusion other than that the representations made by Mizener to plaintiff with reference to the water and distribution system were untrue.

[2] Appellants contend that, conceding a sufficiency of evidence to support the findings, the representations so found to have been made were matters of opinion only, and hence, even if they were false and untrue, such fact constituted no ground for an action of rescission on the part of plaintiff. The condition of the water system, and whether or not a damaging frost had ever occurred in the locality were material existing facts as to which, since the representations were positive and unqualified, the truth thereof should be established in the form made. In Sheer v. Hoyt, 13 Cal. App. 662, 110 Pac. 477, it is said:

> "Matters which might otherwise be only expressions of opinion, when stated as accomplished facts by one of the parties to a contract, and accepted and relied upon by the other as such, may, and often do, become the basis of actions for fraudulent misrepresentations."

See, also, Bickel v. Munger, 20 Cal. App. 633, 129 Pac. 958.

[3] It is true that as a rule expressions of opinion, whether real or pretended as to what may or may not occur in the future, or as to matters equally within the power of both parties to ascertain, are not deemed representations upon which, though admittedly false, an action can be founded. Winkler v. Jerrue, 20 Cal. App. 555, 129 Pac. 804. Hence, considered alone, the statement that the land was "absolutely free from frost" might be deemed merely a prediction or an expression of Mizener that in his opinion the locality would never be subject to frost. It was, however, a positive representation by one assuming to have knowledge of the subject, based upon a statement known by him to be false in fact that "a damaging frost had never been known in that neighborhood," which, if true, when made in connection with the statement that the property was absolutely frostless, warranted the making of the latter and gave it the character of a like statement of fact rather than a mere opinion. Muller v. Palmer, 144 Cal. 305, 77 Pac. 954.

[4] It is next insisted that plaintiff is not entitled to recover because she had opportunity for making inquiry and investigations, the result of which, if made, would have disclosed the true condition of the water system, and the fact that during the previous winter severe frosts had occurred in the neighborhood as a result of which much damage was done to the orchards, and many of the young trees killed. There were no circumstances attending the transaction calculated to arouse the suspicion of an inexperienced woman without knowledge of the subject with which she was dealing, or cause her to question assurances from Mizener that what he told her in response to her inquiries would be the truth. There is no rule of law which, under the circumstances here shown, required plaintiff in dealing with defendant to have acted upon the assumption that he was dishonest, and the law will not deny her redress because she failed to act upon such assumption.

> "The fraudulent vendor cannot escape from liability by asking the law to applaud his fraud and condemn his victim for his credulity." Strand v. Griffith, 97 Fed. 854, 38 C. C. A. 444; Spreckels v. Gorrill, 152 Cal. 383, 92 Pac. 1011; Eichelberger v. Mills Land & Water Co., 9 Cal. App. 628, 100 Pac. 117.

[5-7] The question of plaintiff's laches as a defense was not raised in the trial court, and hence should not, for the first time, be urged here. Indeed, objection to the recission on that ground, since not pleaded, is deemed waived. Code Civ. Proc. § 434. Moreover, if considered on the merits, the contention is ill founded, since it is shown that she did not discover that her trees were killed by the frost until March, 1913, and then learned of heavy frosts occurring in prior years. Shortly thereafter she consulted an attorney as to her rights, under whose advice she immediately took steps to secure redress for the deceit practiced upon her. Indeed it was not until after the filing of the first complaint in the action that she learned of the fraudulent representations as to the condition of the water system.

In re WILLITS' ESTATE. (L. A. 4726.)

1. WILLS 🔑55(1)—CONTEST—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence regarding an 88 year old testator's Spiritualistic activities, his belief in mediums, etc., held to sustain a verdict that his will leaving his property, except for minor legacies, to a Spiritualist companion, who had obtained some $85,000 from him during his lifetime, was void because of her undue influence and his mental incapacity.

2. WILLS 🔑329(3)—CONTEST—INSTRUCTIONS.

In a will contest, instructions that contestants must prove their case by preponderance of the evidence and that the burden of proving testator's mental incapacity was upon contestants held to sufficiently charge regarding the burden of proof.

3. WILLS 🔑330(3)—CONTEST—INSTRUCTIONS.

In a will contest, an instruction that an 88 year old testator was mentally incapacitated if he did not appreciate the nature of his property and his children's claims to his bounty held warranted by evidence regarding his belief in Spiritualistic mediums and gifts of $85,000 to a woman Spiritualist companion.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Milton L. Willits, deceased. From a decree denying the will probate and from an order denying a new trial, Emma Helmer appeals. Affirmed.

Earl Rogers, W. H. Dehm, and Milton M. Cohen, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. Kemp, Mitchell & Silberberg, and Enyeart & Holton, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Milton L. Willits died testate on January 6, 1915. At the time of his death he was 88 years and 2 months of age. The will was executed about 11 weeks before his death, and thus about 3 weeks before his eighty-eighth birthday. He left surviving him five adult children. By his will each of these children was bequeathed a legacy. To one was given $1,500, to another $1,000, to two others $500 each, and to the fifth the cancellation of a debt owed to the father. He gave also to two grandchildren $500 each. He then bequeathed to Bertha Helmer $1,000, and all the rest and residue of his estate of every kind and character to her sister, Emma Helmer. By this will the specific legacies amounted to $5,500. The total value of his estate at the time of his death is shown to be $2,500. This will was offered for probate. Two of the sons contested, and as grounds of contest pleaded: First, that the testator was not of sound and disposing mind at the time of the execution of the will; and, second, that the will was the product of undue influence exercised upon the testator by Emma Helmer.

In this contest the jury found for the contestants upon both of the grounds advanced. From the decree denying the will probate and from the order refusing to grant her motion for a new trial Emma Helmer appeals, and on appeal and as the principal ground for the reversal of the decree and order insists that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict of the jury.

In view of the fact that the value of the testator's estate disposable under his will is but $2,500, and that the specific legacies amount in value to $5,500, it is at once apparent that Emma Helmer, the residuary legatee and devisee, will take nothing under the will. Her appeal, however, will be understood when it is explained that in the three years immediately preceding his death, during which time the deceased was in intimate association with Emma Helmer, he gave to her and she received from him real and personal property of a value in excess of $85,000, which property was all of the property which the old man owned, so that at the time of his death nothing remained but a small amount of personal property, live stock, and farming implements upon a valuable farm in Illinois, which farm he had previously deeded to her. Of everything but this personal property he had stripped himself or been stripped. Moreover, of his five adult children some were married and with children of their own. None of them was in affluent circumstances, several of them quite poor. Some of them had lived upon and faithfully worked the father's farm in Illinois. The meager legacies, the face value of which they could not receive, were all that was left to them, while this stranger in blood, who had known him casually for but one or two years and intimately for the three years preceding his death, took or was given all that the old man had. Actions are pending against Emma Helmer, instituted by the heirs at law of the deceased, for an accounting of his moneys, which in large sums came into her possession during his lifetime, and which she contends were gifts from him, and to set aside conveyances of real property which he made to her. Manifestly, if the heirs at law should be successful in these actions, the property thus recovered would become the residuum of his estate and fall under the residual clause of his will, by which Emma Helmer would take it all. Hence, while taking nothing under the will as it now stands, her contingent interest is very large, and hence, therefore, her appeal from the decree denying it probate.

As the principal proposition advanced upon appeal is the insufficiency of the evidence, a résumé of that evidence becomes necessary. Milton L. Willits, born in 1826, early in his lifetime married, became a farmer in Illinois, and by thrift and industry acquired large and valuable holdings of farm land. His wife bore him ten children, five of whom survived her and are still living. She died in 1869, and he became interested in Spiritualism. This study or pursuit obsessed him. He endeavored to make a medium of his second wife, and the family friction which resulted led to proceedings instituted in the courts of Illinois to have him declared incompetent. In this his second wife and some of his children joined. A verdict of the jury favored him. His children grew up without any serious estrangement apparently resulting from this. His second wife was divorced and died, and his interest in Spiritualism waxed. In his own home he had "circles" about three times a week, attended other "circles" away from home, and had a "cabinet" for Spiritualistic purposes built in his house. He firmly believed not only that he held through mediums direct communication with spirits in the other world, but that these spirits could take to themselves matter and so "materialize"; that through their direct aid and instrumentality one received messages, directions as to the conduct and the management of one's worldly affairs, artistic development in "picture making," in medicine and healing. He had for "guides" a band of spirits who were active in various branches for which they were best fitted. The personnel of this band changed from time to time. Some were the spirits of people that he had known on this earth; others he had never known. Thus Dr. Dent, a former friend, was the head of the band that exercised healing powers. Maude Adams, the actress, was to him "Little Maudie" and was one of his spiritual guides. He knew that she had been a famous actress, but he knew also that she had "passed over" because she told him so. When it was established to him that "Little Maudie" was alive and still devoting her histrionic genius to the delight of audiences here on earth, he satisfactorily explained that sometimes evil spirits did this sort of false impersonation. The same is true of a "medium," Mrs. Karcher, into whose hands he fell. Mrs. Karcher was just on the point of perfecting herself by self-abnegation and study so that she could transmute dross into gold and silver ores of great value. More than this, she could, when she had attained full power, "materialize" these valuable metals out of airy nothingness. Mrs. Karcher secured a written contract under which the deceased bound himself to maintain her during her period of study until she perfected herself, when out of the profits which would immediately follow she was to repay him. He became alarmed about Mrs. Karcher, declaring not unwisely, as his experience proved, "that he was afraid of women; they always had gotten my money." So he gave her $100 and fled. He was perturbed for fear Mrs. Karcher would seek him out and endeavor to enforce his contract, but was much relieved when her spirit appeared and told him she was dead. Being afterwards advised that Mrs. Karcher was still upon this earth, he declared that there must be some mistake about it, as her spirit had certainly appeared to him.

Paying more attention to chronology, after the divorce from his second wife, Mr. Willits became interested in a medium who was a great "magnetic healer," and installed her with her husband and son on his farm, where they remained for over a year. In 1882 or 1883 there was laid out at Mt. Pleasant Park, at Clinton, Iowa, a Spiritualistic camp ground where were held annual meetings. Mr. Willits assisted in its organization, advanced money, joined as maker of a note to secure a loan for it, was a director, and attended every meeting from its organization until his death, except in the years 1912 and 1913. In this park he built two cottages which he rented during the meetings, himself living in one of them. About 1897 he came to this state under the directions of the spirits and became involved with the Karcher woman, as above related. Leaving California, he went to Chicago, and from 1902 to 1907 spent the major portion of his time with a Mrs. Green, who there resided. Mrs. Green was a medium, and séances were held at her house. With Mr. Willits' assistance she was developing a higher order of Spiritualism known as the "Magi." The members of this society of Magi called to their aid in their troubles over mundane affairs the spirits of the ancient Atlantians, who had their earthly residence upon the now submerged continent of Atlantis. Mr. Willits' especial "guide" or "control" during this period was an Atlantian spirit called "Billy." These researches into higher spiritual truths and demonstrations were rudely interrupted by the police of Chicago, who broke into one of Mrs. Green's meetings and after a fight arrested her.

After this experience, with faith unshaken, he continued to attend the meetings at the Spiritualistic camp. He was confirmed in his devotion by a communication which he received from Mr. Burdick, whom he had known on earth, and who had "passed over," Mr. Burdick telling him that the $5,000 which he had loaned to the Mt. Pleasant Park was the best investment he (Mr. Burdick) had ever made, the reason being, as Mr. Burdick's spirit explained, that when he "passed over," because of this loan, the spirits "in the other world had met him and taken good care of him and fixed him up right." Mr. Willits' own exposition upon this subject was that the more you did for Spiritualism in this world the better off you were with the spirits in the next world, and he instanced the case of a friend of his, William Drury by name. William Drury in his lifetime had done nothing for Spiritualism, and when he "passed over" he was left in "outer darkness"; the spirits did not receive him very well, and he did not get along with them, but, being informed of this, he, Mr. Willits, got in communication with them and fixed it up so that now "Mr. Drury was doing fairly well."

Thus Mr. Willits' life flowed on, very much under the guidance of the communications which he received from the spirit world through the mediums whose society he frequented. In 1908 he first met Emma Helmer at the Spiritualistic camp, and again in 1910. Their acquaintance up to this time was casual. Emma Helmer's occupation was that of a stenographer. She had spent several years in that capacity in a lawyer's office in Denver, Colo., and she had been a public stenographer. She was interested in Spiritualism. She addressed the camp meetings upon the wonders of Spiritualism. She was active in endeavoring to sell "scholarships" which entitled the holder to take a course of study in spiritualism and for the sale of which she received a commission. Knowing Mr. Willits but casually, in 1910, after the camp meeting, she sent him a Christmas card. Later he wrote to her, asking her if she would take care of the renting of his cottages in 1911, and she agreed to do so. At the camp meeting of 1911, which both attended, they came into close personal relationship. To a witness who was present at that camp meeting, a Miss Burton, Mr. Willits expressed the desire to find Mr. Green (the husband of Mrs. Green, the medium above mentioned) and to induce him to go with him to California. Emma Helmer, being told of this by Miss Burton, asked Miss Burton to "tell Mr. Willits that 'I will take him to California. That is just where I want to go, but I can't go unless I find some one to pay my traveling expenses.'" The result was that when Mr. Willits left the camp ground Emma Helmer went with him. They traveled about together, going to New Boston, in Illinois, where was Mr. Willits' farm; thence to Colorado, Emma Helmer's home; thence back to New Boston; then to San Diego, Cal.; and finally to Los Angeles, where a home was bought and paid for with Mr. Willits' money. They moved from this first home to another in Los Angeles, and there he lived with the Helmer family until his death. He thus lived with the Helmers for the last 3 years of his life, from the time when he was 85 years of age until he was 88 years of age. During their travels, of course, Mr. Willits paid all expenses. Within two months after they were settled in Los Angeles Miss Helmer received from him $1,000. Within three months she had received over $4,000. In a period of 7 months she was the recipient of $12,670. In the year 1913 she obtained over $4,000. In 1914 she obtained over $3,000. This was all the money which he had accumulated in the past years, and in addition to this she received the major portion of the money which he received from the sale of a part of his farm land—all of it indeed save that which went for the payment of his obligations. Before this friendship sprang up his monthly expenditures had not exceeded $100. Afterward he not only withdrew and turned over to Emma Helmer all the moneys which he had accumulated and all that came in as proceeds from his farm, but he was constantly importuning his banker in Illinois to send on every deposit made to his credit as promptly as possible. Every one of these deposits was turned over to Miss Helmer. In these years he was physically feeble, his personal expenditures negligible, for he seldom or never left the Helmer home excepting in the company of Emma Helmer. He wrote a number of letters quite by himself. Later his correspondence was taken over by Emma Helmer, and his letters were typewritten by this competent stenographer.

In 1914 Emma Helmer and her mother accompanied or took the old man to the Iowa Spiritualistic camp meeting. She carried the purse and attended to all the details of travel. Their relationship was such that at the camp meeting Mr. Bloomer, a friend of Mr. Willits, complimented him on his "fine-looking wife." Miss Helmer replied: "We are not married. I am keeping house for him. God sent me to take care of him." They made this Eastern trip in the late summer or early autumn of 1914, but in the middle of April preceding Mr. Willits executed to Emma Helmer his deed of all of his Illinois lands. The deed was prepared by Miss Helmer herself. The form appropriate for such a conveyance under the laws of the state of Illinois, and the description of the property, being obtained from Mr. Willits' papers and the deed itself typewritten by Miss Helmer. After the deed was so drawn by Miss Helmer in her home she escorted the old man to a notary public, where he executed it and gave it to her. She did not have it recorded until after his death, and indeed maintained the utmost secrecy about it, even under circumstances, as will hereinafter appear, where a disclosure was manifestly called for. While at the camp meeting in Clinton, Iowa, in like manner the deceased conveyed to her the two cottages which he owned. This conveyance she had placed of record, and it is not without significance that the deed to the Iowa property, which in all probability would not come under the notice of the deceased's relatives, was recorded, while the utmost reserve was maintained in the matter of the deed to the farm in Illinois where Mr. Willits' children resided. Leaving the camp meeting, the three, Mrs. Helmer, Miss Helmer, and Mr. Willits, went to New Boston, near to which town his farm was situated. They saw none of Mr. Willits' children, and it is doubtful whether those children were advised of their father's presence. This last visit to New Boston was made after Mr. Willits had conveyed to Miss Helmer all of his real property. Notwithstanding this, he gave a written option while at New Boston agreeing to sell his ranch for $150 an acre, except 80 acres of rough land which was to be sold at $100 an acre, and agreeing further to pay $1 per acre commission upon such sale. Miss Helmer explains this act of Mr. Willits as being his endeavor "to get a price on the land," but it is not a strained inference to conclude that he thought that he was giving an option for the sale of real property which was his own.

While they were thus visiting at New Boston, and on the eve of their departure for California, they were served with summons in conservator or guardianship proceedings instituted by one or more of the children. Mr. Willits became much excited, but Miss Helmer quieted him, telling him to keep cool, that "she would see him through; that she had not been in a law office four years for nothing." Mr. Willits was on the verge of a collapse. Mr. Campbell, a disinterested witness, testified that Miss Helmer declared that these proceedings "were a disgrace that the children had brought upon Grandpa that she was not going to stand for, but she would spend her own money if necessary in order to defend his good name." Mr. Campbell explained that senility was not a reflection upon his good name, but was a mere matter of physical and mental decadence, and that the action was quite natural, because he knew that in his "normal mind he [Mr. Willits] would desire his property to go to his children." He also told Miss Helmer, who solicited him to bear testimony to Mr. Willits' competency, that he could not take the witness stand and say that he considered Mr. Willits capable of handling his own affairs, and referred to the control exercised in those affairs by the spirits. Miss Helmer "said that was a matter of religious belief and ought not to enter into business affairs. But I pointed out to her in what manner that might easily influence the disposition of a man's property." All this resulted in Miss Helmer seeking the services of Mr. Hanna, an attorney at law in the nearby town of Monmouth. In the conversations and consultations over the matter of the conservator proceedings, at all of which Miss Helmer was present, she made no disclosure to Mr. Hanna of the fact that Mr. Willits had given to her substantially all that he possessed. The conversations assumed that Mr. Willits was still a prosperous, prudent farmer, whose children were endeavoring to take his "property" away from him. Miss Helmer is particular to say that they were endeavoring to take his "property," and not his "farm"; Mr. Willits' property at that time, under Miss Helmer's contention, being wholly and exclusively the small amount of personalty left on her farm. Notwithstanding the fact that one of the specific charges in the conservator proceedings was that he was squandering and dissipating his estate, she made no disclosure to Mr. Hanna of what in fact Mr. Willits had done for and given to her.

It was there and at that time and under these conditions that the will here questioned was drawn and executed in the office of Mr. Hanna. The circumstances leading up to the making of the will are narrated by Mr. Hanna and Miss Helmer. They are somewhat vague, but it does appear that Mr. Hanna, the attorney for Mr. Willits only in the conservator proceedings, asked Miss Helmer if Mr. Willits had made his will, and when it was found that he had not, he was advised to do so. The conversations were for the most part in the presence of Mr. Hanna, Miss Helmer, and her mother, though Mr. Hanna conversed with Mr. Willits alone. As a result of his conversation with Mr. Willits, and without suggestion from any one else, the will was drawn in accordance with Mr. Willits' expressed wishes. Mr. Hanna dictated the terms of the will, Mr. Willits came back in the afternoon of the same day the will had been prepared, it was read to him, and its legal effect explained. No one was present when it was read and explained to him, and Miss Helmer was not present when it was executed. Immediately thereafter Mr. Hanna secured the presence of Mr. McCray and Mr. Martin, two business men of the town and wholly disinterested, and they witnessed the execution of the will. Such is Mr. Hanna's version, given by deposition.

Notwithstanding this testimony, the two disinterested witnesses to the execution of the will declared that there was a lady in the room at the time Mr. Willits executed the will in their presence, that it was not a stenographer in Mr. Hanna's office, as Mr. Hanna endeavored to make it appear, but it was a young woman in street clothes, whose name they believed was Helmer, and, as their recollection served, she had her hat on. Of significance in this connection is the varied evidence given by Miss Helmer herself. Upon the witness stand Miss Helmer testifies positively that she was not present at the time the will was made; that she went to Mr. Hanna's office in the afternoon to take Mr. Willits away with her; that she did not hear the reading of a will to Mr. Willits and did not see the witnesses who signed the will as witnesses; she did not hear the will read nor any of its provisions and did not know of the execution of the will until afterward, when Mr. Willits told her he had a will drawn and gave it into her charge. Miss Helmer first gave her deposition concerning these matters. This deposition was transcribed and submitted to her for correction. She retained it in her possession for some weeks. During this time the deposition of Mr. Hanna was taken in Illinois, and Mr. Hanna, it will be remembered, testified that Miss Helmer was not present at the reading of the will to Mr. Willits or at its execution. The following excerpts from Miss Helmer's testimony are illuminating. The answers which are canceled are those answers which appeared in the original transcription of her deposition. The amended answers were given under the indicated circumstances, the emendations being underscored. Asked how she obtained possession of the will, her answer is:

"Mr. ~~Hanna~~ Willits gave it to me to take, and I returned it to Mr. Hanna afterward."

Asked when she first saw the will in Mr. Willit's possession she answered:

"Back there ~~is~~ after we left Mr. Hanna's office."

Her deposition then proceeds as follows:

"Q. Do you remember the fact that Mr. Martin and Mr. McCray were called in from another office to witness the will?

"A. ~~I think they were."~~ I don't know anything about it.

"Q. During the time you were there was this will signed?

"A. ~~Probably.~~ I don't know.

"Q. Don't you know that was the fact?

"A. ~~I guess that was so.~~ I don't know that it was.

"Q. Did you hear the will read at that time?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. Did you hear any of the provisions of it?
Just a little.
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. You heard all of that read to Mr. Willits by Mr. Hanna?
No
"A. ~~Yes,~~ sir.
"Q. You were near enough so that you could hear the reading of that will?
of a little of it.
"A. Yes, sir; I heard the reading of ~~that will.~~
"Q. And then Mr. Willits signed it?
I don't know when he signed it.
"A. ~~Yes sir; I think he signed it then.~~
"Q. And then he called out the two witnesses and signed it before them?
I do not know when the witnesses were called in.
"A. No sir; ~~they called them in before.~~
"Q. And he signed it in the presence of the witnesses?
He evidently did.
"A. ~~Yes sir; in the presence of the witnesses.~~
"Q. After this was all read over, what did Mr. Willits say?
I don't know what he said; I was not there.
"A. ~~He didn't say anything.~~
"Q. He didn't say, 'That is all right'?
How can I tell when I was not there?
"A. ~~He didn't say anything I suppose that is so he said, 'That is all right.'~~
"Q. Did he say anything?
Mr. Hanna could tell you.
"A. ~~I think that is what he said.~~
"Q. Isn't it a matter of fact that he did not know what was being talked about?
I don't believe Mr. Willits ever signed anything he didn't understand.
"A. ~~Of course he knew what it was. He made it himself. He ought to know it was all right.~~
"Q. Didn't he say to Mr. Hanna, 'That is all right; that is the way I want it'?
I do not know what he said.
"A. ~~I think he did say it.~~
"Q. As a matter of fact, Mr. Willits was so deaf that he couldn't hear?
He could hear when spoken to distinctly.
"A. ~~Yes sir.~~
"Q. He read it so loud that you and everybody else could hear?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Were the witnesses present when the will was being read over to Mr. Willits?
I suppose so.
"A. ~~Yes sir.~~
"Q. And they discussed the contents of the will with Mr. Willits?
Maybe they did.
"A. ~~They talked to him and had a conversation with him.~~
"Q. What did he say?
know what they said.
"A. I don't ~~remember.~~
"Q. Didn't he tell you that people could come back?
under certain conditions.
"A. He believed that they could communicate.^
"Q. And appear to them?
"A. Yes, sir.
}he might have thought this possible."

The argument of appellant is that Mr. Willits, notwithstanding his age, was a shrewd, prudent business man of cultivated mind; that he was a student of Spiritualism, no more; and that his Spiritualistic theories were not permitted by him to influence him in the conduct of his daily life and business affairs. The evidence upon these matters, besides that of disinterested witnesses, is abundant from the writings of the deceased himself. Touching his cultivation and Spiritualistic beliefs the following are extracts from a letter written by him in 1912 to a comparative stranger, who he apparently thinks is related to him. He writes to him something of his genealogy, explaining that:

> "On my mother's side of the family they wer what wer called Pensylvaney Duch both family were Quakers so we belong to that sock my father & mother died with what was called milk sickness one dieng one day and the other the next."

He then proceeds:

> "I spent the most of the last ten years in the city of Chicago Ill in the family by the name of Green the wife of Mr. Green is what is known as a materializing medium. This somewhat strange process consists in reclothing the spiritual body in a real material body as it seams in the mortal body this is accomplsid by by the help of the of a band of kemests on the spirit side of life who are able to draw the neccessary elements from the meduom & the sitters in the circle to reclothe the spiritual form my own experience has proved to me beond a posable doubt that this is a truth. How do I know this to bee true because I had had actual communication with many people that I was well acquainted with they lived in the life form also those that I never knew on earth spirit communion I think is the grandest thing that came to earth without it we could get no evidence of a futur life all Bibles all evidence of a future life would bee imposable By what natrar is this wonderful blessing secured by the messmerick or psychic law of controle which enables one person to controle the physical body of another person I have been given the proscess by which this is obtained is to depolarize the brain cells that is to throw the celles into a negative condition this anables the spirite or operator to express itselfe the same that it does or can through its own organism you know it is n uncoman thing for people to be paralozed and loose controle of part of their physical bodies and sometimes the hole physical structure."

In 1907 the husband of one of his daughters had died. His name was Hollis. He writes to his daughter that he has heard from Hollis in the spirit world, and tells her:

> "Bro H H Roberts & his Sone Earnest wer hear the Son to get help Hollis brought for the same purpose here they meet their Friends this gives the Spirite a better opportunity to gain strength and light I was toled that Hollis & Earnest were about in the same Condition."

Hollis and his wife owed Mr. Willits money in his lifetime. When Hollis died he left his wife in poverty. The father enforced from his widowed daughter the collection of this debt upon the ground that Hollis in the spirit world had directed him so to do, and he writes to her:

> "Well that was Fortunate inDeed for if I had not been here and so situated that I could arrange matters with Hollis agreeable to his wishes to have the Debt payed off theire could have been nothing done to settle the Debts satisfactorily so I feel sure evry thing has turned out for the best."

It will be remembered that he sold 80 acres of his land for $14,000. That was in 1912, and while he was living with Miss Helmer. By far the greater portion of this money went to Miss Helmer. A disinterested witness testified that Mr. Willits told him that:

> "He had got orders to sell that land. He said he had been told to sell it and his business here was to sell it. He said he had a communication from the spirit world."

Touching his mental condition during the last portion of his life, his mind was feeble, his memory bad, and he either did not understand or took no interest in anything saving Spiritualism.

> "He told me many times that that was one of the greatest things that he could do. Every dollar that he spent in developing mediums and assisting the spirits to manifest would be a great source of pleasure to him in the future life."

[1, 2] It would be a serious reflection upon the intelligence of the profession if space should be given to a discussion of the sufficiency or insufficiency of this evidence to support the verdict. It speaks so positively and convincingly as to require no comment, and we pass on, therefore, to the asserted errors in the matter of the instructions which the court gave and refused to give to the jury. The first complaint is that the court refused to instruct the jury that the burden of proof was on contestant to establish the allegations of incompetency and undue influence. Yet throughout its instructions the court with much repetition did so instruct the jury. Thus it told the jury:

> "One has the right to make an unjust will, an unreasonable will, or even a cruel will. He may make an unjust, an unnatural, or capricious will. Unless you believe the contestants have proven their case by a preponderance of the evidence, you must find for the proponent."

Again, after telling the jury that the presumption of law was that the testator was of sound and disposing mind on the date on which the will was made, the court added:

> "Likewise in this connection the burden of proving the contrary by a preponderance of the evidence rests upon the contestants."

[3] The court instructed the jury as follows:

> "You are instructed that, if M. L. Willits was of unsound mind either as to the nature and extent of his property or as to his relation to his children and the nature of their claims to his bounty, he cannot be regarded as of sound mind and memory, though he may have been of sound mind as to all other persons and matters."

The objection to this instruction does not appear to be that it contains any erroneous declaration of law, but only that there was no evidence in the case to which it was applicable, appellant declaring that:

> "There is an abundance of evidence in the case presented by the contestants themselves showing that the decedent at all times was perfectly competent to understand the treatment accorded him by his children in contrast with that of strangers who took care of him, and that he had full understanding of the status of his property."

The foregoing summarization of the evidence, imperfect as it is, is a complete answer to this objection.

Having thus considered all of the propositions advanced by appellant, it follows that the judgment and order appealed from should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

BAILEY v. BAKER, Sheriff. (Civ. 2055.)

PROCESS ⚷52—EXECUTION—EXPIRATION OF SHERIFF'S TERM.

Under Pol. Code, § 4171, process remaining with a sheriff, partly unexecuted, at expiration of his term, is to be executed by his successor; so that mandate requiring him, after such time, to complete the execution commenced by him, is wrong.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Process, Cent. Dig. §§ 59–63.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Milton T. Farmer, Judge.

Mandamus by Matthew Bailey against T. A. Baker, Sheriff of Kern County. From an adverse judgment, defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. W. Wiley, of Bakersfield, for appellant. E. L. Foster, Geo. E. Whitaker, and Chas. A. Barnhart, all of Bakersfield, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The defendant appeals from a judgment directing the issuance of a peremptory writ of mandate requiring him, as sheriff of the county of Kern, to take possession of and deliver to the plaintiff certain described personal property. A former judgment, rendered in October, 1913, after an order sustaining a demurrer to the petition, was reversed by this court. For a statement of the facts alleged in the petition we refer to that decision. Bailey v. Baker, 28 Cal. App. 537, 153 Pac. 242. The case was tried by the superior court in January, 1916, and the present appeal purports to be from a judgment rendered on February 9, 1916.

The court found the facts in accordance with the allegations of the petition; also that the personal property described in the petition was not claimed by any person other than the Security Trust Company; also that, after having taken possession of the property as required in the claim and delivery proceedings in the action of Bailey v. Security Trust Company, the defendant sheriff redelivered the same to that corporation, although there had not been given to the plaintiff, Bailey, any notice of time and place when the sureties would justify, and the sureties did not justify upon the redelivery undertaking which had been given by the Security Trust Company to the sheriff. The court further found that the term of defendant Baker as sheriff expired in January, 1915, and that from and after that date one D. B. Newell was and is the duly elected, qualified, and acting sheriff of Kern county.

Appellant claims that the judgment should be reversed, for the reason that a writ of mandate may not issue against an ex-sheriff to compel him to perform duties under process placed in his hands while he was sheriff. We have decided this question in another proceeding incidental to the present case. Ex parte Baker, 162 Pac. 922. That was a habeas corpus proceeding, arising out of an order committing Baker to the custody of the sheriff for contempt by reason of his refusal and neglect to comply with the directions of the writ of mandate issued in this case. This court held that the duties of sheriff under the facts of this case were controlled by section 4171 of the Political Code, wherein it is provided that:

⚷For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

> "* * * When any process remains with the sheriff unexecuted, in whole or in part, * * * at the expiration of his term of office, said process shall be executed by his successor or successors in office. * * *"

Having stated the rule that the powers of the office shall not continue to be exercised by one whose term has expired, we said:

> "Unexecuted process in his hands does not lose its force, but the power of the law with respect to such process thereafter moves through the arm of the new officer, to whom whatever belongs to the office should be delivered."

We are satisfied with the conclusions reached in Ex parte Baker, supra, from which the further conclusion follows that the appeal should be sustained.

The judgment is reversed.

EMINENT DOMAIN ⟹198(1)—LAND FOR RAILROAD—PUBLIC NECESSITY.

In the absence of express provision in Civ. Code, § 465, and Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1238, 1241, 1244, relating to acquisition by eminent domain of lands for use of a railroad corporation, and defining the procedure therefor, which would require it to show affirmatively that there is an existing public necessity for the construction of the road for which the land is sought, that is not a question to be litigated, except to the extent that a person whose lands are sought to be taken may put in issue the good faith of the corporation in seeking to acquire the land for a private interest or end rather than for the public use.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; R. H. Latimer, Judge.

Condemnation proceedings by the Castro Point Railway & Terminal Company against the Anglo-Pacific Development Company. From an adverse judgment, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Reed, Black, Nusbaumer & Bingaman, of Oakland, for appellant. McCutchen, Olney & Willard, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action for the condemnation of certain lands of the defendant in the city of Richmond for the use of the plaintiff as a railroad corporation. The cause was tried before the court without a jury. The evidence was not voluminous, and there is little, if any, dispute as to the facts of the case. The main and practically the only question involved is as to the sufficiency of the plaintiff's proof to warrant the trial court in denying the defendant's motion for a nonsuit and to justify its judgment of condemnation. Upon the trial of the cause, the plaintiff introduced in evidence a certified copy of its articles of incorporation, showing that it was a regularly organized railroad corporation, having for its object the construction of a railroad for the doing of a general freight and passenger business; and also presented in evidence the resolutions and maps of the corporation showing the proposed route of its railroad and the site and location of its terminals, and also showing the location of the lands of the defendant and others proposed to be taken. From these maps it appeared that the proposed railroad would be about two miles long, having its northern terminal in the hamlet of Winehaven, where it would connect with a railroad already there known as the Belt Line, and running around the easterly and northerly shores of the Richmond peninsula, and that the plaintiff's proposed line would thence extend southerly along the shore line of the peninsula to deep water. There was then presented the testimony of the chief engineer of the plaintiff, who testified that he had made surveys of the route and terminals of said railroad, and that the lands of the defendant sought to be condemned formed a part of said route and of one of said terminals, and were necessary for such uses, and that the work of constructing said railroad was in progress. With these proofs the plaintiff rested its case, whereupon the defendant moved for a nonsuit upon the ground that the plaintiff had offered no proof showing any public necessity for the existence of such a railroad or for the taking of the lands in question. The court denied this motion, whereupon the defendant offered evidence tending to show that there were other lands which it was claimed were equally available for the uses to which the plaintiff proposed to put the land sought to be condemned, and also tending to show that there was no present public necessity for the building of said railroad growing out of an existing freight or passenger traffic needing to be served by it. The defendant also tendered some evidence showing that the incorporators of the railroad in question were also the principal owners of a rock quarry at or near its proposed northern terminal, and which would be chiefly benefited by the construction of the railroad. The court, however, rendered judgment in plaintiff's favor, whereupon the defendant prosecutes this appeal.

The sole question presented to the court upon this appeal is as to whether the plaintiff, in addition to the proofs above set forth, was required to show affirmatively that there existed a public necessity for the railroad for the uses of which the lands of the defendant were sought to be taken. The contention of the appellant is that, when this issue is raised by the pleadings, the burden is cast upon the plaintiff to make such affirmative showing as to the existence of a present public necessity for the railroad in question. On the other hand, the respondent maintains that when the plaintiff has shown, as it did in this case, that it was a railroad corporation duly organized for the purpose of constructing and operating a railroad and conveying freight and passengers for hire, and that the land sought to be condemned was necessary for the uses for which it is sought, it has sufficiently established its right to the exercise of eminent domain in the taking of said lands for such uses under section 465 of the Civil Code and section 1238 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

We feel constrained to give our concurrence to the above contention on the part of the respondent herein from a consideration of the terms of the sections of the Codes above cited, and from what appears to us to be the settled view of the courts of this state respecting the proofs required in cases of this character. Section 465 of the Civil Code in its enumeration of the powers of railroad corporations provides:

> "Every railroad corporation has power: * * * (7) To purchase lands * * * to be used in the construction and maintenance of its road, and all necessary appendages and adjuncts, or acquire them in the manner provided in title 7, pt. 3, Code of Civil Procedure, for the condemnation of lands."

Section 1238 of the Code of Civil Procedure, under the title of "Eminent Domain," provides as follows:

> "Subject to the provisions of this title, the right of eminent domain may be exercised in behalf of the following public uses: * * * (11) Railroads. * * *"

Section 1241 of the Code of Civil Procedure, under the same title, contains the following provision:

> "Before property can be taken, it must appear: (1) That the use to which it is to be applied is a use authorized by law; (2) that the taking is necessary for such use; provided, when the legislative body of a county, city and county, or an incorporated city or town, shall, by resolution or ordinance, adopted by a vote of two-thirds of all of its members, have found and determined that the public interest and necessity require the acquisition, construction or completion, by such county, city and county or incorporated city or town, of any proposed public utility, * * * and that the property described in such resolution or ordinance is necessary therefor, such resolution or ordinance shall be conclusive evidence; (a) of the public necessity of such proposed public utility or public improvement; (b) that such property is necessary therefor."

Section 1244 of the Code of Civil Procedure under the same title prescribes what the complaint in a condemnation suit must contain, as follows:

> "The complaint must contain: (1) The name of the corporation, association, commission or person in charge of the public use for which the property is sought, who must be styled plaintiff. (2) The names of all owners and claimants of the property, if known, or a statement that they are unknown, who must be styled defendants. (3) A statement of the right of the plaintiff. (4) If a right of way be sought, the complaint must show the location, general route, and termini, and must be accompanied with a map thereof, so far as the same is involved in the action or proceeding. (5) A description of each piece of land, or other property or interest in or to property, sought to be taken, and whether the same includes the whole or only a part of an entire parcel or tract or piece of property, or interest in or to property. * * *"

A comparison of these several sections of the Code setting forth the right and the procedure in cases of eminent domain discloses that their only statement as to the cases wherein any proof or showing of a public necessity for the taking of property under the right of eminent domain designates cases where municipal corporations are seeking through their legislative bodies to acquire property for public uses; and that in such cases the resolution or ordinance of such legislative body shall be conclusive evidence of the public necessity of such proposed utility or improvement. In all other cases where private property is so sought to be taken by those entitled to exercise this right under section 1238, Code of Civil Procedure, all that is required to be shown is that the use for which the property is to be taken is a public use, and that the property is necessary for such use. By the express terms of section 1238 it is provided that railroads are public uses in behalf of which the right of eminent domain may be exercised; while section 465 of the Civil Code expressly grants to railroad corporations the right to acquire lands by condemnation to be used in the construction and maintenance of their roads. It would thus appear that there is no express requirement in the sections of our Code which relate to the acquisition of lands for the use of railroad corporations through the exercise of eminent domain, and which define the procedure therefor, which would require these quasi public corporations seeking to exercise that right to show affirmatively that there is an existing public necessity for the construction of the particular railroad for the uses of which such lands are sought to be taken.

In the early case of Contra Costa R. Co. v. Moss, 23 Cal. 324, it was held that, when the Legislature determines that railroad corporations were so far public in their nature as to be entitled to exercise the right of eminent domain, the necessity for the particular railroad seeking to exercise that right was hereby established, and that the question as to whether there was a public need for such railroad was no longer a judicial question except in cases where the rights of private ownership were being invaded under pretense of an appropriation for a public use.

In the case of City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 27 Pac. 604, which was an action for the condemnation of lands for sewer purposes, it was held that when the Legislature had defined sewerage to be one of the public uses for which private property may be taken, and when a city or town decides for itself, as it may do, that a sewer is desirable, it is not bound to prove that such sewer is necessary, but only that the taking of the property it seeks to condemn is necessary for the construction of the sewer; "when it shows that the use to which the property is to be applied is a public use (and that is shown by the statute in this case), the inquiry on that head is closed. Code Civ. Proc. § 1241."

In the case of San Francisco & San Joaquin Valley R. Co. v. Leviston, 134 Cal. 412, 66 Pac. 473, the case of City of Pasadena v. Stimson, supra, was cited as authority for the proposition that, as to the necessity for the right of way, the existence of the public use and the location through the defendant's land established the necessity.

While the decisions of the courts of other jurisdictions are not uniform upon the subject, the effect of the foregoing cases would seem to be to settle the law in this state in favor of the view that, when the Legislature has declared that railroad corporations shall have the right to condemn lands of private persons for their uses, the question as to whether there is a present public need for the construction and operation of the particular railroad seeking to exercise that right is no longer a judicial question to be litigated in the condemnation proceeding, except to the extent that a private person whose lands are sought to be taken may put in issue the good faith of the railroad corporation in seeking to acquire his land for uses which are not public but really to subserve some private interest or end; and such we understand to be the full extent and effect of the cases of County of San Mateo v. Coburn, 130 Cal. 631, 63 Pac. 78, 621, and of Madera Railway v. Raymond Granite Co., 3 Cal. App. 668, 87 Pac. 27. In so far as this latter issue is presented in the case at bar, it need only be said that, without reviewing it, the evidence sufficiently justifies the findings of the lower court to the effect that the plaintiff is acting in good faith in seeking to construct, maintain, and operate its railroad, and that the same will be of benefit and use to the public; and that, while it is true that the incorporators of the plaintiff are also directors and stockholders of certain corporations engaged in the operation of quarries which will be benefited by the building of such railroad, it was nevertheless not incorporated for the mere purpose of being of private benefit to those interested in said corporations, but was incorporated for the purpose of building and operating a railroad between certain termini, and that said railroad will be so situated when constructed as to be of benefit and use to the public. These findings of the trial court will not, under the settled rule, be disturbed upon appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; Clifton H. Connick, Judge.

Thomas Maschini was convicted of selling alcoholic liquors in "no-license territory," and he appeals from the judgment and order denying him a new trial. Affirmed.

G. M. Pittman, of Eureka, for appellant.
U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendant was by information charged with, and by a jury convicted of, the crime of selling alcoholic liquors in supervisorial district No. 2, in Humboldt county, which is alleged to have been at the time of the commission of the act so charged "no-license territory"; it having been assigned to that category by the electors of said supervisorial district at an election held therein under the provisions of the so-called "Wyllie Local Option Law" (St. 1911, p. 599) on the 23d day of April, 1912.

The appeals are from the judgment and the order denying him a new trial.

[1] Although the record on appeal was filed on the 17th day of November, 1916, in the Supreme Court, to which the appeal had erroneously been taken, and the cause transferred to this court and the record filed here on the 21st day of November, 1916, the defendant failed to present and file a brief within the time required by the rule of this court, and none has since been filed or permission to file one asked for. The cause was placed upon the calendar of the regular April term of this court, beginning on the 9th day of April, 1917, and when so placed upon said calendar the attorney of record of the defendant was regularly notified of that fact. When the cause was called for hearing and argument, the defendant was not represented by counsel, nor did he appear in person to support his appeal, and no oral argument in his behalf was made. The Attorney General, in view of the situation thus presented, properly submitted the cause for determination upon the record. People v. Coates, 163 Pac. 502; People v. Magri, 163 Pac. 503.

We have carefully examined the testimony, the rulings of the court upon the evidence, and the instructions. We have not discovered any prejudicial rulings admitting or rejecting testimony, and the charge to the jury contains a fair and correct statement of the principles of law pertinent to the issues.

It is not deemed necessary to reproduce herein, even synoptically, the testimony from which the jury reached their conclusion that the accused was guilty as charged in the information. It is sufficient to say that we have, as stated, carefully read it, and thereby have been convinced that it fully supports the conclusion that, on the 20th day of August, 1916, supervisorial district No. 2 of Humboldt county was dry or no-license territory; that the unincorporated town of Shively is situated within said "dry" unit; that the defendant kept a hotel in said town; and that on the day named he sold to one O. E. Gardner, an attaché of the office of district attorney of Humboldt county, in the presence and sight of one H. F. Kilker, another attaché of said office, a bottle of whisky, and received in payment therefor from said Gardner the sum of 50 cents.

[2, 3] The defendant positively denied selling any intoxicating liquor to Gardner, on the day named or at any other time, further testifying that what he did sell to him was soda water, and there was apparently some corroboration of that testimony. But manifestly the most that this court can say of that testimony is that its effect was only to produce a conflict in the evidence, which it was solely within the competency of the jury to resolve. And it was entirely with the jury to decide whether certain testimony offered by the defense in impeachment of the character of the witness Gardner for truth, veracity, and integrity was or was not sufficiently persuasive to accomplish its purpose.

The record presents to us no other alternative but to affirm the judgment and order, and it is so ordered.

ROEBLING CONST. CO. v. DOE ESTATE CO. (Civ. 1625.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 12, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 11, 1917.)

CONTRACTS ⚷289—SUFFICIENCY OF PERFORMANCE—BUILDING CONTRACT.

A building contract specifying material and method of work for constructing cement floors to be approved by owner's architect is complied with, and contractor entitled to compensation, where specifications are followed and monthly certificate of architect approving work is obtained, although the flooring subsequently proved unsatisfactory, and the architect refused a final certificate on account of such defects.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 1310.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; L. F. Price, Judge.

Action by the Roebling Construction Company against the Doe Estate Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. C. Campbell, Weaver, Shelton & Levy, of San Francisco, for appellant. F. M. Parcells, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. The action was brought to recover a balance of $12,039.75 alleged to be due upon the contract price for concrete work performed on the Wiley B. Allen building in San Francisco. The complaint sets forth in hæc verba the contract upon which the action is based. Among its provisions are the following:

"First. The contractor agrees, within the space of fifty (50) working days from and after the date of recording of this contract, to have the foundations in shape to receive the cast-iron bases and sidewalk beams (balance of work in 35 working days); to furnish the necessary labor and materials, including tools, implements and appliances, required, and perform and complete in a workmanlike manner all the trench, excavating reinforced concrete foundations, reinforced basement walls, basement floor, all floor and roof slabs, penthouses, all girder and column concrete, fireproofing, all concrete sidewalks, retaining walls, etc., and other works shown and described in and by, and in conformity with the plans, drawings and specifications for the same made by Havens & Toepke, the authorized architect employed by the owner, and which are signed by the parties hereto, one set of which is on file in the office of the city and county recorder, and the other in the office of the architect subject to inspection by parties interested.

"Second. Said architect shall provide and furnish to the contractor all details and working drawings necessary to properly delineate said plans and specifications; and the work is to be done and the materials furnished in accordance therewith under the direction and supervision and subject to the approval of said architect, or a superintendent selected and agreed upon by the parties hereto, within a fair and equitable construction of the true intent and meaning of said plans and specifications. * * *

"Fifth. The owner agrees, in consideration of the performance of this agreement by the contractor, to pay, or cause to be paid, to the contractor, his legal representatives or assigns, the sum of thirty-nine thousand five hundred seventy-six dollars in United States gold coin, at times and in the manner following, to wit, seventy-five per cent. of the amount of labor performed and materials erected at building and as estimated according to the whole contract price and payable on the first day of each month, commencing on the first day of August, 1908. and the balance to wit, the sum of nine thousand eight hundred and ninety-four dollars, thirty-five days after completion and acceptance by the architects of this contract.

"Provided, that when each payment or installment shall become due, and at the final completion of the work certificates in writing shall be obtained from the said architect, stating that the payment or installment is due or work completed, as the case may be, and the amount then due; and the said architect shall at said times deliver said certificates under his hand to the contractor or, in lieu of such certificates, shall deliver to the contractor in writing, under his hand, a just and true reason for not issuing the certificates, including a statement of the defects, if any, to be remedied, to entitle the contractor to the certificate or certificates. And in the event of the failure of the architect to furnish and deliver said certificates or any of them, or in lieu thereof the writing aforesaid, within three days after the times aforesaid, and after demand therefor made in writing by the contractor, the amount which may be claimed to be due by the contractor, and stated in the said demand by him for the certificate, shall, at the expiration of said three days become due and payable and the owner shall be liable and bound to pay the same on demand.

"In case the architect delivers the writing aforesaid in lieu of the certificate then a compliance by the contractor with the requirements of said writing shall entitle the contractor to the certificate. * * *

"Thirteenth. The payment of the progress payments by the owner shall not be construed as an absolute acceptance of the work up to the time of such payments; but the entire work is to be subject to inspection and approval of the architect or superintendent at the time when it shall be claimed by the contractor that the contract and works are completed; but the architect or superintendent shall exercise all reasonable diligence in the discovery and report to the contractor as the work progresses of materials and labors which are not satisfactory to the architect or superintendent so as to avoid unnecessary trouble and cost to the contractor in making good defective parts. * * *

"All floor slabs in the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth floors except in corridors and lavatories to be cemented over with a coat at least ¾" thick made of equal parts of fine, sharp, clean, screened gravel to equal parts of either Golden Gate or Standard cement as selected. Said cementing to be perfectly smooth and and well troweled and to be perfectly level. * * *

"Before the concrete topping is placed on concrete floor slabs throughout third, fourth, fifth, and sixth floors see that all concrete work is well cleaned off (broom cleaned) then well wet and dusted with cement, all to be done before the top coat of cement is applied."

Paragraph 4 of the complaint was amended during the trial to read as follows:

"That each and every of the covenants and conditions in said agreement contained upon the part of said plaintiff to be by it kept and performed have been fully complied with, kept, and performed by it. And plaintiff further says: That it did all the work in said contract mentioned, and duly performed on its part, in every respect, said work according to specifications and terms of the contract. That said work was fully performed, finished, and completed by plaintiff on or about the 1st day of July, 1909. * * * That thereafter, to wit, on the 25th day of September, 1909, plaintiff demanded of defendant's architects certificates in writing for the payments, in said contract mentioned and provided to be made unto plaintiff, then remaining unpaid, but plaintiff says said architects refused to deliver to plaintiff such certificates in writing for said payments, and ever since have refused and still refuse, to deliver the same unto plaintiff. That of the sum of $39,576, the amount by said defendant agreed to be paid to plaintiff for said work, as in said contract provided, no part thereof has been paid saving and excepting the sum of $27,536.25, so that plaintiff says, and charges the fact to be, that a balance of $12,039.75 is due, owing and unpaid therein."

The answer set up the defense of nonperformance. A cross-complaint was also filed by defendant alleging damages: (1) Cost of linoleum laid down to minimize the damages; (2) loss of rentals; (3) estimated cost of completing the work required by the contract, amounting in all to $19,753.20. As the decision of the court was against the defendant upon the issue of performance, it necessarily disposed of the claim for damages. Says the brief of defendant:

"If the decision thereon be upheld, the litigation will be concluded in all respects; if the court shall hold that the plaintiff did not perform, the matter will be at large and a new trial of all issues will be in order."

The controversy involves only the work done in the construction of the top cement finish upon the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth floors of the building. The court made the following findings:

"III. As to the allegations contained in amended paragraph IV of said complaint, and the denials of said allegations contained in paragraph V of the defendant's answer herein, the court finds that plaintiff fully performed all of the covenants and conditions of said contract, and the modification thereof set forth in paragraph III as amended, upon its part to be kept and performed, and did all the work in said contract mentioned, and did fully perform on its part, in every respect, said work according to the specifications and terms of the contract; and did fully perform, finish, and complete said work in compliance with all of the conditions, and in accordance with the plans and specifications, of said contract on the 1st day of July, 1909.

"As to said allegations and denials, the court further finds that the construction and installation of the top cement finish upon the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth floors of the building in which the work was contracted to be done and performed was completed by plaintiff on or about the 29th day of March, 1909, in accordance with the specifications and conditions of said contract, in a good and workmanlike manner, and when completed, as aforesaid, said top cement finish was well troweled, perfectly smooth, and perfectly level; that on said date said top cement finish was in a wet and soft condition, well troweled, perfectly smooth, and perfectly level, and thereupon plaintiff covered said top cement finish of said floors with sand, in order to facilitate the drying and hardening of said top cement finish upon said floors; that on the 5th day of May, 1909, said sand was removed, whereupon it was discovered that in the interim said top cement finish had become dry and had become hardened, and was on said date found to be cracking, checking, and loosening from the slab or rough concrete upon which said top cement finish had been applied; that thereafter said top cement finish of said floors continued to crack and check and become loosened from said slab or rough concrete, and said cracking, checking, and loosening increased steadily until approximately 50 per cent. of said top cement finish of said floors had been cracked, checked, or loosened from said slab or rough concrete; that said condition of said floors continued up to the date of the trial of this action.

"That said contract expressly provides that the architect for the owners of said building shall provide and furnish to the contractor all details and working drawings necessary to properly delineate said plans and specifications, and that the work shall be done and the materials furnished in accordance therewith, under the direction and supervision, and subject to the approval of, said architect, or a superintendent selected and agreed upon by the parties thereto; and the court here finds that the materials used by plaintiff in the construction of the top cement finish of the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth floors of said building were inspected and approved by the architect for said building, or his authorized representatives; and that said materials were mixed in the proportions specified by the contract; and that the work of laying or installing the same upon said floors was all done and performed by plaintiff under the inspection, direction, and supervision of said architect, or his authorized representative, and approved by him, from the commencement of the laying of said top cement finish until its completion, on or about the said 29th day of March, 1909; that the cracked, checked, and loosened condition of said top cement finish was not discovered by, or known to, either plaintiff or defendant until the sand was removed therefrom, on or about the 5th day of May, 1909; that said condition of said top cement finish was and constituted the first intimation received by defendant as to the ultimate condition of said floors."

Upon the matters set up in defendant's cross-complaint and the answer thereto, the court made the following findings:

"As to the allegations set forth in paragraph XII of plaintiff's answer to the first count of the cross-complaint herein, the court finds that on or about the 29th day of March, 1909, the plaintiff and cross-defendant herein had fully performed and completed that portion of the work stipulated to be done by it under its said contract with said cross-complainant, comprising the cement topping of the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth floors of said building, leaving the same perfectly smooth, well troweled, and perfectly level, and that, in performing said work, cross-defendant fully complied with the requirements of said contract, which specified that the floor slabs on said floors should be cemented over with a coat at least three-fourths of an inch thick, made of equal parts of fine, sharp, clean, screened gravel to equal parts of either Golden Gate or Standard cement, as selected; that thereafter, to wit, on or about the 5th day of May, 1909, said cement topping or surface on said floors was discovered by said cross-complainant and said cross-defendant to have cracked and checked in several places on each of said floors, whereupon and thereafter, and at various times during the months of May, June, July, and August, 1909, cross-defendant removed the cracked portions of said cement topping and replaced the same with the materials and in the proportions and in the manner as required by the specifications aforesaid each and every time leaving the cement topping so removed perfectly smooth, well troweled and perfectly level; that the checked and cracked condition of said floors was in no wise caused by any act or thing done, or any act or thing undone, by cross-defendant, or to any fault, lack of good workmanship or failure or refusal to comply with the specifications of said contract upon its part to be performed; that the cracking and checking of said cement topping upon said floors was caused by the improper mixture of gravel and cement, said gravel and cement having been mixed and laid down by plaintiff in the proportion of equal parts, being the proportion specified and required by the contract."

Plaintiff had judgment as prayed for, from which defendant appeals as also from the order denying its motion for a new trial.

Appellant's contentions are:

"I. The findings and the evidence both establish that the plaintiff did not perform the work required by the contract in that the top cement finish on four floors of the building was cracked and loose from the rough concrete.

"II. The complaint and the evidence both establish that the plaintiff did not obtain the acceptance nor the certificates of the architect which under the contract were the prerequisites of payment of the money sued for, but, on the contrary, that the architect refused to accept the work. There is no averment, finding, or suggestion of proof that the architect's decision was impelled by fraud or resulted from mistake."

It is obvious from the findings that the trial court decided that plaintiff had fully performed its contract, in respect of these floors, by constructing them, as it had agreed to do, in accordance with the plans and specifications prepared by defendant's architects and written into the contract. Defendant's position is that if a possible way was open to plaintiff by which it could have produced a good floor it was its duty to do so, failing which the consequences must fall upon plaintiff; that, in short, it guaranteed a good floor unless it was impossible to build it by following the specifications.

Plaintiff's contract was to do certain concrete work in connection with the construction of a class A steel and concrete building being erected by defendant. The portion of the work which plaintiff was to do was specifically pointed out; the materials it was to use and the proportions of the ingredients of the concrete were specifically mentioned and the manner in which plaintiff was to apply the mixture carefully provided for. The evidence was that plaintiff performed the work in strict compliance with the requisites of the specifications, and, with the exception of the floors mentioned, the result was entirely satisfactory.

It appears that in constructing these floors plaintiff laid the concrete foundation, or built what are termed the "floor slabs," but did not put on the finishing coat until a month or six weeks later; plaintiff being engaged upon other parts of the work meanwhile. Before the finishing coating was laid on the slabs, the latter were cleaned and prepared as directed by the specifications, the top coating was made "perfectly smooth and well troweled and perfectly level," as called for in the specifications. The surface was then covered with sand, an approved method of protecting the cement in the process of hardening or curing, and adhering to the slabs. Later, as found by the court, on the removal of this sand, cracks in the cement and failure to unite with the slabs in places were disclosed. All this work at its various stages was done under the personal inspection of the architect or his representative, and, as the court found, with his approval. The court found that plaintiff "laid the cement topping upon the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth floors of said building in a good and workmanlike manner, and did fully perform and complete the work thereof in compliance with the conditions and in accordance with the plans and specifications of the contract." Plaintiff's attention having been called to the defective condition of the floors, it promptly expressed its willingness to remedy it, and it made an attempt to do so by relaying the defective places in the top coating, in doing which it followed the requirements of the specifications for this work in every particular; but the mixture failed to unite with the slabs, the result being that about 50 per cent. of the floors was in this defective condition when plaintiff completed his contract and had called for a certificate of final completion, which was refused. There was evidence tending to show that a better result might have been obtained had plaintiff put on the top finish contemporaneously with laying the slabs; that to have "scored" the top cement finish on the concrete slabs, or to have marked the floors off into "expansive joints," would also have been in accordance with good workmanship; that the cement finish might have been flooded with water and allowed thus to dry or cure and less shrinkage might have followed. These suggestions of experts were obtained upon defendant's theory that, had there been any possible way to do the work which would have avoided what happened, it was plaintiff's duty under the contract to adopt such way regardless of the obligations imposed by the terms of the contract and regardless of the duty put upon the architect in the matter of personally directing, instructing, inspecting, and supervising the work. Scoring was not mentioned in the specifications. The architect testified:

> "Q. As a matter of fact, you personally directed them to omit the scoring? A. They asked me how I would like to have the floors scored. I said, 'No,' make the floors smooth and level."

Nothing was said in the specifications about getting the top finish on simultaneously with the fabrication of the slabs. The specifications read:

> "* * * Before the concrete topping is placed on concrete floor slabs throughout third, fourth, fifth, and sixth floors, see that all concrete work is well cleaned off (broom cleaned) then well wet and dusted with cement; all to be done before the top coat of cement is applied."

These directions were faithfully followed. They show clearly, however, that the laying on of the top finish contemporaneously with the construction of the slabs as the work progressed was not contemplated. The witnesses generally agreed that to have laid the top coating contemporaneously with the other work on the floors would have been the best practice, though some of them thought it impracticable and much more expensive than the course taken. Architect Toepke testified:

> "Q. Then, in your opinion, it would make no difference whether the cement coating was laid simultaneously with the concrete slab, or some time afterwards? A. Well, I do not see that there would be but very little difference."

And this may account for the absence of any such requirement in the specifications or any directions other than therein expressed. The contract expressly provided that all work shall be done "in accordance with the plans and specifications prepared by Havens & Toepke, architects, and under their direction, supervision and control," and "material delivered or work erected not in accordance with the plans and these specifications must be removed at the contractor's expense and replaced with other material or work satisfactory to the architects"; but it was also provided that the architects "shall exercise all reasonable diligence in the discovery and report to the contractor, as the work progresses, of materials and labors which are not satisfactory to the architect or superintendent, so as to avoid unnecessary trouble and cost to the contractor in making good defective parts." The delay in putting on the top finish was known to the architects, and, if it was likely to affect the work injuriously, the architects in fairness should have called attention to it. They made no objection, but supervised the putting on of the top finish and approved the work. Furthermore, the work on the four floors was finished on February 26, 1909, "with the exception of an opening of a brickmason's hoist," estimated to cost $120, and, on March 1, 1909, a statement of the condition of the work at that time was presented to defendant, a bill made out, and demand made for payment, and the record shows that payment was made on the architects' certificate that this particular work of laying the top cement finish was completed with the exception of a small amount of trowel finish about the elevator opening, amounting to $120. And the court found that all the floor work, including the top finish, was completed on or about March 29, 1909, "under the direction, inspection, and supervision of said architect, or his authorized representative, and approved by him, from the commencement of the laying of said top cement finish until its completion." Except as to this small bit of work, noted in the statement, the architects' certificate was in effect a certificate of the completion of the work on these four floors on March 1st. It is urged by defendant against this conclusion that the architects could not at that time (March 1, 1909) have known what subsequently developed and hence could not have intended to certify to the completion of the work. But they knew as much as plaintiff knew, and they knew that plaintiff was doing the work and in fact did the work precisely as it had agreed to do it, and, unless it can be held that plaintiff guaranteed the work to result in a perfect floor, it seems to us that defendant ought not to be permitted now to go behind the certificate of its agents chosen by it to pass upon this very matter. We cannot say that the contract imported such guaranty. It seems to us that, when the plaintiff agreed "to furnish the necessary labor and materials, including tools, implements and appliances, required, and perform and complete in a workmanlike manner * * * all floor and roof slabs * * * and other works shown and described," etc., its engagement was to do this, as the contract specifically provides, "in conformity with the plans, drawings and specifications for the same made by Havens & Toepke, the authorized architects employed by the owner, * * *" and "under the direction and supervision and subject to the approval of said architects." This interpretation, we think, is, as the contract provides, "within a fair and equitable construction of the true intent and meaning of said plans and specifications." Where, in the erection of a building, the owner agrees to pay a certain sum for doing a certain part of the work and specifically provides the kind of materials to be used and the manner in which they are to be used and stands by and directs and afterwards approves the work, the risk of its serving the purpose intended by the owner is clearly upon him.

Appellant cites English and American cases in which the contractor was held to have guaranteed good results in the absence of an express warranty to that effect, although counsel say:

> "In some cases a contrary conclusion has been reached where the plans and specifications are furnished by the owner and the builder merely agrees to perform the labor and furnish the materials specified."

We do not feel called upon to give particular attention to the cases cited in which we think the rule enunciated will be found to rest largely either upon the terms of the contract, or upon the character of the work to be done. The rule applicable here, we think, will be found in Bancroft v. S. F. Tool Co., 120 Cal. 228, 52 Pac. 496, and Mannix v. Tryon, 152 Cal. 31, 91 Pac. 983. And the distinction made in these cases is pointed out in Bryson v. McCone, 121 Cal. 153, 53 Pac. 637, where it was held that defendant undertook, not only to make the plant according to specifications, but also guaranteed that it would do certain work. In Mannix v. Tryon it was said:

> "He (the plaintiff) did not agree generally to plaster the dwelling, which would leave to him the selection of the materials and the method of doing the work. His agreement was to do it in a way that the owner and the original contractor had designed; according to the specifications which they had agreed on. He had no discretion in the matter. When he followed strictly those specifications, used exactly the materials they called for in the composition of the mortar and hard finish, and applied them in a workmanlike manner, he did all his contract called for. He did not contract for results, but only to do the work in a specified way."

Jones & Laughlin Steel Co. v. Abner Doble Co., 162 Cal. 497, 123 Pac. 290, is a case where it was contended that the contractor warranted that the floors of the warehouse, being constructed in part with materials furnished by plaintiff, would bear certain weights. Speaking of the defendant, the court said:

> "The inference is that it could and would judge for itself as to the sizes of beams required. It had a competent and experienced architect in its employ. There is nothing necessarily showing that the defendant was not, or did not consider itself, competent to determine the matter, or that it relied on plaintiff's advice or suggestions regarding it; or that plaintiff offered or undertook to give such advice."

We have not referred to the evidence and the findings as to the cause of the cracking and checking of the top dressing. The court found, and there was evidence to support the finding, that:

> It "was caused by the improper mixture of gravel and cement, said gravel and cement having been mixed and laid down by plaintiff in the proportion of equal parts, being the proportion specified and required by the contract."

We cannot see that it was essential to the finding of the court that plaintiff had fully performed its contract, to make a finding as to the improper proportions of sand and cement in the mixture required by the specifications, as the cause of the defects in the floors. If, as we hold, plaintiff contracted only to furnish the materials and do the work in compliance with the plans and specifications and in good and workmanlike manner, the cause of the defects would be immaterial. Whatever the materiality of the finding may be, if any, its tendency is to fix the responsibility upon defendant by whose direction this improper mixture was used.

It appeared that the last progress payment was made by defendant in pursuance of the last certificate issued by the architect, April 7, 1909. The bill, dated April 1, 1909, states on the debit side the total due under the contract at that date, less 25 per cent. Then follow payments as credits and dates of payment, including the March payment, leaving a balance, $836.25, for which a certificate was given. The final bill rendered is dated June 23, 1909, in like form, for the whole contract price less the credits from the beginning to the April 1st bill, inclusive, and less the 25 per cent. reserved under the contract. During the ensuing months, plaintiff endeavored to remedy the defects in the floors, keeping itself strictly within the specifications, but met with the same difficulty encountered in first laying them. On September 24, 1909, plaintiff made written demand on the architects for certificate of acceptance and final payment, and on September 27, 1909, the architects replied, stating:

> "That a certificate of acceptance will not be issued for the reason that the cement topping of the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth floors is not in compliance with the specifications, it being loose in several places and badly cracked and will not be acceptable to owner in its present condition."

It appeared that, beginning on September 1, 1908, and continuing monthly on the first of each succeeding month to April 1, 1909, inclusive, architects' certificates were issued and payments promptly paid thereon, and up to this time no question arose as to materials or workmanship. The top dressing of these floors was substantially completed in February, with the exception of the little work already pointed out costing $120, and this remaining work was done in March and carried into the bill of April 1st, which was paid on the architects' certificates.

Plaintiff relies and, it seems to us, with justifiable confidence, upon the case of City Improvement Co. v. City of Marysville, 155 Cal. 419, 101 Pac. 308, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 317. It is true that in that case there was a final certificate of completion, and this is urged as one of the grounds for distinguishing the two cases. It seems to us that, so far as the work in question is concerned, the March certificate, while perhaps not an acceptance, was a certificate of the completion of the work in accordance with the plans and specifications, and the court found that this work had been fully performed and completed on March 29th.

The rule is well established, as stated in Coplew v. Durand, 153 Cal. 278, 279, 95 Pac. 38 (16 L. R. A. [N. S.] 791):

> "Where work is to be done to the satisfaction of a person, evidenced by a certificate to that effect, the production of such a certificate is a condition precedent to a right of action upon the contract." City Street Improvement Co. v. Marysville, supra; Cal. Sugar Agency v. Penoyer, 167 Cal. 274, 279, 139 Pac. 671.

The court said, in Coplew v. Durand, supra:

> "The case which is thus presented is one where the work has been completed to the satisfaction of the owner and architect, and the latter thereafter and without warrant refuses to issue his certificate for the final payment. The refusal under these circumstances being unreasonable, the necessity for the production of the certificate is dispensed with."

It must not be overlooked that the only part of the work now or at any time in controversy was the top dressing of the floors. We have seen that the March certificate of completion covered this work, and it was paid for on that certificate, so that it cannot be said the plaintiff was wholly without the architects' certificate. The refusal to issue the final certificate in September was based upon the claim "that the cement topping of the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth floors is not in compliance with the specifications." The evidence was, and the court found, that the work was done in conformity with the specifications in every particular, and at the time of its completion no question arose as to any feature of the work. On the contrary, it was declared by the architect Toepke to be satisfactory. The reason given for the refusal was not founded on the facts, nor upon what we regard as the fair construction of the contract, and can only be based upon the theory that plaintiff guaranteed a good floor, which was a matter not within the province of the architect to foreclose and make the ground of his refusal; neither is it a theory justly deducible from the provisions of the contract.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by K. Karahadian against Philip Lockett. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Everts & Ewing, of Fresno, for appellant. John Shishmanian, Barbour & Cashin, and D. A. Cashin, all of Fresno, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. The plaintiff in this action was employed and authorized by the defendant "to sell" certain real property belonging to the defendant, and "to receive any deposit" which might be paid on account of the purchase price. Thereafter the plaintiff, as the agent of the defendant, entered into a written contract with parties known as "Kludgian brothers" to purchase the defendant's property for the sum of $14,000, but upon terms slightly different from those originally proposed and authorized by the defendant. The defendant, however, in writing ratified the contract thus made by the plaintiff, and accepted from him the sum of $200, which, simultaneously with the execution of the contract, had been paid to plaintiff by the intending purchaser on account of the purchase price. In addition to containing all of the essentials of a valid and enforceable contract of purchase and sale, the contract in question provided that "upon a favorable report of the attorneys" for the purchaser concerning the title to the property the parties thereto would enter into an agreement for the purchase of the property "upon the terms and conditions therein mentioned." Subsequently the attorney for the purchasers rejected the title to the property for alleged defects, which it is admitted did not exist, or if existing could have been readily cured. Ultimately the purchaser refused upon demand to perform his contract, and declined the defendant's tender of a deed to the property. The defendant had agreed to pay the plaintiff 5 per cent. of the purchase price in the event of a sale. Upon substantially these facts the case was tried in the court below and judgment rendered for plaintiff in the sum of $700 upon a finding to the effect that the plaintiff had procured a purchaser for defendant's property who had entered into a valid and enforceable contract binding him to purchase. The evidence we think supports this finding.

[1-3] The clause in the contract concerning the necessity for a favorable report upon the title to the property from the attorneys of the purchaser cannot be construed, as counsel for the defendant contends, to mean that the obligation of the purchaser was dependent upon a mere arbitrary, capricious, and whimsical rejection of the title to the property by his attorney. Obviously the clause in question did not have the effect of making the contract here involved merely an agreement for an option to purchase rather than a completed contract of purchase and sale. The payment of the deposit of $200 on account of the purchase price was an acceptance of the terms and conditions of the contract (Benson v. Shotwell, 87 Cal. 49, 25 Pac. 249, 681; Easton v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 307, 27 Pac. 280, 25 Am. St. Rep. 123); and while it savored to some extent of a preliminary contract which contemplated that it would be followed by another contract of purchase and sale, nevertheless inasmuch as it was mutually obligatory and contained in and of itself all of the essentials of a valid and enforceable contract, obviously the defendant, had he so desired, could have compelled the intending purchaser to perform, and therefore neither the latter's refusal to accept the deed tendered to him, nor his failure to enter into the second contract, could operate to defeat the plaintiff's right to recover his commission from the defendant.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

FAIRMONT CREAMERY CO. v. LOS ANGELES ICE & COLD STORAGE CO.

(Civ. 2217.)

1. Factors 🔑52—Pledge of Goods.

Though, before a car of eggs is consigned to a factor, he had obtained customers therefor, he receives the property for the purpose of making a transfer, within Civ. Code, § 2991, providing that one who allows another to assume the apparent ownership of property for purpose of making any transfer of it cannot set up his own title, to defeat a pledge of the property, made by the other, to one who received the property in good faith in the ordinary course of business and for value.

2. Factors 🔑52—Pledge of Goods—Good Faith of Pledgee.

For defendant who took a pledge of a car of goods from a factor to whom plaintiff had consigned them to be a pledgee in good faith, and so under Civ. Code, § 2991, entitled to hold them against plaintiff, he need not have examined the bill of lading, which in fact gave the factor apparent ownership, but he could at his risk assume that it did.

3. Pledges 🔑9—By Apparent Owner—For Value.

So far as a pledge by apparent owner of property is for past indebtedness, it is not for value, necessary under Civ. Code, § 2991, to be good against the real owner.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Finlayson, Judge.

Action by the Fairmont Creamery Company against the Los Angeles Ice & Cold Storage Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Sidney J. Parsons and Horace Wilson, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. Henry K. Norton and Wilbur Bassett, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Action for conversion. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant has appealed from the judgment.

As shown by the evidence, it appears that on the 17th day of June, 1913, one Fred F. Lambourn was engaged in business at Los Angeles as a broker selling merchandise on behalf of consignors, and also as a dealer in merchandise on his own account. He had been in business for several years, and so continued until the 4th day of August, 1913, when he was adjudged bankrupt. The plaintiff was engaged in the produce business at Omaha, Neb., and had been doing business with Lambourn as broker since April, 1911. On June 5, 1913, Lambourn telegraphed to plaintiff that he had sold a car of eggs. The telegram was as follows:

"Sold car candled current receipts fifty three and over small dealers eighteen cents track. Wire car number and when can ship."

On June 7, 1913, the plaintiff shipped the carload of eggs thus ordered and made the consignment directly to and in the name of Lambourn. The car arrived at Los Angeles on June 17th. When the merchandise was shipped from Omaha, a bill of lading therefor, showing the shipment from plaintiff to Lambourn, was received by plaintiff from the railroad company and was mailed by the plaintiff to Lambourn. According to the testimony of plaintiff's sales manager, this was done that Lambourn "might obtain possession of the eggs for the purpose of making delivery to the various parties to whom he had made sale as our broker." At the same time, the plaintiff forwarded, through the Omaha National Bank to that bank's correspondent in Los Angeles, a draft on Lambourn directing him to pay to the order of the Omaha National Bank the sum of $2,160 "and charge to account of this company." The draft was not paid.

On June 17, 1913, Lambourn informed the superintendent of the defendant that he had a car of eggs and wanted a loan on it. The eggs were taken into possession of defendant and placed in its warehouse, and defendant issued to Lambourn a warehouse receipt therefor. Thereupon, and on the same day, the defendant loaned to Lambourn the sum of $2,300, taking his note for that sum, together with an agreement pledging and depositing with the defendant said carload of eggs as collateral security for the payment of that or any other liability or liabilities of Lambourn to the defendant, "due or to become due or that may be hereafter contracted." At all times mentioned in this opinion Lambourn was indebted to the defendant in an aggregate amount much exceeding the value of the property claimed by the plaintiff in this action. The evidence does not show when this indebtedness, other than the $2,300 loan, was incurred, except that defendant had been making loans to Lambourn for about two years, and on August 4, 1913, he owed it $90,000. In making that loan of June 17th the defendant made no special inquiry as to ownership of the merchandise and did not see or ask to see the bill of lading. It simply accepted Lambourn's statement that he had the car there and the fact that it was there.

The defendant did not, at the time of making the loan and receiving the pledge, have any knowledge concerning the ownership of the property other than that it was in possession and control of Lambourn, as above stated. On September 10, 1913, the defendant sold said lot of eggs and received therefor the sum of $2,880. On September 24, 1913, the plaintiff made written demand upon the defendant, stating therein that the plaintiff "is the sole owner" of said property stored with defendant in the name of Fred F. Lambourn, and demanded immediate delivery thereof and offered "to pay all reasonable charges upon said eggs upon delivery of same."

The first and principal question presented here arises under appellant's claim that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding that the plaintiff was the owner and entitled to the possession of the goods at and after the time of the transactions which took place between the defendant and Lambourn on the 17th day of June. Appellant relies upon certain sections of the Civil Code.

"A factor has ostensible authority to deal with the property of his principal as his own, in transactions with persons not having notice of the actual ownership." Civ. Code, § 2369.

It appears that Lambourn was a "factor" within the definition stated in Civil Code, § 2026, which says:

"A factor is an agent who, in the pursuit of an independent calling, is employed by another to sell property for him, and is vested by the latter with the possession or control of the property, or authorized to receive payment therefor from the purchaser."

"One who has allowed another to assume the apparent ownership of property for the purpose of making any transfer of it, cannot set up his own title, to defeat a pledge of the property, made by the other, to a pledgee who received the property in good faith, in the ordinary course of business, and for value." Civ. Code, § 2991.

[1] Replying to the contention of appellant under these provisions of the statute, and especially under section 2991, Civil Code, counsel for respondent first argue that upon the facts shown Lambourn did not have apparent ownership of the property; that he did not receive the goods "for the purpose of making any transfer," since the goods when shipped had already been sold and were consigned to Lambourn purely as a bailee to make delivery. We do not agree that his authority was thus limited. It may be that the property had been sold in the sense that there were purchasers to whom the goods were intended to be distributed by Lambourn, but there remained to be done by him the acts which would transfer the eggs to those purchasers. In the meantime they could not be identified as belonging to any purchaser, and the property remained in possession of Lambourn for the purpose of making those transfers.

[2, 3] Counsel for respondent further suggest the fact that the defendant did not inquire of Lambourn as to the form of the bill of lading and never saw that document until the day of the trial. Therefore they say that as to them Lambourn had mere possession, and that appellant cannot in any sense be said to be a pledgee who received the property in good faith in the ordinary course of business. We think that it was not necessary for appellant to examine the bill of lading. By acting upon the assumption that Lambourn had such bill of lading and without examining the same for itself, appellant took the risk that he might not have any such document in his possession. But, since he did have it, the case is the same as if appellant had examined it and relied upon the evidence obtained by its own inspection.

Respondent's counsel refer us to Akron Cereal Co. v. First National Bank, 3 Cal. App. 198, 84 Pac. 778, where the provisions of section 2991 were considered. That case, like the case at bar, was an action for conversion of goods which had been forwarded to a point where they were to be sold or distributed. But the facts were essentially different from the present case, since, among other things, it appeared that the merchandise had been shipped by the plaintiff to its own order, and the terms of the bill of lading had not been such as to vest apparent ownership in the agent. The court there said that, in order that by reason of the pledge made to the defendant the plaintiff should be deprived of his right to the property, it was incumbent upon the defendant to show that the pledgor had been allowed by the plaintiff to assume the apparent ownership thereof for the purpose of making a transfer of it. "The pledgee must show the existence of these conditions as well as good faith on his part before he can claim a title superior to that of the original owner." Referring to the person in possession who made the pledge of the property, it was said:

> "His apparent ownership of the property is limited by its source, and the rights of the defendant to the property as against the plaintiff are limited in the same manner."

Admitting the full force of these principles, nevertheless we think that the defendant has shown that Lambourn's apparent ownership of the merchandise at the time when he attempted to pledge it to the defendant was caused by the conduct of the plaintiff in consigning it to Lambourn for the purpose of transferring it to purchasers, and defendant is entitled to the protection given by section 2991 of the Civil Code.

The court determined that the value of the goods was $3,120. The pledge was good as against the plaintiff's claim, for the amount of the debt created by the $2,300 loan, and for any additional advances made thereafter by the defendant to Lambourn. It was not, as against the plaintiff, valid as security for indebtedness existing prior to June 17, 1913, since as to such indebtedness it was not a pledge made "for value."

The judgment is reversed.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑197 — EX POST FACTO LAW—TIME.

The time important to be taken into consideration in determining whether a law is ex post facto or not is the time and the state of the law when the alleged offense was committed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 550.]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑197 — EX POST FACTO LAW.

Where, after a murder and before indictment was filed against defendant, Pen. Code, § 995, was amended to take away defendant's right, on motion to set aside indictment, to urge any objection to grand jurors which would be good on challenge to the trial jury, either as to the panel or an individual juror, and such law became operative after the indictment was filed, and before defendant was arrested, and before he made his motion to quash the indictment, such law was not objectionable as ex post facto, as it related to procedure, and did not deprive defendant of a substantial right.

4. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION 🔑137(1, 4) —MOTION TO QUASH—STATUTE.

Defendant, on motion to quash the indictment, can urge only such grounds as are permitted him by Pen. Code, § 995; moreover, no inquiry can be made as to the sufficiency of the evidence or the mode of examining witnesses before the grand jury.

6. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1158(3) — REVERSAL — RULINGS ON CHALLENGES TO VENIREMEN.

On challenges to veniremen for bias, to justify reversal the evidence given by the venireman upon his examination must be practically without conflict as to the fatal points, and be so opposed to the decision of the trial court that the question becomes one of law.

7. JURY 🔑103(14)—BIAS—STATUTE.

In a prosecution for murder by dynamiting a newspaper building, where it appeared that veniremen had heard of the explosion shortly after it occurred, had read newspaper accounts and discussed the explosion with persons not connected with the case, etc., and that they had an opinion, which would require evidence to dislodge, that the building had been blown up by dynamite unlawfully exploded with criminal intent, it appearing from their answers that the foundation for any opinion entertained by them was public rumor, statements in public journals, and common notoriety, each declaring his ability to lay the opinion aside and consider the case against defendant fairly and impartially, denial of challenges to the veniremen for actual bias was properly made, in view of Pen. Code, § 1076, declaring that where the opinion of a venireman is founded on public rumor, statements in public journals, etc., he shall not be disqualified, providing it appear that he can act impartially, etc.

8. Conspiracy 🔑47 — Evidence — Acts of Conspirators—Proof of Conspiracy.

In proving a conspiracy, it is not necessary that proof be made that the parties met and actually agreed to undertake performance of the unlawful act, but a conspiracy may be shown by proof of facts and circumstances sufficient to satisfy the jury of its existence, by leaving the weight and sufficiency of the evidence to the triers of the questions of fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Conspiracy, Cent. Dig. §§ 105–107.]

9. Criminal Law 🔑423(3) — Evidence — Conspiracy.

In a prosecution for murder by dynamiting a building, where the evidence established a nation-wide conspiracy on the part of a labor union to terrorize open-shop employers by means of dynamite and nitroglycerin outrages, it was proper to show all the acts, declarations, and correspondence had between persons concerned referring to the means and methods employed and to be employed in furthering the common design, though defendant for the first time took an active part in the conspiracy a considerable time after explosions in the eastern part of the country had been produced.

10. Criminal Law 🔑423(9) — Evidence — Conspiracy.

In such prosecution, declarations of any of the conspirators, made after any particular explosion had been caused, were not inadmissible as having been made subsequent to the completion or accomplishment of the object of the conspiracy, which was still alive and in effect with its ultimate objects unattained.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

M. A. Schmidt was convicted of murder, and, from the judgment and an order denying his motion for new trial, he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

Gen., Robert M. Clarke, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Thomas Lee Woolwine, Dist. Atty., and A. H. Van Cott, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for the People.

JAMES, J. Appeal from a judgment directing the imprisonment of the defendant in the state penitentiary for the period of his natural life, and also from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The defendant was accused by an indictment of a grand jury of the county of Los Angeles, in which several other defendants were named, of having on the 1st day of October, 1910, feloniously and with malice aforethought murdered one Charles Hagerty. The indictment was filed on the 5th day of May, 1911. Defendant not being apprehended until the year 1915, he was then placed upon trial, which, after a lengthy hearing, resulted in a verdict of guilty being returned against him. It will be necessary to make a somewhat extended statement of the evidence heard at the trial, in order to give proper illustration to the argument of appellant and to the propositions which he advances and which he claims entitle him to have the judgment reversed. In this statement we shall refer most particularly to the testimony introduced on behalf of the prosecution. The attempt will be only to first furnish in narrative a history of the alleged crime, as the evidence for the people tended to prove it, and we will later consider the competency of the testimony as it is met by objections urged on behalf of the appellant.

In the year 1905, there existed in the United States an organization designated as the International Association of Bridge and Structural Ironworkers. It was an organization, as its name implies, made up of various suborganizations or labor unions scattered throughout the country. The objects, as declared by its constitution, were:

> "To cultivate feelings of friendship among the craft, to assist each other to secure employment, to reduce the hours of labor, to secure adequate pay for work, * * * and to elevate the moral, intellectual and social condition of all members, and to improve the trade."

The offices of the association were in Indiana, and a system was provided by which funds should be collected and disbursed. J. J. McNamara was the secretary and treasurer of the association during the time herein mentioned, and the association in 1905 declared a general strike against the American Bridge Company, which was a large contracting concern engaged in the erection of structures of iron and steel. One of the objects desired by the association was to compel all employers who were using nonunion labor to unionize their plants and employ only members of the recognized union. The American Bridge Company was one of the chief employers of nonunion labor, but was not the only concern carrying on business on the open-shop plan in the structural iron and steel line. J. J. McNamara, apparently without any authority given him by the constitution or members of the organization, unless that authority is deemed to be an implied one, encouraged persons to destroy various work being constructed under the open-shop plan. In 1908 and 1909, bridges, viaducts, and other structural work being done by nonunion employers, to the number of perhaps 20, were destroyed by dynamite or nitroglycerin. Most of these explosions were produced with the knowledge and active encouragement of J. J. McNamara, and funds of the association were used to pay the persons who destroyed the work. The evidence was sufficient to show that the purpose of J. J. McNamara and fellow officers of the association was to compel the employers of nonunion labor to accept the dictates of the association, and in order to do this the means apparently most ready and acceptable to their hands was the use of dynamite and other high explosives for the purpose of ruining work under construction and destroying the results of the labor of the nonunion employés. It was customary for the heads of local unions scattered about the country, when they desired assistance in protecting their cause in the particular locality, to request of the International Association funds and assistance. In 1910, the attention of J. J. McNamara and his fellow officers was directed to the state of California, and particularly to the city of Los Angeles, which was known to be to a considerable extent an "open-shop" city. One Clancy, a leader of an ironworkers' union in San Francisco, wrote to J. J. McNamara several times, asking that a certain man be sent to the west (this man being one Hockin, who had produced several explosions theretofore in the east). J. J. McNamara did not send Hockin, but did send his brother, J. B. McNamara. J. B. McNamara reached Seattle and was there visited by Clancy, and he then proceeded to San Francisco. The McNamaras had themselves concocted an infernal machine which had been used to produce the explosions on the nonunion work. This machine consisted of a "tatoo" clock attached to a board, to which board was also attached a dry battery. By a system of wiring, the clocks on the alarm dials could be set at any chosen hour, and, when that hour arrived and the bell-hammer commenced to vibrate, electrical connection would be made from the battery to a fulminating cap attached to dynamite or whatever explosive was used, and thus the results planned for would be accomplished. J. B. McNamara, in the office of the association in Indianapolis just before he left there for the coast, said, in the presence of his brother and one McManigal, that he was going out and give them "a damned good cleaning up." At the time J. B. McNamara arrived in San Francisco, a great effort was being made to unionize the city of Los Angeles in the ironworking trades, and a great deal of money was spent in that endeavor. The Los Angeles Times and the Merchants' & Manufacturers' Association of Los Angeles had both advocated the open-shop plan of labor employment and had been most active in work in opposition to the efforts of the unions to stamp out the open-shop policy. One Zehandelaar was the secretary of the Merchants' & Manufacturers' Association, and Harrison Gray Otis was president and manager of the Los Angeles Times. The defendant was a union worker who resided in San Francisco at and before the occurrence of the explosion which caused the death of Hagerty. He had been active in the work of attempting to unionize the city of Los Angeles and had visited that city immediately before meeting McNamara, in the interests of the unionist work. Immediately upon the arrival of J. B. McNamara in the city of San Francisco, he was visited by defendant frequently. On the 17th day of September, 1910, defendant wrote out (the evidence proved his handwriting) an advertisement which was published in two San Francisco newspapers, in the following form:

> "Wanted—By party of men, 16–24 foot launch for ten days; cruise around Bay and tributaries. Best of references."

Soon thereafter a launch was rented from a boat-furnishing concern. This launch was a power launch and was called the "Pastime." About the same time, a man appeared at the office of a company manufacturing high explosives, which office was located in the city of San Francisco. This man desired to purchase a very high explosive, asking for "90 per cent. nitroglycerin." Upon inquiry being made as to what work was to be done with it, the manufacturing company's representative was informed that it was desired to be used in blowing out stumps. The applicant was expostulated with by the manufacturer's agent and told that such a high percentage of explosive was not needed, but that a 40 per cent. grade would be sufficient. However, the high per cent. quality was insisted upon, with the result that an order was given by the agent to his company to have manufactured 500 pounds of 80 per cent. dynamite. The manufacturing plant of the powder company was located across the bay from San Francisco, and from that plant was later taken the explosive by defendant and two other persons. After securing the launch for a rental period, the men went to Oakland and procured some enameled letters which they placed over the name painted on the launch and changed it from "Pastime" to "Peerless." Schmidt was one of these men who appeared at the different places. One of the defendant's eyes was defective, and quite noticeably so to the ordinary observer. He was identified by storekeepers at Oakland, by a boathouseman at Sausalito, where the name of the launch was changed, and by the delivery agents of the powder manufacturing company at the latter's plant. He was identified by persons who were acquainted with his physical characteristics and who saw him at the numerous times when he visited McNamara during the latter's stay in San Francisco. It will be unnecessary to mention particularly the evidence which described the defendant as being a participant in the work of securing the dynamite. It is enough to say that there was ample evidence to authorize the jury to conclude that he was one of the persons so concerned. The dynamite having been secured, it was taken to the city of San Francisco and a large part of it stored in an empty house which was rented for the purpose. On the morning of October 1, 1910, an explosion occurred in the building in which the Los Angeles Times was published, and which was owned by the Times Publishing Corporation. The explosion occurred at 1 o'clock in the morning at a time when numerous of the employés were still at work, the journal published being a morning newspaper. The explosion occurred in a little alleyway which, on the ground floor, separated two portions of the building and which was closed overhead. The explosion was of such violence as to rend iron or steel beams and to force débris through the roof of the building and to a considerable height above. Fire immediately succeeded the explosion, and the building was almost entirely destroyed, 21 persons being killed, among them Charles Hagerty. One witness testified to having seen a man whom he believed to be J. B. McNamara in the lower building of the Times the night before the explosion occurred. On the morning of the 1st of October, a suit case was found near the residence of the president of the Times Company by police officers. One of the officers started to cut open the suit case, when a whirring noise was heard, and the men immediately got out of the way. When they reached a distance of 100 feet or more, there was an explosion which blew a large hole in the ground, tore the leaves from trees, and broke a number of windows in the neighborhood. At about the same time, a package was found close to the residence of Zehandelaar, the secretary of the Merchants' & Manufacturers' Association. This package was found to contain a number of sticks of dynamite and an infernal machine manufactured in exactly the way that the McNamaras had before fashioned those instruments of destruction. The dynamite found in this parcel was stamped with the name of the company which furnished the explosive to the defendant and McNamara in San Francisco, and upon being analyzed by a chemist, was found to be of the same composition as the lot procured from the company by Schmidt and McNamara. One witness testified that in the summer of 1910 he had a conversation in San Francisco with the defendant, and asked him at that time where he had been. The witness then said:

> "He said he had been down to Los Angeles, and so we got to talking further. He says, 'They are having an awful time down there,' he says. He says: 'They are beating up men down there. They won't give a union man any chance down there at all. It is a regular Otis town they are running. There is something going to happen to him pretty soon.'"

After the indictment of defendant, search being made for him, he was not to be found. It was shown in testimony that he had gone to New York and lived at the house of Emma Goldman a portion of the time under an alias. One witness testified that defendant told him that he had intended to go to London, England, but that he could not get away from New York on account of the war. Further, that he (Schmidt) said that if he had had the Los Angeles job alone he could have got out all right with it. The person McManigal, who has been before referred to herein, testified on behalf of the prosecution and gave evidence relating to the general destructive operations inaugurated and carried out under the direction of J. J. McNamara. The records and files found in the office of the association at Indianapolis, embracing correspondence had by McNamara with various persons concerned in producing explosions, were introduced in evidence.

[1] Taking the testimony all in all, and leaving out of consideration now the matter of its competency at this point, it must appear that the evidence was ample to show the active participation of the defendant in the crime which had been committed. To what has been stated, it may be added that there was evidence sufficient in quantity and competent to show that the explosion in the Times building was the result of exterior agency, or an explosive brought onto the premises and used in an unlawful way. The foregoing is a somewhat meager abstract of the evidence and presents its salient features only. The testimony given at the trial covers about 8,000 pages, and more than 600 exhibits were introduced before the jury.

The points relied upon by appellant as furnishing ground for his claim that the judgment and order in this case should be reversed will be considered in the order in which they are proposed by his brief.

The defendant upon being brought into court presented a motion in which numerous alleged grounds were set forth as reasons why the indictment should be quashed. One of the principal grounds asserted was that four of the grand jurors were disqualified by reason of bias and prejudice. Defendant, in his affidavit which was presented with the motion, set out many alleged facts which would tend to show that the grand jurors challenged had been, prior to their being sworn on the jury, active in securing information relative to the matter of the explosion which produced the death of Hagerty and the fellow employés. Under section 995 of the Penal Code, as that law existed at the time of the commission of the alleged homicide, and at the time the indictment was filed, a defendant accused by indictment was permitted, on his motion to set aside the indictment, to urge any ground good on challenge to a trial jury, either as to the panel or an individual juror. In 1911, before the indictment was filed, the Legislature by act amended section 995, Penal Code, and by that amendment took away the right to urge on such a motion the last-mentioned causes. This act became effective in the latter part of May of the same year, the indictment having been filed in that month of May, but prior to the taking effect of the law. An affidavit was made by the grand jurors challenged, setting forth in a general way that they had acted without prejudice in the consideration of the defendant's case and had been uninfluenced by reports or information received by them from outside of the grand jury room. As the defendant set forth specific facts tending strongly to show that the jurors challenged could scarcely avoid feeling a bias in his case, it is extremely questionable that this affidavit made on behalf of the jurors could have been considered as a complete answer to the motion, as to the particular ground mentioned. However, the defendant did ask leave to examine the jurors in open court, which leave was denied him, and this brings us directly to the important question to be considered, to wit, as to whether the law, in existence at the time the motion to quash the indictment was made, was applicable to the proceedings on that motion, or whether the law in force at the time of the commission of the alleged homicide and the filing of the indictment is the one under which the defendant's motion should have been determined. If the law applicable was the law in effect at the time of the commission of the homicide and the filing of the indictment, then the court committed error in denying the defendant's motion.

It is the contention of the appellant that the change in the law by which the ground of the bias and prejudice of the grand jurors as foundation for a motion to set aside the indictment was taken away, if made to apply to the motion when presented by him, would be ex post facto, and hence unconstitutional. The definition of an "ex post facto law" is given very full exposition by the Supreme Court of the United States in the leading case, which is entitled Kring v. State of Missouri, 107 U. S. 221, 2 Sup. Ct. 443, 27 L. Ed. 506. In determining whether a law is ex post facto or not, the decisions sometimes declare that, where such law merely works a change in procedure or remedy, it is not amenable to objection as being unconstitutional on the ground stated. Such a definition is perhaps too narrow, as the court in the Kring Case takes occasion to declare. In the case cited, referring to Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 386, 1 L. Ed. 648, the court approvingly adopts language in definition of the term ex post facto when it declares:

> "It defines four distinct classes of laws embraced by the clause: '(1) Every law that makes an action done before the passing of the law, and which was innocent when done, criminal, and punishes such action. (2) Every law that aggravates the crime or makes it greater than it was when committed. (3) Every law that changes the punishment and inflicts a greater punishment than was annexed to the crime when committed. (4) Every law that alters the legal rules of evidence, and receives less or different testimony than the law required at the time of the commission of the offense in order to convict the offender.' "

The statement of the writer of the opinion in Calder v. Bull is further quoted, where he says:

> "But I do not consider any law ex post facto, within the prohibition, that mollifies the rigor of the law; but only these that create or aggravate the crime, or increase the punishment, or change the rules of evidence, for the purpose of conviction."

The gist of the decision is that any substantial right which the law gave a defendant at the time to which his guilt relates cannot afterwards be taken away from him, even though such law does affect "procedure or remedy." The right referred to, however, must be, and such is the tenor of the decisions, a right material to the establishment of the defense of the defendant. Objections to the form of pleadings, not going to the extent of reaching a defect in the statement of facts showing the offense, generally and naturally must be held to fall within that class of law changes which do relate to procedure merely and to procedure not such as a defendant accused of crime may be said to have a vested right in. A law curtailing the number of peremptory challenges which a defendant may interpose to the trial jury is held not to be ex post facto. Harris v. United States, 4 Okl. Cr. 317, 111 Pac. 982, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 820, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 810. Laws which, in a statute passed after the commission of a crime and before the trial, make witnesses competent to testify who at the time of the commission of the offense were by law incompetent, are held not to deprive a defendant of a substantial right. Mrous v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 597, 21 S. W. 764, 37 Am. St. Rep. 834; Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 618, 4 Sup. Ct. 202, 28 L. Ed. 262. See, also, note to People v. Hayes, 140 N. Y. 484, 35 N. E. 951, 23 L. R. A. 830, 37 Am. St. Rep. 572.

Our own Supreme Court, in the case of People v. Campbell, 59 Cal. 243, 43 Am. Rep. 257, has held that where a homicide was committed before the adoption of the Constitution of 1879 and at a time when the law required that the defendant be prosecuted by indictment of a grand jury, and by the Constitution before trial it was provided that the prosecution might be either by indictment by grand jury or information of the district attorney, a prosecution by information was not invalid and the law then in force was not open to the objection that it was ex post facto. In that case, the court adopted the language of Judge Cooley, as contained in his work on Constitutional Limitations (page 331), and which finds place repeatedly in decisions dealing with the subject under consideration, and quotes:

"But so far as mere modes of procedure are concerned, a party has no more right in a criminal than in a civil action to insist that his case shall be disposed of under the law in force when the act to be investigated is charged to have taken place. Remedies must always be under the control of the Legislature, and it would create endless confusion in legal proceedings, if every case was to be conducted only in accordance with the rules of practice, and heard only by the courts in existence when its facts arose. The Legislature may abolish courts and create new ones, and it may prescribe altogether different modes of procedure, though it cannot lawfully, we think, in so doing, dispense with any of these substantial protections with which the existing law surrounds the person accused of crime. Statutes giving the government additional challenges, and others which authorized the amendment of indictments, have been sustained and applied to past transactions, as doubtless would be any similar statute, calculated simply to improve the remedy, and in its operation working no injustice to the defendant, and depriving him of no substantial right."

The court further says, referring to the text of Judge Cooley's work:

"The following examples are given by him in a note to page 332: 'The defendant in any case must be proceeded against and prosecuted under the law in force when the proceeding is had. A law is not unconstitutional which precludes a defendant in a criminal case from taking advantage of remedies which do not prejudice him; nor one which reduces the number of the prisoner's peremptory challenges; nor one which, though passed after the commission of the offense, authorizes a change of venue to another county; nor one which modifies, simplifies, and reduces the essential allegations in a criminal indictment, retaining the charge of a distinct offense.' * * * It is not an uncommon practice to change the number of grand jurors required to investigate criminal charges, but we have never heard of the right of the Legislature to make such changes questioned, neither has it ever been claimed that the charge must be investigated by the precise number of grand jurors of which that body was composed, at the time the act was committed. * * * 'The Legislature may always alter the form of administering right and justice, and may transfer jurisdiction from one tribunal to another.' Mr. Bishop, in his work on Statutory Crimes, lays down the same doctrine. He says: 'There is no such thing as a vested right in any particular remedy.'"

See, also, People v. Mortimer, 46 Cal. 114.

[2] The time important to be taken into consideration in determining whether a law is ex post facto or not is the time (and the state of the law) at which the alleged offense was committed.

"If the law complained of was passed before the commission of the act with which the prisoner is charged, it cannot, as to that offense, be an ex post facto law. If passed after the commission of the offense, it is as to that ex post facto, though whether of the class forbidden by the Constitution may depend on other matters. But so far as this depends on the time of its enactment, it has reference solely to the date at which the offense was committed to which the new law is sought to be applied. No other time or transaction but this has been in any adjudged case held to govern its ex post facto character." Kring v. Missouri, supra.

[3] It happened in this case that the law making the change in the statute was passed after the commission of the alleged offense and before the indictment was filed, but that it did not become operative until after the indictment was filed. It was in effect before the defendant was arrested and before he made his motion to quash the indictment. As this law in its changed form referred to the procedure under which the defendant might attack the indictment, it on its face was effective at the time the motion to quash was made and was the procedure to be looked to in governing the motion of the defendant. That it did not deprive him of a right substantial in his defense, we are also assured. A defendant under our law may be prosecuted by indictment or by information after commitment by a magistrate. There is no legal impediment at all, if the lawmakers so decide, in permitting a commitment to be made by a biased or prejudiced magistrate, or an indictment to be returned by a grand jury holding preconceived views as to the guilt of a defendant. The indictment surely must be made to state a public offense, for the defendant cannot be legally put upon trial upon one which is insufficient in that respect. The matter of the production of an indictment by grand jury or commitment by a magistrate neither presupposes the guilt of a defendant nor in any wise tends to create any presumption in that direction. It furnishes a procedure by which the defendant is brought into court, and, if this procedure on its face is formally regular, any special objections which are to be established by facts dehors the record must be viewed as not of the substance of things or material in influencing the conviction of a person accused of crime. "An indictment is but an accusatory paper." People v. Hatch, 13 Cal. App. 528, 109 Pac. 1097. Our Code by specific provision declares that, unless objections available to a defendant on a motion to quash an indictment or information are taken seasonably, they are waived; in other words, the indictment or information, because of any defects which might be pointed out upon the motion to quash, is not a void indictment, and the question of legal jurisdiction is not concerned therein. Pen. Code, § 950; Ex parte McConnell, 83 Cal. 558, 23 Pac. 1119; People v. Bawden, 90 Cal. 195, 27 Pac. 204; Ex parte Moan, 65 Cal. 216, 3 Pac. 644. We cite these cases and the Code law in illustration of the view we take that the amended section of the Penal Code in force at the time the defendant made his motion to quash the indictment, not only related to a matter of procedure, but to such matter of procedure as neither went to the question of the guilt or innocence of the defendant or tended to deprive him of any substantial right theretofore secured to him in aid of a full defense.

[4, 5] In the motion to quash the indictment, it was also asserted by the defendant that persons other than those authorized by the law were permitted to be present during the proceedings taken before the grand jury, and that evidence of illegal, hearsay, and secondary character was permitted to be introduced and was considered. It is well settled, not only that a defendant on a motion to quash an indictment can only urge such grounds as are by section 995, Penal Code, permitted him, but that no inquiry can be made as to the sufficiency of the evidence or of the mode of examining the witnesses heard before the grand jury. In re Kennedy, 144 Cal. 634, 78 Pac. 34, 67 L. R. A. 406, 103 Am. St. Rep. 117, 1 Ann. Cas. 840. To the same effect is People v. Hatch, 13 Cal. App. 521, 109 Pac. 1097. In support of the ground that an unauthorized person was permitted to be present during the proceedings had before the grand jury, the defendant referred to Earl Rogers, Esq., who appeared in the capacity of a deputy district attorney of Los Angeles county. It was shown that said Rogers had been duly appointed as a deputy by the district attorney, but it is urged that, as all of the deputies permitted to be pointed under section 4230, Political Code, had theretofore been appointed, the appointment of Mr. Rogers was in excess of that number and he acquired no official capacity as a prosecutor in order to entitle him to be present himself before the grand jury. Section 4230 of the Political Code refers particularly to the salaries of officers and does designate the various deputies who shall be allowed, with pay, to each of the county officers in counties of the class to which Los Angeles belongs. That section is particularly designed to fix the compensation of county officers, and not to limit them in the employment of deputies. A county officer is entitled to appoint as many deputies as he chooses, with the proviso that if he appoints any in excess of those for which compensation is provided to be paid from the public treasury, he must pay such deputies at his own expense, if they are to receive compensation. Section 4024, Pol. Code.

The next complaint made by appellant is that the trial judge committed prejudicial error in disallowing certain challenges taken by the defendant as to 17 of the veniremen who were examined as to their qualifications to sit as jurors and try the defendant for the crime charged. The challenges interposed were all upon the ground of the actual bias of the veniremen. As was most natural to occur, after the destruction of the Times building, reports as to the cause thereof were widespread and became the subject of discussion between individuals, as well as furnishing material for various reports in the newspapers. Prior to the impanelment of the jury which sat at the trial of this defendant, the two McNamaras, jointly charged in the same indictment with defendant, had pleaded guilty and been sentenced, and this information had been heralded forth through like channels. Many of the veniremen called had read newspaper reports and heard street discussion regarding the explosion and its cause. The state of mind of each of the 17 veniremen, as developed by the lengthy examination of counsel, was in the main similar as to the matters constituting the alleged bias. A general statement of the answers brought forth, with little variation, was about as follows: The venireman had heard of the explosion in the Times building shortly after it occurred; he had read accounts thereof in the newspapers and had discussed with persons not concerned in the case the subject of the explosion; that these accounts assigned the cause of the wrecking of the Times building as being the explosion of dynamite unlawfully used; that, upon the McNamaras pleading guilty to the charge, venireman had read an account of the proceedings, and from all of these things had formed an opinion that the Times building had been blown up by dynamite unlawfully exploded with criminal intent; that the opinion was more or less fixed; and that evidence would be required to dislodge it. None of the veniremen, in any opinion or belief which they entertained, connected the defendant with the commission of the crime, save one, who stated in a general way that he held an opinion affecting the guilt of the defendant. Some of the veniremen had passed the scene of the explosion and had observed the wreckage, with twisted iron beams, and in some cases had observed that windows in an adjoining building had been shattered. In the course of their questioning, counsel for the defendant intimated that it was a part of their defense that the Times building was destroyed by a gas explosion accidentally, and not by dynamite with criminal intent. The argument in support of the challenge was that, as these veniremen had formed an opinion as to the facts establishing the corpus delicti, they were utterly disqualified, notwithstanding that they in no wise in their opinion otherwise connected the defendant with the commission of the crime. It satisfactorily appeared from the answers given by the veniremen that the foundation for any opinion entertained by them was that denominated in section 1076, Penal Code, as "public rumor, statements in public journals, and common notoriety"; and each of the persons examined declared that he had the ability to lay that opinion aside and to consider the case against the defendant fairly and impartially. This statement was brought forth by the examination of the district attorney in order to justify a denial of the challenges in accordance with the provisions of section 1076, Penal Code, which declare that where the opinion is of the class mentioned the person should not be disqualified as a juror, "provided it appear to the court, upon his declaration, under oath or otherwise, that he can and will, notwithstanding such an opinion, act impartially and fairly upon the matters to be submitted to him." As has been already suggested, it appeared that the explosion which destroyed the building of the newspaper was of such character as to occasion general discussion among the citizens of the community and much comment in the public journals. It would seem difficult indeed to have found any citizen of observing mind and fair intelligence who had not by some manner or means learned of the disaster and of the probable or possible cause thereof.

[6] It has been repeatedly declared by our Supreme Court that on challenges such as those here considered, in order to justify a reversal, the evidence given by the venireman upon his examination must be practically without conflict as to the vital points thereof, and be "so opposed to the decision of the trial court that the question becomes one of law." People v. Owens, 123 Cal. 482, 56 Pac. 251. And particularly pertinent to the situation which was presented in this case are the observations of Mr. Justice Henshaw in the case of People v. Scott, 123 Cal. 434, 56 Pac. 102, where he says:

> "A reading of the testimony taken upon voir dire discloses, as is usual, conflicting and contradictory statements by the jurors. They had formed opinions touching the guilt or innocence of the defendant. They would carry those opinions with them into the jury box. It would take evidence to remove them, nevertheless they could and would give to the defendant a fair and impartial trial. They could and would be governed by the law as delivered by the court, and by the evidence as received in court. It is the state of facts, commonly presented where upon the question of bias the evidence would have justified a finding either way. Under such circumstances, we are powerless to disturb the ruling of the trial court. Citing People v. Fredericks, 106 Cal. 554 [39 Pac. 944]. We recognize that with the increased facilities for the dissemination of news it is far more difficult than formerly it was to obtain a jury of men ignorant of the circumstances of the charge which they are called upon to try. * * * But, unless the testimony adduced upon voir dire is so clear upon the question of actual bias that this court can say as matter of law that the juror is disqualified for that reason, we cannot disturb the ruling of the trial court."

To like effect are many of the decisions, and we cite People v. Flannelly, 128 Cal. 84, 60 Pac. 670; People v. Ochoa, 142 Cal. 268, 75 Pac. 847; People v. Miller, 125 Cal. 44, 57 Pac. 770; People v. Brown, 148 Cal. 743, 84 Pac. 204.

[7] In so far as the examination of the jurors disclosed that their observation of the conditions at the wrecked building after the explosion contributed to the forming of the opinion they had, it appears that such observation only tended to convince them of the fact that there had been an explosion. and not as to the means employed. It seems to have been conceded, even in the questions of counsel propounded to the veniremen, that an explosion had in fact occurred. The denial of the challenges for actual bias cannot be said to have been improperly made.

We now come to a consideration of the kind and competency of the evidence which made up the proof offered by the prosecution. As a part of its case, the state, as we have before indicated, introduced testimony showing a series of unlawful acts which had been committed some time prior to the first appearance of the appellant Schmidt in his connection with the antiopen-shop campaign. This testimony included evidence of the fact that bridges had been blown up, material destroyed, and life threatened throughout a number of the eastern states as a result of the determination of the executive board of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Ironworkers to unionize work; that money had been paid to various persons for the purpose of compensating them in the unlawful and reprehensible enterprise. Conversations occurring between the persons so engaged, some of them referring to explosions which had already occurred, some of them referring to future plans in the same direction, were narrated. In fact, it is apparent that any and every act of the individuals concerned referring to the unlawful enterprise, wherever evidence thereof could be procured, was presented to the jury. The record of correspondence kept in the office of J. J. McNamara, the secretary-treasurer of the international association, was obtained and was also produced in evidence. This was correspondence passing between the office of McNamara and various persons concerned in the unlawful depredations undertaken by the executive board of the association, and it came and went to different cities scattered over the United States. The work of destruction of structures erected by open-shop contractors in the east was well under way before Clancy's appeal for help in California was received and heeded. As a result of that appeal, J. B. McNamara came west on his mission of destruction. Plainly, from the sketch we have made of the evidence, it was made to appear by overwhelming proof that a conspiracy was organized and the work thereof prosecuted to the end that at every place in the United States where the open-shop was in force it was planned to use the weapon of nitroglycerin or dynamite to intimidate those opposed to the demand of the executive board of the International Association. The evidence showed that this conspiracy, so gigantic in its scope, was a continuing one; that is, the only limit to its life seemed to be the exhaustion of the means available to the executive board, or the submission of the employers of non-union labor. And we think that counsel for appellant fails to apprehend the effect of the evidence to establish the conclusions just suggested, when he refers to the destructive work done in the East as work done in the "Eastern conspiracy." The distinction so sought to be impressed, and which we cannot allow, is made for the purpose of giving weight to the argument found in the brief of appellant that the appellant Schmidt, not being a party to the lawless acts committed in the East, was prejudiced because of evidence being introduced with reference to such acts. Conceding the correctness of his premise, we might well adopt the appellant's conclusion. But the basis for the argument is lacking in the proof.

[8] It is a fundamental rule long settled by decisions that in proving a conspiracy it is not necessary that proof be made that the parties met and actually agreed to undertake the performance of the unlawful act, and that a conspiracy may be shown by proof of facts and circumstances sufficient to satisfy the jury of the existence of the conspiracy, leaving the weight and sufficiency of the evidence to the triers of the questions of fact. People v. Donnolly, 143 Cal. 394, 77 Pac. 177; People v. Lawrence, 143 Cal. 148, 76 Pac. 893, 68 L. R. A. 193; People v. Eldridge, 147 Cal. 782, 82 Pac. 442. It is not denied that, after a conspiracy has been established and it has been established that a person is connected therewith as a conspirator, the latter may be prosecuted as for complicity in any unlawful act thereafter committed by any of the conspirators which is within the scope ot the general design or plan. People v. Olsen, 80 Cal. 122, 22 Pac. 125. "Where several parties conspire or combine together to commit any unlawful act, each is criminally responsible for the acts of his associates or confederates committed in furtherance of any prosecution of the common design for which they combine. * * * Each is responsible for everything done by his confederates, which follows incidentally in the execution of the common design as one of its probable and natural consequences, even though it was not intended as a part" of the common design for which they combined. People v. Kauffman, 152 Cal. 331, 92 Pac. 861; People v. Creeks, 170 Cal. 369, 149 Pac. 821; The Anarchists' Case, 122 Ill. 1, 12 N. E. 865, 17 N. E. 898, 3 Am. St. Rep. 320. In People v. Collins, 64 Cal. 293, 30 Pac. 847, our Supreme Court says:

> "The law holds each party to it (the conspiracy) responsible for the acts of each coconspirator done in pursuance and furtherance of the common design, which extends to the consequences which might reasonably be expected to flow from carrying into effect the unlawful combination."

And again:

> "Evidence of the statements of a coconspirator, made during the life of the conspiracy, are admissible against the other conspirator." People v. Oldham, 111 Cal. 648, 44 Pac. 312.

An examination of the decision in the case of Ryan v. United States, decided by the Circuit Court of Appeals and reported in 216 Fed. at page 13, 132 C. C. A. 257, shows that a number of persons, 30 in all, they being connected with the same association hereinbefore referred to, were indicted for a conspiracy to commit the crime of transporting dynamite and nitroglycerin in interstate commerce in passenger trains; the facts of the case referring to the same occurrences and the same conspiracy as the prosecution here made proof of. It seems that practically the same testimony as to the various explosions produced, the means employed, the correspondence had, together with conversations between the participants in those crimes, were all offered and received in evidence. The court there declared that such evidence was competent, in that a continuing conspiracy was charged. If the evidence was admissible there to show a continuing conspiracy as charged, it may with as much propriety here be said that the evidence did establish that the conspiracy was of that nature.

[9] Being of that nature, it was proper to show, as the court there held, all of the acts, declarations, and correspondence had by the persons concerned which referred to the means and methods employed and to be employed in the furtherance of the common design. It matters not, if the evidence is sufficient to show such later connection, that Schmidt, the appellant here, for the first time took an active part in furnishing aid to the conspirators to effect their objects a considerable time after the Eastern explosions had been produced. The proof of all of the matters first adverted to was essential to show the existence of the conspiracy and to define its nature and scope. The necessity of showing appellant's connection with the conspiracy was a distinct and separate matter for proof. This requisite of the law we think was sufficiently covered in the instructions of the court, and the jury was fairly advised of the subjects to which the different varieties of evidence were properly applicable.

[10] For the reasons we have stated, validity cannot be granted to any one of the exceptions taken because of the introduction of declarations of any of the conspirators made after any particular of the explosions had been caused, as being declarations inadmissible because made subsequent to the completion or accomplishment of the object of the conspiracy. The conspiracy was still alive and in effect, and the ultimate results had not been attained, when J. B. McNamara came to the state of California for the purpose of assisting in the work. We have before sketched briefly the salient features of the testimony showing that Schmidt, upon McNamara's arrival in San Francisco, took an active part in securing dynamite for Mc-

Namara's use. All of the appellant's acts in that connection were performed as secretly as possible, under assumed names, and with every indication of appellant's complete and active co-operation and sympathy with the work of destruction theretofore done, then being planned, and which was thereafter executed. Schmidt, the appellant, immediately before the Times explosion, had been in the city of Los Angeles aiding in the attempt to close the open shops. That he knew for what purpose the dynamite was to be used is indicated when he said to a witness who testified in the case, in the summer of 1910, that:

> "They (in Los Angeles) won't give a union man no chance down there at all. It is a regular Otis town they are running. There is something going to happen to him pretty soon."

And immediately after the Times explosion Schmidt was not to be found and was not found until a long time thereafter, when he was discovered living at the house of Emma Goldman in New York, a portion of the time, under an assumed name. The length of this opinion would be extended to a greater limit than is warranted, were we to attempt to discuss in detail the testimony as it is shown in the 8,000 pages of the reporter's transcript. While there may be portions of the testimony received which in a detached way could properly have been excluded, the weight of the evidence was so overwhelming in its proof of the conspiracy and its objects as to enforce the conclusion that the defendant in the right secured to him under the Constitution did not suffer substantial prejudice.

[11] Rather unusual stress is laid in support of the claim for error in allowing one particular bit of evidence to come in. Several months after the explosion which occurred at the Times building, a suit case was found in the checking room at a ferry station in San Francisco. The suit case was identified by a Mrs. Ingersoll as being one which she had seen in the possession of J. B. McNamara before the 1st of October. The suit case carried a check label, and upon being opened was found to contain an alarm clock, a coil of black fuse, some blasting caps, a brass plate, some brass bars with screws, and copies of San Francisco newspapers dated October 1st. The newspapers contained accounts of the destruction of the Times building. These articles were all exhibited to the jury. We think the evidence was competent. The clock and brass pieces were of a similar kind to those used by the McNamaras in the manufacture of their infernal machines. As proof of the fact that an explosion had been produced as "bargained for," J. J. McNamara, the secretary-treasurer of the association, had always required his men to produce newspaper accounts showing that they had performed their work successfully. In a circumstantial way, these articles were all evidence tending to show the execution of the work of the conspirators and to show J. B. McNamara's connection therewith, and incidentally the connection of Schmidt with the same enterprise. The introduction of similar evidence was approved in The Anarchists' Case, supra.

The gravity of the offense and the serious consequences which it has entailed to this appellant is justification to counsel for having presented the very extensive argument which is found in the three volumes of appellant's briefs. Careful consideration has been given to each of the contentions therein set forth, the chief of which are made the subject of the foregoing discussion. Other matters urged as constituting error, such as alleged misconduct of the trial judge and the argument affecting the action of the court in giving or refusing to give certain of the instructions, we find without merit. We are satisfied that the defendant received a fair trial and that his conviction should be sustained.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

PEOPLE v. MARINO. (Cr. 666.)

1. Criminal Law 🔑371(9) — Statutory Rape—Evidence of Other Acts.

In a prosecution of a father for rape upon his 17 year old daughter, evidence of prior acts of intercourse was admissible in support of the charge upon which defendant was being tried upon the theory that it tended to show the lewd and lascivious tendencies and disposition of the prosecutrix and defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 830, 831.]

2. Criminal Law 🔑370—Statutory Rape —Pregnancy.

In a prosecution of a father for rape upon his 17 year old daughter, evidence that prosecutrix when 14 years old became pregnant from an act of sexual intercourse with her father, and when she informed him of the interruption of her menstrual periods that he stated that he knew what was the matter with her—that she was in the family way—and that he took her to a doctor, who performed an abortion, was relevant for the purpose of showing that the defendant's conduct when informed of interruption of daughter's menstrual periods was tantamount to an admission that he knew she was pregnant, and that he was the cause thereof.

3. Criminal Law 🔑829(3) — "Rape" — Refusal of Instruction—Harmless Error—"Sexual Intercourse."

While refusal of a requested instruction to the effect that there could be no conviction unless the evidence showed to a moral certainty that defendant had penetrated sexual organs of prosecutrix was improper, it caused no detriment to defendant where the court in the charge given, in substantial accord with Pen. Code, § 261, defined the crime of rape to be "an act of sexual intercourse accomplished with a female not the wife of the defendant when the female is under the age of 18"; the phrase "sexual intercourse" as commonly understood implying actual penetration.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; W. A. Beasly, Judge.

Vitale Marino was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Judgment and order appealed from affirmed.

W. H. Tully, of San Jose, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Arthur M. Free, Dist. Atty., and Archer Bowden, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of San Jose, for the People.

LENNON, P. J. Upon this appeal from a judgment of final conviction after a verdict finding the defendant guilty of the crime of rape upon his 17 year old daughter, the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict is not challenged. A reversal of the judgment is urged because of the ruling of the trial court, which, over the objection of the defendant, permitted the prosecutrix to testify in substance that when she was about 14 years of age she became pregnant as the result of an act of sexual intercourse with her father. Upon that occasion she told her father, the defendant, that "she did not get her monthlies." The defendant replied, "I know what's the matter with you—you are in the family way." The defendant then left the house, and two or three hours later returned, whereupon he said to the prosecutrix, "Dress up and I will take you to a place where you will get over what you have." Defendant took the prosecutrix to the home of a Mr. Gibson, and while there told her in Italian to "tell Dr. Gibson" that she was "in a family way." She so told Gibson, who replied that he could help her, but that he "could not do it for nothing." Whereupon the defendant promised to pay Gibson the sum of $50. At this point in the testimony of the prosecutrix the trial court sustained an objection to a question which sought to elicit what Gibson did to her, but permitted her to say that she remained alone with Gibson for three or four hours, after which she was taken "to some place to get well," where she remained "very ill" for about a week. The defendant called there to see her in the evening of the day that she left Gibson's house, and said to her, "How are you? Are you better?"

[1, 2] We see no error in the ruling complained of which permitted the above narrated facts to go in evidence. The act of sexual intercourse referred to therein was one of a series of such acts which the prosecutrix testified had been committed with her by the defendant from the time that she was 14 years of age. Under the settled rule in this state the evidence of those prior acts was admissible in support of the charge upon which the defendant was being tried upon the theory that it tended to show the lewd and lascivious tendencies and disposition of the prosecutrix and defendant. People v. Castro, 133 Cal. 11, 65 Pac. 13. It is conceded that if the pregnancy of the prosecutrix and the abortion to which she testified had resulted from the act of intercourse which constituted the basis of the charge for which the defendant was convicted, proof thereof would be proper and pertinent for the purpose of establishing the corpus delicti. People v. Tarbox, 115 Cal. 57, 46 Pac. 896. While in the case of People v. Soto, 11 Cal. App. 431, 105 Pac. 420, the court said: "So far as we are aware" it has never been held that proof of the pregnancy of the prosecutrix under the age of consent is admissible except for the purpose of establishing the corpus delicti of the charge, on the other hand we know of no authority—and none has been cited to us—which holds that such proof of pregnancy, and evidence of an abortion performed upon the prosecutrix, as the result of one of a series of prior acts of sexual intercourse, are not admissible as tending to show the commission of that act. However that may be, the record shows that the proof pertaining to the pregnancy of the prosecutrix following the particular prior act in question, and the abortion performed upon her, was proffered and received primarily for the purpose of showing that the defendant's conduct when informed by his daughter of the interruption of her menstrual periods was tantamount to an admission that he knew she was pregnant, and that he was the cause thereof. Such we think was the fair inference to be drawn from such testimony, and consequently for that purpose, if for no other, it was admissible. The fact that it also tended to show the commission of two separate, independent, and outlawed crimes did not render it incompetent as evidence for the purpose for which it was offered. Being one of a series of prior acts of sexual intercourse, the remoteness of the particular act under discussion and of the incidental pregnancy and abortion from the time of the commission of the particular act forming the basis of the charge on trial may have lessened the weight of such evidence, but did not destroy its relevancy.

[3] The trial court refused a requested instruction to the effect that proof of penetration, however slight, was essential to the crime of rape, and that therefore the defendant should not be convicted unless it could be said, after a consideration of all of the evidence, to a moral certainty, etc., that the defendant had penetrated the sexual organs of the prosecutrix. While this instruction correctly stated the law, and should not perhaps have been refused, nevertheless the failure to give it caused no detriment to the defendant, for the reason that the trial court in its charge, in substantial accord with the language of the statute (Pen. Code, § 261), defined the crime of rape to be "an act of sexual intercourse, accomplished with a female not the wife of the [defendant] * * * where the female is under the age of eighteen." The phrase "sexual intercourse," as employed in this definition of rape, is commonly understood, we think, to imply an actual penetration. This being so, it is evident that the charge of the court considered as a whole in effect required the jury to find the fact of penetration before they could find the defendant guilty.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

STATE ex rel. WITHYCOMBE, Governor, v. STANNARD, County Clerk, et al.

1. MANDAMUS ⚿=147 — CAPACITY OF GOVERNOR TO SUE—CONSTITUTION.

Under Const. art. 5, § 10, declaring that the Governor shall take care that the laws shall be faithfully executed, the Governor of the state has the right to bring mandamus to compel the county clerk of a county, the sheriff, the county judge, and others to perform the duties imposed upon them by law in regard to the calling and holding of elections, and, in particular, in respect to a special election.

2. MANDAMUS ⚿=143(1) — PREMATURITY OF PROCEEDING—COMPELLING ACTION BY ELECTION OFFICIALS.

The Governor could bring mandamus to compel the county clerk of a county, the sheriff, and other officers to perform the duties imposed upon them by law in regard to the calling and holding of election before the time had arrived on which the posting of notices and other prerequisites to the election are required to be done, the officials having absolutely refused to take steps toward holding the election, and declared their intention not to do so, since, though ordinarily mandamus will not lie to compel the performance of an act until the time for doing the act has arrived, where a refusal to perform has occurred, and where it seems probable that the act will not be performed within the time required, mandamus will lie, and a proceeding brought upon the strength of the refusal is not premature.

Burnett, J., dissenting.

In Banc. Mandamus by the State of Oregon, on the relation of James Withycombe, Governor, against J. R. Stannard, County Clerk of Curry County, and others. Demurrer to the writ overruled.

Geo. M. Brown, Atty. Gen., and I. H. Van Winkle, Asst. Atty. Gen., for petitioner. S. M. Endicott and W. C. Winslow, both of Salem, for defendants.

McBRIDE, C. J. This is a proceeding in mandamus to compel the defendants to perform the duties imposed upon them by law in regard to the calling and holding of elections, and in particular in respect to the special election to be held throughout the state of Oregon on June 4, 1917. It is alleged that the defendants, who are the county commissioners, county judge, clerk, and the sheriff of Curry county, refuse to take steps required by law or to give the notices necessary in respect to such special election, and declare that they will not take the steps required by law to hold such election. To this writ a demurrer is filed stating two grounds: (1) That the relator has not the legal capacity to sue; and (2) that the writ does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

As to the first ground, it may be said, in brief, that by section 10 of article 5 of the Constitution it is declared that the Governor shall take care that the laws shall be faithfully executed.

[1] Where a public official charged with a duty to the whole state, as in this case, refuses to execute the law and to perform his duty in that regard, we think the Governor is acting only in obedience to this requirement of the Constitution in appealing to the court to compel that official to perform such legal duty.

[2] It is also alleged that this proceeding is premature, and that mandamus will not lie until the time has arrived upon which the posting of notices and other prerequisites to an election are required to be done. Upon this theory the relator would be compelled to wait until the last minute of the last hour within which the act might be done, and after that time had expired, before he could bring a proceeding to compel the act to be performed. A proceeding to compel performance of an act after the time for such performance has expired would be futile, and would result in a condition wherein there would be no adequate remedy against a grave public wrong. The law does not contemplate any such absurdity; and accordingly it has been held that while ordinarily mandamus will not lie to compel the performance of an act until the time for doing the act has arrived, yet where a refusal to perform the act has occurred, and where it seems probable that the act will not be performed within the time required, mandamus will lie, and a proceeding brought upon the strength of such refusal is not premature. State ex rel. v. Railroad Company, 85 Kan. 649, 118 Pac. 872; Attorney General v. Boston, 123 Mass. 460; People ex rel. v. Smith, 152 App. Div. 514, 137 N. Y. Supp. 387. The latter case was one of mandamus to compel the board of elections to file certain certificates of nomination, wherein the court says:

"The duty devolved upon the board of elections is to file certificates of nomination which are in conformity to the provisions of the last valid statute relating thereto, if any such exists. No > express demand to file any particular certificate has been made upon defendants. There has been no express refusal to do so. Granting that defendants' duty is a public one, and that omission to perform such duty is equivalent to a refusal to perform, * * * it may be urged that as yet the defendants have not omitted to perform, for the time fixed within which performance may be had has not yet expired. * * * But although evidence is lacking of an express refusal to perform a particular act, we think that it may justly be inferred that defendants will refuse to file any certificate except one which shall comply with the requirements of the statute above referred to. * * * Where delay in reaching such determination will result in depriving one of an efficient remedy if the determination is erroneous, either the presumption above referred to should prevail, or the person charged with the performance of the duty should seasonably announce his determination respecting his future action in terms admitting of no mistake or misunderstanding."

The case above cited is not so strong as the case at bar, because here the defendants absolutely refused to take steps toward holding the election, and declared their intention not to do so. The statutes under which those decisions were rendered are similar to our own, and the opinions seem to be based upon sound common sense.

The following cases are cited as holding a contrary view, and while some of them, upon a cursory examination, would appear to be in point, yet, when thoroughly analyzed, none of them are applied to circumstances exactly identical to those in the case at bar.

The first case is Commissioners of Lake County v. State, 24 Fla. 263, 4 South. 795. In this case there was no allegation in the complaint that the commissioners had refused to call the election. It was only alleged that they did not intend to and would not perform that duty. The court held that this was not a sufficient allegation to call into effect the power of mandamus. The other Florida cases are to the same effect.

Lee v. Taylor, 107 Ga. 362, 33 S. E. 408, merely holds that mandamus will not lie to compel a tax collector to pay over tax moneys to an outgoing treasurer so that such treasurer can get a commission. It seems to have no relation whatever to the case at bar.

In Gormley v. Day, 114 Ill. 185, 28 N. E. 693, there does not appear to have been any refusal on the part of the clerk to post the copies of an ordinance. The court also held on the merits, that the petitioner was not entitled to the relief sought. The case is not in point.

The case of People v. Quinn, 143 Ill. App. 123, was a mandamus proceeding by the city treasurer to compel the city comptroller to pay over to the relator moneys received by such comptroller from day to day as they were collected. It was held that mandamus does not lie to direct the performance of an act until a default, that the defendant was entitled to a reasonable time within which to pay over the money he held, and that if he held it beyond such time mandamus would lie. In that case it is apparent that no serious mischief would have resulted had the issuance of a writ been delayed until after refusal to comply, while in the case at bar it is plain that delay in the issuance of the writ until the time prescribed by law for the county court of Curry county to perform its duty would render any proceeding entirely futile, and might result in defeating the will of the people of the whole state as to important measures to be submitted at the ensuing special election.

The case of State ex rel. Cook v. Houser, 122 Wis. 534, 100 N. W. 964, grew out of a political controversy as to whether the La Follette or anti La Follette delegates should be placed on the ballot as the genuine Republican delegates. The court held that, as the time for placing the names of the candidates upon the official ballot had not arrived, the proceeding was premature. Nevertheless they went into the question upon its merits in an opinion which, owing to its learned length, it is impossible to epitomize here. In said case, as in a case in Wisconsin, hereafter to be noted, we find the court practically conceding that there may be "special circumstances" in which courts will depart from the general rule that mandamus will not lie to compel the performance of an act until the duty to perform it is due.

Ex parte Cutting, 94 U. S. 14, 24 L. Ed. 49, was mandamus to compel the court to allow an appeal. Held, that the petition must show that the petitioner has a clear right to an appeal, which has been refused him, and that it was not shown in that particular case. The case is not in point.

State ex rel. v. Hunter, 111 Wis. 582, 87 N. W. 485, was a mandamus proceeding to compel a city treasurer to set aside certain moneys as school funds, wherein it was held that the funds had not yet come into his hands and might never come there, and that the application was premature. In the course of the opinion it is said that mandamus will not lie to compel the performance of an act not yet due by a public officer because of a mere threat by him that he will not perform it.

The court admits that this is contrary to the ruling in Attorney General v. Boston, 123 Mass. 460, and adds very significantly:

> "Extreme cases may, perhaps, arise demanding the use of mandamus to control the performance of prospective duties; but this is certainly not such a case."

It appears to us that the case at bar is just such an "extreme case." Here there rests upon the county court of Curry county an important duty, which by their general demurrer they admit they have been requested to perform, and refuse to perform and will not perform; and this, too, in a case where such refusal might defeat the will of the whole people of the state in respect to important measures which will come up for their vote at the ensuing election. They say, in effect, that they intend to paralyze the arm of the state and defeat the will of the voters. If this is not an extreme case, it would be difficult to find such.

The case of Northwestern Warehouse Company v. O. R. & N. Co., 32 Wash. 218, 73 Pac. 388, was mandamus to compel defendants to build a side track for plaintiff's warehouse. This is a somewhat complicated case, in which it is announced that mandamus will not lie in anticipation of a supposed omission of duty, but it must appear that there has been an actual default in the performance of a clear legal duty actually due. The court held that the law did not require the defendants to construct the track, and the case went off on entirely different grounds from anything involved in the case at bar.

Sights v. Yarnalls, 12 Grat. (Va.) 292, was mandamus to compel the issuance of a saloon license, in which it was held that mandamus would not lie to compel the council to grant a license until the time had arrived at which the application for such license could come up for consideration. This was evidently a case where a delay would not defeat plaintiff's right.

Spiritual, etc., Association v. Selectmen, etc., 58 Vt. 192, 2 Atl. 747, is a case fully covered by the syllabus, which is as follows:

> "A petition for a writ of mandamus will not be granted to compel public officers to do an act already beyond their control, nor against their successors in office, not yet elected, to compel them to perform an act in the future."

It is evident this case is not in point by a thousand miles.

Thaxton v. Terrell, 99 Tex. 562, 91 S. W. 559. This was mandamus to compel the land commissioner to receive an application for state land. It appears that defendant accepted the application after the writ issued subject to certain conditions as to the minerals on the same. It was held that this acceptance avoided the necessity of issuing the writ; that plaintiff had a remedy in equity to compel the issuance of patents without the restrictions imposed by the land commissioner. For that reason the case is not in point.

State ex rel. v. Bates, 38 S. C. 326, 17 S. E. 28, was mandamus to compel the state treasurer to transfer certain stocks formerly owned by a deceased person to the relator, who was his legatee, and the court in that case decided that such transfer should not be made until the expiration of one year prescribed by law for creditors to present their claims, and that for this reason the application was premature. It is plain that the transfer might never be made if the claims should consume the stock. The case is not in point.

City of Zanesville v. Richards, 5 Ohio St. 589, was mandamus to require the auditor to enter upon the tax list for the years 1855 and 1856 certain taxes levied for city purposes for these years. The return showed that the time had passed within which the auditor could place levies upon the tax list for 1855, said list having passed out of his hands, and that the list for 1856 had not yet come into his possession. The case does not disclose that he refused to place the taxes for 1856 on the list when they should come into his possession. The case is easily distinguishable from the one at bar for the reasons already given.

State ex rel. v. School District, 8 Neb. 98, is a similar case, in which there is no allegation of a demand or refusal to comply.

In State v. Associated Press, 159 Mo. 410, 60 S. W. 91, 51 L. R. A. 151, 81 Am. St. Rep. 368, demand and refusal had not occurred. The court lay special stress upon this fact.

Board of Commissioners, etc., v. County Commissioners, etc., 20 Md. 449, was mandamus to compel the county commissioners to levy a tax, and it was therein held that there was no presumption that because the commissioners had refused to levy the same kind of a tax in 1861 they would refuse to levy it in 1862, and that the court would not act on such presumption.

Sterling v. McMaster, 82 Md. 164, 33 Atl. 461. This was mandamus to compel McMaster, treasurer and collector, to place in the hands of the sheriff bills for the collection of unpaid taxes. The case is somewhat similar in some respects to the case at bar, but it has this distinguishing feature: In that case there was ample time left after the period fixed by law for the treasurer to turn over the bills in which mandamus might be brought and the alleged duty enforced. A failure to issue the writ therefor would not work any serious injury, and under these circumstances the court held that the writ was premature. These are practically all the cases cited outside of our own state, and in many of them it is laid down as a general rule that mandamus will not issue to compel the performance of a duty before the time for such performance has arrived. This rule, in some form or other, has been "parrotted" down from court to court and from judge to judge, without any particular reason being given for it, or any attempt to distinguish between those cases where a denial of the writ will work no serious or irreparable injury and those "extreme cases," to use the words of the Michigan Supreme Court, where such denial would work great injustice or public injury, or prevent the exercise of the constitutional right of all citizens of the state to a voice in the elections. The rule, as a general one, is good, but, as heretofore shown, there are well-defined exceptions to it, and this is one of them. The courts will not chop technicalities when their aid is asked to compel the performance by a public officer of a duty which he owes to the citizenry of the whole state, but, where no other remedy presents itself, will exercise their constitutional authority to compel by mandamus the performance of such duty.

The demurrer is overruled.

McCAMANT, J., took no part in the consideration of this case.

BURNETT, J. (dissenting). On petition of the relator an alternative writ of mandamus issued out of this court reciting the official character of the Governor of the state and of the Attorney General, and the fact that the defendants are officers of Curry county. It is also set forth that by chapter 422 of the Laws of 1917, now in effect, a special election is required to be held throughout the state June 4, 1917, at which sundry legislative enactments and proposed amendments to the Constitution shall be submitted to the people for their approval or rejection. The essential charging part of the writ reads thus:

> "That notwithstanding the provisions of said chapter 422, Laws of 1917, and the requirements of the other laws of the state of Oregon, the defendants herein, and each of them, have refused, and do now refuse, to perform the duties imposed upon them by law with respect to giving notice of and holding elections with reference to the election provided for in said chapter 422, within Curry county, or to do or perform any other duty or thing with respect to preparing for, giving notice of, or holding any election within said Curry county, Oregon, on the fourth day of June, 1917, or to canvass or abstract and record the returns of said or any election to be held on said date, or to transmit the certificate thereof to the Secretary of State, or to do any other act or thing in connection therewith, and threaten and declare that they will not do so, and, unless commanded so to do by order of this honorable court, will not perform such duties aforesaid. * * *"

A demurrer to the writ having been overruled pro forma, the defendants have answered to the effect that Curry county has no funds available for the expense of the election, it not having been included in the annual budget; further, that the county is already indebted in at least the sum of $5,000, and that the additional expenditure involved will be in excess of the constitutional limit; and, lastly, that, in order to meet the cost of the election, the county court will be compelled to levy taxes in excess of the 6 per cent. limit prescribed by the constitutional amendment adopted at the November election held in 1916.

The initial act required in the matters involved is for the county clerk to issue notice of election not less than 10 days prior to the day appointed for holding the same. This action is not indispensably necessary of performance in any event until at least May 24, 1917, a date yet in the future. The quoted excerpt from the writ, upon which the relator bases his claim, contains only conclusions of law. It is in effect nothing more than the expression of his prediction that the defendants will not meet his views of the law in their action in the premises. Mr. Chief Justice Moore, writing in State ex rel. v. Williams, 45 Or. 314, 330, 77 Pac. 965, 970 [67 L. R. A. 167], said:

> "The writs having stated that the municipal judge neglected to issue bench warrants 'as required by law,' the phrase quoted is only a legal conclusion, and not the averment of a material fact, stated as the foundation of an enforceable right."

This doctrine is well supported by many authorities, both before and since then, holding that such statements do not present any issue for consideration.

Moreover, paraphrasing the statement of the writ, the defendants have a right to "refuse, and do now refuse, to perform the duties imposed upon them by law," for the very good reason that the time for their performance has not yet arrived.

> "A relator is not entitled to the writ unless he can show a legal duty then due at the hands of the respondent; and, until the time arrives when the duty should be performed, no threats or predetermination not to perform it can take the place of such default. The law does not contemplate such a degree of diligence as the performance of a duty not yet due. The general rule is that the writ will not be granted in anticipation of a supposed omission of duty, however strong the presumption may be that the person sought to be coerced by the writ will refuse performance at the proper time. An important reason for refusing the writ in such cases is that, until the duty is due, no practical question can be presented to the court, but simply a supposed case." 2 Spelling, Extraordinary Relief, § 1385.

Again, we find in section 12 of High on Extraordinary Legal Remedies (3d Ed.), the following:

> "Mandamus is never granted in anticipation of a supposed omission of duty, however strong the presumption may be that the persons whom it is sought to coerce by the writ will refuse to perform their duty when the proper time arrives. It is therefore incumbent upon the relator to show an actual omission on the part of the respondent to perform the required act; and, since there can be no such omission before the time has arrived for the performance of the duty, the writ will not issue before that time. In other words, the relator must show that the respondent is actually in default in the performance of a legal duty then due at his hands, and no threats or predetermination can take the place of such default before the time arrives when the duty should be performed; nor does the law contemplate such a degree of diligence as the performance of a duty not yet due."

This court itself has spoken on the same subject in State ex rel. v. Bryan, 26 Or. 502, 507, 38 Pac. 618, 619, where Mr. Justice Wolverton writing, uses this language:

> "It is a just presumption that all public officers will faithfully discharge the functions of their respective offices, and observe all the duties enjoined upon them by law, and it would be a work of supererogation for the courts, by mandamus or other process, to command them to perform their duties in futuro, as they are by law directed. Courts will not assume or exercise supervisory control over public officers and functionaries, whether state, county, or municipal, nor will they attempt to control their acts, or command them to act, except in cases where there has been a plain violation of official and public duty which the law specially enjoins upon them, and it is made to appear that some private individual or the public has a legal right or title to the due performance of such duty, and that there exists no other plain, speedy, or adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law."

The following precedents are to the same effect: U. S. v. Bowen, 6 D. C. 196; Lake Co. v. State, 24 Fla. 263, 4 South. 795; Ex parte Ivey, 26 Fla. 537, 8 South. 427; Lee v. Taylor, 107 Ga. 362, 33 S. E. 408; Gormley v. Day, 114 Ill. 185, 28 N. E. 693; Chicago, etc., R. R. Co. v. Olmstead, 46 Iowa, 316; State v. Carney, 3 Kan. 88; Sterling v. McMaster, 82 Md. 164, 33 Atl. 461; Alleghaney Co. v. Com'rs, 20 Md. 449; State v. Associated Press, 159 Mo. 410, 60 S. W. 91, 51 L. R. A. 151, 81 Am. St. Rep. 368; State v. York Co. Sch. Dist., 8 Neb. 92; Hardin v. Guthrie, 26 Nev. 246, 66 Pac. 744; State v. Noyes, 25 Nev. 31, 56 Pac. 946; Zanesville v. Richards, 5 Ohio St. 589; State v. Bates, 38 S. C. 326, 17 S. E. 28; Thaxton v. Ferrell, 99 Tex. 562, 91 S. W. 559; Spiritual Atheneum Soc. v. Randolph, 58 Vt. 192, 2 Atl. 747; Sights v. Yarnalls, 12 Grat. (Va.) 292; N. W. Warehouse Co. v. O. R. & N. Co., 32 Wash. 218, 73 Pac. 388; State v. Hunter, 111 Wis. 582, 87 N. W. 485; Ex parte Cutting, 94 U. S. 14, 24 L. Ed. 49; State v. Houser, 122 Wis. 534, 100 N. W. 964; People v. Quinn, 143 Ill. App. 123; R. R. Co. v. Thompson, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 12, 118 S. W. 618; State v. Adcock, 225 Mo. 335, 124 S. W. 1100; Pierce v. Executive Council, 165 Iowa, 465, 146 N. W. 85; Scott v. Singleton, 171 Ky. 117, 188 S. W. 302.

A leading case, sometimes cited in opposition to this doctrine, is that of Attorney General v. Boston, 123 Mass. 460, where the city council, authorized by statute to maintain a ferry at rates to be prescribed, ordered that it be free of ferriage after a certain future day, and the court, on application made before that time arrived, compelled the continued collection of toll by a writ of mandamus. Rightly considered, this case is not variant in principle from those already cited; for the duty to collect toll was imperative at and before the issuance of the writ, and it was what the court sought to enforce by its precept. Besides, the statute of the state of Massachusetts governing the matter gives jurisdiction to its courts far more extensive than ours on the subject of mandamus. The law of that state, as quoted in the opinion, is this:

> "The court shall have general superintendence of all courts of inferior jurisdiction to correct and prevent errors and abuses therein, where no other remedy is expressly provided, and may issue writs of error, certiorari, mandamus, prohibition, quo warranto, and all other writs and processes, to courts of inferior jurisdiction, corporations, and individuals, necessary to the furtherance of justice and the regular execution of the laws." Gen. St. c. 112, § 3.

The procedure there contemplates that mandamus may be used as a preventive remedy. This case has been cited many times as authority for allowing mandamus at the suit of some private person or of the Attorney General to enforce a general public duty, but rarely, if ever, in support of the proposition that the writ will lie to enforce a duty not due when it was issued. In State ex rel. v. C., B. & Q. R. R. Co., 85 Kan. 649, 118 Pac. 872, this procedure was employed to compel two railroads to install connections as required by an order of the railroad commission directing the work to be done within 90 days. The precept was issued three days after the order was made. The defendants defended on the merits, pointing out, among other things, that it would be an unreasonable burden, entailing more expense than the revenue derived therefrom would liquidate. By some means or other the decision was delayed until after the expiration of the 90 days. Under those circumstances the court made the rule absolute, but the same judge who penned the majority opinion dissented from the doctrine thereof on this point, saying:

> "The duty and the time were coextensive. It was held in State ex rel. Price v. Carney, 3 Kan. 88, that no previous threat or predetermination not to perform a legal duty can amount to a fault or omission, even though the showing be sufficient to convince the court that the respondents will omit to perform their duty. This was followed in State ex rel. Reynolds v. Barker, 4 Kan. 435, in Dobbs v. Stauffer, 24 Kan. 127, and quoted with approval in Rosenthal v. State Board of Canvassers, 50 Kan. 129, 32 Pac. 129, 19 L. R. A. 157, and is in accord with the mandatory requirement of the statute. A present omission to do a future duty is a legal impossibility. The first time when it could be definitely known that the order had been disobeyed was nearly 90 days in the future, and I think an action before that time must have been premature."

In Tax Commission v. Campbell, 36 Nev. 319, 135 Pac. 609, the court gave a moot opinion on the duty of county officers to furnish tax rolls by a certain future time, but dismissed the proceeding, with leave to apply again if the plaintiff should be so advised. It was said explicitly, though, that the writ would not be granted in anticipation of a refusal to perform the duty when the time for it should come.

State v. Metcalf, 18 S. D. 393, 100 N. W. 923, 67 L. R. A. 331, was a case where the defendant officer was required by alternative mandamus to place the names of certain candidates on the official ballot. Without citing authority in support of its opinion, the court said:

> "Having made his demand, concerning which no doubt exists in this case, if the auditor did not express a willingness to comply therewith, it was proper to institute this proceeding, when, if defendant intended to comply with the demand, he might have disclosed such intention and have avoided any judgment for disbursements. But, having answered and contested the relator's right, he cannot be heard to say that he would or might have complied with the relator's demand."

A similar case (People v. Smith, 152 App. Div. 514, 137 N. Y. Supp. 387), cited in support of the instant writ, was modified on appeal in 206 N. Y. 231, 241, 99 N. E. 568, the court saying that it should not be considered as a precedent, and that it should be limited to the very case itself. Later, in People v.

Britt, 206 N. Y. 246, 249, 99 N. E. 573, 574, the case was further limited, and, speaking of the situation, the court says: "The remedy for this incongruous result is with the Legislature." These few cases are opposed to the great weight of authority, and are sporadic instances of where courts have used their power in meddling with mere political questions.

It is required by our statute that the writ shall "state concisely the facts, according to the petition, showing the obligation of the defendant to perform the act, and his omission to perform it." L. O. L. § 616. There can be no present omission to perform an act in the future. The writ is not to be confounded with injunction. Neither can it be made to perform the office of a bill of quia timet. We are not required to balance the relator's fears for the future against the presumption that the defendant officers will regularly perform their duties at the proper time. Mandamus ought to be used sparingly, and only in clear cases, and this court ought not hastily to use its original jurisdiction to clarify a mere political emergency. No refusal to perform any official act, presently required or past due, is imputed to any of the defendants; and if we regard the authority of State ex rel. Booth v. Bryan, 26 Or. 502, 38 Pac. 618, already decided by this court, as well as the great weight of reason and precedent, the writ should be dismissed.

STATE ex rel. WITHYCOMBE, Governor, v. STANNARD, County Clerk, et al.

1. COUNTIES 🔑150(2) — LIMITATION OF EXPENDITURES — REMOVAL OF RESTRICTIONS — SPECIAL ELECTIONS.

Under Laws 1917, p. 894, directing that a special election be held in June, in all voting precincts of the state, for the purpose of voting on proposed laws and constitutional amendments, authorities of Curry county were not justified in refusing to take steps towards holding the election on the ground the county budget made no provision for the election, for the reason that the next regular election will occur in 1918, although Laws 1913, p. 458, provides that no greater expenditure of public moneys shall be made for any specific purpose than the amount estimated in the budget plus 10 per cent., the act of 1917 removing the restrictions by an implied command that the several counties pay the expense of such election.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑70(3) — PUBLIC POLICY—ADOPTION BY VOTERS.

Questions of public policy and questions of what it is best to insert in the Constitution must be regarded as having been conclusively settled when the legal voters adopted the amendment.

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑70(1) — JUDICIAL FUNCTIONS—CONSTRUCTION.

The oath of the judiciary is to construe the Constitution as it is and not as it might have been.

4. COUNTIES 🔑150(2) — EXCEEDING DEBT LIMIT — "INVOLUNTARY INDEBTEDNESS" — ELECTIONS.

Under Const. art. 11, § 11 (see Laws 1917, p. 12), providing that the prohibition against the creation of debts by counties prescribed by section 10 of this Constitution shall apply and extend to debts hereafter created in the performance of any duties or obligations imposed upon counties by the Constitution or laws of the state, etc., any debt contracted by Curry county in holding the special election provided for by Laws 1917, p. 894, would be an "involuntary indebtedness," incurred in the performance of a duty and obligation imposed by a law of the state, and therefore prohibited, if exceeding the $5,000 limit fixed by said section 10.

5. COUNTIES 🔑150(3) — DEBT LIMIT — PRESUMPTIONS.

After a levy is made, the payment of taxes is regarded as a certainty, and, for the purpose of determining whether an expenditure will exceed the debt limits of a county, it will be assumed that the tax has been collected.

6. COUNTIES 🔑150(2)—ELECTIONS—EXPENDITURE OF FUNDS—PREFERENCES.

Although, if its plans were carried out, it would be impossible for county to hold the special election provided for by Laws 1917, p. 894, without exceeding the constitutional debt limit, it must set aside a sufficient sum to pay for the election, and out of the balance pay for its plans, such obligation having preference.

In Banc. Original proceeding for a writ of mandamus by the state, on relation of James Withycombe, Governor, against J. R. Stannard, County Clerk of Curry County, and others. Writ issued.

The Twenty-Ninth Legislative Assembly passed two proposed laws, and at the same time, under the authority of article 4, § 1, of the state Constitution, referred them to the people for approval or rejection. The Legislature also proposed five amendments to the state Constitution, and, pursuant to article 17, § 1, of the organic act, these proposed amendments were ordered submitted to the people for their approval or disapproval. Chapter 422, Laws 1917, directs that a special election be held on June 4, 1917, in all the voting precincts of the state, and that the two proposed laws and the five proposed amendments shall be submitted to the legal voters for their approval or rejection at such special election.

The constituted authorities of Curry county announced that they would not obey the mandate of the Legislature, and that they would not take any steps towards holding an election in Curry county. Upon the petition of James Withycombe, as Governor of Oregon, an alternative writ of mandamus was issued out of this court commanding the clerk, sheriff, county judge, and commissioners of Curry county to perform all the duties imposed upon them by the laws regulating elections, or to show cause for any failure on their part. The defendants demurred to the alternative writ, but the demurrer was overruled for reasons expressed in an opinion by Mr. Chief Justice McBride. 165 Pac. 566. The county officials then answered by admitting that they—"have refused, and do now refuse, to do the things or perform the acts specified and set forth in the general election laws of Oregon to be done and performed by the respective county officers with respect to giving notice of and holding elections with reference to the election provided in said chapter 422, within Curry county, or to do or perform any other act or thing with respect to preparing for, giving notice of, or holding any election within said Curry county, Oregon, on the 4th day of June, 1917."

The answer contains three further and separate defenses; and, for the purpose of supporting these separate defenses, the defendants relate the facts concerning the budget and the tax levy for 1917, the present indebtedness, and the probable expense of holding an election. The petitioner demurred to the answer. After hearing the arguments of counsel, we rendered an oral decision sustaining the demurrer, and directing the issuance of a peremptory writ of mandamus ordering the defendants to hold the election, and this written opinion is prepared for the purpose of complying with a requirement of the Constitution. The parties have supplemented the writ and answer by a written stipulation giving detailed information concerning the items in the budget, the levy for 1917, and the character of the outstanding indebtedness. The answer expressly admits all the facts averred in the writ: the demurrer to the answer admits the facts alleged in that pleading; by the written stipulation, the parties added to the facts related in the writ and answer; and therefore the controversy was presented upon an undisputed statement of facts.

In November, 1916, an itemized estimate of the expenses proposed to be incurred during the year 1917 was made, in full compliance with chapter 234, Laws 1913, commonly known as the "Budget Law." The budget contains estimates for the salaries to be paid to the several county officers. The estimated cost of the county court is $1,300; of the circuit court, $1,500; of the justice court, $700; of books, stationery, postage, telephone, express, and freight for all offices, $1,500; of water, fuel, lights, repairs, and furniture for all offices and of new vaults for treasurer's office, $800; of board of prisoners, $400; of medical attendance, clothing, and board for the poor, $700; of auditing county books, $175; of bounties on wild animals, $1,000; of widows' pensions, $400; of advertising and printing, $700; of interest on warrant indebtedness, $4,000; and of insane, $100. The budget also includes estimates for bridges, roads, and schools. However, no provision was made for election expenses, for the reason that the next regular election does not occur until 1918. According to the written stipulation, a tax levy was made on December 29, 1916, as follows: "For state tax, 2.3 mills; county tax, general, 4.1 mills; school purpose, 1.6 mills; road and bridges, 7 mills." The county owes $5,000 for debts contracted pursuant to state laws and incurred prior to November 7, 1916, when section 11 was added to article 11 of the Constitution. The tax levy for 1917 was made in accordance with the budget for that year, and, exclusive of state taxes, the levy will produce $61,120. It will cost $1,200 to hold an election in Curry county. If during 1917 the county expends the full amounts estimated for the several items mentioned in the budget, and if the county also incurs a debt of $1,200 for holding an election, the total indebtedness will exceed $5,000; but this conclusion rests on the assumption that the county has no income except from the tax levy made in December, 1916.

Geo. M. Brown, Atty. Gen., and I. H. Van Winkle, Asst. Atty. Gen., for petitioner. S. M. Endicott and W. C. Winslow, both of Salem, for defendants.

HARRIS, J. (after stating the facts as above). The officials of Curry county offer three excuses for their refusal to prepare for holding the special election. The first excuse arises out of the fact that the budget for 1917 makes no provision for an election; the second proceeds upon the theory that the expense of the election will increase the indebtedness of the county beyond the maximum limit fixed by article 11, § 11, of the Constitution; and the third is predicated upon the contention that the tax levy for 1918 will necessarily be raised over and above the increase permitted by article 11, § 11, of the organic act. In brief, the defendants argue that there is no election fund available to pay the cost of the election; that the expense of the election will increase the indebtedness beyond the limit fixed by the Constitution; and that to raise the money to pay the expense of the election will require a levy for 1918 in excess of the limit allowed by the Constitution. Since the defenses interposed by the defendants grow out of the budget law and sections 10 and 11 of article 11 of the Constitution, it will be appropriate first to call attention to the statute and the Constitution.

The budget law requires the county court to make an estimate of the amount of money proposed to be raised by taxation for the ensuing year. The statute directs that the estimate shall be fully itemized, showing under separate heads the amount required for each department of county government, county office, each county improvement, building, roads, bridges, and "shall contain a full and complete disclosure of the contemplated expenditures from the money or moneys proposed to be raised by taxation, showing the amount of each public expense." The estimates and the tax proposed to be levied must be published, together with a notice of the time and place at which the taxpayers can discuss the budget and proposed tax with the county court. After the hearing is had, the county court is directed to declare the amount of taxes to be raised, and to make a levy sufficient to raise the necessary taxes,

> "and no greater tax than that so entered upon the record shall be levied by the authority proposing such tax for the purpose indicated or collected, and thereafter no greater expenditure of public moneys shall be made for any specific purpose than the amount so estimated and 10 per cent. thereof." Chapter 234, Laws 1913.

Article 11, § 10, of the Constitution, originally read thus:

> "No county shall create any debts or liabilities which shall singly, or in the aggregate, exceed the sum of five thousand dollars, except to suppress insurrection or repel invasion; but the debts of any county at the time this Constitution takes effect shall be disregarded in estimating the sum to which such county is limited."

At the regular general election held on November 8, 1910, this section of the Constitution was amended to read as follows:

> "No county shall create any debts or liabilities which shall singly or in the aggregate exceed the sum of five thousand dollars, except to suppress insurrection or repel invasion, or to build permanent roads within the county, but debts for permanent roads shall be incurred only on approval of a majority of those voting on the question." Laws 1911, p. 11.

At the next regular general biennial election held on November 5, 1912, the section was again amended, and it now appears thus:

> "No county shall create any debts or liabilities which shall singly or in the aggregate with previous debts or liabilities exceed the sum of five thousand dollars, except to suppress insurrection or repel invasion or to build and maintain permanent roads within the county; and debts for permanent roads shall be incurred only on approval of a majority of those voting on the question, and shall not either singly or in the aggregate with previous debts and liabilities incurred for that purpose exceed two per cent. of the assessed valuation of all the property in the county." Laws 1913, p. 9.

A new section, designated as section 11 of article 11, was added to the Constitution at the election held on November 7, 1916, and it is here set out in full:

> "Unless specifically authorized by a majority of the legal voters voting upon the question neither the state nor any county, municipality, district or body to which the power to levy a tax shall have been delegated shall in any year so exercise that power as to raise a greater amount of revenue for purposes other than the payment of bonded indebtedness or interest thereon than the total amount levied by it in the year immediately preceding for purposes other than the payment of bonded indebtedness or interest thereon plus six per centum thereof; provided, whenever any new county, municipality or other taxing district shall be created and shall include in whole or in part property theretofore included in another county, like municipality or other taxing district, no greater amount of taxes shall be levied in the first year by either the old or the new county, municipality or other taxing district upon any property included therein than the amount levied thereon in the preceding year by the county, municipality or district in which it was then included plus six per centum thereof; provided, further, that the amount of any increase in levy specifically authorized by the legal voters of the state, or of a county, municipality, or other district, shall be excluded in determining the amount of taxes which may be levied in any subsequent year.
> "The prohibition against the creation of debts by counties prescribed in section 10 of article 11 of this Constitution shall apply and extend to debts hereafter created in the performance of any duties or obligations imposed upon counties by the Constitution or laws of the state, and any indebtedness created by any county in violation of such prohibition and any warrants for or other evidences of any such indebtedness and any part of any levy of taxes made by the state or any county, municipality, or other taxing district or body which shall exceed the limitations fixed hereby shall be void." Laws 1917, p. 12.

[1] Recurring to the answer, the first defense is rested upon the provisions of the budget law. The argument is that chapter 234, Laws 1913, commands that no greater expenditure of public moneys shall be made for any specific purpose than the amount estimated in the budget plus 10 per cent.; that the budget made no provision for elections for the reason that the next regular election will occur in 1918; and that therefore to spend public moneys in 1917 for a special election would be to violate chapter 234, Laws 1913. The budget law was enacted by the Legislature, and the same body passed chapter 422, Laws 1917, providing for the special election. The authority that restricted the disbursements to specified purposes can, subject to certain exceptions not controlling here, afterwards remove those restrictions. The act of 1917, directing that a special election be held, also carries with it an implied command that the several counties of the state pay the expenses of such election; and therefore the restrictions imposed by the earlier statute of 1913 are removed to whatever extent it may be necessary to release the county from that statute in order to permit compliance with the later statute of 1917.

The second and third defenses may be considered together, since they depend upon tax and indebtedness limitations prescribed by the Constitution. Section 11 of article 11 is divided into two paragraphs. The first paragraph imposes a limitation upon the power to tax, while the second prescribes a limitation upon indebtedness. Notwithstanding the language employed in section 11, it was earnestly argued that this section will not include indebtedness incurred in holding the special election, for the reason that such indebtedness would be involuntarily incurred in the performance of an obligation thrust upon it by the Legislature. All doubts concerning the intent and meaning of section 11 will be removed if we first call attention to the construction that for more than a quarter of a century was placed upon section 10, and if we then carry that construction with us and apply it as directed by section 11. In Grant County v. Lake County, 17 Or. 453, 464, 21 Pac. 447, this court held that section 10 only applied to debts and liabilities which a county voluntarily created, and that it did not include involuntary indebtedness thrust upon it by operation of law. The first judicial construction placed upon section 10 has been adhered to in every subsequent adjudication, whether the section was presented in its original or in its amended form; and no difference of opinion can possibly exist concerning the accepted meaning of this provision of the Constitution. Wormington v. Pierce, 22 Or. 606, 614, 30 Pac. 450; Burnett v. Markley, 23 Or. 436, 440, 31 Pac. 1050; Dorothy v. Pierce, 27 Or. 373, 375, 41 Pac. 668; Security Co. v. Baker County, 33 Or. 338, 343, 54 Pac. 174; Eaton v. Mimnaugh, 43 Or. 465, 471, 73 Pac. 754; Brockway v. Roseburg, 46 Or. 77, 82, 79 Pac. 335; Brix v. Clatsop County, 46 Or. 223, 80 Pac. 650; Cunningham v. Umatilla County, 57 Or. 517, 519, 112 Pac. 437, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1051; Andrews v. Neil, 61 Or. 471, 120 Pac. 383, 123 Pac. 32; Bowers v. Neil, 64 Or. 104, 128 Pac. 433; Wingate v. Clatsop County, 71 Or. 94, 142 Pac. 561; Stoppenback v. Multnomah County, 71 Or. 493, 142 Pac. 832. The obvious purpose of section 11 is to broaden the prohibition of section 10, and to include in the prohibition a kind of indebtedness not previously included. Manifestly, section 11 is designed to include a class of indebtedness which the courts had previously said that section 10 did not include. The extent of the enlargement of the prohibition is made plain and certain by expressly extending section 10 to debts "created in the performance of any duties or obligations imposed upon counties by the Constitution or laws of the state." This language needs no extraneous words to aid in its construction, for it is unambiguous and self-construing. To hold that section 11 does not apply to any involuntary indebtedness would be to deny the indisputable meaning of the clearest language. Standing alone, section 10 applies to voluntary indebtedness; but, when aided by section 11, it also applies to involuntary indebtedness, or debts created in the performance of duties and obligations imposed by the Constitution or laws of the state. Aside from the exceptions expressly specified by the Constitution, a county is absolutely prohibited from incurring an indebtedness in excess of $5,000.

While it is not necessary to seek information outside the plain language found in sections 10 and 11, yet it may be of more than passing interest to call attention to the discussions appearing in the public prints, prior to November 7, 1916, concerning the origin and purpose of the amendment to the Constitution. An organization known as the State Taxpayers' League caused the amendment to be framed and circulated the petitions for its submission to the voters. The pamphlets printed by the state and sent to all the voters expressly stated that the amendment had been "initiated by State Taxpayers' League"; and, furthermore, a printed argument made by the State Taxpayers' League in behalf of the amendment appeared in the voters' pamphlet. A monthly newspaper called "The Tax Liberator" was the avowed official publication of the Oregon Taxpayers' League. Copies of the paper are on file with the Oregon State Library. The publishers of this paper proclaimed that one of the purposes of the amendment was to place a limit on the power of disbursing officers to incur indebtedness. An extract from an editorial appearing in "The Oregon Voter," a weekly publication, and republished on page 2 of the July, 1916, issue of the Tax Liberator, reads thus:

> "Emergencies there will be, requiring immediate, heavy expenditure. This applies to public as well as private business. The private business man knows that his income is limited; yet he must be ready to meet emergencies, and must take care of himself when they arise. The public bodies must learn the same lesson; they must learn that they must arrange public finances within the limit of income in such a way that emergencies can be met when they arise. This will require saving and trimming in advance the same as a farmer or other man in private business must do. Facing a limit beyond which expense must not go will result ultimately in more careful financing and ample provision for emergencies. Absence of any limit simply results in adding the emergency expense to present running expenses, regardless of the size of the increased burden upon taxpayers."

Moreover, in answer to the argument that the proposed amendment would not be workable, the sponsors for the amendment claimed that in framing it they had "exactly followed the principles of the Colorado law, which has proven to be most workable and entirely satisfactory to all concerned." Page 7, October, 1916, issue of The Tax Liberator. In this connection it is interesting to note that the Constitution of Colorado (Const. art. 11, § 6) provides that "the aggregate amount of indebtedness of any county for all purposes, exclusive of debts contracted before the adoption of this Constitution, shall not at any time exceed twice the amount above herein limited, unless when, in manner provided by law, the question of incurring such debt shall, at a general election, be submitted to" the qualified electors. One Rollins held warrants issued by Lake county, one of the counties of Colorado, for the ordinary expenses, such as fees for witnesses and jurors, election costs, and charges for the board of prisoners. Rollins sued Lake county on the warrants. The county defended by contending that the warrants were void because issued after the county indebtedness had reached the limit fixed by the Constitution. The controversy finally reached the Supreme Court of the United States, and it was there argued, as it has been here, that the prohibition expressed in the Constitution did not apply to "compulsory obligations"; but that court sustained the defense made by the county, and refused to assent to the argument that the Constitution recognized a difference between indebtedness incurred by the voluntary contracts of the county and that form of debt denominated as "compulsory obligations." Lake County v. Rollins, 130 U. S. 662, 9 Sup. Ct. 651, 32 L. Ed. 1060.

At the hearing we were urged to adopt a construction which would enable counties to incur involuntary indebtedness, and in support of this plea it was argued that counties may at times experience difficulty in adequately performing the duties imposed upon them without exceeding the $5,000 indebtedness limitation; and, furthermore, it was suggested that some county may at some time in the future find itself temporarily weakened, or even paralyzed, by the restrictions laid upon it by article 11, § 11, of the Constitution. This argument is best answered by quoting the language employed by Mr. Justice Lamar when disposing of a similar argument advanced against the Colorado Constitution in Lake County v. Rollins, 130 U. S. 662, 672, 9 Sup. Ct. 651, 653 [32 L. Ed. 1060]:

> "If it was a mistaken scheme, if its operation has proved or shall prove to be more inconvenient than beneficial, the remedy is with the people, not with the courts."

[2, 3] Questions of policy and questions of what is best to insert in the Constitution must be regarded as having been conclusively settled when the legal voters adopted the amendment. The oath of the judiciary is to construe the Constitution as it is, and not as it might have been. Hagan v. Limestone County, 160 Ala. 544, 49 South. 417, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1027; Gray on Limitations of Taxing Power and Public Indebtedness, § 2055.

However, this amendment to our Constitution does not involve a novelty, nor does it present an untried experiment. The Constitutions of some of the other states contain similar provisions, which, when presented to the courts for interpretation, have been construed to apply to both voluntary and involuntary indebtedness. People v. May, 9 Colo. 80, 10 Pac. 641; Barnard v. Knox County, 105 Mo. 382, 16 S. W. 917, 13 L. R. A. 244; Grand Island & N. W. Co. v. Baker, 6 Wyo. 369, 45 Pac. 494, 34 L. R. A. 835, 71 Am. St. Rep. 926; Gray on Limitations of Taxing Power and Public Indebtedness, § 2059.

[4] Any debt contracted by Curry county in holding the special election would be an involuntary indebtedness incurred in the performance of a duty and obligation imposed by a law of the state, and therefore such a debt is prohibited if it exceeds the $5,000 limitation fixed by the Constitution. The organic law prevents the county from voluntarily assuming the debt, and it also restrains the Legislature from compelling the county to assume the debt if the maximum limit of indebtedness will be exceeded. Lake County v. Rollins, 130 U. S. 662, 9 Sup. Ct. 651, 32 L. Ed. 1060; 7 R. C. L. 952.

The next question for determination is whether, on the admitted facts, the special election will create an indebtedness in excess of $5,000. It will not be necessary to decide whether article 9, § 3, of the Constitution, applies to the taxes levied for roads and schools; but for the purposes of this investigation we shall assume that the Legislature cannot divert tax moneys levied for state or school or road purposes. See Northup v. Hoyt, 31 Or. 524, 528, 49 Pac. 754; Shattuck v. Kincaid, 31 Or. 379, 394, 49 Pac. 758; Miller v. Henry, 62 Or. 4, 10, 124 Pac. 197, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 97; Guest v. City of Brooklyn, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 97; Mason v. Purdy, 11 Wash. 591, 40 Pac. 130. We shall therefore first exclude all taxes levied for the state, and also those levied for schools, roads, and bridges. The remainder of the levy was for "county tax, general 4.1 mills." This levy will produce $19,037.60 for general county purposes.

[5] Although the record does not reveal how much of the levy for general county purposes has actually been collected, nevertheless, after the levy is made, the payment of the taxes is regarded as a legal certainty, and for that reason our calculations must assume that Curry county has collected $19,037.60 for general county purposes. Security Co. v. Baker County, 33 Or. 338, 347, 54 Pac. 174. The record does not show how much of this amount has already been expended; but it is fair to assume that only such sum has been paid out as is proportionate to the expired portion of the year.

[6] It is true that the budget shows that the county plans to expend the whole amount raised for general county purposes; and, if the county carries out its plans, it will be impossible to hold the special election without exceeding the $5,000 indebtedness limitation. In other words, if the county is permitted to do what it has planned to do, it will pay out all the tax money for the items mentioned in the budget, and there will be no money available to pay the cost of the election. The Legislature, however, by the enactment of chapter 422, Laws 1917, has in effect said to Curry county: "If your plans require all your money, then you must change your plans; and, instead of using all your money as you have planned, you must set aside a sufficient sum to pay for the special election and only the balance remaining is available for your plans." Miller v. Henry, 62 Or. 4, 7, 124 Pac. 197, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 97. Some of the items appearing in the budget are for voluntary purposes, while the others are for involuntary obligations, and most of the involuntary obligations were originally imposed by the Legislature. The legislative authority which imposed most of the involuntary obligations included in the budget also created the duty of holding the special election, and the duty lately created is not necessarily of a lower rank than the obligations previously imposed. If there is not enough money to pay for both the voluntary and involuntary items, the latter will, of course, take precedence over the former; and if perchance because of a lack of funds the county cannot perform all the obligations imposed upon it without exceeding the debt limitation, nevertheless the necessity of obeying the Constitution is paramount and controlling.

However, it is not probable that the expenditure of $1,200 for the special election will be followed by the direful consequences suggested by the answer. The pleadings do not mention and no account has been taken of the revenues coming to the county from sources other than taxes. The fees paid to the various county officers for the county during the year undoubtedly aggregate a considerable sum, and probably are more than enough to pay for holding the special election. If the income from fees and other sources aside from taxes is sufficient to pay for the election, then all the general county taxes will be available for the purposes mentioned in the budget, and the county will be able to carry out its plans without exceeding the indebtedness limitation. The answer fails to show that the Constitution will be violated if the election is held; and therefore the demurrer to the answer was properly sustained, and the petitioner was entitled to a peremptory writ commanding the defendants to prepare for the election.

MILLER v. STATE INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION.

1. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑417(5) — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—EXPEDITING APPEALS.

By Workmen's Compensation Act (Laws 1913, c. 112) § 32, providing that an appeal from a decision of the Industrial Accident Commission shall have precedence over all other cases, except criminal cases, the Legislature did not intend that such appeal should be expedited to the extent of disarranging the orderly transaction of business in the circuit court, or that cases already set for trial with witnesses under subpœna should be displaced for such purpose.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑417(5) — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—APPEAL TO CIRCUIT COURT—HEARING DE NOVO.

Under the Workmen's Compensation Act, providing that on hearing of an appeal to the circuit court, the court, in its discretion, may submit to a jury any question of fact involved, and that the proceedings shall be informal and summary, but full opportunity to be heard shall be had before judgment is pronounced, on appeal to the circuit court from an order of the Industrial Accident Commission, the court properly considered other evidence than that submitted to the commission on the original hearing, thus making the hearing practically a de novo trial.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑417(9) — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—JUDGMENT ON APPEAL FROM INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION.

On appeal to the circuit court from an order of the Industrial Accident Commission in proceedings by an injured servant for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, the court improperly entered judgment for the servant based on conclusions of law that in deciding what amount should be awarded the court was not limited to compensation as provided by the Workmen's Compensation Act; that the court was entitled to hear and consider only such testimony as would have been competent, relevant, and material had the case been an action at law to recover damages for a personal injury; that in fixing the amount to be allowed the servant, the court was not limited by any schedules of the act, nor by any provision for monthly payments, etc.; and that in making an allowance for surgical and medical services, the court was not limited to the surgical scale established by the commission under the act.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑417(9) — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT — FINDINGS OF CIRCUIT COURT—DEFINITENESS.

On appeal from judgment of the circuit court on appeal to it from an order of the Industrial Accident Commission in an injured servant's proceeding for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, court's findings for the servant held not sufficiently definite to enable the Supreme Court to enter final judgment; the conclusions of law and judgment below being erroneous.

In banc. Appeal from Circuit Court, Multnomah County; Robert G. Morrow, Judge.

Proceedings for compensation for injuries under the Workmen's Compensation Act by George E. Miller, the employé. From an order of the State Industrial Accident Commission disallowing the claim, claimant appealed to the circuit court, which entered judgment for claimant, and the commission appeals. Cause remanded to the circuit court, with directions to take further proceedings.

See, also, 159 Pac. 1150.

While working as a carpenter upon a building in Portland plaintiff fell, striking upon his head in such a manner as to produce a partial facial paralysis. The employer and employé had both voluntarily accepted and were acting under the provisions of chapter 112, Laws 1913, commonly known as the "Workmen's Compensation Act." The plaintiff in pursuance thereof filed a claim for compensation for the injury above mentioned. After an informal investigation, the commission disallowed the claim upon the ground that the injury existed prior to the accident described. The claimant then appealed to the circuit court for Multnomah county, where, after a hearing, a judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff, from which the commission appeals.

Geo. M. Brown, Atty. Gen., and J. A. Benjamin, Asst. Atty. Gen., for appellant. James H. McMenamin, of Portland, and Eugene Bland, of Findlay, Ill., for respondent.

BENSON, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] The first point for consideration is the fact that the trial court did not give this appeal precedence over certain other cases already set for trial upon days certain, although such cases were not a part of the criminal docket. The act under consideration in section 32 thereof provides that "such appeal shall have precedence over all other cases except criminal cases." We cannot believe that the Legislature intended that such appeals should be expedited to the extent of disarranging the orderly transaction of business in the circuit courts; or that cases already set for trial, with witnesses under subpœna, should be displaced for that purpose.

[2] The next assignment of error challenges the power of the circuit court to consider other evidence than that submitted to the commission upon the original hearing. The compensation act as it existed at the time of the appeal contained among others the following provision:

> "Upon the hearing of such an appeal the court in its discretion may submit to a jury any question of fact involved in such an appeal. The proceedings in every such appeal shall be informal and summary, but full opportunity to be heard shall be had before judgment is pronounced."

Under a very similar statute the Court of Appeals of Maryland in Frazier v. Leas, 127 Md. 572, 96 Atl. 764, holds that the language of the act necessarily implies the taking of testimony by the appellate court and the doctrine there announced was reiterated in American Ice Co. v. Fitzhugh, 128 Md. 382, 97 Atl. 999. We conclude that there was no error in making the hearing practically a de novo trial.

We come then to a consideration of the action of the court in treating the appeal as an original action for damages and giving judgment accordingly. After making findings of fact, the court also filed conclusions of law, among which are the following:

> "That for the injuries resulting from the fall referred to in finding VIII the plaintiff is entitled to damages in the full legal sense of that term to the amount of $366.33 to be paid out of the fund created under the provision of said Workmen's Compensation Act.
> "That in deciding what amount should be awarded to plaintiff, the court is not limited to compensation as provided by the statute creating the State Industrial Accident Commission (Laws 1913, c. 112), but acts as a jury, and may take into consideration all the elements of damage that a jury might consider.
> "That upon the hearing of the appeal herein the court was entitled to hear and consider such testimony only as would have been competent, relevant, and material had the case been an action at law to recover damages for a personal injury.
> "That in fixing the amount to be allowed to plaintiff for his injuries, the court is not limited by any of the schedules contained in said act, nor by any provision for monthly payments therein contained, nor by any of the methods provided by said act for computing compensation.
> "That in making an allowance for surgical and medical services in such cases as this, the court is not limited to the surgical scale established by the defendant commission under section 23 of said Workmen's Compensation Act."

These conclusions were followed by a judgment for the claimant in the sum of $366.33 and the additional sum of $75 as physician's fees. We are entirely at a loss to determine the theory or authority upon which the court based such a view of the law. There is nothing in the statute itself to justify such a contention, and our attention has not been called to any authority which might sustain it. Its effect would be to repeal the compensation act by the simple process of appeal. Under the provisions of the statute, an appeal from a decision of the commission does not give the appellate tribunal any new cause of action, or any different law upon which to base its judgment.

[3] The judgment is therefore clearly erroneous. We have no record of the testimony taken in the circuit court and as to the facts of the case are limited to the findings. Upon the questions of injury and disability these findings are as follows:

> "That the result of such striking of plaintiff's head as set out in finding VIII was partial facial paralysis, so that plaintiff for a long time could not control the muscles of the left side of his face, and the control of the left eye was diminished. Such partial paralysis had largely disappeared at the time of the trial and will probably entirely pass away within a few months. During the continuance of such partial paralysis the plaintiff regularly continued at work as a carpenter on said building until it was completed without diminution of wages. That plaintiff's face was not at all paralyzed prior to said accident.
> "That at the time of the accident plaintiff was working as a carpenter, but did not habitually earn his living solely at that trade; nor was he able to find carpenter work during the entire period of his partial facial paralysis. That during part of the period of plaintiff's disablement he worked as an itinerant vendor and canvasser.
> "That said condition of partial facial paralysis to a certain extent but not entirely disabled plaintiff for the performance of the work of a carpenter for a period of several months, and entirely disabled him for a period of, viz., one year, as an itinerant vendor and canvasser."

[4] These findings are not sufficiently definite to enable us to enter a final judgment, and the cause will therefore be remanded to the circuit court, with directions to take such further proceedings, not inconsistent herewith, as will enable that court to fix claimant's compensation in accordance with the provisions of the compensation act as it existed at the time of the hearing.

WAKEFIELD, FRIES & CO. v. PARKHURST et al.

1. ASSIGNMENTS 🔑50(1)—CONSTRUCTION—INTENTION OF PARTIES.

An order drawn on a specific fund may operate as an assignment of such fund.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments, Cent. Dig. §§ 99–105.]

2. ASSIGNMENTS 🔑134—EVIDENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The burden is upon one alleging that a fund has been assigned to him to prove that fact, and that the alleged assignor parted with control over the fund.

3. ASSIGNMENTS 🔑50(1)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

A letter written by the lessee of buildings appointing a corporation his agent to collect rents of buildings named, and authorizing such agent, after paying expenses of operation, to turn over the balance to the owner, was not an assignment of the fund to the owner, but was an instruction to the agent as to disposal of the fund, which direction could be modified or revoked, although the lessee later recognized his moral obligation to apply his rentals to the payment of his debts to the owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments, Cent. Dig. §§ 99–105.]

Department 1. Appeal from Circuit Court, Multnomah County; George N. Davis, Judge.

Interpleader by Wakefield, Fries & Co. to determine the ownership of a fund between Alfred L. Parkhurst and H. Moumal and others. From the decree, Alfred L. Parkhurst appeals. Affirmed.

This is an interpleader suit brought by Wakefield, Fries & Co., a corporation, to determine the ownership of a fund in its hands. The right of interpleader is admitted by the defendants. The controversy is between the appellant, Alfred L. Parkhurst, and the respondents Chamberlain, Thomas, and Kraemer. It appears from the record that Parkhurst is the owner of lots 1 and 4 in block 18 of Couch's addition to the city of Portland; that the defendant Moumal was his lessee; that Moumal had sublet the premises to sundry tenants; that in March, 1915, Moumal was in arrears in a considerable sum in the payment of the rent due Parkhurst; that the latter was demanding payment of this debt. A conversation was had about March 15th between L. E. Crouch, attorney for Parkhurst, and the defendant Moumal. Moumal expressed his willingness at this interview to turn over the lease or the rentals accruing to him from the premises, and Mr. Crouch insisted that this should be done. On March 19th, several days after this interview, the defendant Moumal gave the following letter to Wakefield, Fries & Co.:

"I hereby appoint you my agent for the purpose of collecting all of the rentals from that certain building and premises situated and being upon lots one (1) and four (4), block eighteen (18), Couch's addition to the city of Portland, Oregon.

"And hereby authorize and direct that you take full charge of said building and premises and rent the same out to such persons and upon such terms as to you may seem best for my interests; and that out of the funds collected by you from rentals, you will pay the necessary incidental expenses of operation, and the balance you will turn over to Alfred L. Parkhurst, as rental for said premises, under and by virtue of the lease thereof, which I hold.

"And to carry out the terms of said lease and make all the payments and fulfill all the covenants therein as far as is possible, hereby authorizing and directing you to do any and all things which are necessary or requisite to carry out the terms of said lease as fully and to the same extent as I could, or might do, if personally attending thereto."

Thereafter Wakefield, Fries & Co. continued to collect the rents, turning over the net proceeds to Parkhurst. On August 30, 1915, Moumal sent the following notice to plaintiff:

"You are instructed to pay to Chamberlain Thomas Kraemer Humphreys 400–7 Chamber of Commerce Bldg. this city the money now in your hands and hereafter collected as rentals for the building owned by Alfred L. Parkhurst at Second and Couch streets."

The defendant Moumal followed this up with an assignment, executed under date of September 9, 1915, of all moneys in the hands of plaintiff or thereafter collected by plaintiff, to Chamberlain, Thomas, Kraemer, and Humphreys. On September 10th, the defendant Moumal notified plaintiff in writing that its authority to collect rents for him was revoked. On August 30th, the fund in the hands of plaintiff amounted to $433.32, and thereafter plaintiff collected $86. Being in doubt as to whether the defendant Moumal had the power to make a new disposition of these rentals and direct their payment to Chamberlain, Thomas, and Kraemer, plaintiff paid the money into court and brought this interpleader suit. The decree of the lower court adjudged the fund to Chamberlain, Thomas, and Kraemer, and the defendant Parkhurst appeals.

L. E. Crouch, of Portland, for appellant. Otto J. Kraemer, of Portland (Chamberlain, Thomas & Kraemer, of Portland, on the brief), for respondent.

McCAMANT, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1-3] This record raises one controlling question: Did Moumal's letter of March 19, 1915, operate as an assignment of the rentals to be collected in the future by plaintiff? Did he thereby lose control over the fund to such extent as to nullify his subsequent attempt to divert the fund to payment of a debt which he owed Messrs. Chamberlain, Thomas, and Kraemer? It has been repeatedly held by this court that an order drawn on a specific and clearly designated fund may operate as an assignment of such fund. McDaniel v. Maxwell, 21 Or. 202, 27 Pac. 952, 28 Am. St. Rep. 740; Willard v.

Bullen, 41 Or. 25, 33, 67 Pac. 924, 68 Pac. 422; Morris v. Leach, 82 Or. 509, 511, 162 Pac. 253. In Commercial National Bank v. Portland, 37 Or. 33, 39, 54 Pac. 814, 60 Pac. 563, an order was held ineffectual to operate as an assignment of the fund involved in that case. The question is one of intention of the parties. Pacific Coast Co. v. Anderson, 107 Fed. 973, 977, 47 C. C. A. 106. In 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. (3d Ed.) § 1282, it is said:

> "A mere letter, communication, or other mandate to the agent, depositary, or debtor, directing him to pay the fund to a designated person, will not of itself operate as an assignment, but it may be withdrawn or revoked at any time before the arrangement is completed, by information given to the intended payee by or on behalf of the drawer. What shall amount to the present appropriation which constitutes an equitable assignment is a question of intention, to be gathered from all the language, construed in the light of the surrounding circumstances."

In the light of the principles announced in these authorities, can we gather from the letter of March 19, 1915, an intention on the part of the defendant Moumal to assign the rentals to be collected from his tenants, and to surrender at that time dominion over the fund arising from such collection? It is true that there was a debt owing from Moumal to Parkhurst. It is also true that Moumal recognizes a moral obligation to apply his rentals on the payment of this debt. He testified:

> "The money belonged to Mr. Parkhurst; it didn't belong to me. I considered the money belonged to the building, and the building belonged to Mr. Parkhurst."

On the other hand, the letter was not given to Mr. Parkhurst or his attorney. It was handed to Wakefield, Fries & Co. several days after Mr. Parkhurst's attorney had asked for an adjustment of the matter.

In its form the letter is a mere mandate or instruction to Mr. Moumal's agent, directing the latter to dispose of Moumal's funds in a particular way. Such a direction may ordinarily be modified or revoked. It is true that plaintiff was collecting rentals for the defendant Parkhurst, but Mr. Moumal testifies he selected plaintiff to act in the premises for other reasons; he had known the plaintiff firm for fifteen years; being about to leave for Alaska and being unable to give personal attention to the matter, he selected plaintiff to perform the service specified in his letter of March 19, 1915. Mr. Moumal further testifies clearly and emphatically that, at the time when the letter of March 19th was given to plaintiff, Mr. Guild, secretary of plaintiff, expressly stated that the letter could be recalled and the authority revoked at any time. Mr. Guild does not deny this testimony.

Moumal's testimony that the fund belonged to Parkhurst proves that at the time of the trial he recognized the injustice done Parkhurst by the diversion of the fund to other purposes. This testimony cannot infuse into his letter of March 19, 1915, a vitality which it does not possess. The intention which is material in the construction of this instrument is the intention at the time when it was given. The burden devolved upon the defendant Parkhurst to prove that the fund in question had been assigned to him, and that Moumal had parted with control over it. We think that the lower court did not err in its conclusion that the defendant Parkhurst failed to sustain this burden.

The decree is affirmed.

WIGAN et al. v. LA FOLLETT et al.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. June 12, 1917.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑907(2)—PRESUMPTION OF ERROR—EXCLUSION OF TESTIMONY.

In the absence of evidence or tender thereof to show former statements inconsistent with witness' testimony as allowed by L. O. L. §§ 861, 864, it cannot be presumed on appeal that any such testimony was excluded to appellant's prejudice.

2. WITNESSES 🔑414(2) — CORROBORATION BY UNSWORN STATEMENTS.

A witness' former statement not under oath was not competent under L. O. L. §§ 861, 864, allowing a party to show former inconsistent statements of his witness, to strengthen his evidence given in court, which was weak, although not adverse or prejudicial, but merely unsatisfactory to defendant.

3. SALES 🔑3—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT—SALE OR OPTION.

Agreement relating to raising of hops by defendant and purchase thereof by plaintiff, held to be a mutual agreement, and not a mere option in plaintiffs' favor, and binding plaintiffs to accept the crop if of specified quality, although the quantity was less than that named in the contract.

4. SALES 🔑54—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT AS A WHOLE.

In construing contract of sale, the whole agreement is to be considered, and not merely one clause of it, in the light of prevailing conditions and circumstances within parties' contemplation at the time of execution.

6. SALES 🔑153 — DELIVERY — NECESSITY OF NOTICE BY SELLER.

Contract provision requiring seller to give ten days' notice of proposal to deliver was rendered ineffectual by the buyer's going to place of delivery and inspecting and refusing the crop.

7. SALES 🔑168(4)—DELIVERY—NECESSITY OF TENDER BY SELLER.

Where buyer upon inspection rejected goods, it was unnecessary for a seller to tender goods and load same as specified by contract, since this was to be done after acceptance as the buyer might direct.

8. TRIAL 🔑194(13) — INSTRUCTION — "CONSTRUCTION" OF CONTRACT.

Instruction that jury should give terms of contract for purchase of hops "such a reasonable construction" as placed upon them by persons engaged in that business, held not erroneous, the word "construction" referring to the evidence of the different witnesses, and not leaving to the jury the construction of the contract regardless of evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 462.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Construction.]

9. SALES 🔑364(7) — ACTION ON CONTRACT — INSTRUCTIONS—INSPECTION.

Instructions submitting disputed fact as to whether buyer of hops had reasonable opportunity for inspection held proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1072.]

10. SALES 🔑176(4)—EXTENT OF BUYER'S INSPECTION.

If buyer rejected hops after partial inspection, seller was not obliged to offer further opportunity for inspection.

11. TRIAL 🔑296(11) — INSTRUCTIONS — CURE BY OTHER INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction that seller could recover difference between amount realized from sale of hops after buyer's refusal to accept and the contract price, held not erroneous as giving the seller the right to sell hops for small fraction of their value when construed with other instructions.

12. SALES 🔑340—BUYER'S REFUSAL TO ACCEPT—SELLER'S CHOICE OF REMEDIES.

Upon buyer's refusal to accept goods, the seller may keep the property subject to buyer's order after making tender thereof and sue for balance of purchase price, or may sell goods for best price obtainable and recover difference between amount obtained and contract price.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Yamhill County; H. H. Belt, Judge.

Action by Edgar Clare Wigan and others against C. M. La Follett and another. Judgment for plaintiffs for $104.10, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

On account of the failure of the defendants to raise the quantity and quality of hops described in a certain contract of sale, plaintiffs brought this action to recover the sum of $2,100, advances made by them to the defendants for the purpose of raising the hops. The agreement was executed March 10, 1913, and the material part necessary to detail here provided that the defendants, mentioned therein as the "vendor," should complete the cultivation of about 20 acres of land then set out to hops on the farm of defendant C. M. La Follett, situated at Wheatland, Or., harvest, cure, and bale the hops grown thereon in the years 1913, 1914, 1915, 1916, and 1917, in a careful and husbandmanlike manner, bargain and sell, and between the 1st and 31st days of October of such years deliver to the plaintiffs, designated in the contract as the "purchaser," at the agreed price of 14 cents per pound, 30,000 pounds of hops to be grown upon such premises "in bales of about 185 to 205 pounds each, in new 24-ounce bale cloth five pounds tare per bale to be allowed, in entire lots f. o. b. boat, at Wheatland, Or.," as the purchasers might direct. Such hops were not to be of the first year's planting nor affected by spraying or mold, to be of good color, fully matured, cleanly picked, free from damage by vermin, and in good order and condition, otherwise known as "prime quality," and the purchasers were to have preference and selection both as to the quantity and quality over all other persons who might thereafter make contracts in relation to said hops. It was also stipulated:

> "That the vendor shall serve notice in writing on the purchaser, or his authorized agent, at Salem, Or., at least ten days before the date on which the vendor proposes to tender the delivery of said hops; but such notice shall not be sent until the entire lot is actually in bale and ready for delivery."

The purchasers agreed to buy 30,000 pounds of said hops, and pay 14 cents for each pound thereof, less advances made and interest thereon, conceding the right of the plaintiffs to inspect the same before acceptance, and of accepting—

> "any part less than the whole of the hops so bargained should for any cause the quantity of hops of the quality, character, and kind above described and which shall be raised, picked and harvested from said premises and tendered to him for acceptance be less than the amount bargained for."

It was further provided that to enable the vendors to cultivate and harvest the crop, 7 cents for each pound of hops which might be grown upon said lands, not exceeding $2,100 of the purchase price, should be advanced, $600 about April 1st, and $1,500 on or about September 1st, for each contract year. Paragraph V of the contract is in part as follows:

> "The parties hereto further agree that should any breach be made in the terms of this contract by the purchaser, the vendor not being in default, the vendor may recover from the purchaser, as liquidated damages, a sum equal to the difference between $4,200.00 and the value of thirty (30,000) thousand pounds of hops of the quality and in the condition above specified and hereby contracted, at the market price thereof in Salem, Oregon, on October 31, 1913, 1914, 1915, 1916, 1917, less the amount of all ad> vances made by the purchaser to the vendor by the terms of this agreement, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, and the purchaser agrees to pay the said damages on demand, and should any breach be made in the terms of this contract by the vendor, the purchaser not being in default, the purchaser may recover from the vendor, as liquidated damages, a sum equal to the difference between $4,200.00 and the value of thirty (30,000) thousand pounds of hops of the quality and in the condition above specified and hereby contracted, at the market price thereof in Salem, Oregon, on October 31, 1913–14–15-16–17, and in addition thereto all moneys which the purchaser may have advanced to the vendor in pursuance hereof and interest on the advances as above provided, and the purchaser agrees to pay the same upon demand [there follows a provision that the purchasers shall have a lien upon the hops as security for the advances which they may make and for such damages as they may sustain by reason of the default of the vendor and authorizes them to foreclose the same as a mortgage if such default be made]; but the vendor shall not be responsible for any default in the provisions of this contract, except to repay advances and interest, by reason of the shortage of the crop of hops to be raised upon said premises, if such shortage be occasioned by unfavorable seasons and could not be, for this reason, prevented by him: Provided, however, that nothing in this agreement contained shall be construed as a waiver by either party of the right to sue for the specific performance of this agreement, or as the exclusion or waiver of any other right or remedy which such party may have at law or in equity, or which may be vouchsafed him by this agreement. * * *"

In pursuance of this contract plaintiffs advanced to defendants the sum of $600 on April 1, 1914, and $1,500 on September 1, 1914. In that year defendants raised and harvested from the farm described 28,085 pounds of hops. The plaintiffs claim that these hops were not of the quality specified in the contract, but were moldy, not cleanly picked, not of good color, and were broken and the product of the first year's planting; that they were of the grade designated by the hop trade as "commons" and "mediums." After the hops were baled and stored in defendant La Follett's warehouse the agents of the plaintiffs went to his farm for the purpose of inspecting and, as they contend, of accepting and paying for the hops. They inspected eight samples at this time, which, according to their contention, proved to be uncleanly picked, broken, moldy, and not of the quality described in the agreement. They assert that further privilege of inspection was denied them, unless they would consent to accept the whole of the hops. Plaintiffs duly demanded a return of the $2,100 which was refused by the defendants. Consequently, on November 4, 1915, plaintiffs commenced this action setting forth the contract, asserting the breach of the same, the advances made, the failure of the defendants to raise the quality or quantity of hops specified therein, and their failure to permit the plaintiffs to inspect the hops. The defendants filed an answer admitting the advances, denying that the hops did not comply with the quality stipulated in the contract, or that they refused to permit the plaintiffs to inspect said hops, and denying any failure on their part to fulfill the terms of the agreement, and alleging as a further answer and counterclaim that they fully performed the contract on their part and produced 28,085 pounds of hops; that plaintiffs inspected the same on October 31st of that year and arbitrarily and wrongfully rejected them, after which the defendants sold the hops at the best price obtainable, to wit, $1,936. They further allege that they sustained general damages in the sum of $1,000; that they were entitled to a commission of $140 for selling such hops, and pray for a judgment of $1,050.90. A reply was filed putting in issue the allegations of the answer. The action was tried to the court and jury resulting in a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs for $104.10. From a judgment entered thereon plaintiffs appeal, assigning errors.

John H. McNary and Roy F. Shields, both of Salem (McNary, Smith & Shields, of Salem, on the brief), for appellants. Thos. Brown, of Salem, and W. T. Vinton, of McMinnville (Carson & Brown, of Salem, and McCain, Vinton & Burdett, of McMinville, on the brief), for respondents.

BEAN, J. (after stating the facts as above). The first contention made by the plaintiffs is that the court erred in its refusal to permit W. B. Magness, a witness for the plaintiffs, to answer a question asked for the purpose of laying the foundation for showing that the witness had made contradictory statements. Referring to the time of the inspection of the hops in question this witness testified as follows in answer to interrogatories by plaintiffs' counsel:

> "Q. You may state whether or not there was mold in this sample. A. There was a light trace of mold, three or more berries. Q. Did Mr. La Follett look at this sample? A. Not that I know of. * * * Q. How many berries did Mr. Durbin show you that were moldy? A. Two or three; I couldn't say exactly. * * * Q. Didn't Mr. Durbin show you off the top of the sample, some hops that were moldy? A. I couldn't say whether he showed me hops off the top or whether he split that sample; I couldn't say. I forget. Q. Didn't you tell me yesterday about noon in the office of Mr. Conner of this city, there being present Mr. Shields, Mr. Durbin, and myself and Mr. Conner's stenographer, that Mr. Durbin showed the samples that he drew, the last sample rather, and asked you to look at it, and that you did look at this sample, and you found lots of black mold in the top of it? A. No, I never told you I found lots of black ———."

Objection being made by counsel for defendants to such question, the court sustained the same. The witness had, however, practically answered it, and such answer was not withdrawn from the consideration of the jury, nor was any motion made to strike out the same. It is the contention of the plaintiffs that they were surprised by the unfavorable impression created by the last answer of the witness. That the purpose of the question was twofold: First, to refresh the mind of the witness in order that he might correct his testimony; or, second, if denied, to permit the plaintiffs to produce other evidence excusing their mistake in calling him, and thereby destroy the effect of his adverse testimony. The party producing a witness is not allowed to impeach his credit by evidence of bad character, but he may contradict him by other evidence, and may show that he has made at other times statements inconsistent with his present testimony as provided by section 864. L. O. L. § 861.

[1, 2] Under the conditions disclosed by the record it would seem that the plaintiffs would have been entitled to other evidence, if such could have been produced, to show that the witness had at the time indicated made a statement inconsistent with the testimony he had given. In the absence of such evidence or tender thereof it cannot be presumed that there was testimony excluded to the prejudice of the plaintiffs. Error is not inferred. But there is a stronger reason why no error appears in this connection. The statement of the plaintiffs' witness, made at another time and not under oath, was not competent to strengthen the evidence given on the stand which was weak, though not strictly speaking adverse or prejudicial to the plaintiffs. It was unsatisfactory to the plaintiffs. The witness testified that he saw "a light trace of mold on three or four berries." This did not serve as a foundation for the introduction of unsworn declarations made at another time by the witness, who was not a party to the action, as direct proof to substantiate the fact that the hops were affected by a lot of black mold. To admit such declarations would be going farther that the Code intends or permits. This question is fully discussed in the following cases: Langford v. Jones, 18 Or. 307, 326, 22 Pac. 1064; State v. Steeves, 29 Or. 85, 103, 104, 43 Pac. 947; Dillard v. Olalla Min. Co., 52 Or. 126, 134, 94 Pac. 966, 96 Pac. 678; State v. Yee Gueng, 57 Or. 509, 515, 112 Pac. 424; Rhodes v. State, 128 Ind. 189, 27 N. E. 866, 25 Am. St. Rep. 429. There was no error in the ruling of the court in this respect.

[3] The second and third assignments of error relate to the refusal of the court to strike out all evidence in support of the defendants' counterclaim and to eliminate the same from the consideration of the jury and the refusal of the court to direct a verdict in favor of plaintiffs as demanded in the complaint. These two assignments may be considered together, because if the defendants' counterclaim fails, then the plaintiffs are entitled to the full amount of the advances made. In the first place the plaintiffs submit that the defendants failed to perform the contract by raising only 28,085 pounds of hops, or less than 30,000, the stipulated amount. By reference to the contract we find:

(1) "The purchaser to have and there is hereby conceded to him the right of inspecting the same before acceptance and of accepting any part less than the whole of the hops so bargained should for any cause the quantity of hops of the quality, character, and kind above described and which shall be raised, picked, and harvested from said premises and tendered to him for acceptance be less than the amount bargained for;" (2) the entire crop, whatever the amount, is mortgaged to secure the advances the purchaser may make, and such damages as he may sustain by reason of the default of the vendors, and the agreement authorizes a foreclosure and allows attorney's fees therefor in the event of such default; (3) the agreement further provides that "the vendor shall not be responsible for any default in the provisions of this contract, except to repay advances and interest, by reason of the shortage of the crop of hops to be raised upon said premises, if such shortage be occasioned by unfavorable seasons and could not be, for this reason, prevented by him."

To begin with it seems that the contract is a mutual one and binds the purchasers to accept and pay for the crop raised on the premises, as well as the vendors to sell the same, although there should be less than 30,000 pounds, the maximum amount bargained for. It was a mutual adventure. It is not a mere option in favor of the purchasers. The clause relating to the purchasers' accepting less than the number of pounds named appears to be worded thus in order to provide for the acceptance of such part of the crop raised as is of the quality specified in the contract and for the rejection of the balance.

The clause providing that the seller shall not be responsible for any default, except to repay advances and interest, by reason of the shortage of the crop of hops occasioned by unfavorable seasons and without the fault of the vendors, is the closing part of the paragraph containing the various stipulations that should prevail in the event of any breach of the contract, and modifies the whole of such covenants as to a breach on the part of the sellers. The fair intendment of the latter clause is to absolve the vendors from any fault on account of such a failure to raise the full amount named, if they should exercise an ordinary degree of care and skill in the production of the hops and make an honest effort to produce the 30,000 pounds, although the crop might be short of that amount of contract hops. The trial court properly instructed the jury to this effect over the objection and exception of counsel for plaintiffs. See Livesley v. Johnston, 45 Or. 30, 52, 76 Pac. 13, 946, 65 L. R. A. 783, 106 Am. St. Rep. 647; Lachmund v. Lope Sing, 54 Or. 106, 102 Pac. 598; Kinzer Const. Co. v. State (Ct. Cl.) 125 N. Y. Supp. 46; Stewart v. Stone, 127 N. Y. 500, 28 N. E. 595, 14 L. R. A. 215; Buffalo, etc., Co. v. Bellevue Land & Impr. Co., 165 N. Y. 247, 59 N. E. 5, 51 L. R. A. 951; Ontario, etc., Co. v. Cutting Fruit Packing Co., 134 Cal. 21, 66 Pac. 28, 53 L. R. A. 681, 86 Am. St. Rep. 231.

The agreement as to advances refers to "seven cents for each pound of hops which may be grown on said lands and which are by this agreement to him bargained and sold," and then names the maximum amount. Why this surplusage or dual stipulation, if it was not contemplated that less than the larger number of pounds mentioned would be raised and delivered? Moreover, the plaintiffs have by their own conduct and declarations, as shown by the evidence, placed such a construction upon this part of the contract, for when their agents went to the La Follett farm October 31, 1914, and inspected the hops there was no controversy about the quantity of the crop. The dispute arose over the quality. The plaintiffs, according to the statement they then made, were willing to accept and pay for all the hops which were up to the standard specified by the agreement. It is true that the contract states as a general rule of damages the difference between a certain sum and the market value of the maximum amount of the hops mentioned thereon. In the event of their being a less quantity raised, by computation this rule is easily applied.

[4] In making a memorandum of the agreement the parties used a lengthy, ready-made form in print, adapted to nearly all conditions. In construing the same it is not a question as to what one clause of it indicates, but what the whole agreement means, viewed in the light of the prevailing conditions and circumstances which were within the contemplation of the parties thereto at the time of its execution. It is the contention of the plaintiffs that the nonliability clause only refers to the matter of damages which might be claimed by them. According to the construction which we have given to the contract it is incumbent upon the plaintiffs to carry out the same, unless there is a default on the part of the vendors; in other words, if the defendants, as claimed by plaintiffs, should be deprived of the benefit of their contract they would within the meaning thereof become responsible for a default by reason of a shortage of the crop which, as the evidence tended to show could not have been prevented by them, and held liable for a portion of the penalty. This would not be in accordance with the agreement of the parties.

[5] The motion on behalf of the plaintiffs for a directed verdict for the amount claimed by them depended upon the evidence in support of defendants' counterclaim. That introduced on the part of the latter tended to show that during the year 1914 they cultivated, picked, cured, and baled in a careful and husbandmanlike manner on the premises named in the agreement 28,085 pounds of "prime hops" of the kind specified in the contract, and had the same in the storehouses of defendant La Follett at Wheatland, Or., in good order and condition, on October 31, 1914; that at this time plaintiffs' agents went to the warehouse and stated to Mr. La Follett on behalf of plaintiffs that "we've come down to take in your hops"; that they inspected the hops, examining samples taken from eight bales, stating they could not take them as they did not suit them and were not up to the contract, but that they would pay two cents more than any one else for them; that defendant La Follett tendered the hops to the plaintiffs and demanded the money for them; that this offer was refused by plaintiffs who arbitrarily rejected the hops in violation of their contract. Such was the evidence to sustain the allegations of defendants' affirmative answer. The testimony on behalf of plaintiffs, which is in direct conflict with the main part of defendants' evidence, tended to show that the agents of the plaintiffs went to Mr. La Follett's farm on the day mentioned, the last day for the delivery of the hops as per the contract, for the purpose of inspecting, accepting, and paying for the hops in question according to the terms of the contract; that the hops were "dirty picked" and moldy, "not a sprinkling of mold, but moldy"; that they were not prime hops, but were "poor mediums to mediums"; that plaintiffs' agents stated that they proposed to take all the hops that came up to the terms of the agreement as to quality, and that they were there for that purpose; that there were two ways of settling the matter, one was for plaintiffs to pay two cents a pound more than any other dealer, or the proposition of absolutely rejecting the hops; that they did not accept the hops for the reason that they did not find any "prime hops." There were several witnesses and considerable testimony on both sides. There was a direct conflict in the evidence raising a question for the determination of the jury—therefore, there was no error in the refusal of the trial court to direct a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs for the amount demanded.

There was also a dispute as to the matter of inspection of the hops which stands upon the same footing as the quality of the crop. The question was properly submitted to the jury. By their verdict they found that the hops were "prime hops," as specified in the agreement; that the plaintiffs had a fair opportunity to inspect them and wrongfully rejected them, thereby breaching their contract.

There was some evidence, now complained of by plaintiffs that some of the hops tendered were "baby hops" or the product of the first year's planting, but the defendants' testimony indicated that a few hills were reset where some had died, and the jury found that the quantity of young hops did not lower the whole crop below the standard of "prime hops." This disposes of that contention.

[6, 7] It is also suggested by plaintiffs that the defendants were required to give them ten days' notice of their proposal to deliver the hops. This provision was rendered ineffectual by the plaintiffs' going to the place stipulated for the delivery, and inspecting the crop, declaring that they were ready to accept them if they were in accordance with the specifications of the contract. They were there, therefore no notice to bring them to the place would have been of any avail. The evidence on both sides tended to show that the plaintiffs went to the warehouse at Wheatland to inspect and pass upon the quality of the hops, and the only bone of contention involved the quality of the crop. The purchasers agreed to pay for the hops "after the delivery and acceptance thereof by him at Wheatland, Or." 4 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 629. If, as the jury found from the testimony, the plaintiffs rejected the hops, it was unnecessary and would have been futile for the vendors to have loaded the same onto the boat. This was to be done after the acceptance, as the buyers might direct. They did not so order. See Livesley v. Krebs Hop Co., 57 Or. 352, 97 Pac. 718, 107 Pac. 460, 112 Pac. 1; Catlin v. Jones, 48 Or. 158, 85 Pac. 515; Krebs Hop Co. v. Livesley, 55 Or. 227, 104 Pac. 3.

[8] It is insisted by plaintiffs that they were entitled to an instruction to the jury with reference to the quality of the hops. This is granted. The court charged the jury upon this phase of the case as follows:

> "This action is brought upon a written contract which has been introduced in evidence, and which the court will consider and construe, and you are bound to follow the construction which the court places upon the written contract, for that is the law. * * * Now as to the quality of these hops contracted to be delivered, the contract says that these hops, first, are not to be the product of the first year's planting; second, not to be affected by spraying or mold; third, they should be of good color, fully matured, cleanly picked; fourth, free from damage by vermin, properly dried and cured, not broken, in good order and condition, otherwise known as prime quality. You are to accept the definition of prime quality as laid down in this contract by the parties themselves. You are, however, to consider these terms as used in this contract in the ordinary meaning and acceptation of those terms. You are to give them such a reasonable construction and meaning as are placed upon them by persons who are engaged in the hop business."

The plaintiffs criticize the latter part of this instruction and urge that it would have the effect of leaving to the jury the construction of the contract. We do not think the charge taken as a whole would have that effect. In other words, the latter sentence of the instruction containing the word "construction" refers to the evidence of the different witnesses in the case who were growers and buyers of hops, several of whom had been in the hop business for a number of years. These witnesses fully explained and discussed pro and con the different classifications of hops, including the kind named in the agreement, so that as applied to the evidence we do not believe it was possible for the jury to misunderstand or be misdirected by the charge which, as we read it, is plain and was proper. The point is not well taken. It was in strict conformity with the rule announced by Mr. Justice McNary in Netter v. Edmunson, 71 Or. 604, 614, 143 Pac. 636. This instruction was in substance the same as plaintiffs' request (assignment No. VI), save as to the latter part of such request, which is in conflict with the views we have expressed above.

[9, 10] The evidence on the part of the defendants tended to show that the plaintiffs had all the chance to inspect the hops that they desired, and after they had examined samples taken from eight bales they informed defendants they could not take the hops, as they were not up to the contract. Defendant La Follett testified in effect that after such inspection and rejection he merely told the agents of the plaintiffs that, "If you don't intend to take them, I don't want you to go through and cut them up." The court charged the jury upon this point in substance as follows:

> "Under this contract the plaintiffs have the right of inspection of these hops at any time prior to the full performance of this contract. * * * If you find from the evidence that the plaintiffs wrongfully rejected the hops and stated to the defendants that they would not accept the hops, after they had made an examination of a portion of the hops contracted to be delivered, then there would not be any obligation on the part of the defendants to offer a further opportunity for inspection, for the reason that the law does not require a party to do vain or idle things. If you believe, however, that the defendants refused the plaintiffs the right of reasonable inspection of these hops, then your verdict should be for the plaintiffs."

It appears that this disputed fact was fairly submitted to the jury. We find no error in the charge or refusal to instruct.

[11, 12] As a rule of damages in the case, over the objection and exception of counsel for the plaintiffs, the court instructed the jury as follows:

> "If you believe from the evidence that the plaintiffs wrongfully and arbitrarily refused to accept the hops mentioned in this contract, and that such hops were of the kind and character as described in the contract, and that the defendants had performed all the conditions of the contract on their part, then your verdict should be for the plaintiffs in such a sum of money as is equal to the difference between the contract price of these hops less the amount for which the hops resold for in the open market, plus the sum of money advanced, viz. $2,100; in other words, if you believe the defendants are entitled to prevail they would be entitled as damages to the difference between the sum of money they would have received had the contract been performed and the sum of money which they actually did receive for the hops."

It is claimed by plaintiffs' counsel that under the given instructions defendants were at liberty to sell the hops for a small fraction of their value. But the court further charged to the purport that if the jury should find that there had been a default on the part of the buyers, that the growers had performed all the terms of the contract, that the buyers had refused to accept the hops, and that the hops were of the kind and character described in the contract, then the growers might treat the hops as belonging to the buyers and go upon the market and resell them for the best obtainable price; that it was the duty of the grower in this respect to act in good faith and obtain the highest and best price, and in this connection the jury should consider as to what was the market value of the hops at the time; that the defendants would be obliged to sell the hops at the market value or in excess thereof. Taking the charge as a whole we do not understand the same as argued by counsel. The case of Daniels v. Morris, 65 Or. 289, 298, 130 Pac. 397, 132 Pac. 958, is authority for the instruction given. In that opinion Mr. Justice Burnett, speaking for the court, said:

> "When a buyer refuses to take and pay for property offered by the seller in performance of an executory contract for the sale thereof, the latter has the choice of either of two remedies. He may keep the property on hand subject to the order of the buyer, after making tender thereof, and maintain an action for the balance of the purchase price, or he may sell the goods for the best price obtainable, and if that is less than the contract price sue the buyer for the difference."

There was conflicting evidence upon the trial as to the market value of hops during November and the first part of December, 1914, the testimony concerning which ranged from seven to eleven cents a pound. It is also explained on behalf of defendants that the price being low during the month of November, the market was inactive, and that for a time the defendants were unable to make a sale of the hops. Their contention also is that after a crop has been rejected by a buyer it is difficult to make a sale thereof, especially in the vicinity of where the hops have been condemned; that Mr. La Follett, who attended to the sale on behalf of the defendants, was unable to make a sale in the Salem market, and was obliged to seek a sale in Portland, which he succeeded in making the first part of December. The jury might reasonably believe from the evidence that for the same cause a broker, in making a purchase, would exact a different grading of the product, which would account for the reason why some of the hops in question sold for seven cents, and nine bales for four cents per pound. The evidence tended to show that a fair endeavor was made on behalf of the defendants to make the best sale possible of the rejected hops, and apparently the jury so found.

From a careful reading and consideration of all the instructions given by the trial court to the jury, it appears that the questions at issue were fairly submitted to that tribunal.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS 🔑221(3)—ACTION ON QUANTUM MERUIT—EVIDENCE.

In an action on a quantum meruit for services rendered a decedent as stenographer, testimony that an agreement was made between decedent and plaintiff whereby he agreed to pay her $50 a month for her services, the entire payment to be made five years after she entered his service, was admissible as material to the measurement of damages.

2. EVIDENCE 🔑276 — DECLARATIONS OF DECEDENT—STATUTE.

Such testimony was admissible under L. O. L. § 710, providing that the declaration, act, or omission of a deceased person, having sufficient knowledge of the subject, against his pecuniary interest, is also admissible as evidence to that extent against his successor in interest.

3. WITNESSES 🔑163—DECLARATIONS OF DECEDENT—PLAINTIFF AS WITNESS TO DECLARATIONS—STATUTE.

Plaintiff was entitled to testify to decedent's declarations under L. O. L. § 732, specifying persons who cannot testify.

4. WITNESSES 🔑175(1)—ACTION AGAINST ADMINISTRATRIX—DECLARATIONS OF DECEDENT—ADMISSIBILITY.

Plaintiff's testimony as to decedent's declarations made the declarations admissible on behalf of defendant administratrix.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 711, 713, 720, 721.]

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS 🔑221(3)—ACTION FOR SERVICES—EVIDENCE.

In the absence of evidence that all business transactions at decedent's office were noted on certain calendars for the years 1909 to 1913 inclusive, the calendars, on which decedent had made notations of the business transacted in his office from day to day, there being many days on which no notations were made, had no tendency to prove the small volume of work done at the office, and were properly excluded.

6. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS 🔑451(2)—ACTION ON QUANTUM MERUIT—EVIDENCE AS TO VALUE OF SERVICES.

In an action on a quantum meruit against decedent's administratrix for services rendered decedent as stenographer, though evidence of a contract between plaintiff and decedent was admissible, the agreement was not indispensable to recovery by plaintiff, and plaintiff was entitled to have the jury consider other testimony bearing on the reasonable value of her services.

7. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS 🔑46(7)—STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS—DEFERRED PAYMENT.

Where a stenographer agreed to work for decedent for $50 a month, payable at the end of five years, the payment did not become due until such time, and the statute of limitations did not run on the stenographer's cause of action until six years thereafter.

Department 2. Appeal from Circuit Court, Douglas County; J. W. Hamilton, Judge.

Action by Ada Tharp against Aura D. Jackson, as administratrix of C. S. Jackson, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

This is an action against defendant, as administratrix of the estate of C. S. Jackson, deceased, brought to recover the sum of $2,161.53 alleged to be due plaintiff for services rendered the decedent between February 10, 1908, and December 23, 1913. Plaintiff alleges that between these dates she officiated as stenographer and office clerk in Mr. Jackson's office, and that her services were reasonably worth the above sum for which she asks judgment. The answer denies the rendition of the services, and affirmatively pleads the statute of limitations, and payment. The jury found for the plaintiff in the sum of $550. From a judgment in plaintiff's favor following the verdict, the defendant appeals.

George Neuner, Jr., of Roseburg (Neuner & Wimberly, of Roseburg, on the brief), for appellant. H. T. Bagley, of Hillsboro, and Arthur Langguth, of Portland (John T. Long, of Roseburg, on the brief), for respondent.

McCAMANT, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] Error is assigned on the admission of evidence over the defendant's objection to the effect that an agreement was entered into between C. S. Jackson and plaintiff, whereby he agreed to pay her $50 a month for her services; the entire payment to be made five years after she entered his services. This testimony is objected to on the ground that the action is based on quantum meruit and that evidence of a contract on the subject constitutes a variance. It is well settled in this jurisdiction that such testimony is admissible as material to the measure of damages. West v. Eley, 39 Or. 461, 465, 65 Pac. 798; Chamberlain v. Townsend, 72 Or. 207, 213, 142 Pac. 782, 143 Pac. 924.

[2] This evidence is also objected to on the ground that the declarations of a decedent are inadmissible against his personal representatives except where they relate to his real property. The testimony was admissible under the express provisions of section 710, L. O. L., which is as follows:

> "The declaration, act, or omission of a deceased person, having sufficient knowledge of the subject, against his pecuniary interest, is also admissible as evidence to that extent against his successor in interest."

[3, 4] Plaintiff was entitled to testify to the declarations of the deceased under section 732, L. O. L. Her testimony on the subject made the declarations of the deceased admissible on behalf of the defendant, and the circuit court was liberal in admitting his declarations offered by the defendant.

[5] On plaintiff's objection, the court excluded calendars for the years 1909 to 1913, inclusive, on which the deceased had made certain notations of the business transacted in his office from day to day. There were many days on which no notations were made on the calendars. The claim of the defendant with reference to this testimony is defined in the offer of her counsel:

> "We offer these calendars in evidence as entries made in the regular course of business by the deceased. The purpose is to show the dates on which he worked at his office and when he was at his ranch and the amount of work that was carried on at the office, as going to show the amount of work, for the purpose of showing the reasonable value of services performed by the plaintiff."

The calendars had no tendency to prove the small volume of work done at the office in the absence of evidence that all business transacted at the office was noted on the calendars. The bill of exceptions contains no such evidence. The calendars were properly excluded.

Before bringing this action, plaintiff presented her claim to the defendant as administratrix, and the claim was rejected. It is provided by section 1241, L. O. L., that in such case the claim shall not be allowed by a jury "except upon some competent or satisfactory evidence other than the testimony of the claimant." This statute has been construed by this court in Goltra v. Penland, 45 Or. 254, 264, 77 Pac. 129. The instructions given by the circuit court were in harmony with this construction of the statute, and it was not error to refuse defendant's requests 1, 3, and 7, which were directed to this same subject.

[6] The defendant's fifth request asked the court to charge that plaintiff could not recover unless she proved the contract with the deceased to which she testified. The sixth request was an instruction to disregard the evidence of the reasonable value of plaintiff's services if the jury should find that an agreement was entered into. Both of these requests were properly refused. The action was on quantum meruit. While evidence of the agreement was admissible, the agreement was not indispensable to a recovery by plaintiff. Plaintiff was entitled to have the jury consider other testimony bearing on the reasonable value of her services.

Plaintiff testified that under her arrangement with the deceased her compensation was not to become due until February 10, 1913. Her testimony was to the effect that Mr. Jackson had a number of large cases which he did not expect to finish for several years, and that therefore this unusual arrangement was made on the subject of her compensation. The defendant pleaded the statute of limitations. The court instructed the jury as follows:

> "You can consider the agreement for another purpose, and that is to determine when, if at all, any amount became due, * * * under her agreement, if she had any. Now, the law would provide that for her work if the amount became due, as alleged in the defendant's answer, and six years had elapsed before the commencement of the action, although she had earned it, she could not recover, because the statute of limitations would apply and defeat the action; but, if the payment was deferred, then of course it would not become due until such time as the agreement provided for."

[7] This instruction correctly stated the law.

[8] The defendant moved for a nonsuit and for a directed verdict. These motions were based chiefly on the contention that there had not been sufficient corroboration of plaintiff's testimony to entitle her to a verdict. A number of witnesses testified that she performed services for the deceased, and his letters to her justified the inference that she was to be paid for these services. There was also received in evidence a check drawn by the deceased in favor of plaintiff on which was written, "In full of all claims to date." This check was dated April 18, 1914; it was cogent evidence that plaintiff had a claim against the deceased on that day. The check was for $30, and plaintiff had refused to accept it. There was sufficient corroboration of plaintiff's testimony to sustain a verdict in her favor, and the court did not err in submitting the case to the jury.

We find no error, and the judgment is affirmed.

1. STATUTES 🔑23—PASSAGE—SIGNATURES OF OFFICERS OF HOUSES—CONSTITUTION.

Under Const. art. 4, § 25, providing that a majority of all the members elected to each House shall be necessary to pass every bill or joint resolution, and that all bills or joint resolutions so passed shall be signed by the presiding officers of the respective Houses, every bill presented to the officers for their signatures shall in its entirety as presented have received the vote of a majority of the members of each House.

2. STATUTES 🔑35½—REFERENDUM BY LEGISLATURE—CONSTITUTION.

By Const. art. 4, § 1, the Legislature can of itself refer to the people any and all laws enacted by it, provided that the act shall be first passed as other bills are enacted; less than a majority of the whole membership of the Legislature having no authority to refer a bill.

3. STATUTES 🔑283(1)—PRESUMPTION.

Where the journals of the Legislature are silent on the subject, the Supreme Court will presume that the Legislature observed the constitutional requirement that an amendment by one branch of the Legislature was concurred in by constitutional majority of the other branch.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 382.]

4. STATUTES 🔑23—PASSAGE AS AMENDED—CONSTITUTION.

Under Const. art. 4, § 25, providing that a majority of all members elected to each House shall be necessary to pass every bill or joint resolution, and that all bills or resolutions so passed shall be signed by the presiding officers of the respective Houses, where a bill consisting of four sections passed the House, and was sent to the Senate, and there amended by adding section 5, providing that the act should be submitted to the people at the next general election, etc., and, as thus amended, was passed by the Senate and sent back to the House, and on the question, "Shall the House concur?" the yeas and nays were demanded, when 28 voted yea, 26 voted nay, 6 were absent, and 1 was excused, the names of those voting and those absent or excused being entered in the journal, and the bill being signed by the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate, the bill never passed the Legislature, not having been approved in its amended shape (Laws 1917, p. 457) by a majority of the House.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 26, 27.]

In Banc. Appeal from Circuit Court, Marion County; Geo. G. Bingham, Judge.

Suit by the State of Oregon, on the relation of Max Gehlhar, as District Attorney of the State of Oregon for Marion County, against U. G. Boyer, County Clerk of the County of Marion, State of Oregon. From an order dismissing the suit, plaintiff appeals. Decree ordered to be entered reversing the order below and enjoining defendant.

This was a suit brought in the circuit court to enjoin defendant from placing upon the ballot for the special election held June 4, 1917, a measure, the object and tenor of which were to require the assessors of the various counties of the state to assess certain lands claimed by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, the title to which has been in controversy between that company and the United States. The facts are as follows: The records of the legislative assembly show that a bill consisting of four sections passed the House on February 14, 1917, and was sent to the Senate and there amended by adding another section (numbered 5), which is as follows:

> "This act shall be submitted to the people of the state of Oregon at the next general election, or any special election called before such general election, and when ratified at such election shall be in full force and effect."

The bill as thus amended was passed by the Senate and sent to the House, and upon the question being put, "Shall the House concur?" the yeas and nays were demanded. Upon the roll call, 28 members voted yea, 26 voted nay, 6 were absent, and 1 was excused; the names of those voting as well as those absent or excused being entered in the journal. The bill was signed by the Speaker of the House and President of the Senate and approved by the Governor. See Laws 1917, p. 457, c. 238.

The relator claims that by virtue of the provisions of section 25, art. 4, of the Constitution, the bill never became a law by reason of the fact that it did not receive a majority of the votes of the members elected to the house of representatives. Said section is as follows:

> "A majority of all the members elected to each House shall be necessary to pass every bill or joint resolution; and all bills and joint resolutions so passed shall be signed by the presiding officers of the respective Houses."

The complaint recited the facts above set forth, and further alleged that the ballot title of the bill had been duly certified to the defendant, who was about to place it upon the ballot to be voted upon at the ensuing special election, and prayed that he be enjoined from so doing. There was a general demurrer to the complaint, which being sustained, and the plaintiff electing to stand thereon, was followed by an order dismissing the suit, from which order plaintiff appeals.

Martin L. Pipes, of Portland (Max Gehlhar, of Salem, on the brief), for appellant. Frank S. Grant, of Portland, and L. E. Bean, of Eugene, for respondent.

McBRIDE, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). Much of the argument here is based upon the proposition that the courts will not interfere to enjoin the passage of a bill on the ground that the measure is unconstitutional, and upon that point counsel cite 14 R. C. L. 433; Lewis v. Denver City Waterworks Co., 19 Colo. 236, 34 Pac. 993, 41 Am. St. Rep. 248; Kadderly v. Portland, 44 Or. 118, 74 Pac. 710, 75 Pac. 222; Murphy v. East Portland (C. C.) 42 Fed. 308; Chicago v. City, 85 Neb. 733, 124 N. W. 142, 19 Ann. Cas. 207; State v. Thorson, 9 S. D. 149, 68 N. W. 202, 33 L. R. A. 582; Pfeifer v. Graves, 88 Ohio St. 473, 104 N. E. 529. In our judgment the matter so discussed is not involved in this case. The question is, not whether the measure submitted would be constitutional if passed, but whether the measure has in fact passed the Legislature. The provisions of the Constitution bearing directly upon the matter at issue are: (1) Section 25, art. 4, above quoted. (2) Section 19, art. 4:

> "Every bill shall be read by sections, on three several days, in each House, unless in case of emergency two thirds of the House where such bill may be depending, shall, by a vote of yeas and nays, deem it expedient to dispense with this rule; but the reading of a bill by sections on its final passage shall in no case be dispensed with, and the vote on the passage of every bill or joint resolution shall be taken by yeas and nays."

And (3) the following excerpt from section 1, art. 4, as amended June 2, 1902:

> "The second power is the referendum, and it may be ordered (except as to laws necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, or safety), either by the petition signed by five per cent. of the legal voters, or by the legislative assembly, as other bills are enacted."

[1] On principle it would seem plain that the intent of the framers of the Constitution was that no bill should become a law without the assent of a majority of all the members elected to the Legislature. Laying aside the technical and extremely refined definitions of some of the courts of the words "final passage," used in section 19 of article 4, supra, wherein it has been held that such words mean something less than the last legislative vote upon the bill in its completed form, section 25 of article 4 is complete in itself. It provides, first, that "a majority of all the members elected to each House shall be necessary to pass every bill or joint resolution;" and, second, that "all bills and joint resolutions so passed shall be signed by the presiding officers of the respective Houses." Analyzing this section, we inquire, "What bills are the officers of each House required to sign?" The answer must be, "Bills passed by a majority of the members of each House." The plain intent of the section quoted is that every bill presented to the officers for their signatures shall in its entirety as presented have received the vote of a majority of the members of each House; and to say that it means anything less or different from this would be a perversion of language and logic.

[2] It is suggested that the Legislature can of itself refer any or all laws enacted by it to the people, and this is true. Const. art. 4, § 1; Libby v. Olcott, 66 Or. 124, 134 Pac. 13; Thielke v. Albee, 76 Or. 449, 150 Pac. 854. But the right of the Legislature to submit a measure to the vote of the people is conditioned that the act referred shall be first passed "as other bills are enacted" (section 1, art. 4, supra); the evident intent of the section being that less than a majority of the whole membership of the Legislature should have no authority to refer a bill to the electorate.

The line of reasoning here adopted would seem to render unnecessary a consideration of what constitutes the "final passage" of a bill within the meaning of section 19 of article 4 of the Constitution. Counsel for defendant cites authorities tending in a greater or less degree to hold that the words "final passage" have a technical signification differing from their lexicographical meaning, and that as used in our Constitution the final passage of a bill is the vote by which each House adopts a bill after it has passed the first and second readings, been read the third time, and put on its final passage; and that after a bill has been so passed in one House and amended and passed in the other it is not necessary that a concurrence in the amendment shall be by a constitutional majority.

The first case cited by counsel is Johnson v. City of Great Falls, 38 Mont. 369, 99 Pac. 1059, 16 Ann. Cas. 974, which latter publication embraces in the note to the principal case a full citation of the authorities bearing upon the subject. The principal case does not consider the effect of a lack of a constitutional majority as affecting the validity of an amended bill, but holds that, under a provision of the Montana Constitution similar to section 19 of article 4 of our Constitution, it is not necessary that the yeas and nays be taken upon such amendment. The question as to whether a failure of a constitutional majority of the members to concur in an amendment would render it invalid was not involved or considered. The principal reason given by the Montana court is that to require a calling of the yeas and nays upon concurrence would logically require, in addition, that the bill as amended should be read three times, and go through all the preliminaries of an original bill, and thereby delay and embarrass legislation. The first conclusion would seem to be a non sequitur, and as to the second it may be observed that less haste in the enactment of bills would not be an unmixed evil—perhaps a positive benefit. The other cases cited are to the same effect, and we find no case in which it appears affirmatively from the journal that the concurrence was by less than a majority of the whole membership of the concurring body. As against the views thus enunciated, we find a body of decisions,* fewer, perhaps, in number, but certainly logical in reasoning, which hold that the failure of a majority of the membership of the concurring body to vote in favor of the amendment renders the bill void. Norman v. Kentucky Board of Managers, etc., 93 Ky. 537, 20 S. W. 901, 18 L. R. A. 557, is a case very similar to the one at bar. The following is a statement by the court of the facts and the substance of its opinion thereon:

> "The act originated in the Senate, and passed that body upon a yea and nay vote, entered upon its journal, by the required majority. It then went to the other House, where, after being amended, it passed upon a like vote, entered upon its journal, by a like majority. It then came back to the Senate, where the amendments were concurred in without a yea and nay vote, and without the vote of a majority of the members elected. It is conceded by the counsel for the appellees, and seems plain, that this mode of proceeding did not conform to the Constitution. It complied with it in neither letter nor spirit. The object of the section above cited was to have the assent of a majority of all the members elected to each House to all the provisions of the act, and that this should appear by a yea and nay vote entered upon its journal. If a bill, after passing one House in the proper manner and then, after amendment, passing the other House in like manner, could come back to the House in which it originated and be adopted by a majority of those voting, or a quorum, it would defeat this object and render the section ineffectual. Let us look at it practically. An appropriation bill of $100 originates in the Senate and is properly passed. It goes to the House, where it is amended by making the sum $10,000, and is then properly passed by it. It returns to the Senate for concurrence, and is adopted as amended by a majority of those present without a yea and nay vote. Can it be well contended that this would be a compliance with the Constitution? If so, then, there being 38 Senators, it would require 20, or a majority of them, to pass a bill for a trifle; but after being amended in the House, so as to perhaps bankrupt the treasury, it could be concurred in by the Senate by the votes of 11 members, or a majority of a quorum; and in case of the House, with its 100 members, it would require 51 to pass the bill, if it originated there, but only 26, or majority of a quorum, to concur in it after it had been changed in like manner by the Senate. Further illustration seems needless. It is true it has been held that the 'final passage' of a bill means when it first passes the body, and not when it returns to it, after amendment, for adoption; and it is said that the constitutional provision as to the number of votes, and the entry of the yea and nay vote on the journal, does not apply to amendments or the reports of conference committees. If so, then, no matter how material the change, a majority vote of a quorum may pass the bill. The words 'final passage,' as used in our Constitution, mean final passage. They do not mean some passage before the final one, but the last one. They do not mean the passage of a part of a bill, or what is first introduced, and which may by reason of amendment become the least important. If so, then the body may pass what is practically a new bill in a manner counter to both the letter and spirit of the Constitution. When the bill was voted on in the Senate as amended, and after its return from the House, there never was any further action by the Senate. It was the final vote, and therefore its final passage; and, being so, a majority vote of all the members elected, with an entry by yea and nay vote upon the journal, was necessary to its constitutional enactment. The bill, as approved by the speakers of the two Houses and by the Governor, never was passed by the Senate by a majority of all its members, nor by a yea and nay vote."

It is difficult to escape the logic of this opinion. To like effect, see Cohn v. Kingsley, 5 Idaho, 416, 49 Pac. 985, 38 L. R. A. 74; Stephens v. Labette Co., 79 Kan. 153, 98 Pac. 790; and note to 16 Ann. Cas., supra. But our view of the effect of sections 1 and 25 of article 4 renders a discussion of the above question largely academic, and we do not feel that it is necessary to pass upon it in this case.

It is urged that it has been the frequent practice of the Legislature, ever since the adoption of the Constitution, to concur in amendments without the yeas and nays being called and by less than a majority vote of the whole membership. The most that can be said is that the journals are silent as to these particulars. It may be conceded for the purposes of this case, illogical as the concession may seem, that the taking of an aye and nay vote upon an amendment is unnecessary, and that the final passage of a bill in the meaning of the Constitution is the vote by which it passed before it is amended by the other branch of the legislative body; but there still remains section 25, requiring, in effect, a majority of all the members elected to pass a bill, which in that section evidently means a complete bill ready for the signatures of the respective officers. We do not, after a diligent search of the journals, find a single instance, outside of the present, where it is shown that an amendment by one branch of the Legislature was concurred in by less than a constitutional majority of the other.

[3, 4] We find a multitude of instances where the record is silent on the subject, and in such cases the courts will presume that the constitutional requirement was observed. State v. Rogers, 22 Or. 348, 30 Pac. 74; McKinnon v. Cotner, 30 Or. 588, 49 Pac. 956; Cortland v. Yick, 44 Or. 439, 75 Pac. 706, 102 Am. St. Rep. 633. Here the record is not silent. It shows upon its face that only 28 members of the 60 elected voted in favor of the measure. Until some system of logic can be invented which will demonstrate that to pass a bill it is necessary only to pass a part of one, and that 28 and 31 are synonymous, we cannot hold that this measure ever passed the Legislature. Counsel for plaintiff has refrained from a discussion of the constitutionality of the act, and we do not place our decision upon that ground. We merely hold that it never passed the Legislature, and was therefore ineligible to a place on the ballot. The Constitution provides two methods by which measures may be referred to the people for their decision. One is by petition signed by 5 per cent. of the legal voters, and the other is by an act passed by the constitutional vote of the Legislature. In State ex rel. v. Olcott, 62 Or. 277, 125 Pac. 303, we held that the courts had jurisdiction to ascertain whether a referendum petition contained a sufficient percentage of names of legal voters to entitle the measure to be put upon the ballot; and, following the same line of reasoning, we have the right to ascertain whether such constitutional prerequisites have been complied with as will entitle the measure here involved to be voted upon at the June election. They have not.

The act never passed the Legislature, and a decree will be entered here reversing the decree of the circuit court and enjoining the defendant from placing the proposed measure upon the ballot.

STEWART v. MANN et al.*

1. CONTRACTS 🔑310—DISCHARGE BY BANKRUPTCY.

Where an orchard company, which had contracted to sell orchard lands, went into bankruptcy, the bankruptcy did not impair the obligations of the company's contract with its vendee, nor lessen his privileges under it, and did not foreclose his interest in the land; he not being compelled to take title on less favorable terms than those for which he stipulated.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑212—ASSUMPTION OF VENDOR'S LIABILITIES.

Where an orchard company contracted to sell orchard lands, the contract containing stipulations, and went into bankruptcy, and a third person purchased the lands of the orchard company subject to the liens and incumbrances of its prior contracts of sale, expressly agreeing to assume them as part of the purchase price, the third person placed himself precisely in the situation of the company at the outset of the transaction between it and its vendee, and was bound to perform the company's covenants; if he desired to avoid such result, he should have foreclosed his contract with the party who with himself originally owned the land as tenants in common, whereby he might rid his own half of the land of the obligations of his agreement to sell his half to his cotenant, who organized the orchard company.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑212—BREACH OF CONTRACT BY VENDOR'S SUCCESSOR.

Where one cotenant agreed to sell orchard lands to another, and the latter organized an orchard company and conveyed the whole tract to it, and it contracted to sell to plaintiff on certain terms and became bankrupt, the first cotenant buying the lands at trustee's sale subject to the company's contracts of sale, expressly assuming them, and plaintiff vendee preferred a claim for damages for the neglect of the company and the first cotenant to cultivate the orchard lands as required by the orchard company's contract to sell, and the first cotenant repudiated the obligations originally resting upon the company, his conduct constituted what plaintiff was entitled to consider a breach of the contract to sell the orchard lands.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑337—FORECLOSURE OF VENDEE'S LIEN.

A vendee acquires an estate in land under an executory contract of sale in proportion as he pays the purchase price and is not in default in performance of his covenant; the vendor holding the legal title to such extent in trust for the vendee. When the seller repudiates or fails to perform, the vendee has the right to get out of the land what he put into it by foreclosing his vendee's lien.

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑97—RESCISSION—PLACING IN STATU QUO.

Where land was contracted to be sold, and, on the vendor corporation's bankruptcy, an original owner of the lands as cotenant bought at trustee's sale, subject to the company's contracts to sell, expressly assuming such liens and incumbrances, when such purchaser sought to rescind the company's contract to sell, he should have put the buyer in statu quo.

Department 2. Appeal from Circuit Court Washington County; Geo. R. Bagley, Judge.

Suit by Walter P. Stewart against S. M. Mann, Minerva F. Mann, and the Pacific Trust Association, Limited, a corporation. From the decree, plaintiff appeals. Decree reversed, and decree entered in accordance with the prayer of the complaint, with an exception.

This is a suit to foreclose a vendee's lien upon realty described as tract 54 and the east 110 feet of tract 53 of the Chehalem Mountain Orchards. It appears from the record that in May, 1910, the defendant Mann and one Reimers were the owners as tenants in common of some land of which the abovementioned parcels are a part. At that time Mann contracted in writing to sell his moiety to Reimers on certain terms. While the title was in this condition, Reimers organized the Chehalem Mountain Orchards Company, a corporation, and to it deeded the whole tract. The company in turn entered into a contract with the plaintiff to convey to him the parcels first mentioned. He was to pay certain installments quarterly. The company on its part, among other things, was to maintain and care for the orchards upon the land "in a scientific manner, by approved methods, and to replace all trees that failed to grow within four years from the date of the agreement," and the plaintiff was let into possession. Subsequently the company went into bankruptcy, and at a sale by the trustee the defendant Mann bought in the whole property, including that which the plaintiff had agreed to purchase, and took from the trustee a deed which recited all the incumbrances upon the tract, and the fact that designated parts of it were subject to certain contracts of sale, embracing the one here in dispute, and contained this condition:

> "All of which liens and incumbrances as above set forth the party of the second part [Mann], for himself, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, hereby expressly agrees to assume as a part of the purchase price thereof."

The plaintiff paid various installments of the purchase price, some to the company, subsequently others to the trustee, and finally still others to the defendant Mann, in pursuance of the latter's notification and that of the trustee, all in due time as required by his contract. There were yet other installments to be paid, but, at the time he made the last payment to Mann, Stewart did so under protest, and claimed to him that neither he nor the company had properly complied with the stipulation for the cultivation and establishment of the orchard, and contended that there should be an abatement of the purchase price to cover these shortcomings. Mann responded by returning to the plaintiff all money which the latter had paid directly to him, and repudiated any obligation on his part to make good the fault of the company respecting the orchard. This suit followed, by which Stewart seeks to impress upon the land a lien in his favor for all the money he has paid, after deducting the amount returned to him by Mann. The defendant, answering, recites the history of the transactions and claims to have bought the land free of all obligations whatever on his part to sell the same to the plaintiff, and says, further, that they entered into an oral contract, after the trustee's sale, whereby he agreed to transfer the title to the plaintiff upon payment of the sums described in his contract with the company, but that the plaintiff, after having made several payments to Mann, refused to pay further, whereupon the latter returned to the former all the payments he had made to Mann directly, which the plaintiff has retained ever since, with the result, as Mann contends, that the latter is the owner in fee simple of the property. He alleges, however, that he is willing to convey the land to the plaintiff when the latter pays the amount stipulated by the oral agreement. The reply traverses the answer. The circuit court entered a decree substantially requiring specific performance on the part of Mann, conditioned upon Stewart's finishing the payments mentioned in the contract with the company, but that in default thereof plaintiff should be utterly foreclosed of all title, and that Mann should be considered the owner in fee simple. The plaintiff has appealed.

Geo. Arthur Brown, of Portland (Ray B. Compton, of Portland, on the brief), for appellant. Leroy Lomax, of Portland, for respondents Mann.

BURNETT, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1, 2] The bankruptcy of the company did not impair the obligations of the contract with the plaintiff, nor lessen his privileges under the same. It did not foreclose his interest in the land. He was not compelled thereby to take title on less favorable terms than those for which he stipulated. In buying at the sale and taking the conveyance from the trustee, with the condition inserted therein, as above quoted, Mann placed himself precisely in the situation of the company at the outset of the transaction between it and the plaintiff. The defendant contends that Reimers did not assign to the company his contract for the purchase of Mann's undivided half of the land. That, however, cannot avail Mann in the present juncture, for he took the deed mentioned with the condition stated, and this binds him to perform the covenants of the company. If he had desired to avoid this result, it was his business to foreclose his contract with Reimers, whereby he might have rid his own half of the land of the obligations of the agreement between himself and Reimers. With them would have fallen plaintiff's interest in the Mann half, for that interest depended upon and was derived from the Reimers contract. Mann avoided this course, however, and bought in the whole tract on the terms already described, which estops him from shirking the obligations of the company under its covenant with the plaintiff. Cummings v. Jackson, 55 N. J. Eq. 805, 38 Atl. 763; Hill v. Minor, 79 Ind. 48; Crawford v. Edwards, 33 Mich. 354; Miller v. Thompson, 34 Mich. 10; Goos v. Goos, 57 Neb. 294, 77 N. W. 687; Hadley v. Clark, 8 Idaho, 497, 69 Pac. 319; Selby v. Sanford, 7 Kan. App. 781, 54 Pac. 17; Mississippi Valley Trust Co. v. Hofius, 20 Wash. 274, 55 Pac. 54.

[3] The result is that the situation is equivalent to that existing between the company and the plaintiff at the outset. The plaintiff was not in default in his payment. He preferred a claim for damages for the neglect of the company and of Mann to cultivate the orchard as required by the contract. This was not a breach of the stipulation on the part of the plaintiff. It is not necessary to determine whether the demand was well or ill founded. However, it seems to have provoked the defendant Mann to repudiate the obligations originally resting upon his predecessors in title, something he had no right to do, having assumed them as already shown. His conduct constitutes what Stewart is entitled to consider a breach of the contract on the part of Mann. In the language of Mr. Justice Vann, in Elterman v. Hyman, 192 N. Y. 113, 126, 84 N. E. 937, 942, 127 Am. St. Rep. 862, 871, 15 Ann. Cas. 819, 824, as applied to Stewart:

> "He accepts 'the situation which the wrongdoing of the other party has brought about,' and tries to get out of the land what he paid on it under the contract. * * * The vendee does not rescind when without fault he goes into a court of equity and insists on a right springing from the contract and payment thereon pursuant to its terms. He does not repudiate the contract, but stands on it and affirms it as the foundation of the right he seeks to enforce, as fully as if he sought entire specific performance. He does not abandon his equitable ownership by trying to assert it in the only way that it can be asserted. The contract has been performed by him, wholly it may be, or in part, as in the case before us, and as, owing to the fault of the vendor, he cannot have the full performance to which he is entitled, he asks for partial performance by the enforcement of the trust created by the contract and payment as provided thereby. He does not sue for money had and received, but to enforce a lien on land into which the money went. Nor does he rescind the contract, which is the source of his lien, by seeking to enforce it to the only extent now possible, owing to the breach by the vendor; but he demands that equity should give him the interest in the land that he acquired by the contract and payment. The denial of that right would be an encouragement to wrongdoing, and to hold that an attempt to foreclose the equitable lien is a rescission of the contract would deny the right in all cases, including those in which the vendee is in possession and has made improvements."

[4] The doctrine of the cases is to the effect that a vendee acquires an estate in land under an executory contract for the purchase of the same in proportion as he pays the purchase price and is not in default in the performance of his covenant. The vendor holds the legal title to that extent in trust for the vendee. When the seller repudiates or fails to perform the contract, the vendee has the right to get out of the land what he put into it, by foreclosing his equitable lien upon the premises. His right to do so is well recognized by the authorities. Gerstell v. Shirk, 210 Fed. 223, 127 C. C. A. 41; Howard v. Orchard Company (D. C.) 228 Fed. 523; Brede v. Terrace Company, 158 App. Div. 494, 143 N. Y. Supp. 583; Stockwell v. Melbern (Tex. Civ. App.) 185 S. W. 399; Tyler v. Cate, 29 Or. 515, 45 Pac. 800; Feldblum v. Laurelton Land Co., 135 N. Y. Supp. 349; Ihrke v. Continental Life Ins. & Invest. Co., 91 Wash. 342, 157 Pac. 866, L. R. A. 1916F, 430. This latter case is one almost precisely like the instant contention in every particular. The subject is treated in a very exhaustive opinion written by Mr. Justice Fullerton, of the Washington Supreme Court, and is well worth reading in connection with the matter involved.

[5] When Mann sought to rescind the contract, he should have put the plaintiff in statu quo; he did this only in part, by merely returning what the plaintiff had paid directly to him. Stewart had a right to accept the situation thus thrust upon him, and, by foreclosing his vendee's lien, compel the defendant Mann, so far as his rights in the premises were involved, to make complete restoration to the plaintiff, so as to place him where he was in the beginning; in other words, to complete the process of rescission by repayment of the full sum the plaintiff had already invested in the land.

The result is that the decree of the circuit court is reversed, and one here entered in accordance with the prayer of the complaint, except that no interest can be allowed prior to the date of this decree. Sargent v. Am. Bank & Trust Co., 80 Or. 16, 154 Pac. 759, 156 Pac. 431.

STATE v. WOOD. (No. 3964.)

1. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS ⇨2—LICENSES—"EXCEPTIONS"—CONSTRUCTION.

Rev. Codes, §§ 1594–1606, provide that every person who practices osteopathy in the state must secure a license from the board of state examiners, and provide a penalty for violation of the statute. Section 1605 defines the practice of osteopathy, and subdivision "b" provides that nothing in this section shall restrain any legally licensed physician or surgeon in the practice of his profession. Section 1597 provides that the secretary of the board of osteopathic examiners may, upon examination, grant a certificate to practice osteopathy until the next meeting of said board, when the temporary certificate shall expire. The practice of medicine and surgery is regulated by sections 1585–1593. Section 1591 defines "practicing medicine or surgery," and then provides that the section shall not be construed to restrict any legally licensed osteopathic practitioner practicing under the laws of the state. Held, that the provision in section 1591 does not permit an osteopathic practitioner to practice surgery without a certificate from the state board of medical examiners, and the provision in section 1605b does not exempt physicians or surgeons from the operation of the statute prohibiting the practice of osteopathy without the required license, and neither of the compensating provisions are "exceptions" within the meaning of that term as applied to statutory construction, as an "exception" takes out of an engagement or enactment "something that would otherwise be a part of the subject-matter of it."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Physicians and Surgeons, Cent. Dig. § 2.]

2. Indictment and Information ⇨111(1)—Statutory Offenses — Negativing Exceptions — Practicing Osteopathy Without License.

In a prosecution for practicing osteopathy without a license under Rev. Codes, §§ 1594–1606, as section 1605b, providing that such sections shall not restrain legally licensed physicians and surgeons in their practice, did not constitute an exception, an indictment, alleging that the defendant was not a practitioner of medicine and surgery licensed to practice, did not negative an exception, and hence was not bad for negativing one exception and failing to allege another exception found in the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 295.]

3. Indictment and Information ⇨111(1)—Statutory Offenses — Negativing Exceptions — Practicing Osteopathy Without License.

As the completed offense of practicing osteopathy without a license is clearly defined in the statute without reference to provisions of section 1597, exception in section 1597 was not any part of the definition of the offense, and it was not necessary to negative it, but, if plaintiff had the temporary certificate provided for therein, it was a matter of defense.

Appeal from District Court, Tergus County; Roy E. Ayers, Judge.

B. J. Wood was convicted of practicing osteopathy without a license, and, from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Morris & Hartwell, of La Crosse, Wis., C. J. Marshall and W. H. Smith, both of Lewiston, for appellant. Frank Woody, of Butte, J. P. Donnelly, of Havre, and S. C. Ford, of Helena, for the State.

HOLLOWAY, J. B. J. Wood was convicted of practicing osteopathy without a license, and has appealed from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The three specifications of error raise but a single question, viz.: Was it necessary for the state to plead and prove that, at the time the alleged offense was committed, the defendant did not have a certificate issued by the secretary of the board of osteopathic examiners authorizing him to practice osteopathy until the next meeting of the board? If it was necessary to allege the fact, it was necessary to prove it, and, conversely, if it was not necessary to allege it, it was not necessary to offer any proof concerning it. The fact is not alleged, and the state did not offer any evidence upon the subject; hence these appeals.

[1] The practice of osteopathy is regulated by sections 1594–1606, Revised Codes. A state board of osteopathic examiners is created and its duties defined. Every person who practices osteopathy in this state is required to secure from such board a license authorizing him to do so. Section 1596 provides:

"It shall be unlawful for any person to practice osteopathy in this state without a license from said board."

And section 1601 prescribes the penalty for a violation of the statute. Section 1605 defines the practice of osteopathy, and subdivision "b" concludes as follows:

"Provided, however, that nothing in this section shall be construed to restrain or restrict any legally licensed physician or surgeon in the practice of his profession."

Section 1597 provides:

"The secretary of the board of osteopathic examiners may upon examination, grant a certificate to an applicant to practice osteopathy until the next meeting of said board when he shall report the facts, at which time the temporary certificate shall expire," etc.

The indictment upon which defendant was tried charges him with practicing osteopathy for compensation "without first having obtained a certificate or license from the state board of osteopathic examiners of the state of Montana entitling him so to do," and the charging part of the indictment concludes:

"He, the said B. J. Wood, not being then and there a practitioner of medicine and surgery regularly and duly licensed to practice under the laws of the state of Montana."

It is the contention of appellant that the provision of section 1597 relating to one who has a temporary certificate to practice osteopathy, and the provision of section 1605b relating to licensed physicians and surgeons, each constitutes an exception to the statute which defines the offense of practicing osteopathy without a license, and, since the state negatived one of these exceptions, it was incumbent upon it to negative the other, and, having failed to do so, the indictment does not state a public offense and will not support a judgment of conviction; and, since the state did not prove that defendant did not have such temporary certificate, the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict.

We are not prepared at this time to accept the rule announced by the Kansas City Court of Appeals, in State v. Huxoll, 191 Mo. App. 304, 178 S. W. 866, as applied to the facts of that case; but assuming, for the purposes of these appeals only, that the rule correctly states the law, and that, "where an indictment is unnecessarily particular in its negatives, the state is concluded by it if it fails to specifically negative all the exceptions," we are confronted in this instance with the inquiry: Does this case fall within the rule? Does this indictment negative one exception found in the statute, and fail to negative another one found therein?

"An exception takes out of an engagement or enactment something that would otherwise be part of the subject-matter of it." Bouvier's Law Dictionary.

If the concluding portion of subdivision "b," § 1605, quoted above, is an exception, then a physician or surgeon is not within the prohibition of the penal statute and may lawfully practice osteopathy as such in this state without a license from the state board of osteopathic examiners. That this was not the intention of the lawmakers is practically a demonstrable fact. The practice of medicine and surgery is regulated by sections 1585–1593, Revised Codes. Every person who practices medicine or surgery is required to secure a certificate from the state board of medical examiners, and every person who violates the statute is guilty of a misdemeanor. Section 1590 excepts from the provisions of the statute skilled and experienced midwives, commissioned surgeons of the army and navy in the discharge of their official duties, and physicians or surgeons, from other jurisdictions, in actual consultation here. Section 1591 defines "practicing medicine or surgery," and then proceeds:

> "Provided however, that nothing in this section shall be construed to restrain or restrict any legally licensed osteopathic practitioner practicing under the laws of this state."

A "physician or surgeon," within the meaning of these statutes, is one who has received from the state board of medical examiners a certificate authorizing him to practice medicine and surgery. An "osteopathic practitioner" is one who has received from the state board of osteopathic examiners a license authorizing him to practice osteopathy.

In State v. Dodd, 51 Mont. 100, 149 Pac. 481, we considered these statutes at length and concluded that the practice of medicine and surgery does not include the practice of osteopathy, and that the practice of osteopathy does not include the practice of medicine or surgery; that the Legislature has grouped all persons practicing the healing art into two distinct classes, (1) physicians and surgeons, and (2) osteopathic practitioners, and that the so-called proviso added to section 1591 above "did not affect the status of osteopathic practitioners in the least. They were confined thereafter, as theretofore, to the practice of osteopathy and forbidden to practice medicine or surgery without the certificate from the state board of medical examiners required of everyone who seeks to engage in such practice." We are more than ever confirmed in the correctness of those conclusions. The so-called proviso found in section 1591, and the like provision in section 1605b, were doubtless enacted out of abundance of caution and to emphasize the legislative intention that neither school of practice should be held to infringe upon the other.

[2] Having determined that the provision in section 1591 does not permit an osteopathic practitioner to practice medicine or surgery without a certificate from the state board of medical examiners, it follows that the compensating provision in section 1605b does not permit a physician or surgeon to practice osteopathy without a license from the state board of osteopathic examiners, and, since the provision in section 1605b does not exempt physicians or surgeons from the operation of the statute prohibiting the practice of osteopathy without the required license, it is not an exception within the meaning of that term as applied to statutory construction. It follows that the indictment under review does not negative any exception, and that the rule invoked by appellant has no application here.

[3] Assuming that the provisions of section 1597 constitute an exception, was it necessary for the state to negative that exception by pleading and proving that this defendant did not have a temporary certificate from the secretary of the state board of osteopathic examiners authorizing him to practice osteopathy until the next meeting of the board? In Territory v. Burns, 6 Mont. 72, 9 Pac. 432, this court announced the rule as follows:

> "The criterion which determines the necessity to negative such exception is that it be a constituent or ingredient of the offense. In other words, that such exception is necessary to its complete definition. When the exception is not a part of the definition of the offense, and in this way does not, therefore, become a part of the enacting clause, it is a matter of defense."

The rule has since been approved in State v. Williams, 9 Mont. 179, 23 Pac. 335, and in State v. Tully, 31 Mont. 365, 78 Pac. 760, 3 Ann. Cas. 824, and is approved by the authorities generally. Ferner v. State, 151 Ind. 247, 51 N. E. 360; Hale v. State, 58 Ohio St. 676, 51 N. E. 154; Smith v. People, 51 Colo. 270, 117 Pac. 612, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 158. A further citation of the authorities will be found in the note to Devine v. Commonwealth, 13 Ann. Cas. 364; in 14 R. C. L. 188; and in 22 Cyc. 344.

The completed offense of practicing osteopathy without a license is clearly defined in the statute without reference to the provisions of section 1597. The exception is not any part of the definition of the offense, and it was therefore not necessary to negative it. If the defendant had such temporary certificate, it was a matter of defense.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Affirmed.

STATE ex rel. FORD, Atty. Gen., v. SCHOFIELD et al. (No. 4005.)

(Supreme Court of Montana. May 15, 1917.)

STATUTES 🔑89—VALIDITY—LOCAL AND SPECIAL LAWS—CREATION OF COUNTY.

In the state's proceeding to test the validity of Senate Bill 76, creating Carter county and providing for its organization and government (Laws 1917, c. 56), the Attorney General contending that the bill violates Const. art. 5, § 26, forbidding special legislation upon enumerated subjects, including locating or changing county seats, regulating county or township affairs, and all other cases where a general law can be made applicable, held, that demurrer to the complaint will be sustained, and the proceeding dismissed.

Sanner, J., dissenting.

Proceeding by the State of Montana, on the relation of S. C. Ford, Attorney General, against T. F. Schofield, James Monroe, and George Hobbs. Demurrer to the complaint sustained, and proceeding dismissed.

S. C. Ford, of Helena, Frank Woody, of Butte, Walsh, Nolan & Scallon, of Helena, and Geo. W. Farr, of Miles City, for relator. Jones & Jones, of Harlowton, Booth & Dousman, of Baker, and Gunn, Rasch & Hall, Galen & Mettler, and E. G. Toomey, all of Helena, for respondents.

HOLLOWAY, J. From the adoption of the Constitution in 1889 until 1911 we had no general statute for the creation of new counties, but during that period 13 new counties were created, each by special act of the Legislature. By chapter 112, Laws of 1911, there was written into the statutes of this state a general law of uniform operation, providing for the creation, organization, and classification of new counties. That act was amended in 1913, and the amended act superseded by another of the same general character, in 1915. Chapter 139, Laws 1915. Under these acts 12 counties were created, organized, classified, and are now existing political subdivisions of the state. Without expressly repealing the general law, the Fifteenth Legislative Assembly passed Senate Bill 76—a special act—creating Carter county and providing for its organization and government. This act became a law without the approval of the Governor, pursuant to section 12, article 7, of the Constitution. The present proceeding was instituted to test the validity of the act, and it is the contention of relator that it violates the provisions of section 26, article 5, of the Constitution. That section forbids special legislation upon any one of the 34 enumerated subjects, among them locating or changing county seats, regulating county or township affairs, and concludes:

> "In all other cases where a general law can be made applicable, no special law shall be enacted."

Assuming the mandatory and prohibitory character of this last provision, respondents insist nevertheless that it is addressed to the Legislature exclusively; that whether a general law can be made applicable in any given case must be determined by the Legislature from facts and circumstances as they are made to appear to it, and that the courts cannot review the evidence before the Legislature, and therefore cannot overrule or reverse the legislative determination; that the enactment of a special law upon a given subject is a legislative determination that a general law cannot be made applicable to it; and that such determination must of necessity be final and conclusive. Adjudicated cases sustaining these propositions generally are cited almost without number.

The concluding sentence of section 26 above is not an absolute prohibition in the sense that the preceding section is. Section 25 is absolute in its terms. It means that under no possible set of circumstances may a law be revised or amended by reference to its title only, and any act passed in violation of its provisions is absolutely void. The concluding sentence of section 26 does not prohibit special legislation altogether, but does seek to curtail it. It forbids special laws in all cases where general laws can be made applicable. But who shall determine whether a general law can be made applicable in any given instance? Upon this question the decisions are in hopeless conflict, and no useful purpose can be served by reviewing them at length. The cases cited by respondents hold that the question is one exclusively for legislative determination, while cases cited by relator hold with equal emphasis that it is one for decision by the courts. We might relieve ourselves of much work and worry by accepting one theory or the other, and, blindly following precedent, content ourselves with merely citing the authorities. The decisions of other state courts are not binding upon us. They are useful or persuasive with us, or they are not, according to whether the reasoning appeals to our judgment or fails to do so. We are not at liberty to abdicate in favor of some other tribunal, but conceive it to be our duty to determine every controversy presented to us according to our own best judgment, enlightened to the utmost extent possible by the learning and experience of other courts and by textwriters who have specialized upon particular subjects.

In this instance we find ourselves unable to agree entirely with either theory established by the adjudications to which reference has been made. We have on our statute books a general law, of uniform operation throughout the state, which forbids gambling. If the Legislature should be unwise enough to substitute for this law another of the same character, but which by its terms applied only to certain named counties, excluding all others, we imagine no one would hesitate to pronounce such an act unconstitutional and void; and neither can we imagine that it could be urged with any semblance of reason that it was for the Legislature to determine finally that a general anti-gambling law cannot be made applicable throughout this state. It is inconceivable that there is such a different standard of morality prevailing in different sections of the state that a police regulation of this character cannot be made to operate uniformly. Examples might be multiplied to illustrate the view that it cannot be exclusively a legislative question to determine in every instance whether a general law can be made applicable.

On the other hand, we think the theory that it is a judicial question in every instance equally fallacious. To illustrate by an extreme case: Suppose there is a county in this state, no portion of which is adapted to agriculture, but which does contain extensive grazing areas; that in the remainder of the state agricultural development has progressed to that point where a herd law is imperatively demanded, and the Legislature is responsive to the demand and seeks to promote the welfare of the state by the enactment of a suitable law restraining live stock from running at large. If the Legislature ascertains that the facts are that the range county is so far bounded by mountain ranges and rivers that stock running at large therein will not jeopardize the interests of any other section, then it would seem that common sense would dictate to the lawmakers that a statute be enacted restraining live stock from running at large, but excepting from the operation of its provisions the range county. Such an act would meet the demands of every section of the state, promote the general welfare, and infringe the rights of no one; but it would be special legislation. A herd law could be passed which would be general and uniform in its operation throughout the state, and which, in addition to promoting the interests of 40 counties, would also destroy the principal industry of the one. Indeed, it is conveivable that a general law can be enacted upon any subject of legislation; but, if this be the sense in which the language is employed in the concluding sentence of section 26, then its ultimate purpose is to prohibit special legislation altogether.

We believe there are many subjects of legislation, which, from their inherent character, are subject to regulation by general laws, and that the courts are as advantageously situated as any other department of government to say so; on the other hand, there are certain subjects which may or may not lend themselves to regulation by general laws, depending upon extrinsic facts and circumstances which the Legislature is peculiarly fitted to ascertain and determine, but which the courts have no means available to ascertain. Upon the first class of subjects, the courts can and must determine the applicability of general laws; upon the second, the Legislature must be left free to act.

The creation of new counties involves a question of public policy exclusively. It would have been perfectly competent for the people, in adopting their Constitution, to have made provision that the state should be divided into the 16 counties then in existence, and prohibited the formation of any new counties thereafter. It would have been a very unwise thing to do, and it was not done. The debates of the constitutional convention disclose an attempt to write into our fundamental law a property restriction upon the creation of new counties; but the attempt failed, and the sense of the convention, so far as it is disclosed, was in favor of the widest liberality towards growing communities aspiring to local self-government. In the creation of new counties there are certain considerations which address themselves to the Legislature, common to all alike—the financial ability of the community to support county government and the effect which the withdrawal of one portion of a county may have upon the capacity of the old county to continue its organization. If these and like questions were the only ones which could arise, the applicability of a general law to the creation of new counties would seem a demonstrable fact; but they are not. In the early history of the state we had certain sections of vast territorial extent, but with small population and little taxable wealth; others with congested population and vast wealth, but with little territory tributary. In many of the states on the plains it might be possible to lay off counties with a foot rule—to follow township and range lines and achieve practical results; but in a mountainous country, with navigable streams, such as this, so simple a plan could not well be applied. The topography of the country, the accessibility of one portion to another, the lines of transportation, the stability of the community, the opportunities for growth and development, are considerations which must enter into the discussion of any plan for county organization here.

As remarked before, it was possible for the first state Legislature to enact a general law for the organization of new counties. The same general law enacted in 1915 could have been enacted in 1891, but it would have been a useless piece of incumbrance upon the statute books. It would have prohibited the formation of any new counties for many years, and would have retarded the development of the state to an almost unlimited extent. It was likewise possible to enact a general law with such liberal provisions that any aspiring community in the state, then or thereafter, could have secured separate county government. But the possibility of enacting a general law for new county organization is not the test prescribed by the Constitution. In order to bar special legislation, the general law must be applicable, and in our opinion that word was employed in a very general and comprehensive sense. The framers of our Constitution were not idle dreamers. They were eminently endowed with practical common sense. Their discussions in convention disclose a fixed purpose to avoid legislating, and to confine their efforts to the enunciation of those fundamental principles deemed essential to the stability and general welfare of the commonwealth. They recognized that the Constitution was intended to be, not a grant, but a limitation, of power, and they left the legislative department free to exercise its lawmaking function, subject only to such limitations as were deemed necessary to be imposed. They wrote with peculiar perspicuity and terseness, and never intended their language to be given a strained or unreasonable interpretation. When they referred to a general law as applicable to a particular case, they meant a law in its practical operation adequate to the purpose for which it was intended. In this sense, whether a general law can be made applicable to the creation of new counties depends upon a multitude of extraneous facts and circumstances, which the Legislature, operating without the fixed rules of judicial procedure, is peculiarly qualified to ascertain and pass upon, but which the courts can but inadequately ascertain, if at all.

Our conclusion upon this branch of the case is that with respect to the particular subject—the creation of new counties—it was peculiarly the province of the Legislature to determine at all times between 1889 and 1911 whether a general law could be made applicable, and that the failure or refusal to enact a general statute upon the subject is tantamount to a decision that such a statute could not be made applicable.

But it is said that our experience under the general law has demonstrated its applicability, and that a decision of the question has been set at rest by the Legislature itself. At first blush this suggestion seems to afford a solution for the problem presented; but no act of a legislative assembly is irrepealable, and though the general law may have served the purpose intended during the six years succeeding its enactment in 1911, it was altogether competent for the last legislative assembly to determine that it has spent its force and is no longer adequate to the purpose for which it was enacted. It might have determined that with the creation of the 12 new counties, the physical and topographical conditions of the state no longer admit of its practical application, and that at the present state of our history and development no general law upon that subject can be made to serve the best interests of the commonwealth. Had it so declared by repealing the general law, we should not deem it within the province of this court to attempt to interfere, and if, with the general law repealed, it had then passed the special act creating Carter county, we should have accepted its determination that a general law could not be made applicable as conclusive upon us.

But it is insisted that the general law was not repealed, and that under its provisions new counties may now be created, if they can meet the requirements which its terms impose. But if no community in the state can now or hereafter meet those requirements, instead of being a law for the creation of new counties, it becomes a law prohibiting the formation of new counties. In other words, it has ceased to fulfill the purpose for which it was enacted. It has ceased to be applicable to the subject in the constitutional sense.

If the Legislature possessed the power and authority, by repealing the general law, to say that a general statute cannot now be made applicable to the creation of new counties, it likewise possessed the authority to declare the same result by the enactment of this special law. We will not indulge the presumption that the legislative assembly wittingly violated the Constitution; but, assuming that it is necessary to do so in order to uphold the validity of the act in question, we will presume that due consideration was given to the concluding sentence of section 26, and that the enactment of this special law was the means employed to express the legislative determination that the general law is no longer applicable to the creation of new counties under the conditions as they now exist. The same conclusion might have been expressed more lucidly by repealing the general law outright; but, if the determination was reached, the particular means by which it was expressed is of no moment.

In passing, we may observe that there are certain provisions contained in the act creating Carter county which are clearly invalid; but they refer to incidental matters, and may be eliminated without impairing the act as a whole. It is inconceivable that they could have operated as inducements to the passage of the act, or that without them the measure would not have received favorable consideration at the hands of the Legislature.

The demurrer to the complaint is sustained, and the proceeding is dismissed.

Dismissed.

BRANTLY, C. J. I concur in the conclusion reached by Mr. Justice HOLLOWAY, but do so on the ground that I am not satisfied that the injunction found in section 26, article 5, of the Constitution, is addressed to the judicial department of the government. The creation of new counties is a matter of public policy. The propriety of creating one at any time depends upon fact conditions as they exist at that time. These the Legislature can more readily ascertain and weigh than the courts. I therefore incline to the opinion that the injunction is addressed exclusively to the Legislature, and hence that the act in question must be upheld.

SANNER, J. (dissenting). Heartily subscribing to the doctrine, so often announced by this court, that in testing the constitutionality of an act of the Legislature the question is not whether it is possible to condemn, but whether it is possible to uphold, and accepting, for the most part, the reasoning of Mr. Justice HOLLOWAY in the above opinion, I am nevertheless unable to assent to all of it or to the conclusions announced. Briefly stated, my reasons are these:

The injunction expressed in the final clause of section 26, article 5, is prohibitory (Constitution, § 29, art. 3) and—if the Constitution is to have any force at all—is binding upon the Legislature, the courts and every other agency engaged in the government of this state. The language of section 26, article 5, is simple, direct, and plain; no resort to authority for its interpretation is required; he who runs may read it. Its purport is that in certain enumerated cases no special act shall ever be passed, nor shall such act be passed in any other case to which a general law can be made applicable; in other words, the prohibition is absolute as to the 34 enumerated cases and conditioned in every other only upon the fact that a general law can be made applicable to the subject-matter. Why the prohibition was inserted is perfectly clear. To pass an act for a given case is easy; to frame general legislation, which shall operate justly upon divergent conditions, requires time and thought; unchecked legislation has always tended to degenerate into the easier courses of specialism, log-rolling, action upon the theory that the legislators have favors to exchange, instead of duties to perform; and the purpose of the prohibition is to furnish the check necessary to prevent just this sort of degeneration.

Confessedly, the act creating Carter county is a special one. When it was passed we had, and I think still have, a general law upon the statute books relative to the creation of new counties; so "applicable" to the subject has that law been that 12 new counties have been created under it. Its enactment and successful operation furnish proof that the subject is one amenable to treatment by general law; and that fact stands established unless the Legislature, with power so to do, has declared that the fact no longer exists. I do not question at this time that the Legislature could have so declared. What the opinion asserts, and what I deny, is that, by passing the special act creating Carter county, the Legislature did declare the general law no longer operative, thus in effect repealing it, and did declare that no general law could be made applicable to the subject under present conditions. This not only invokes the disfavored doctrine of implied repeal, but effects such a repeal of a general law by a purely special act, a proceeding almost unheard of in the annals of jurisprudence; it is not in my opinion the natural inference from the enactment of the special law, such inference rather being that, since Carter county could not meet the requirements of the general law, a special case should be made of it without regard to the general law; the written record of the legislative session shows that the general law was deemed applicable to the subject of new counties, because the Legislature declined three specific proposals (House Bill 51; House Bill 322; Senate Bill 68) for its amendment; the presence in the special act of provisions admittedly unconstitutional shows affirmatively that in its enactment the Legislature was not thinking of the Constitution; and finally, although every theory on which courts have relied in avoidance of provisions similar to section 26, article 5, is invoked by the respondents, the view that the special act operates as a general law was not exploited in the briefs or argument.

A study of the authorities cited by the respondents discloses much blind following of precedents which take no account of the "mandatory and prohibitory" character of constitutional provisions such as ours are declared to be; and these authorities lead logically to the result, which many of them express, that in every instance the applicability of a general law is a legislative question—a proposition that cannot be maintained. Then, too, some of these authorities go to the length of saying that the criterion, which is to be applied exclusively by the Legislature, is the applicability of a general law to the particular case, instead of the amenability of the subject presented by the particular case to treatment through general law. Such reasoning begs the whole question, and makes advisory only what the Constitution explicitly says is mandatory and prohibitory; under it the Legislature could properly except a particular citizen or a particular county from the operation of the laws against homicide, upon the ground that in its judgment they do not apply to him or to it, which is an absurdity on its face.

Respondents lay emphasis on the propositions that this court has decided the creation of new counties by special act to be permissible under the Constitution, that by the rule of ejusdem generis the concluding clause of section 26, article 5, can have no application to the subject of new counties, and that this section came to our Constitution from the act of Congress approved July 30, 1886, (24 Stat. 170, c. 818), with interpretations, judicial and congressional, which permit the creation of new counties by special act. The decisions of this court, to which appeal is made, were rendered before any general law for the creation of new counties was passed, before it was known that such a law could be made applicable. So far as these utterances are not pure dicta they are justified by the knowledge then possessed upon the subject; possibilities, considered with reference to human action, are always conditioned upon human capacity, and this in turn upon knowledge; what is not known to be possible is, for the time being, impossible; and if, as the above opinion asserts, and as I believe, the question of the applicability of a general law to the subject of new counties was in the first instance for the Legislature, the fact could not be known to the court until the experiment was tried. The rule of ejusdem generis cannot be applied to the provision in question, for the reason that the preceding clauses of the section refer to many subjects of legislative action, some of which belong to the same general class as the creation of new counties. The argument, whatever its sanction, based upon the source of section 26, is answered by the fact that section 26 did not come from the act of Congress approved July 30, 1886; it came bodily, with one slight amendment, from the proposed Constitution of 1884, as the debates of the convention which formulated our present Constitution disclose.

To my mind, the opinion written by Mr. Justice HOLLOWAY correctly assumes that the act creating Carter county cannot be upheld on any theory other than that adopted in the opinion; and, as I think it cannot be so upheld, I must conclude that it cannot be upheld at all.

STATE v. McQUITTY et al. (No. 4015.)

Proceeding by the State of Montana, relator, against I. S. McQuitty, Frank Williams, and John Foster. Proceeding dismissed.

S. C. Ford, of Helena, for relator. Jones & Jones, of Harlowton, Booth & Dousman, of Baker, and Gunn, Rasch & Hall, E. G. Toomey, and Galen & Mettler, all of Helena, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. There is involved herein the validity of the special act creating Wheatland county. By stipulation of the parties, the same judgment is to be entered herein as in cause No. 4005, State ex rel. Ford v. Schofield et al., 165 Pac. 594, just decided. Upon the authority of that case, this proceeding is dismissed.

Dismissed.

SOMMERS v. GOULD. (No. 3771.)

(Supreme Court of Montana. May 23, 1917.)

1. Elections 🔑307—Contest—Attorney's Fee.

If the court were correct in holding that contestant did not make out a prima facie case, it rightly taxed against him a reasonable attorney's fee and costs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. § 333.]

2. Elections 🔑295(1)—Contest—Disqualification of Voters—Prima Facie Proof.

In a contest suit, on the ground of two illegal votes, between candidates for the office of mayor, plaintiff held, under evidence, to have made out a prima facie case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. § 297.]

3. Elections 🔑72—Qualification of Voters—Statute.

Under express provisions of Rev. Codes, §§ 462, 3231, to be a legal voter one must have resided within the state one year, within the town 6 months, and within the ward 30 days, immediately preceding an election.

4. Elections 🔑295(1)—Voters—Residence—Determination.

The residence of a voter is to be determined from his acts and intents, which may be established by circumstantial evidence and declarations which are a part of res gestæ.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. § 297.]

5. Elections 🔑291—Right to Vote—Presumption from Registration.

From the fact that Webb registered in ward 1, there arose a presumption in favor of his right to vote there.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. § 286.]

6. Elections 🔑291—Right to Vote—Presumption from Registration—Evidence to Overcome.

Slight proof of the lack of any necessary qualification to vote is sufficient to overcome the presumption arising from registration or voting.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. § 286.]

7. Elections 🔑295(1)—Contest—Prima Facie Case.

Contestant, by proving that T. and his family resided in ward 3, made out a prima facie case against his right to vote in ward 1, in view of Laws 1915, c. 122, rule 8, providing that where a man's family resides is presumed to be his place of residence.

8. Elections 🔑289—Contests—Correctness of Returns—Proof—Pleading.

Where neither the correctness of the canvassing board's return nor the validity of any votes so returned was questioned by the answer, contestant was not required to show the number of legal votes cast for his candidate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. § 285.]

9. Pleading 🔑127(2)—Contest Suit—Admission.

In a contest suit, admission by contestee that board returned that W. received 82 votes was tantamount to an admission that he received that number of votes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 264, 267.]

10. Elections 🔑267—Correctness of Result—Returns—Prima Facie Evidence.

Election returns of canvassing boards are prima facie evidence of the correctness of the result.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Cent. Dig. §§ 242, 243.]

Appeal from District Court, Madison County; W. A. Clark, Judge.

Contest suit by Fred W. Sommers against Merton S. Gould. From a judgment dismissing the case, and awarding costs and an attorney fee to contestee, contestant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

M. M. Duncan, of Virginia City, and Henry C. Smith, of Helena, for appellant. Lew. L. Callaway, of Great Falls, and Callaway & Beckett, of Virginia City, for respondent.

HOLLOWAY, J. At the election held in the town of Twin Bridges in April, 1915, A. J. Wilcomb and Merton S. Gould were rival candidates for the office of mayor. The canvassing board returned that Wilcomb received 82 votes and Gould 83, and a certificate of election was thereupon issued to Gould. Fred W. Sommers contested Gould's election, upon the ground that 2 illegal votes were cast and counted for Gould in ward 1, and that such votes were cast by Eli Twitchell and Roland A. Webb, neither of whom, it is alleged, was a resident of that ward at the time. Gould answered, and denied that he had any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to whether Wilcomb received 82 legal votes, or any greater number than 79, admitted that the canvassing board returned that Wilcomb received 82 votes, and denied that any illegal votes were cast or counted for him. Upon the trial it was admitted that Twitchell and Webb were both registered in ward 1 and both voted in that ward. Touching the qualifications of these two voters, the contestant offered evidence to the following effect:

Webb is a single man, about 23 years old. For 7 or 8 months prior to the election in question he was working on a ranch about 10 miles from Twin Bridges. During that time he came to Twin Bridges occasionally, and stopped either at the Duella rooming house, in ward 3, or at the Stark Hotel, in ward 2; but in either instance he occupied a room provided for him by his employer.

Sommers testified that he has lived in Twin Bridges for 20 years, and in ward 1 for 8 years; that at the time of this election he was an alderman for ward 1; that there are only about 80 voters in the ward, and that he knows them all personally; that he knows Webb; that he knows that Webb did not live in ward 1 for at least a year prior to the election in April, 1915.

Wilcomb testified that he has lived in Twin Bridges continuously for 17 years; was mayor of the town from May, 1913, to May, 1915; that he lived in ward 1 at the time of the election in question; that he is well acquainted in the town, which has a population of only about 500; that he has known Webb for 5 or 6 years; that he knew him first when he lived on a ranch near Twin Bridges, but outside the corporate limits of the town; that he knew him afterwards, when he lived in Sheridan and Rochester; that in the summer of 1914 he worked in ward 1 and took his meals at a hotel in that ward, but had his room and slept in ward 3; and that he has never lived in ward 1 to the knowledge of the witness.

Gallahan, a judge of election in ward 1, testified that Webb came to the polling place on election day, ostensibly for the purpose of voting; that, when asked where he roomed, he replied at the Stark Hotel; that, when questioned concerning his right to vote in ward 1, "He said he did not know whether he had a right to or not," and, when asked upon what theory he sought to vote in that ward, he replied, "We have some lots up town;" that he left, but returned soon afterwards, and discussed his right to vote further, but again went away; that he came for the third time, and, having taken and subscribed the statutory oath required of challenged voters, received his ballot and cast his vote.

Concerning Twitchell's residence, Sommers, Wilcomb, and Harvey testified that Twitchell has a house in ward 1, where he lived for a year or more prior to the fall of 1914; that he then moved his family into two small rooms in ward 3, where they have since lived, and where they cook, eat, and sleep; and that, since they moved, their house in ward 1 has been rented to other parties, who have occupied it. After they moved, and before election, Twitchell asked Wilcomb whether an elector, who removes after registering, must re-register in order to vote, and Wilcomb understood from the circumstances that Twitchell was referring to himself.

Upon this evidence, offered by the contestant, the court held that a prima facie case of nonresidence had not been made out against either Webb or Twitchell, excluded evidence as to how either voted, and entered judgment dismissing the contest, and awarding contestee his costs and an attorney fee, amounting in the aggregate to $323.90. From the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, contestant appealed.

[1] The term of office involved herein has expired, and the controversy now involves only the question of costs. If the court was correct in holding that contestant did not make out a prima facie case, it was correct in taxing against him a reasonable attorney fee. Doty v. Reece, 53 Mont. —, 164 Pac. 542.

[2, 3] Whether contestant shall be held for this judgment for costs depends upon the answer to the inquiry: Did he make out a prima facie case that Webb and Twitchell were not legal residents of ward 1 when they voted therein on April 5, 1915? To constitute either of these men a legal voter, he must have resided within the state a year (section 462, Rev. Codes), within the town 6 months, and within the ward 30 days, immediately preceding the election (section 3231, Rev. Codes). It would be extremely difficult to give a comprehensive and accurate definition of the term "resident" as used in our election laws. The statute does not attempt to define it, but does prescribe certain rules for determining in the first instance whether a voter is a legal resident of the precinct or ward where he votes. Section 24 of an act approved March 8, 1915 (Laws 1915, p. 263), sets forth 11 rules designed to aid registration and election officers in determining the residence of a prospective voter. Of necessity, these rules are very general in their terms, and furnish but uncertain assistance at the best. Rule 1 provides:

> "That place must be considered and held to be the residence of a person in which his habitation is fixed, and to which, whenever he is absent, he has the intention of returning." Page 273.

Under rules 4 and 5 a person will not be deemed to have lost his residence by reason of his absence for temporary purposes only. Rule 8:

"The place where a man's family resides is presumed his place of residence."

Rule 9:

"A change of residence can only be made by the act of removal joined with the intent to remain in another place. There can only be one residence. A residence cannot be lost until another is gained." Page 274.

[4] The residence of a voter is to be determined from his acts and intent; but this fact, like any other fact involved in a civil action or proceeding, may be established by circumstantial evidence, and any declarations of the voter touching the subject, if a part of the res gestæ, or any declarations in disparagement of his right to vote, if made at or before the election, may be received in evidence. People ex rel. Boyer v. Teague, 106 N. C. 576, 11 S. E. 665; Behrensmeyer v. Kreitz, 135 Ill. 591, 26 N. E. 704; 15 Cyc. 292; 9 R. C. L. 1032.

[5, 6] From the fact that Webb registered in ward 1, there arose a presumption in favor of his right to vote there. To overcome this presumption involved the proof of a negative, and in such case the same high quality of evidence is not required as is ordinarily necessary to prove an affirmative fact. The rule generally recognized is that slight proof of the lack of any necessary qualification to vote is sufficient to overcome the presumption arising from registration or voting, and calls for evidence in affirmation of the voter's qualifications from the party who would benefit from the vote. People v. Pease, 27 N. Y. 45, 84 Am. Dec. 242; Beardstown v. Virginia, 76 Ill. 44; 5 Ency. of Evidence, 116. To determine the sufficiency or insufficiency of evidence to establish the residence or nonresidence of a voter requires a more or less arbitrary application of the rules of law to the facts presented, and though the evidence tending to impeach Webb's right to vote in ward 1 is not very clear and convincing, we think it is sufficient to make out a prima facie case. State ex rel. Hopkins v. Olin, 23 Wis. 309.

[7] The evidence touching Twitchell's residence is much more substantial. His family resided in ward 3, and, when this fact appeared, the contestant made out a prima facie case against his right to vote in ward 1. Carwile v. Jones, 38 Mont. 590, 101 Pac. 153; rule 8, above.

[8-10] It was not necessary for the contestant to show the number of legal votes cast for Wilcomb. Neither the correctness of the canvassing board's return nor the validity of any votes so returned is questioned by the answer. The admission that the board returned that Wilcomb received 82 votes is, under the circumstances, tantamount to an admission that he received that number of votes. Until impeached, the returns furnish prima facie evidence of the correctness of the result so returned. 15 Cyc. 418.

The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings.

Reversed and remanded.

(53 Mont. 546)

BUHLER et al. v. LOFTUS et al. (No. 3770.)

(Supreme Court of Montana. May 26, 1917.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑193(6)—QUESTION PRESENTED—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

Where the complaint was not tested by special demurrer, but merely by objection to introduction of evidence, the appellate court is confined to the inquiry whether it states sufficient facts to warrant relief demanded.

2. CONTRACTS 🔑259—CANCELLATION—FRAUD—POWER OF COURT.

The power vested in courts to cancel contracts on the ground of fraud is extraordinary, and will be exercised only where the complainant, free from fraud himself, has been deceived to his injury.

3. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS 🔑37(6) — FRAUD — NECESSITY OF SPECIFIC ALLEGATIONS.

In suit to cancel a contract, the ultimate facts constituting fraud relied on must be specifically alleged, so that the court may know whether, if proved, they will warrant relief demanded, and that adversary may know the particular charge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 68, 78.]

4. FRAUD 🔑12 — MISREPRESENTATION — FUTURE EVENTS.

Generally, a misrepresentation as to what will be done in the future, or a statement of intention, will not warrant cancellation of contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. § 14.]

5. FRAUD 🔑11(1) — MISREPRESENTATION — OPINION.

Generally, a mere expression of opinion, however erroneous, will not warrant cancellation of a contract.

6. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS 🔑37(6)—FRAUD IN INDUCEMENT — SUFFICIENCY OF ALLEGATIONS.

To warrant cancellation of a contract for fraud, pleading must show defendant's false representations, which plaintiff believed in, and acted upon to his damage.

7. FRAUD 🔑12 — MISREPRESENTATION — FUTURE EVENTS.

A misrepresentation may be with reference to the future, but so related to present conditions that its affirmation will be fraudulent.

8. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS 🔑37(6)—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT — FRAUD — FUTURE EVENTS.

Complaint alleging defendant's misrepresentations, inducing plaintiffs to execute notes and mortgage in payment for stock, held sufficient to state a cause of action for cancellation of instruments.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 68, 78.]

9. Pleading ⇨34(3) — Construction—Inferences.

Whatever is necessarily implied in or is reasonably to be inferred from an allegation is to be taken as directly averred.

10. Corporations ⇨80(8) — Fraudulent Sale of Stock—Future Events — "Act Fitted to Deceive."

False representations that a company would be ready for business within two months made to induce the sale of stock was a fraud, within the meaning of Rev. Codes, § 4978, defining what shall constitute actual fraud, and was an "act fitted to deceive," within meaning of subdivision 5.

11. Cancellation of Instruments ⇨37(1) —Complaint—Necessity of Jurisdictional Clause.

The addition of an allegation that plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law is unnecessary, since the question of whether the particular case is an equitable one depends upon the specific averments, and the jurisdictional clause is a mere conclusion of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 66-68, 71.]

12. Cancellation of Instruments ⇨37(4)—Complaint—Offer to Return Consideration.

Where complaint seeking cancellation of mortgage and notes given in purchase of stock offered to return the stock to defendants, this was sufficient allegation of an offer to restore the consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 68, 72, 73.]

13. Appeal and Error ⇨959(1) — Discretion of Court—Amendments to Pleading.

The court's action in allowing amendments to equitable pleadings is not subject to review, unless abuse of discretion to adverse party's prejudice is affirmatively shown, in view of Rev. Codes, § 6589, placing the power to allow amendments within the trial court's discretion.

14. Evidence ⇨378(1)—Letter—Necessity of Authentication.

Where letters offered in evidence were not shown to have been signed by their purported authors or identified as genuine, they were inadmissible for any purpose.

15. Evidence ⇨332(2) — Production of Part of Judicial Record.

Where only a part of a judicial record was offered in evidence, which did not disclose issues nor show what was finally adjudicated, it was inadmissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1238.]

16. Pleading ⇨162—Nature of Reply.

The office of a reply in an equity suit is to join issue on or avoid new matter alleged in answer, and it cannot aid the complaint by supplying an omission broadening its scope or adding a new ground of relief.

17. Pleading ⇨381(3)—Issues—Evidence—New Matter Alleged in Reply.

Evidence to prove new matter alleged in a reply was inadmissible in an equity suit, since the reply could not properly allege new matter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 1261-1279.]

18. Appeal and Error ⇨931(6)—Presumption — Findings Rejecting Incompetent Evidence.

It will be presumed that the court, in making formal findings after consideration of the evidence, rejected incompetent evidence.

19. Appeal and Error ⇨694(1)—Questions Presented — Bill of Exceptions — Sufficiency of Evidence.

Where appeal is from the judgment only upon a bill of exceptions, question presented upon assignment of insufficiency of evidence is whether there is any substantial evidence to support findings, and not whether the trial court abused its discretion in denying a new trial.

20. Trial ⇨396(1) — Findings Supported by Pleadings.

In suit to cancel mortgage and notes given for purchase of stock, findings held responsive to pleadings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 935.]

21. Appeal and Error ⇨1050(1)—Harmless Error—Admission of Evidence.

Where foreign and domestic law upon a particular subject were the same, any error in manner of admitting proof of foreign law was harmless.

22. Bills and Notes ⇨343 — Bona Fide Purchase — Mode of Transfer — "Holder in Due Course."

Where defendant took a written assignment of a negotiable note and a mortgage, he was not a holder in due course of the note, under the Negotiable Instruments Law, Rev. Codes, § 5906, since he took it with full knowledge that it was a mortgage note, collectible only under Rev. Codes, § 6861, and that such note was subject to all equities in favor of maker.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 853-855, 864, 865.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Holder in Due Course.]

23. Bills and Notes ⇨318—Assignment—Defense Against Assignee.

A recorded assignment of a note and mortgage did not deprive the maker of the right to impeach the note on the ground that it had been secured by fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 754.]

Appeal from District Court, Flathead County; T. A. Thompson, Judge.

Suit to cancel mortgage and notes by A. J. Buhler and another against W. J. Loftus and others. Decree for plaintiffs, and defendants Loftus appeal. Affirmed.

J. E. Erwin, of Dixon, Ill., and C. W. Pomeroy, of Kalispell, for appellants. F. H. McDermont, of Davenport, Wash., and Brennen & Kendall, of Kalispell, for respondents.

BRANTLY, C. J. The plaintiffs, A. J. and J. M. Buhler, are father and son. On October 14, 1913, the latter executed and delivered to the defendant W. J. Loftus, a resident of Chicago, Ill., his promissory note, negotiable in form, for the sum of $2,000, due and payable three years after date, with interest at 8 per cent per annum. To secure the payment of the note he executed and delivered to Loftus a mortgage upon certain lands owned by him and situate in Flathead county. The mortgage was duly recorded on October 23d. The $2,000 was the purchase price, agreed to be paid to Loftus by A. J. Buhler, of 100 shares of the capital stock of the American Mortgage Insurance Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the state of South Dakota and having its principal office at Chicago. The purpose of the organization of the corporation was to loan money upon the security of first mortgages on farm lands. It was authorized to do business throughout the United States. Hereafter it will be mentioned as the company. It was capitalized for $1,000,000, divided into shares of the par value of $10 each. Loftus was one of the agents of the company to sell shares of its stock and also to appoint local agents to negotiate loans for the company upon a commission. The plan pursued was that any one, desiring or agreeing to become a local agent, was required to purchase from the company 125 shares of its stock at $20 per share. He was then required to enter into a written contract to cover a term of 10 years, by the stipulations of which he was appointed the exclusive agent in certain designated territory, in consideration of his performing certain duties for, and assuming certain obligations to, the company. Loftus went to Polson, in Flathead county, the residence of the plaintiffs, to arrange for the appointment of one A. D. Maynard, also a resident of Polson, as local agent. Maynard being away from home, Loftus entered into negotiations with the Buhlers. The negotiations resulted in the purchase by A. J. Buhler of 100 shares from Loftus personally at $20 per share; the latter agreeing to accept the note and mortgage of J. M. Buhler in place of cash, and giving the assurance that A. J. Buhler would be appointed agent. The action of Loftus was ratified by the company, and the appointment was made on October 20th. It was understood at the time that the two Buhlers and F. H. McDermont, an attorney at law then residing at Polson, should each have a one-third interest in the business transacted under the appointment; A. J. Buhler alone being responsible to the company under his contract. The company was not then ready to begin negotiating loans, but was to begin within two months thereafter. It never did any business, however, for the reason that a sufficient number of shares of stock had not been and could not be sold to realize money enough to enable it to make loans. The note was made payable at the City National Bank at Dixon, Ill. On January 6, 1914, W. J. Loftus assigned the note and mortgage to defendant John H. Loftus, a brother residing at Dixon, as part payment of a debt due the latter. The assignment was recorded in Flathead county on May 16, 1914. On May 25, 1915, plaintiffs brought this action to obtain a decree directing a cancellation of the note and mortgage, on the ground of fraudulent representations by Loftus whereby plaintiff J. M. Buhler was induced to execute and deliver them. As ground for relief, the complaint alleges:

> "(5) That it was represented to plaintiffs, at the time said plaintiff A. J. Buhler entered into said agency contract, by the defendant W. J. Loftus, and the president of the defendant the American Mortgage Insurance Company, H. A. Luther, that the said defendant company, although not fully organised, had not sold all of its capital stock, and was not quite ready to commence business, or to make and accept farm loans in the territory above described, but would be ready for business and accept loans in said territory within about two months from the date of making and entering into said contract, and that the said defendant loan company would allot to plaintiff A. J. Buhler, from month to month, that proportion of its available funds as the number of shares of its capital stock purchased by plaintiff A. J. Buhler bears to the total number of shares of its capital stock then sold for loaning purposes, which would amount to, as a loaning fund, at least $100,000 annually."

It is then alleged in substance:

(6) That in order for plaintiff A. J. Buhler to secure the appointment as the sole and exclusive agent of the company, and to secure his approval of the contract, it was represented by Loftus that said Buhler was required to purchase at least 100 shares of the capital stock of the company at $20 per share, or a total of $2,000.

(7) That in consideration of A. J. Buhler securing the contract, and that he would be furnished with money for the making of loans in the said territory, Buhler purchased the 100 shares for the sum of $2,000, and gave in payment therefor his promissory note, payable to the order of Loftus, and that it was signed and indorsed by J. M. Buhler.

(8) That thereafter, and on the same day, the plaintiff J. M. Buhler, to secure the payment of the note, and for no other purpose, executed and delivered the mortgage.

(9) That thereafter, on or about November 3, 1913, the company issued and delivered to A. J. Buhler the shares of stock, having on October 20th approved the contract and delivered the same to him, thus constituting him its sole and exclusive agent in the said territory.

(10) That by reason of the statements and representations before mentioned A. J. Buhler was induced to purchase the shares, to enter into the contract, and to make the promissory note and mortgage and deliver the same to W. J. Loftus.

(11) That the representations were wholly false and untrue, that they were then known by the company and Loftus to be false and untrue, that they were made with the intent and purpose of inducing the plaintiff A. J. Buhler to purchase the stock, and to secure from him and J. M. Buhler the note and mortgage, that the company was at all times unable to sell a sufficient amount of stock or otherwise to raise money with which to begin business, or to carry out its contract and agreement with A. J. Buhler, that it has never at any time furnished said

Buhler with any money to make farm loans, that the company was insolvent and without funds with which to carry on business, and unable to perform any of the terms of its agreement with A. J. Buhler, and that it was well known to both Loftus and the company, when the note and mortgage were delivered to Loftus, that the company must at an early date go out of business and be dissolved.

(12) That the mortgage was recorded in the office of the clerk of Flathead county on the —— day of November, 1913.

(13) That by reason of the facts heretofore alleged the mortgage and note were given to W. J. Loftus without any consideration, and are wholly null and void, that the company has wholly failed to perform any of the terms of the contract with A. J. Buhler, that the shares of stock are entirely worthless, and that the plaintiffs herein offer to return them to the defendants.

(14) That on May 16, 1914, in the state of Illinois, the defendant W. J. Loftus made a pretended assignment of the note and mortgage to his codefendant John H. Loftus, which was thereafter recorded in the office of the clerk of Flathead county.

(15) That John H. Loftus is not a bona fide purchaser under the laws of the state of Illinois.

The company, though named as defendant, was not served with summons and did not appear in the action. The answer of the defendants Loftus denies all the allegations of the complainant charging fraud or misrepresentation by W. J. Loftus, and alleges that after the 100 shares of stock were sold to A. J. Buhler he authorized the company to transfer 33 shares to F. H. McDermont. In a pleading designated as a reply the plaintiffs allege in effect that the note and mortgage are void for the reason that neither W. J. Loftus nor the company had complied with the laws of Montana (chapter 85, Laws 1913, p. 367), relating to investment companies and stockbrokers, enacted for the protection of investors, etc. The court called a jury to aid in ascertaining the facts, and submitted special interrogatories. Some of their findings the court adopted. It made formal findings on all the issues in favor of plaintiffs, and decreed to them the relief demanded. The defendants have appealed.

It would extend this opinion beyond any reasonable limits, were we to give special notice to all the assignments made and argued by counsel. Many of them are not of sufficient merit to deserve even passing notice. We shall discuss only those which counsel seem to deem of controlling importance.

[1] We notice, first, the contention that the complaint does not state a cause of action. This question was presented at the opening of the trial by an objection by defendants to the introduction of evidence. Much of the argument on the assignment is more appropriately addressed to an inquiry whether the pleading is ambiguous and indefinite. Since it was not tested by special demurrer, however much it may be subject to criticism for defects in these particulars, this court is now confined to the single inquiry whether it states sufficient facts to warrant the relief demanded.

[2-6] It is argued that the representations by which plaintiff A. J. Buhler was induced to enter into the contract of agency were mere matters of opinion or related to what was to happen in the future, and that, though they turned out to be false, they did not constitute fraud, entitling him and his coplaintiff to have the mortgage and note canceled. It is true, as counsel contend, that parties are allowed under the law the greatest freedom of contract; that this is essential to the welfare of the community; that in their negotiations parties must be left to investigate for themselves and rely upon their own judgment; that the power vested in the courts to cancel contracts on the ground of fraud is extraordinary, and will be exercised only in cases in which the complaining party, free from fraud himself, has been deceived to his injury by his adversary; that the ultimate facts constituting the fraud must be specifically alleged, in order that the court may know whether, if proved, they will warrant the relief demanded, and that the adversary may know the particular charge he is to meet; that a misrepresentation as to what will be done in the future, or a statement of intention, or, generally, a mere expression of opinion, however erroneous, is not sufficient; but that the representation must relate to a present or past state of facts. In other words, in order to make out a case of fraud, the pleading must allege facts embodying the following essential elements: (1) That the defendant made a representation or statement, intending that plaintiff should act upon it; (2) that the representation was false; (3) that the plaintiff believed it; and (4) that he acted upon it to his damage. Butte Hardware Co. v. Knox, 28 Mont. 111, 72 Pac. 301, and cases cited; Power & Bro., Ltd., v. Turner, 37 Mont. 521, 97 Pac. 950; Ott v. Pace, 43 Mont. 82, 115 Pac. 37; Henry v. Continental B. & L. Ass'n, 156 Cal. 667, 105 Pac. 960; Crocker v. Manley, 164 Ill. 282, 45 N. E. 577, 56 Am. St. Rep. 196; Southern Dev. Co. v. Silva, 125 U. S. 247, 8 Sup. Ct. 881, 31 L. Ed. 678; 2 Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. § 878.

[7] The fact concerning which the statement is made, however, may be with reference to the future, but so related to present existent conditions that its affirmation as a fact will constitute a fraudulent representation within the rule of the cases cited. On this subject we find this in the text of Mr. Pomeroy:

> "That the fact, however, concerning which the statement is made, is future, does not itself prevent the misrepresentation from being fraudulent. The statement of matter in the future, if affirmed as a fact, may amount to a fraudulent misrepresentation, as well as a statement of a fact as existing at present." 2 Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. § 848.

In support of this statement the author cites, among other cases, Piggott v. Stratton, 1 De Gex, F. & J. 33, 49, and Hutton v. Rossiter, 7 De Gex, M. & G. F. 22, 23. To these may be added Pickard v. Sears, 6 Ad. & E. 469, Fall River Nat. Bank v. Buffinton, 97

Mass. 498, and Chouteau et al. v. Goddin et al., 39 Mo. 229, 90 Am. Dec. 462. In the first of these cases Lord Chancellor Campbell said:

> "I apprehend that the injunction is to be supported on the well-established doctrine that if A. makes a deliberate assertion to B., intending it to be acted upon by B., A. is estopped from saying it was not true. If it turns out to be false, A. is answerable for the damage which may have accrued to B. from having acted upon, and B. is entitled, in respect of anything done in the belief that it was true, to object to any denial of it by A."

In the note to the text of Mr. Pomeroy, supra, this remark is made referring to the cases cited:

> "Some of these cases may be referred to the doctrine of equitable estoppel; but it is plain that, where the representation is that of a fact in the future, and not a mere promise, and it is relied upon, and turns out to be false, the rights and remedies of the injured party are the same as those which arise from the fraudulent representation of an existing fact."

Under this rule, the representation, we apprehend, will operate as an estoppel in favor of the injured party, or may be availed of by him as a ground for the cancellation of a contract entered into upon the faith of it, according to the attitude occupied by the parties in the particular controversy, and the character of the relief sought.

[8, 9] The complaint is not a model of clearness and orderly statement; but, assigning to the several parts of it their obvious meaning and purport, and construing it as a whole under favor of the familiar rule that "whatever is necessarily implied in, or is reasonably to be inferred from, an allegation, is to be taken as directly averred" (Phillips on Code Pleading, 352; Bayliss on Code Pleading, 49; County of Silver Bow v. Davies, 40 Mont. 418, 107 Pac. 81), we think it alleges sufficient to bring it within the rule stated by Mr. Pomeroy, supra.

The purpose of the negotiations had between the parties was that A. J. Buhler should become the exclusive agent for the company in the territory mentioned. The representation which operated as the inducement is alleged in paragraph 5. It is in effect a categorical statement that, while the company was not then ready to begin business, it was in such a condition that it would be ready in about two months and prepared to furnish the funds required to enable A. J. Buhler to negotiate loans in its behalf. In paragraphs 6, 7, and 8 is alleged the consideration demanded by Loftus for the contract, the purchase of the shares of stock which was made a condition precedent to the appointment, and the execution of the note and mortgage to secure the consideration to be paid, instead of paying it in cash. Paragraph 9 recites the approval of the negotiations by the company, the issuance of the shares of stock, and the final appointment for which the consideration was promised. Paragraph 10 alleges in effect that, by reason of his belief in and reliance upon the alleged statements of Loftus and Luther, the president, A. J. Buhler was induced to purchase the shares and to enter into the contract of appointment for the consideration demanded. Paragraph 11 alleges that the representations stated in paragraph 5 were wholly false, that they were known by Loftus and the president of the company to be such, that they were made with the intention to deceive and defraud the plaintiffs and to induce the execution of the note and mortgage, and that the company was unable at any time to sell its stock or to raise money otherwise to make loans or to furnish A. J. Buhler money for that purpose, in that it was insolvent at the time the contract was made.

[10] If the representation had been in the form of a promise merely that the company would furnish A. J. Buhler money within two months of the date of appointment, it being able at the time and intending to do so, its failure to keep the promise would have been a breach of the contract. The plaintiffs, however, understood—and it was the intention of Loftus that they should understand—that the company had then approached a condition of readiness such as to enable it within two months to engage in the business which it was organized to conduct. This was tantamount to an affirmation of a matter in the future as a fact existing at the time the contract was made, and was the inducement upon which he effected the sale of the stock and the execution and delivery of the note and mortgage. It amounted to the suggestion as a fact of that which was not true, by Loftus, who did not believe it to be true, and was therefore a fraud, within the meaning of subdivision 1 of section 4978 of the Revised Codes. In any event, his statements amounted to an "act fitted to deceive." Id. subd. 5.

[11] It is argued that the complaint is insufficient, also, in failing to allege in specific terms that plaintiffs are without an adequate remedy at law. Whether the particular case alleged is one of equitable cognizance depends solely upon the specific averments upon which the demand for relief is predicated. The addition of the jurisdictional clause does not aid it in any way. It is merely a conclusion of law to be drawn by the court, not by the pleader, from the specific facts alleged. The allegation of it is therefore wholly unnecessary. 16 Cyc. 222.

[12] It is also argued that it does not appear that the plaintiffs have offered to restore to the defendants the shares of stock. This argument is without merit. The concluding clause of paragraph 13 is sufficient allegation on this subject. Maloy v. Berkin, 11 Mont. 138, 27 Pac. 442.

[13] During the course of the trial the court permitted certain amendments to be made to the complaint. It is argued that this was error, in that the effect of the amendments was to make the complaint state a cause of action; whereas, before they were allowed, it was fatally defective. There was no error. The power to allow the amendments at any stage of the trial is within the discretion of the trial court, and its action in this behalf is not subject to review by this court, unless it is affirmatively shown that it abused its discretion to the prejudice of the adverse party. Rev. Codes, § 6589: Bennett v. Tillmon, 18 Mont. 28, 44 Pac. 80; Merrill v. Miller, 28 Mont. 134, 72 Pac. 423; Sandeen v. Russell Lumber Co., 45 Mont. 273, 122 Pac. 913; De Celles v. Casey, 48 Mont. 572, 139 Pac. 586. Though the defendants demanded a postponement of the trial, because of the allowance of one of the amendments, they presented no affidavit showing that they were surprised, or that they were not ready and able to produce all the evidence they desired. Indeed, it is apparent that they introduced all the evidence they had at their command.

[14] Error is predicated upon the admission in evidence of Exhibits D and F. The first was a letter addressed to the stockholders, ostensibly by H. A. Luther, president of the company, under date of April 21, 1914, conveying the information that at the annual meeting of stockholders held in Chicago on April 7, 1914, it had been determined to surrender the Chicago office and remove general headquarters of the company to Aberdeen, S. D.; that a committee had been appointed, whose chairman was W. S. Narregang, of the latter place, himself a stockholder, to suggest a feasible plan to conduct the business of the company; and that all letters addressed to the company should be addressed to Narregang until May 23d, to which date the meeting of April 7th had been adjourned to reconvene at Aberdeen. It contained what purported to be resolutions adopted at the April meeting. Exhibit F was a letter written to A. J. Buhler by Narregang on August 13, 1914, stating in effect that the company was going out of business, and was not in a position to make any loans of any kind. These were introduced, as tending to show that the company was in a failing condition, and hence that the representations of Loftus were false. They were not shown by any evidence to have been in fact signed by their purported authors, or identified as genuine. They were, therefore, not admissible for any purpose.

[15] Like objection was made to the introduction of Exhibits H and I. The first consisted of an order by the circuit court of the Fifth judicial district of South Dakota, made on May 13, 1914, appointing one Arthur M. Cole temporary receiver to take charge of the property and assets of the company, in an action entitled S. W. Narregang v. American Mortgage Insurance Company. The second was a copy of the register of actions in the cause, disclosing the different proceedings had in it until it ended. Both were exemplified as required by section 7911 of the Revised Codes. They were introduced to show that the company had been forced into the hands of a receiver as an insolvent, and that it had thereafter been dissolved. Both these exhibits were mere fragments of the record, and did not tend to show for what cause the receiver was appointed, nor what was adjudicated by the final judgment. They were not, therefore, competent for any purpose. The order was interlocutory, and did not adjudicate anything. The register of actions merely indicated that certain steps had been taken in the action. Assuming that the final judgment in the action would have been admissible for the purpose intended (the company was not made a party to the present action), it could be made available only by the production of an exemplified copy of the entire record, or so much of it as would disclose the issues made by the pleadings and what was finally adjudicated in the action.

[16, 17] In support of the allegations in their reply, the plaintiffs were permitted to introduce the deposition of Hon. William Keating, the state auditor and investment commissioner of Montana, to show that neither W. J. Loftus nor the company had been licensed to transact business of any kind in Montana. It is not necessary to inquire whether the sale of the shares of stock to plantiffs was a doing business in the state, within the meaning of the statute relating to investment companies, supra, sought to be invoked by plaintiffs, or whether, if the sale of the shares was void, the plaintiffs were entitled for this reason to have the note and mortgage canceled. The allegation of new matter in the reply to impeach the sale transaction constituted a distinct departure in the pleadings, and presented an issue upon which no relief could be predicated. The office of a reply is to join issue upon the counterclaim, or the new matter of defense alleged in the answer, or to avoid it, as the case may be. It may, in a particular instance, aid the answer; but it cannot aid the complaint, by supplying an omission therein or broadening its scope, by adding to it a new ground of relief. Thornton v. Kaufman, 35 Mont. 181, 88 Pac. 796; Waite v. Shoemaker, 50 Mont. 264, 146 Pac. 736; Doornbos v. Thomas, 50 Mont. 370, 147 Pac. 277; Bliss on Code Pleading, 437; 9 Cyc. 747. The objection to these items of evidence should have been sustained.

Other rulings upon the admissibility of evidence are also assigned as error. None of these require special notice, save those which had reference to the means of proof of the unwritten law of the state of Illinois relating to the nature of the right acquired by the assignee of a trust deed or mortgage and the note secured by it. We shall notice these later when we come to inquire whether John H. Loftus became the owner of the note and mortgage free from equities in favor of plaintiffs.

[18] Counsel strenuously insist that the rulings just noticed entitle defendants to a reversal of the decree. If the court had adopted the findings of the jury without further consideration, and rendered its decree thereon, the argument of counsel would perhaps have some plausibility. Wetzstein v. Largey, 27 Mont. 212, 70 Pac. 717. This, however, the court did not do. The formal findings were made after careful consideration of the evidence by the court, and after argument by counsel for defendants on their motion asking the court to reject the findings of the jury and adopt findings in favor of defendants. Under the circumstances, we may presume that the trial judge based the findings upon so much of the evidence as was competent and substantially material, rejecting such as ought to have been rejected. Finlen v. Heinze, 28 Mont. 548, 73 Pac. 123; Lane v. Bailey, 29 Mont. 548, 75 Pac. 191; State v. Driscoll, 49 Mont. 558, 144 Pac. 153.

[19, 20] The next assignment we will consider is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the findings. Since the appeal is from the judgment only upon a bill of exceptions, the question presented by the assignment is, not whether the trial court abused its discretion in denying defendants a new trial, but whether there is any substantial evidence to support the findings as made. We shall not undertake to state and discuss the evidence with reference to the different findings in detail. It is sufficient to say that, with the exception of the finding of the specific date at which the receiver was appointed, and the finding that neither W. J. Loftus nor the company had been licensed to do business in Montana, to which reference will be made later, the findings are responsive to the general scope and meaning of the allegations of the complaint, and are supported by substantial evidence. It is true that it is alleged in the complaint that the note was that of A. J. Buhler, and that it was signed and indorsed by J. M. Buhler, and that the evidence shows that it was signed by J. M. Buhler only, and not indorsed by him. This is not a material variance, as counsel contend. The note and mortgage were given by J. M. Buhler to secure the appointment of A. J. Buhler as the exclusive agent of the company, and to enable the latter, as between the two, to have an interest in the commissions earned in the business. It appears incidentally, also, that it was the intention of A. J. Buhler that one-third of the shares of stock, when issued, should belong to F. H. McDermont, one of counsel for plantiffs, who, as between him and the Buhlers, was to have a one-third interest in the commissions earned in the business. It is insisted, therefore, that it appears that McDermont owns an interest in the stock, and hence that this condition of the evidence constitutes a material variance. The certificates themselves, however—one for 67 shares and the other for 33 shares—were at the time of the trial still owned by A. J. Buhler, and were then tendered by him to the defendants. There was, therefore, no variance in this regard. The fact that the plaintiffs and McDermont had an agreement among themselves to share in the commissions to be earned is not of consequence.

It is insisted that there is no evidence tending to show that the stock is of no value. While, as we have said, the evidence introduced by plaintiffs, heretofore referred to as tending to establish the fact that the company was insolvent and that the stock was worthless, was incompetent, the defendant W. J. Loftus during the giving of his testimony admitted, in effect, that when the contract with A. J. Buhler was made, and he secured the note and mortgage, the company was in a condition of insolvency. According to his testimony, the company was organized and commenced selling stock in the spring of 1912. Though at the time the contract was made it had been engaged for more than a year in the attempt to accumulate sufficient cash from stock subscriptions to begin business, and had nominal assets to the amount of $175,000, it had accumulated but a small amount of cash; the great bulk of its assets consisting of subscription notes payable on the condition that all the stock had been subscribed for. The officers of the company were making every effort to get the stock disposed of, but had failed to do so, and he attributed this condition to a stringency in the money market. He admitted, however, that the company had gone into the hands of a receiver in May, 1914, at the suit of Narregang, one of the largest creditors. Taking the testimony as a whole, it furnishes some basis for the inference that the stock was not worth $20 per share, nor any other amount. Aside from this, however, the main purpose of the transaction was to secure for A. J. Buhler the appointment as exclusive agent of the company upon the implied assurance that it was practically ready to begin business. The purchase by him of the stock was not as an investment, but to qualify himself to secure the appointment, so that he would thereafter have a profitable business; and it is clear from all the evidence that, but for the assurance of the appointment, he would not have bought the stock. True, he was awarded the appointment; but it was without value, and the purpose he had in view failed of accomplishment entirely. In fact, the net result was that he did not get what he contracted for, and that W. J. Loftus secured a sale of stock owned by him personally at double its nominal value; whereas, when questioned as to its actual value, he was not willing to go further than to say that it had a value of about $16, basing this opinion upon his estimate of outstanding conditional subscription notes. On the whole, we think that the evidence, direct and circumstantial, is sufficient to justify the findings, so far as they are material and responsive to the allegations of the complaint. In view of this conclusion, the finding touching the matter of failure by Loftus and the company to obtain license under the statute, supra, may be eliminated and disregarded as immaterial. The same disposition may be made of the criticism of the finding as to the exact date when the receiver of the company was appointed.

[21] It remains to inquire whether John H. Loftus took the note and mortgage free from all equities in favor of J. M. Buhler. Since the assignment was made in Illinois, counsel for the plaintiffs assumed that the assignee's rights were to be determined by the unwritten law of that state, and offered evidence to prove it. The mode adopted was this: Mr. Kendall, one of counsel for plaintiffs, testified in effect that he had become acquainted with the decisions of the Supreme Court of Illinois by reading the opinion in the case of Bouton v. Cameron, as published in 205 Ill. 50, 68 N. E. 800, and other cases. Thereupon the opinion was admitted over the objection, among others, that Mr. Kendall had not disclosed sufficient knowledge to lay the foundation for its admission. The means by which such proof may be made are prescribed by section 7908 of the Revised Codes. See, also, Ridpath v. Heller, 46 Mont. 586, 129 Pac. 1054. We shall not stop to determine whether the evidence was properly admitted. Assuming that the law of the state of Illinois is as counsel undertook to show, the law on the subject in this state is the same, and the conclusion reached by the trial court would have been the same, though the evidence had been rejected. The note did not refer to the mortgage and upon its face was negotiable. If it had been transferred to John H. Loftus by indorsement, without mention of the mortgage, what rights he would have acquired would have depended upon the solution of a different question from that before us, viz. whether, in view of the restrictive provision found in section 6861 of the Revised Codes, he would have acquired the rights of a holder in due course under the Negotiable Instrument Law (Rev. Codes, § 5906).

[22] The transfer, however, was made by written assignment of the note and mortgage both; W. J. Loftus indorsing the note without recourse. John H. Loftus, therefore, took it with full knowledge that it was a mortgage note, collectible by him only as such, under the provisions of section 6861, supra. It therefore did not come into his hands as "a courier without luggage," but as a nonnegotiable instrument, subject to all the equities existing in favor of J. M Buhler at the time he received it. This was expressly so held by this court in Cornish v. Woolverton, 32 Mont. 456, 81 Pac. 4, 108 Am. St. Rep. 598, and that case is conclusive of this.

[23] Though the recorded written assignment gave J. M. Buhler constructive notice that John H. Loftus had become the owner of the note, it did not serve in any wise to cut off Buhler's right to impeach the note on the ground that it had been secured by fraud.

The judgment is affirmed.

PITCHER, Com'r of Finance, v. MISS WOLCOTT SCHOOL ASS'N. (No. 8849.)

(Supreme Court of Colorado. June 4, 1917.)

TAXATION 🔑242(7)—EXEMPTION—"SCHOOLS" FOR PROFIT.

Under Const. art. 10, § 5, and Rev. St. 1908, § 5545, providing that lots with the buildings thereon used solely and exclusively for schools shall be exempt from taxation, buildings and grounds owned by a domestic corporation and used exclusively for purpose of schools conducted for profit are exempt from taxation; the term "schools" being broad enough to include institutions run for profit.

White, C. J., dissenting.

En Banc. Error to District Court, Denver County; John A. Perry, Judge.

Suit by the Miss Wolcott School Association against Clair J. Pitcher, Commissioner of Finance, ex officio Assessor and Treasurer of the City and County of Denver. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant brings error. Affirmed.

James A. Marsh and Jacob J. Lieberman, both of Denver, for plaintiff in error. William N. Vaile, of Denver, for defendant in error.

TELLER, J. The defendant in error is a corporation organized under the laws of this state for the purpose of conducting a school. It owns several buildings, and the grounds upon which they are located, which are admitted to be used for school purposes. In a suit for that purpose, it secured a permanent injunction against the assessment of said property for taxes.

Exemption from taxation is claimed under section 5 of article 10 of the state Constitution, and section 5545, R. S. 1908. The former reads as follows:

> "Lots, with the buildings thereon, if said buildings are used solely and exclusively for religious worship, for schools, or for strictly charitable purposes, also cemeteries not used or held for private or corporate profit, shall be exempt from taxation, unless otherwise provided by general law."

The statutory provision exempts, with other property:

> "Buildings used exclusively for religious worship, for schools or for strictly charitable purposes, with the grounds whereon the same are situated."

For the plaintiff in error, it is urged that the term "schools," as used in the Constitution and the statute, must be interpreted as including only schools not conducted for profit; and that the property of the defendant in error, it being admittedly a corporation for profit, is not exempt.

In Cathedral of St. John v. County Treasurer, 29 Colo. 143, 68 Pac. 272, this court had under consideration the constitutional and statutory provisions in question in this case, and it was there held that a building and grounds used for a theological school were exempt, notwithstanding the fact that the bishop of the diocese, who was an instructor in the school, resided with his family on the premises. It seems to have been conceded that the school property was exempt, unless its occupation as above stated removed it from the exempted class. The case is authority for a liberal construction of the provisions for exemptions, the court pointing out in the opinion that the purpose of the legislation was "to foster educational institutions by relieving their property, within prescribed limits, from the burden of taxation. This being the end to be attained, the meaning of the law must be ascertained by a construction within its spirit, purpose, and policy not opposed to its letter."

The letter of the provisions under consideration includes schools without any limitations, and it is urged with some reason that there was no necessity to mention schools if intended for public schools only, since they are public property, and exempt by article 10, § 4, of the Constitution, and by section 5545, R. S. 1908.

In several state Constitutions, institutions conducted for profit are in terms excluded from an exemption class which would otherwise include them. The absence of such provisions in our Constitution gives force to the claim that no such limitation was intended. The term "schools" is broad enough to include institutions run for profit, and we find no reason for limiting its plain meaning.

The Constitution of Missouri and that of Nebraska exempt property used exclusively for schools, in substantially the same language as is used in our Constitution, and in both states the exemption has been held to apply to private schools. In State v. Johnston, 214 Mo. 656, 113 S. W. 1083, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 171, the point was conceded and the case was decided on a question of the occupation of a part of the property as a residence. It was held, as in the case of Cathedral v. Treasurer, supra, that the property was exempt although thus occupied.

In Rohrbough v. Douglas County, 76 Neb. 679, 107 N. W. 1000, a commercial college was held to be exempt under the term "school."

Schools conducted for profit have been held exempt under statutes or constitutional provisions which exempt "academies, seminaries, and scientific institutions." Indianapolis v. Sturdevant, 24 Ind. 391; Detroit Home & Day School v. Detroit, 76 Mich. 521, 43 N. W. 593, 6 L. R. A. 97.

To the Minnesota statute (Gen. St. 1878, c. 11, § 5), which exempts colleges, seminaries, etc., is added the clause, "not leased or otherwise used with a view to profit." In Ramsey County v. Stryker, 52 Minn. 144, 53 N. W. 1133, of this limitation it is said:

> "It manifestly refers to other uses of the property than the appropriation and operation of the same for the legitimate purposes of an institution of learning."

The court held that it was not necessary to an exemption that the institutions "be conducted free of charge, or that the tuition or compensation received from their patrons might not exceed the expenses incurred in the operation or management of such institutions."

In the Michigan case above cited, it was said:

> "Exemption from taxation is the only form of encouragement that our laws provide. * * * The advantage of multiplying the facilities of learning has been rightly regarded as worth to any decent community very much more than can be counted in money."

In Cathedral v. County Treasurer, supra, this court said:

> "The fundamental object of the law was to exempt property used for school purposes from taxation."

This gives to the word "schools" its ordinary meaning, and we find no authority for limiting it to a particular class.

The judgment is affirmed.

Affirmed.

(Supreme Court of Colorado. June 4, 1917.)

1. MORTGAGES ⟹280(5)—TRANSFER OF PROPERTY—ASSUMPTION OF INCUMBRANCE—PRESUMPTIONS.

That defendant agreed to purchase land subject to a trust deed raises no presumption that he agreed to assume and pay the incumbrance.

Error to District Court, Mesa County; Charles Cavender, Judge.

Action by W. H. Lloyd and another against E. E. Lowe. There was a judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

McMullin & Sternberg, of Grand Junction, for plaintiffs in error. J. E. Simonson and W. G. Simonson, both of Denver, for defendant in error.

ALLEN, J. This was an action upon a promissory note brought by plaintiffs in error, plaintiffs below, as the owners, holders, and payees of the note. The makers of the note, to secure the same, had given a trust deed upon certain land then owned by them. Subsequently they conveyed the land to the defendant in error, defendant below, by a deed which contained, after the usual covenants of title and against incumbrances, the following assumption clause:

> "Except * * * a certain trust deed to the amount of $1,000, which party of the second part assumes and agrees to pay."

This action was brought to enforce against the defendant below a personal liability upon the note on account of the foregoing assumption clause. The trial court gave judgment for the defendant.

The trial court found and the evidence established, that the assumption clause was inserted in the deed contrary to the agreement between defendant and his grantors, by mistake of the scrivener, and that defendant was not present when the deed was prepared. The evidence further discloses, and it is not disputed, that the defendant purchased the land upon a contract in writing between himself and his grantors. The contract, introduced in evidence, does not contain any agreement with reference to the assumption of the trust deed by the purchaser, the defendant, but the trust deed is not mentioned in the written agreement otherwise than in and by a recital therein that the land is "subject to a mortgage of $1,000 now of record." The undisputed evidence was that defendant never assumed nor agreed to pay the trust deed nor the note secured thereby, and that he first saw the clause in the deed, in which it was recited that he assumed and agreed to pay the trust deed, after this action was commenced.

[1] The fact that the defendant agreed to purchase land "subject to a mortgage" raises no presumption that there was an agreement to assume and pay the incumbrance.

> "An agreement merely to take land, subject to a specified incumbrance, is not an agreement to assume and pay the incumbrance. The grantee of an equity of redemption, without words in the grant importing in some form that he assumes the payment of a mortgage, does not bind himself personally to pay the debt. There must be words importing that he will pay the debt, to make him personally liable." Elliott v. Sackett, 108 U. S. 132, 2 Sup. Ct. 375, 27 L. Ed. 678.

In this connection we may add, in the language of the opinion in the case of Demaris v. Rodgers, 110 Minn. 49, 124 N. W. 457, that:

> "There can be no question that if defendant accepted the deed containing the assumption clause with knowledge of its presence, and without protest or objection, it would be binding upon him, even though he had not previously agreed to pay the outstanding debt."

The defendant in this case denies that he accepted the deed at all. But, assuming that the evidence clearly shows that he did accept the deed, it also shows that he accepted it without knowledge of the assumption clause, and therefore cannot be bound under the rule stated in Demaris v. Rodgers, supra. The fact that he did not read the deed had no bearing either upon his liability or his defense. It does not charge him with negligence. In Elliott v. Sackett, supra, the court said:

> "Elliott had a right to presume that the deed would conform to the written agreement, and was not guilty of such negligence or laches, in not observing the provisions of the deed, as should preclude him from relief."

[2] Under the facts of this case, as thus far noted, the defendant is relieved from liability under the general rule thus stated in section 1075, Devlin on Deeds (2d Ed.):

> "If the scrivener by mistake inserts a clause in the deed binding the grantee to assume a mortgage, where neither of the parties intended to place this liability upon the grantee, and did not know of the insertion of the clause, the mortgagee cannot avail himself of it."

The rule above stated has been frequently followed and applied. Had the evidence in this case clearly and indisputably disclosed that the defendant had no knowledge or notice of the assumption clause in his deed until after this action was commenced, he would be relieved of liability, and the judgment in his favor would have been unmistakably correct. Stead v. Sampson (Iowa) 155 N. W. 978; Haskins v. Young, 89 Conn. 66, 92 Atl. 877; Bradshaw v. Provident Trust Co., 81 Or. 55, 158 Pac. 275; Parker v. Jenks, 36 N. J. Eq. 398; Stevens' Institute v. Sheridan, 30 N. J. Eq. 23.

[3] There was evidence in the case, however, that the defendant three months before suit was brought was apprised of facts from which he might be charged with notice of the assumption clause, and that he did nothing to repudiate or disaffirm the contract imposed upon him by the assumption clause in the deed. Upon the proposition that it is the duty of a grantee to disaffirm the contract promptly, and that he is liable to the mortgagee under these circumstances if he does not disaffirm the deed or contract, the plaintiffs in error cite the case of Sutter v. Rose, 64 Ill. App. 263, affirmed in 169 Ill. 66, 48 N. E. 411. It may be conceded that the case cited supports their contention, but it appears to us that a better rule is followed in a later and very recent case, that of Johnson v. Maier (Mo. App.) 187 S. W. 143. The syllabus, in accord with the opinion, contains the following paragraph:

> "Where plaintiffs, who held a note secured by a deed of trust on land which was afterwards conveyed to defendant, were not misled because the deed contained a fraudulent covenant obligating defendant to pay off the deed of trust, such covenant is not, being without consideration, binding on defendant, though he retained the deed after learning of its fraudulent insertion and subsequently conveyed the land."

The court in the opinion there said:

> "The argument in behalf of plaintiffs is that, if the defendants conveyed the land after they discovered the clause was therein, such conduct amounted to a ratification thereof, irrespective of how it got there. There might be some merit in this contention if the plaintiffs were thereby misled to their injury; but, in the absence of any such question, the basis of defendant's liability in this case is that they for a valuable consideration assumed and agreed to pay plaintiffs' debt."

In the case at bar there were no facts either pleaded or proven to show that plaintiffs were misled to their injury by reason of the defendant's failure to disaffirm the deed or the assumption clause therein within a reasonable time after he had knowledge or notice thereof. In the absence of such facts the only basis of the defendant's liability, as purchaser of the land in question, is as stated in the Missouri case last cited, which is in accord with the decisions already rendered in this state. In the case of Starbird v. Cranston, 24 Colo. 20, 48 Pac. 652, the court quoted, with approval, from Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. as follows:

> "The ground of grantee's liability adopted by the courts of a large majority of the states is that of contract. * * * It is strictly legal, arising out of a contract binding at law."

The decision or rule as stated in Starbird v. Cranston, supra, is undoubtedly based upon the broad doctrine that when one person makes a promise for the benefit of a third person, the latter may maintain an action upon it. See section 758, Jones on Mortgages (5th Ed.); Burr v. Beers, 24 N. Y. 178, 80 Am. Dec. 327; Bay v. Williams, 112 Ill. 91, 1 N. E. 340, 54 Am. Rep. 209; Dean v. Walker, 107 Ill. 540, 47 Am. Rep. 467. In Gill v. Robertson, 18 Colo. App. 313, 316, 71 Pac. 634, 635, it is said:

> "It is the law in this jurisdiction that the obligation which the grantee in a deed assumes, to pay an incumbrance upon the land, arises out of contract purely."

In the case at bar it is clearly established by the evidence that there was no contract to pay the trust deed or the note secured thereby, made by and between the defendant and his grantors. There being no contract to that effect, there was no contract under which the plaintiffs, as mortgagees, could be beneficiaries, and no contract upon which they could sue. The defendant did nothing to mislead the plaintiffs, and his defense, that the assumption clause was inserted in the deed without his knowledge or consent and contrary to his agreement with his grantors, was therefore good under the doctrine of the case of Johnson v. Maier, supra.

[4] An assignment of error is predicated upon the trial court's sustaining defendant's demurrer to the plaintiffs' replication. In substance, the replication alleged that after the defendant accepted the deed he took charge and possession of the property, paid taxes thereon, and exercised acts of ownership over the same; that he offered the land for sale; that he sold the land; and that by such conduct the defendant is estopped to deny knowledge of the assumption clause, and is estopped to deny that he assumed and agreed to pay the indebtedness represented by the mortgage, and is estopped to deny that the assumption clause was inserted in the deed with his knowledge and consent.

As an estoppel relied on in avoidance of defendant's defense, the allegations of the replication were clearly insufficient. In this connection we can adopt the language of the opinion in the case of C. F. & I. Co. v. Lenhart, 6 Colo. App. 511, 516, 41 Pac. 834, 835, as follows:

> "If there is an estoppel here at all, it is an estoppel by conduct. But conduct alone does not create an estoppel. If no rights have been affected by the conduct, there is no one in whose behalf the doctrine of estoppel can be invoked. To create the estoppel some other person must have changed his position on the faith of the conduct. * * * But there can be no estoppel in favor of one who has not been misled, or to whom the assertion of the truth would do no injury."

The same language was approvingly quoted in Ayer v. Younker, 10 Colo. App. 27, 31, 50 Pac. 218, and the same doctrine was enunciated in Loan & Trust Co. v. Canal Co., 3 Colo. App. 73, 32 Pac. 178.

As before stated, the plaintiffs were not misled to their injury. Neither the replication nor the evidence discloses that plaintiffs have changed their position on account of the conduct of the defendant, or that their rights have been affected. Furthermore, the conduct of defendant, as pleaded, was not such conduct as would warrant the plaintiffs in assuming that defendant agreed to pay the trust deed and note.

No prejudicial error appearing in the record, the judgment of the district court is affirmed.

Affirmed.

WHITE, C. J., and BAILEY, J., concur.

ZANCANNELLI v. PEOPLE. (No. 8712.)

(Supreme Court of Colorado. June 4, 1917.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1186(6) — APPEAL AND ERROR—CONFESSION OF ERROR.

Ordinarily, where the Attorney General files a confession of error in the Supreme Court, the judgment will be reversed without comment.

2. JURY 🔑131(16) — EXAMINATION OF PROPOSED JURORS—IMPROPER RESTRICTIONS.

While a person is not necessarily disqualified to act as a juror by reason of a previously formed or expressed opinion with reference to guilt or innocence of accused under Rev. St. 1908, § 3691 et seq., it was error in the prosecution of a striking coal miner for murder to exclude questions to proposed jurors to elicit the condition of their minds with respect to the strikers or coal operators and the subject-matter of the prosecution, as such questions were proper not only to determine whether there was a ground for challenge for cause, but to enable defense to decide whether to make use of a peremptory challenge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. § 580.]

En Banc. Error to District Court, Las Animas County; Granby Hillyer, Judge.

Louis Zancannelli was convicted of murder, and he brings error. Reversed and remanded.

O. H. Dasher, of Trinidad, Fred W. Clark, of Greeley, and Horace N. Hawkins, of Denver, for plaintiff in error. Leslie E. Hubbard, Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. Zancannelli, hereinafter referred to as defendant, was convicted upon the charge of having murdered one Belcher at the city of Trinidad, and sentenced to life imprisonment. He brings the cause here for review relying upon many alleged errors.

[1] The killing took place during the period of the recent industrial conflict in the coal fields between the owners of the coal mines and their employés, and was, the state claimed, incident thereto. The Attorney General neither filed the information nor participated in the prosecution, and in this court has filed a confession of error. Ordinarily, under such circumstances, we would enter judgment of reversal without comment. The nature of the case, however, is such that we think a good purpose will be served by briefly stating the facts and commenting upon the same.

The deceased was a detective in the employ of the mine owners, and the defendant was a striking coal miner, and an inmate of the temporary shelter of such miners known as "the Ludlow Tent Colony." The prosecution introduced evidence to the effect that the defendant had stated that he had killed the detective "for the good of the union." The defendant claimed, and offered to prove, that several large coal mining companies operating in the district were actively interested in the prosecution, and at their request and employment the Hon. Jesse C. Northcutt appeared in the case and aided the district attorney. A petition, supported by affidavits, was filed by defendant alleging interest and prejudice on the part of A. W. McHendrie, judge of the court, and asking that another judge be called in to try the case, which was sustained. Thereafter, by an act of the Legislature, an additional judge was provided for the district, and the Governor appointed the Hon. Granby Hillyer to the position, and a like petition for change of judge was filed against him. The petition was denied, and, upon trial, the jury failed to agree, and was discharged. Fifteen days thereafter the defendant was again placed on trial before Judge Hillyer, and was convicted, as hereinbefore stated.

The evidence on the part of the prosecution was to the effect that defendant had shot Belcher as charged in the information, while that on the part of defendant was to the contrary and tended to show that one of two other men, whom it was claimed had been seen fleeing from the place, was the guilty party, and that the arrest and prosecution of defendant was the result of mistaken identity. Several of the proposed jurors stated, upon examination by the prosecution, that they had formed, expressed, and then held, opinions concerning the guilt or innocence of the defendant; that such opinions and impressions were based upon hearsay, rumors, conversation with other persons, newspaper articles, etc.; but that notwithstanding such opinions they could give the defendant a fair and impartial trial according to the law as it should be given to them by the court under the evidence submitted in the case. Some of the proposed jurors stated that they had never formed or expressed any opinion concerning the case. Upon examination by the defense, each of the proposed jurors was asked the following question in words or substance:

> "Can you start out on the trial of this case giving to the defendant the benefit of the legal rule that a defendant must be presumed to be innocent until he is proven to be guilty?"

To this question an objection was interposed by the prosecution, which, when propounded to those who had previously stated that they had not formed or expressed an opinion concerning the case, was overruled by the court, and they were required to answer; but when propounded to those who had stated they held opinions, or had formed or expressed opinions concerning the guilt or innocence of the defendant, the objection was sustained and the juror not permitted to answer. The defendant exhausted his peremptory challenges, and several of the veniremen, to whom the question was propounded and who were not permitted to answer, served as jurors in the case over the objection and exception of defendant. Substantially every question propounded by the defense to elicit the condition of mind of the jurors respecting the defendant, the parties to the prosecution, and the subject-matter of the action, was ruled out by the court as improper. As an example we set forth the following, to which the court sustained objections and refused to permit the jurors to answer, viz.:

> "Have you any bias or prejudice touching the striking coal miners, either for or against them?"
> "Have you taken an active part on either side of the recent coal strike?"
> "Have you favored or advocated forcible deportation of the striking miners in this county?"
> "As you sit there now, do you think you know what ought to be done in this case or what verdict ought to be rendered?"
> "Have you ever talked with any one who was a mine guard, about the strike matters?"
> "Have you any bias for, or prejudice against, an organization, without intimating which way, known as the United Mine Workers of America?"
> "Are you a member of any organization that during the recent troubles advocated forcible deportation of miners?"
> "In the recent coal miners' strike, which extended over a number of months, were you an active partisan on either side, or did you, like the ordinary citizen, take nothing but a passing interest in it?"
> "Have you participated in any of the exchange of shots in any of the so-called battles which have occurred in this county during the existence of the strike?"
> "Are you desirous of serving on this jury?"
> "Have you read any of the literature sent out by the coal companies touching the Zancannelli case?" (Coupled with the offer, which was refused, to show that the coal companies had distributed literature which repeatedly stated, not only that the defendant was guilty, but that he had confessed guilt.)
> "I assume, Mr. Moore, that living at Model there, you were not an active participant or partisan one way or another in the industrial struggle?"
> "Have you had any part in the industrial conflict here in Colorado at all?"
> "Did you act as a deputy sheriff to go out in the armored cars the Colorado Fuel & Iron Company had?"
> "Do you know whether or not the coal companies were paying for your services there?" (This to a juror who said he was one of the so-called deputy sheriffs in the battles between miners and company men.)
> "Do you know how the sheriff came to summon you, a man who had been in these battles, as a juror in this case?"
> "From what you have heard and read of the account of the trial that was had here just a few days ago, do you feel that you know what verdict should have been rendered in the trial?"
> "Is it or not true that you would dislike to decide a case contrary to what they [the coal companies hiring Judge Northcutt to prosecute] thought it ought to be decided?" (This to a juror who had said that his business associations with the coal companies would tend to bias him in his verdict, and who none the less was held by the court to be a competent juror when defendant's fifteen challenges had been exhausted. This juror was one of the jurors who, over defendant's protest, tried the case.)
> "The law is, Mr. Hudson, that at the outset of a trial any defendant in a criminal case is in law presumed to be innocent, and it is the duty of the jurors to give to the defendant the benefit of that presumption of law, until, or unless, the evidence should show guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Is your frame of mind such that you can start out on the trial of this cause giving to the defendant the benefit of that rule of law that he shall be presumed to be innocent until the contrary appears beyond a reasonable doubt?"

Some other questions which the court refused to permit defendant to ask of jurors and have the same answered are the following:

> Of Juror Pittinger:
> "Is not your frame of mind such that you would require this defendant to prove himself to be innocent of the crime?"
> "Is it or not true that you now, looking at this defendant, regard him as a guilty man, and is not your frame of mind such that you can in no way give him the benefit of the presumption of innocence at the outset of the trial?"
> Of Juror Bramlett:
> "Is your frame of mind such that you would require him to prove himself not guilty?"

The court would not permit jurors to answer the following:

> "Do you understand what is meant by the presumption of innocence?"
> "Do you believe in the doctrine of the presumption of innocence of the defendant?"
> "If the evidence to your mind was evenly balanced as to guilt or innocence, which way would your verdict be?"
> "Would you hesitate to return a verdict of not guilty if the evidence failed to convince you beyond a reasonable doubt that the man was guilty?"

Further illustrative of what took place in the impaneling of the jury, we note the following:

Juror Cherry, a Trinidad business man, in answer to the questions propounded by the district attorney, stated that he had an opinion and that the evidence would have to be clear before he could lay it aside. In answering questions propounded by defendant's counsel he stated:

> That he had "a pretty good idea what the facts are; that it would require clear and convincing evidence to change his mind; that he would start into the trial with that opinion strongly in his mind; that he followed the former trial through the papers with considerable interest; that he had an opinion as to what the verdict should be; that he had a fixed opinion which would have to be changed by very clear evidence, and had an opinion as to who killed Belcher."

Thereupon, in response to leading questions by the court, the prospective juror stated that he would decide the case solely on the evidence, and the challenge of defendant was overruled. Upon re-examination the juror stated that he would not lay aside his opinion until he heard clear, strong, and convincing evidence to the contrary, and that he had expressed his opinion a number of times. The court then refused to permit inquiry as to bias or prejudice for or against the striking coal miners, or as to whether the juror was an active partisan in the coal strike, or whether he had advocated forcible deportation of the miners. Defendant then asked: "Can you start into the trial presuming defendant to be innocent of any crime?" To this question the juror said, "I object to the question." The court sustained the objection. The defendant then asked of the juror if he were in defendant's place, looking for fair and unbiased jurors, if he would accept a juror who had the same frame of mind as the prospective juror then had. To this the juror replied, "I object," and the court sustained the objection.

In considering these questions, and the action of the court in the premises, and its prejudicial effect upon the defendant's rights, it should be borne in mind that the defendant was a striking coal miner, a member of the United Mine Workers of America, which was conducting, on one side, the industrial conflict, and that the theory of the prosecution was that defendant had committed the murder because deceased was a detective employed by the coal operators, who were conducting the other side of that conflict, and that the killing was done for the "good of the union."

[2] While a person is not necessarily disqualified to serve as a juror in a crimnal case by reason of a previously formed or expressed opinion with reference to the guilt or innocence of the accused (section 3691 et seq., R. S. 1908), it would seem always important to ascertain the state of the proposed juror's mind as to the defendant's rights under the law, for, without this, how would it be possible for the court, within the meaning of the law, to be satisfied that the juror has no other interest or motive in the case than to render a true, fair, and impartial verdict? However, be that as it may, the defendant had a right to propound questions to the proposed jurors to show not only that there existed proper grounds for a challenge for cause, but also to elicit facts to enable him to decide whether or not he would make a peremptory challenge. Union Pacific Ry. Co. v. Jones, 21 Colo. 340, 40 Pac. 891. The principle applicable is well stated in Jones v. People, 23 Colo. 276, 280, 47 Pac. 275, 276, in the following language:

> "Such questions were proper, not alone for the purpose of informing the parties to the end that they might intelligently exercise their right to challenge for cause, but for the stronger reason that counsel were entitled to be fully informed of the state of mind of the jurors with reference to the matter, in order that the parties should be fully advised in exercising the right of peremptory challenges."

Subsequent developments in the trial demonstrated more clearly the error of the court in excluding answers to the questions propounded by defendant to jurors on their voir dire. After the jury had been sworn to try the case, but before any evidence was introduced or the opening statements made, the defendant presented to the court his verified petition setting forth that further matters touching the qualifications of Juror Burkhart had come to his knowledge and that of his counsel since the jury had been sworn, and prayed permission of the court to further interrogate the juror concerning the same. The petition was supported by the affidavit of one Rollins, a barber, a resident of Trinidad, to the effect that while the first trial of defendant, upon the same charge, was in progress, he and Burkhart had made a bet as to the result thereof, which affiant had lost and paid to Burkhart; that about the 31st of March, 1915, when the second trial of defendant was called, and in which the conviction here involved was secured, affiant and Burkhart had made another bet upon the result of the trial; and that after this second bet was made "the said Juror Burkhart later offered to make another bet with this affiant on the result of the jury trial which is now in progress, and stated to this affiant that if the said Burkhart was accepted as a juror there would be either a hung jury or a hung Dago," but affiant, having learned from the said Burkhart that he had been summoned as a juror, made no further bet with him. The defendant, upon presenting the petition and affidavit in support thereof, asked the court to permit him to re-examine the juror as to such matters. No counter evidence or showing was made, but the court denied the request, and held that no further examination of the juror could be had. The defendant then made the following separate requests: (1) That he be permitted to inquire of the juror, either in the presence or without the presence of the other jurors, whether or not he had a wager on the trial; (2) that defendant be permitted to introduce evidence showing the truth of the matters alleged in the petition; (3) that defendant be permitted to introduce a challenge to the juror; (4) that issues of fact be made up on the matters and either tried by the court or by triers; (5) that the jury be discharged; (6) that Juror Burkhart be discharged and another juror called to fill the panel. Each request was denied.

In his motion for a new trial defendant again brought to the attention of the court the aforesaid matter, and the original petition and affidavit were made a part of such motion. The people presented, in opposition to the motion on this point, the affidavit of Juror Burkhart in which he admitted having made a bet with Rollins upon the result of the first trial of defendant, but denied having made a bet upon the result of the second trial, in the following language:

> "Affiant further states that during the second trial of the said cause, and during the selection of the jury, this affiant was summoned on the jury, and that after he was summoned, in passing up the street, and by the shop of the said Rollins, he, the affiant, opened the door and jokingly remarked to the said Rollins, 'Now, I bet you four to one on the result of the Zancannelli jury,' whereupon the said Rollins, in a like spir> it, accepted the challenge, and was then and there told in a jesting way by this affiant that he, the said affiant, was summoned on the jury, and therefore he had the advantage of the said Rollins, or words to that effect, whereupon the said Rollins jestingly responded, 'Well, if you are on the jury, you have the advantage, and all bets are off,' which said remark terminated the conversation of the said Rollins and this affiant, relative to the said bet; that no amount was mentioned, and no money posted, and nothing further said relative thereto."

And in this affidavit Burkhart further says:

> "It is true this affiant made some jesting remark about the possibility of there being a 'hung jury or a hung Dago,' but said remark was made in mere jest, and not as expressing a wish, opinion, or desire of this affiant. Affiant at the time had no idea that he would be accepted as a juror in said cause. Affiant did not desire to serve on said jury, but desired more to devote his time and attention to his business, and in addition to his wish of attending to his work, he felt that his opinion relative to the facts in said cause was such that he would not be an acceptable juror; that during his voir dire examination, he stated all the facts pertaining to his said opinion, which he supposed would exclude him, but in this behalf affiant's judgment seems to be in error, as he was thereafter accepted on said jury and served on the same."

Upon the hearing of the motion for new trial, the court permitted the defendant to call and examine Burkhart in relation to the matter in question, and he testified in part as follows:

> "Q. You are the same juror who made, on the first trial, a wager or bet with Mr. Rollins? A. I am. Q. After that trial resulted in a mistrial you called upon Mr. Rollins, did you not, and he paid you the amount of money which you won on that bet? A. I did. Q. After the first trial was over, the trial which resulted in a mistrial, and prior to the day that you were summoned as a juror, you made another wager with Mr. Rollins, did you not, before you had been summoned as a juror? A. I offered to make a wager. * * * Q. Well, whatever occurred was before you were summoned as a juror? A. Yes, sir. * * * Q. The evening before you were summoned as a juror your version of it is that you had this conversation that you would bet him two to one, but that if you should be summoned as a juror, the bet was off? A. Yes, sir. * * * Q. I repeat to see if I understand you correctly. The conversation occurred the night before you were summoned as a juror, and then you bet him two to one on the result of the verdict, but with the proviso that if you were summoned as a juror that the bet wouldn't go, is that correct? A. Yes, sir. I went on to state at the time that if I was on the jury I would bet him four to one; he says, 'If you are on the jury, all bets are off.' * * * Q. You stated several times, Mr. Burkhart, that that was before—that is, this second conversation and conditional bet was made before you were summoned on the jury. I will ask you, if that is correct, why you stated in this affidavit as follows: 'That during the second trial of the said cause, and during the selection of the jury, this affiant was summoned on the jury, and that after he was summoned, in passing up the street, and by the shop of the said Rollins, he (the affiant) opened the door and jokingly remarked to the said Rollins, "Now, I bet you four to one on the result of the Zancannelli jury."' Why did you say it was after you were summoned on the jury in your affidavit, when you stated several times here that it was before you were summoned on the jury and that the bet was conditional? A. I don't remember just about what it was, and I don't remember whether it was Wednesday or Thursday or Friday morning I was to appear; I don't remember anything about it; I paid no attention to that or to the wager at all. Q. Now, Mr. Burkhart, if it was after you were summoned as a juror you wouldn't have made the statement, would you, that it was conditioned? A. I didn't make that statement; I say Mr. Rollins made that statement. I said, 'If I am on the jury it will be four to one.' Q. Four to one what? A. That it would be a hung jury. Q. Or what else? A. Or a hung Dago. As I say, I paid no attention to it whatever. Q. When you made the remark that you would hang the defendant or hang the jury if you were on the jury, did you mean it that way? A. I wouldn't hang an innocent man; no. Q. You called him a Dago? A. He isn't. Q. Did you call him a Dago? A. That is the remark I made. Q. You meant the defendant? A. I did."

To appreciate the full force and effect of the disclosures above, it is essential to bear in mind that Juror Burkhart had, upon his voir dire, said that he had certain business relations with the coal companies said to be interested in the prosecution, and that such relations might embarrass him in rendering a verdict, and if it appeared that such companies were desirous of prosecuting the cause, or in some way engaged or assisting therein, it might tend to bias or prejudice him, and that he did not feel, because of his business relations with the companies, that he should be required to serve as a juror, and that the court would not permit him to answer the following question propounded by defendant, "Is it not true that you would dislike to decide a case contrary to what they thought it ought to be decided?" or to answer the question, "Can you personally as a juror at the outset of the trial give to the defendant the benefit of that rule of law" that he shall be presumed to be innocent until the evidence establishes his guilt? and that the juror stated that he had made up his mind that some of the witnesses in the previous trial had testified truthfully, and others untruthfully, and that such opinion still remained with him, and that it would take something more than weak evidence to get him to discard it.

The errors above noted invalidated the proceedings almost at their very beginning. Moreover, the errors are so numerous, so obvious, and so fatal to the validity of the proceedings that unless they were written into the record as they are, under the seal of the trial court, we could not believe that such things had occurred in the trial of a cause in a court of record.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

Mr. Justice GARRIGUES desires it stated that he concurs in the judgment of reversal on the sole ground that the Attorney General has confessed error.

BANDY v. STATE. (No. A-2661.)

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. June 2, 1917.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION 🔑176—VARIANCE—PRELIMINARY COMPLAINT—TIME OF OFFENSE.

A prosecution in a felony charge is begun with the filing of the preliminary complaint before the committing magistrate. The proof introduced by the state must therefore establish the commission of the offense prior to the filing of this preliminary complaint. Proof tending to show the commission of the offense subsequent to the filing of the same would not be admissible. It therefore follows, that a criminal action begun on the 25th day of June by filing the charges before the committing magistrate cannot be established by proof that the offense was committed on the 25th day of July thereafter.

2. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑223—PROSECUTION—INFORMATION—JURISDICTION.

Under the law, the accused is entitled to an examining trial before a committing magistrate; and an information thereafter filed in the district court must be based upon this examining trial; otherwise the district court acquires no jurisdiction.

Appeal from District Court, Marshall County; Jesse M. Hatchett, Judge.

O. E. Bandy was convicted of a felony and appeals. Reversed.

Kennamer & Coakley, of Madill, for plaintiff in error. R. McMillan, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

ARMSTRONG, J. O. E. Bandy was convicted in the district court of Marshall county on a charge of selling intoxicating liquor, and his punishment fixed at imprisonment in the state penitentiary for three years, and a fine of $1,000.

Numerous assignments of error are brought. We find it necessary, however, to consider only one.

The preliminary complaint upon which the examining trial was held was filed June 25, 1915, and the warrant was issued on that day. The crime was alleged to have been committed on the 25th day of June, 1915. An examining trial was had and the accused held by the magistrate for trial before the district court. The testimony introduced on behalf of the state fixes the date of the sale of the whisky as in July, long after the complaint was filed with the magistrate. The witness who is alleged to have purchased the whisky says it was the 25th day of July, 1915.

[1, 2] The information charges the sale as having been made on the 25th day of June. This cause was begun June 26th. This is fatal to the conviction. Proof of the commission of the offense at any time within the statute of limitations prior to the filing of the preliminary complaint is ordinarily sufficient to warrant a conviction, but proof that the offense was committed after the filing of the preliminary complaint would not warrant a conviction. Testimony showing the latter would not be admissible. The Constitution and statute provides for a preliminary examining trial where prosecution is to be had by information in the district court. The accused is entitled to an examination and trial on the charge laid prior to the beginning of the proceedings, and not subsequent to the beginning thereof. If this plaintiff in error is to be prosecuted for selling whisky in July, the preliminary should not have been held in June. This proposition is too patent to require discussion.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to grant a new trial.

ROBINSON v. STATE. (No. A-2643.)

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. June 2, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1183—APPEAL—REDUCTION OF SENTENCE.

Under Proc. Crim., section 6003, Rev. Laws 1910, this court in the furtherance of justice has the power to modify any judgment appealed from by reducing the sentence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3195–3198.]

Appeal from County Court, Oklahoma County; Gilliam H. Zwick, Judge.

George Robinson was convicted of a violation of the prohibitory law, and he appeals. Modified and affirmed.

O. L. Price and Homer Hurst, both of Oklahoma City, for plaintiff in error. R. McMillan, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DOYLE, P. J. The plaintiff in error, George Robinson, was tried and convicted in the county court of Oklahoma county upon an information charging that he did have in his possession 12 bottles of beer with intent to transport the same in violation of law. The jury failed to fix the punishment, and he was by the court sentenced to be confined in the county jail for 60 days and to pay a fine of $100. No brief has been filed and no appearance made for the plaintiff in error.

The evidence for the state shows two police officers arrested the defendant in the city of Oklahoma City and he had in his possession 12 bottles of beer. As a witness in his own behalf, he testified that the beer was given to him by Frank Mervin, and that it was for his own use; that his parents died while he was young; that he spent about six years at an orphans' home in Oklahoma City, and then went to work; that he was injured and was then sent to the county poor farm. It further appears that he was tried and convicted in the municipal court for the same act charged in the information. No material error appears in the record; but, in view of the facts disclosed, we are of the opinion that substantial justice requires a modification of the punishment imposed.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment and sentence be modified to 30 days' confinement and a fine of $50, and thus modified the judgment is affirmed.

BELVIN et al. v. STATE. (No. A-2211.)

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. June 2, 1917.)

(Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

ASSAULT AND BATTERY ⚿95—QUESTION FOR JURY—PRINCIPAL.

Whether a defendant jointly convicted with another encouraged and aided such other in an assault and battery held, on the evidence, a question for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Cent. Dig. § 141.]

Appeal from District Court, Garvin County; R. McMillan, Judge.

C. A. Belvin and Arthur Inman were convicted of assault and battery, and they appeal. Modified and affirmed.

Carr & Field, of Pauls Valley, for plaintiffs in error. S. P. Freeling, Atty. Gen., and C. W. King, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiffs in error, C. A. Belvin and Arthur Inman, were jointly informed against and tried for the crime of assault with intent to kill one C. M. Wall, and were convicted of assault and battery, and their punishment fixed each at a fine of $100 and 30 days' confinement in the county jail. From the judgments rendered on the verdict, they appeal.

It appears that the plaintiffs in error were farmers, residing seven or eight miles east of Pauls Valley; that Belvin was a man with a large family, consisting of his wife and seven or eight children; that he had lived in that community for more than 30 years; that he is an uncle of the defendant Inman; that the complaining witness, C. M. Wall, also lived in the same neighborhood; that on the day on which the assault occurred the defendant Inman and the complaining witness Wall had an altercation; that evening Inman went over to Belvin's house; from there the two got on Belvin's horse and rode over across the farm to where Belvin's brother lived; on the way over they passed by Wall's home; in a short time they returned and met Wall and his wife at the well by the roadside, where they were watering the horses; Inman made some remark to Wall about the trouble they had that day and got off the horse and assaulted Wall.

The evidence for the state tends to show that Belvin encouraged and aided Inman in the assault.

The only question in the case is the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict against the defendant Belvin. Upon the record before us, the question was one of fact for the jury to determine; however, upon the suggestion of the Attorney General, the judgment and sentence of 30 days' confinement and $100 fine imposed on the defendant Belvin will be modified to the payment of a fine of $100 and the costs. As thus modified, the judgment as to the defendant Belvin is affirmed. The judgment and sentence against the defendant Arthur Inman is affirmed.

SHAW v. STATE. (No. A-2526.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. LARCENY ⚿64(6)—EVIDENCE—POSSESSION OF RECENTLY STOLEN PROPERTY—EFFECT.

The possession of recently stolen personal property is a circumstance to be considered in connection with other competent evidence in the trial of a larceny case; but such possession alone is not sufficient proof of the crime to warrant a conviction, when a reasonable explanation of the possession of same is made and the circumstances tend to support the explanation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. § 175.]

2. LARCENY ⚿55—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

When the whole evidence fails to establish the commission of the offense charged, a verdict and judgment of guilty is contrary to the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. §§ 152, 164, 165, 167-169.]

Appeal from District Court, Comanche County; Cham Jones, Judge.

Virgil Shaw was convicted of larceny, and appeals. Reversed.

J. F. Thomas and J. A. Hughes, both of Lawton, for plaintiff in error. R. McMillan, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

ARMSTRONG, J. Virgil Shaw was convicted in the district court of Comanche county, on a charge of larceny, and his punishment fixed at imprisonment in the state penitentiary for a term of two years. To reverse this judgment, he has brought this appeal.

The proof offered on behalf of the state tends to show that Priscilla Scott, a negro woman living in Lawton, Okl., owned a red calf about three months old; that she had loaned the same to a neighbor, who had tied it with a rope near his house in Lawton; that on the night of September 17th the calf was stolen; that the calf was found at the home of the plaintiff in error in the mountains about 25 miles from Lawton; that plaintiff in error was seen about 2 o'clock in the afternoon driving a wagon in the direction of his home with the calf in question in the wagon. After reaching home, this calf, together with two or three others, was offered for sale to different neighbors; among them, Deputy Sheriff W. T. Herring. The calf was kept in a pasture along a public highway. When prosecuting witness went to the place and claimed the calf, she was told by the plaintiff in error that he had purchased it from a negro man in Lawton and that he had paid $8 for it. He would not give it up, so she instituted a replevin suit. A redelivery bond was executed by the plaintiff in error, and the calf retained by him until such time as investigation showed conclusively that the calf had been stolen from the negro woman. It was then returned to her by him.

At the close of the state's testimony, a demurrer to the evidence was interposed and a motion requesting the court to advise the jury to return a verdict of not guilty on the ground that the evidence failed to establish the crime of larceny against plaintiff in error. This motion was overruled, and exceptions reserved.

The plaintiff in error took the witness stand in his own behalf and introduced a number of witnesses. He testified that he bought the calf at a certain place in Lawton from a negro man; that the negro man helped him load it in the wagon; that he paid $8 for it and hauled it home; that he did not steal it and did not know that it was stolen; that he left Lawton about 2 o'clock in the afternoon. He introduced a number of witnesses who testified that they saw him on his way home, one or two of whom testified they tried to buy the calf from him; that he told them he bought it in Lawton and had paid $8 for it. He offered other testimony stating that he had tried to find the negro from whom he purchased the calf, but had been unsuccessful.

The propositions urged in the brief are based upon the contention that the court erred in overruling the demurrer to the evidence and refusing to advise the jury to bring in a verdict of not guilty, and that the verdict and judgment are contrary to the evidence.

We think that the court should have sustained the demurrer to the evidence and should have discharged the plaintiff in error at the close of the state's testimony. The only thing established by the state's testimony is the fact that the plaintiff in error was in possession of this calf 25 miles away from Lawton; that it was held in a small pasture near the home of the plaintiff in error in full view of the public highway; that it had been offered for sale to the deputy sheriff residing in the community and others; that he hauled it from the city of Lawton to his home in the daytime along the public road with no apparent effort at any time to conceal the same or to mislead any one as to his claim of ownership.

[1] The possession of stolen property is always a circumstance to be considered in connection with the charge of larceny, but possession of a stolen animal alone is not sufficient proof of the crime to warrant a conviction when a reasonable explanation of the possession of the same is made and the circumstances tend to support the same. Cox v. Territory, 2 Okl. Cr. 668, 104 Pac. 378; Howard v. State, 9 Okl. Cr. 337, 131 Pac. 1100.

[2] The proof offered by the state fails to disclose conduct on behalf of the plaintiff in error which indicated that he had stolen this calf. It would be unreasonable to believe that a man would drive into a city the size of Lawton, steal a calf in broad daylight and haul the same home, stop along the road and talk to different individuals concerning the calf, then place it in a pasture near a public highway, and send for a deputy sheriff and offer to sell it to him.

In out judgment, the court should have sustained the demurrer and motion to advise the jury to return a verdict of not guilty. The verdict and judgment are also contrary to the evidence.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to grant a new trial.

WILSON v. STATE. (No. A-2666.)

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. June 2, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW ⟹1159(3) — APPEAL — CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

When there is a clear conflict in the testimony introduced in the trial court by the state and the accused, an appeal to this court on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence is useless. It is the duty of this court to uphold the judgment of the trial court when the evidence tends reasonably to support the verdict of the jury and the judgment rendered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3076.]

Appeal from District Court, Carter County; W. F. Freeman, Judge.

Virgil Wilson was convicted of assault with intent to kill, and appeals. Affirmed.

Brown & Brown, of Ardmore, for plaintiff in error. R. McMillan, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

ARMSTRONG, J. The plaintiff in error was convicted in the district court of Carter county on the charge of assault with intent to kill, and his punishment fixed at imprisonment in the state penitentiary for one year and one day.

The only assignment urged in the brief is based upon the proposition that the verdict is contrary to the evidence.

The proof introduced on behalf of the state tends to show that the plaintiff in error shot Clarence Bracheen with a pistol; that the parties had been attending a dance near Wirt, in Carter county, and had been drinking. Three witnesses on behalf of the state testified that the plaintiff in error shot Bracheen without provocation or justification; that afterwards Bracheen shot the plaintiff in error. Three witnesses testified on behalf of the plaintiff in error that Bracheen shot him first and without reasonable cause; that he shot Bracheen in self-defense. Other testimony was offered by the plaintiff in error tending to support his contention.

The question of fact thus raised was for the jury to determine.

If the plaintiff in error was acting in self-defense when he shot Bracheen, he should have been acquitted. If, on the other hand, he assaulted Bracheen without justifiable or excusable cause and shot him, then he should have been convicted. The jury was impanneled to determine this particular proposition, and it was within its exclusive province to so do. After the jury had made its findings, the verdict was approved by the trial court and a new trial denied. Under the law in this state, it is not only within the province of the trial court, but it is his duty, to set aside a verdict which is unjust. He is on the ground, hears all of the witnesses, sees them and observes their demeanor, supervises the trial, and is minutely familiar with every detail of the same. He not only has the power to set aside an improper verdict, but it is his absolute duty to do so. It is not so on appeal. The functions of the appellate court are in this respect limited.

The law is such that, upon appeal, this court is not warranted in disturbing a judgment of the trial court because the verdict is against the weight of the evidence as it appears in the record. It is our duty to uphold the judgment if there is competent testimony tending reasonably to support the finding of the jury and the judgment rendered. This has been held in almost innumerable cases, and a contrary doctrine has never been announced in any case by this court.

This record presents, as aforesaid, the sole proposition that the verdict is contrary to the evidence. The contention is without merit. It may be that the verdict is contrary to the weight of the evidence considering the number of witnesses who testified and the manner in which they are supported. Upon that proposition, we are not called upon to pass. There is ample testimony in the record, however, from which a legitimate conclusion of guilt could be drawn. There is therefore nothing for us to review.

The judgment is affirmed.

JACKSON v. STATE. (No. A-2655.)

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. June 11, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS ⟹236(4)—OFFENSES—EVIDENCE—IDENTITY—SUFFICIENCY.

When a person is charged with unlawfully conveying intoxicating liquors from one place within the jurisdiction of the trial court to another place therein, and the proof fails to identify the defendant as the person committing the offense, by positive evidence or by circumstances which exclude every other reasonable hypothesis than that of guilt, a judgment of conviction cannot be sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 305, 306.]

Appeal from County Court, Okmulgee County; Mark Bozarth, Judge.

H. W. Jackson was convicted of unlawfully conveying intoxicating liquor, and appeals. Reversed.

E. M. Carter, of Okmulgee, for plaintiff in error. R. McMillan, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

ARMSTRONG, J. The plaintiff in error, H. W. Jackson, was convicted in the county court of Okmulgee county, on a charge of unlawfully conveying intoxicating liquors from one place to another in said county, and his punishment fixed at a fine of $400 and imprisonment in the county jail for 120 days.

The state introduced seven witnesses, none of whom connect the plaintiff in error with the crime charged.

Witness Thompson, conductor on a St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company passenger train, testified that a negro giving his name as H. J. Jackson was a south-bound passenger on his train a few days before this crime is alleged to have been committed; that this negro lost his grip and gave him his name and address; that he was not able to say that the H. W. Jackson on trial and H. J. Jackson, his passenger, were one and the same.

Witness Burns was also a conductor on the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company's passenger train running between Sherman, Tex., and Sapulpa, Okl. This witness testified that defendant, Jackson, was on his train at Sherman, Tex., and told him he was going to get off at the railroad crossing north of Okmulgee; that he never saw the negro any more after passing the crossing. This conductor did not see any suit case with the defendant and did not see him leave the train.

Witness Chisholm was a porter on Burns' train. He testified that he knew the defendant Jackson; that he did not see him get off the train and did not know whether he had any suit case with him or not.

Witness Black, a deputy sheriff, testified that he sometimes knew the defendant and sometimes did not; that he captured 40 quarts of whisky, a case of beer, and a number of pint bottles of whisky; that the whisky was put off the train at the railroad crossing; that he started towards where it was; that some one started away with a case of beer on his shoulder; that he ordered him to stop and fired his gun in the air; that the party dropped the case of beer and ran; that he could not say that this man carrying the whisky was H. W. Jackson, the defendant on trial; that he was about the same size as defendant and resembled him.

This is the only testimony in the case, introduced by the state, which tends to connect the plaintiff in error with the crime of conveying whisky, and, in our judgment, is insufficient to establish the crime charged.

There are certain assignments of error based upon the instructions of the court and the action of the county attorney in attempting to introduce improper evidence. These raise no new questions and it is unnecessary to discuss them. The failure to connect the plaintiff in error with the crime charged by positive proof, or by circumstances which would exclude every other reasonable hypothesis except that of guilt, is fatal to this conviction.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to grant a new trial.

MOORE v. STATE. (No. A-2404.)

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. June 18, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS ⟹236(5) — POSSESSION WITH INTENT TO SELL—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

For evidence held to be insufficient to sustain a conviction for having possession of intoxicating liquors with intent to sell the same, see opinion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 307.]

Appeal from County Court, Tulsa County; Conn Lynn, Judge.

Dud Moore, convicted of a violation of the prohibitory law, appeals. Reversed.

George T. Brown, of Tulsa, for plaintiff in error. The Attorney General, and R. McMillan, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff in error, Dud Moore, and Arthur Clark were jointly charged and tried upon an information charging that they did have possession of certain intoxicating liquors with intent to sell the same. At the close of the state's case, both defendants moved the court to instruct the jury to return a verdict of not guilty, for the reason that the testimony introduced was insufficient to show that the defendants or either of them were guilty as charged. The motion was sustained as to the defendant Arthur Clark, and he was discharged; as to plaintiff in error the motion was overruled, and the jury found him guilty and fixed his punishment at a fine of $250 and 90 days' confinement in the county jail. A motion for new trial was filed and overruled. From the judgment rendered in pursuance of the verdict, an appeal was perfected.

The only serious question in the case is: Does the evidence authorize a conviction? The state introduced four witnesses. W. M. McCullough, sheriff, and Frank Bowlin, his deputy, testified that they searched the premises upstairs on Third street, in the city of Tulsa, known as the "Stag," and there found a quart bottle of whisky, three bottles partly full of whisky, three quarts of gin, and two dozen bottles of tonine. They described the place as containing a bar or lunch counter, an ice box and cooking stove in the rear, also a pool table; that there were cigars and a lunch outfit; that at the time they found three or four white men and two negroes in the room, and the negroes were eating breakfast; that at the time of the raid the plaintiff in error had been in the custody of the sheriff for more than a month as a prisoner in the county jail, serving a sentence for gambling; that the warrant issued on the information in this case was served on the plaintiff in error in the county jail, and he was released about a month later.

G. T. Williamson testified that he owned a one-fourth interest in the building known as the "Stag"; that Bud Moore and Bob Allison had a written lease the year before, and he supposed they occupied the premises; that he had no contract with Dud Moore for the occupancy of the premises; that the rent was paid by various persons; that Dud Moore did not pay him any rent in July, and did not know whether he paid the rent for the month of August during which month the raid was made upon which this prosecution is based; that he did not know the whereabouts of Dud Moore for the months of July, August, and September, during which time the evidence shows the defendant was a prisoner in the county jail.

W. G. Williamson testified that he owned a one-half interest in the building known as the "Stag"; that under the written lease it was rented to Billy Miles, and after the expiration of that lease he never collected the rent. This was all the evidence in the case.

We do not think the evidence is sufficient to show that plaintiff in error did have possession of the liquors in question. He is charged with doing an act which as a prisoner in the county jail at the time he could not do except through others. It appears that the information in this case was filed the day the raid was made, but for some reason, not apparent, the names of the parties present when the raid was made were not indorsed upon the information as witnesses. In order to make a prima facie case, it was necessary for the state to show that the plaintiff in error had some interest in the place raided, and had knowledge of the fact that the intoxicating liquors seized had been placed there. The general rule is that all the averments necessary to constitute the offense charged must be proved.

In Mater v. State, 9 Okl. Cr. 380, 132 Pac. 383, it is said:

> "In a prosecution for having possession of intoxicating liquors with intent to sell same, the burden was on the state to prove that the place where the liquor was found was in defendant's possession or under his control, or that the intoxicating liquor was his, or that he had possession of same either as owner or employé."

Because the evidence, as a matter of law, is insufficient to sustain the verdict, the judgment is reversed.

WATKINS v. STATE. (No. A-2658.)*

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS 🔑138—UNLAWFUL CONVEYANCE—INTENT.

It is unlawful for any person to convey from place to place within this state intoxicating liquors which said person has previously purchased within this state, and it is immaterial whether the person so purchasing such liquor and conveying the same intended to use such liquor lawfully or unlawfully. Intent is not a material ingredient of the offense of conveying intoxicating liquors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 148.]

Appeal from County Court; Oklahoma County; Wm. H. Zwick, Judge.

Earl Watkins was convicted of unlawfully conveying intoxicating liquors, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Charles H. Ruth and Geo. P. Glaze, both of Oklahoma City, for plaintiff in error. S. P. Freeling, Atty. Gen., and R. McMillan, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

PER CURIAM. There is no dispute in the testimony in this case. The evidence on the part of the state is to the effect that the appellant was seen riding in a Ford car from the home of his brother at 228 East Fifth street, in Oklahoma City, to his own residence at 320 East Third street. When he drove up to the latter residence a city detective and a city attorney in another car came up to him and asked him if he had any whisky with him. He replied that he did not, but upon searching a half pint bottle of whisky was found in his hip pocket wrapped up in a handkerchief. This bottle was unopened. Another city detective who had been stationed at 228 East Fifth street had just before that time seen the appellant leave that place in the automobile. He came from that direction at the time he was accosted and the whisky discovered. The appellant took the witness stand in his own behalf and testified that he had bought this whisky some two or three hours before he was apprehended from a negro porter at the corner of Third and Broadway in Oklahoma City, and had carried it with him in his pocket around over town to various places up until the time of his arrest. Upon his own statement he is clearly guilty of a violation of the law.

It is contended that there was error committed by the trial court in permitting the court stenographer to read from his stenographic notes certain testimony given by this defendant at another trial covering this transaction which was instituted on behalf of the city of Oklahoma City. Various grounds are asserted why this evidence should not have been permitted to be introduced, but, in view of the fact that the defendant himself took the witness stand and testified to exactly the same state of facts disclosed in the previous proceeding, if there had been error in its introduction, it was cured by his subsequent testimony.

It is also contended that the court erred in giving the following instruction:

> "You are instructed that by the term 'lawful purchase,' as used in these instructions, is meant the purchase of intoxicating liquors from a point outside of the state of Oklahoma to be shipped to a place within the state of Oklahoma, which purchase would be an interstate shipment and in which event the purchaser would have a lawful right to carry or transport said intoxicating liquors from the office of the common carrier at its destination, to his home or place of business."

In view of the testimony of the defendant that he got the liquor from a bootlegger in Oklahoma City, the giving of this instruction was perhaps unnecessary in this case irrespective of the fact of whether or not it is a correct definition of a lawful purchase under our Constitution and laws. This case was not defended upon the theory that the appellant was conveying a lawful purchase of liquor, but upon the theory that, having purchased it for his own use, although unlawfully, he had a right to convey the same from place to place. Such is not the law of this state. The testimony of the defendant amounts virtually to a plea of guilty, and it would be a travesty upon justice to reverse a judgment in the face of his own testimony.

It is argued that, if the construction is given to the statutes that, before a person will be permittted to convey intoxicating liquors from place to place in this state, he must purchase the same outside of the state, and have them shipped to him by means of interstate commerce, one neighbor could not borrow whisky from another for medicinal purposes and carry it to his home. Argument of that kind might appeal to the court where such a state of facts existed, but this is not a case of that kind. If a man may purchase a half pint of whisky from a bootlegger and carry it indiscriminately from place to place within this state, he may purchase a quart, or a gallon, or five gallons, or any other quantity, and carry it about with him over the state. The purpose of our prohibitory liquor statutes goes to absolutely destroy the manufacture, sale, and trafficking in intoxicating liquors within the boundaries of this state, and incidental to the destruction of that traffic the Legislature saw fit to make it a crime for any person to carry about with him any liquor so unlawfully purchased. It is no defense that he has purchased such liquor for his own use, and does not intend to dispose of it. When he purchases liquor in this state he does so at his own peril, and if he is caught in the act of conveying same he is guilty of crime.

The judgment is affirmed.

PARKER v. STATE. (No. A-2611.)

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. June 2, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

BURGLARY ⚿=20—INDICTMENT—SUFFICIENCY.

The information in the case at bar does not state a public offense under the doctrine announced by this court in Sullivan v. State of Oklahoma, 7 Okl. Cr. 307, 123 Pac. 569.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Burglary, Cent. Dig. §§ 51–54.]

Appeal from District Court, Marshall County; George C. Crump, Judge.

Harry Parker was convicted of burglary, and appeals. Reversed.

Rider & Hurt, of Madill, for plaintiff in error. R. McMillan, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

ARMSTRONG, J. The plaintiff in error, Harry Parker, was convicted in the district court of Marshall county on a charge of burglary, and his punishment fixed at imprisonment in the state penitentiary for two years.

The charging part of the information, upon which the conviction is based, is as follows:

> "That * * * the said defendant did, * * * unlawfully, willfully, wrongfully, fraudulently, burglariously and feloniously break into and enter by breaking the seal upon and opening a certain freight car, the same being the property of the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad and in which there was stored and kept certain personal property, with the unlawful, burglarious and felonious intent then and there on the part of him, the said Harry Parker, to commit larceny therein, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, etc."

The sufficiency of this information was raised by informal demurrer and by proper motion in arrest of judgment.

The objections to this information are discussed at length in the opinion of this court in the case of Sullivan v. State, 7 Okl. Cr. 307, 123 Pac. 569. We deem it unnecessary to consider them again. County attorneys will experience no difficulty in following the doctrine in the Sullivan Case.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to sustain the demurrer, with leave to the county attorney to file a proper information.

CHILDS v. STATE. (No. A-2622.)

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. June 2, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⚿=1171(1)—ARGUMENT OF PROSECUTING ATTORNEY—NEW TRIAL.

A prosecuting attorney should confine his argument before the jury to a fair discussion of the issues in the case, and improper remarks objected to at the time will be considered and construed in reference to the evidence. If it appears that the improper argument may have determined the verdict, a new trial should be granted.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⚿=1171(1) — TRIAL — IMPROPER ARGUMENT—NEW TRIAL.

In his argument to the jury, the assistant county attorney said, "The county attorney of this county knew this defendant was guilty before he filed this information, or this case would never have been brought." Evidence considered, and held, that such statement was prejudicial to the substantial rights of the defendant, for which a new trial should be granted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3127.]

Appeal from County Court, Logan County; John D. Chappell, Judge.

Bud Childs was convicted of a violation of the prohibitory law, and appeals. Reversed.

John A. Remy, of Guthrie, and James Hepburn, of Henryetta, for plaintiff in error. The Attorney General and R. McMillan, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DOYLE, P. J. The information charged that in the county of Logan, on the 9th day of October, 1915, Bud Childs did then and there unlawfully have in his possession "42 quarts of beer, 1½ quarts of whisky, and 1 quart of gin, with the intent then and there to barter, sell, give away, and furnish said intoxicating liquors." Upon his trial the jury returned a verdict of guilty, and he was sentenced to pay a fine of $100 and be confined for 30 days in the county jail. To reverse the judgment an appeal by case-made was duly perfected.

The plaintiff in error, a negro, with his wife and five or six children, lived on a farm owned by him in the southern part of Logan county.

The testimony of the sheriff and one of his deputies shows that on the day alleged they went to his farm, and there in executing a search warrant found at his home intoxicating liquors as described in the information.

Arthur McKee testified that he went to the defendant's place to buy some cows of him, could not make a deal, and asked him if he had anything to drink, he said he had a well of water, and witness said he wanted something stronger, and the defendant said he would try to find him something, and he put a bottle in his automobile, for which he gave him $1.50. Witness was then asked to tell the jury what was it he bought and paid for. He answered:

> "I don't know exactly what it was. I lost it before I got home. When I went to get it from the back of the car, it was gone. I don't know whether I lost it or not. It was not in the car when I went to get it, and I did not taste it. I had been drinking some before I went there."

Sam Rooker testified that he went with Arthur McKee to the defendant's place; did not get any whisky or beer himself, but saw McKee come from the house with a whisky bottle in his hand; did not see McKee with a bottle prior to that time, and did not think McKee was drinking that day; that he was at the defendant's place another time and asked the defendant if he had anything cold to drink, and the defendant gave him a cold bottle, for which he paid 20 cents. The attorney for the state then asked him:

> "Q. I will ask you if he did not say he had some cold beer? A. Don't remember. Q. I will ask you if you didn't ask him if he had some cold beer? (Objection by the court overruled.) A. Don't remember whether I asked him that or not. Q. To refresh your recollection again, I will ask you if, when you were called before the county attorney, you said in that examination you testified that you asked for a cold bottle of beer, didn't you? (The defendant's objections overruled. Exception. No answer.) Q. Tell the jury whether it was beer or not? A. It tasted like beer."

Cecil Harpster testified that he was at the defendant's place some time in the summer and bought two or three cold bottles and drank them, for which he paid 20 cents apiece; that he was unable to say what the stuff was. The assistant county attorney asked the following question:

> "Q. Tell the jury whether it was beer or not? (Defendant objects to the question.) By the Court: Objection overruled. He can tell what it was. (Exception reserved.) A. I called for a cold drink. Asst. County Attorney: I know that this witness knows what he got there, and I want the court to compel the witness to purge himself of contempt of court. By Mr. Remy: To the statement of the assistant county attorney defendant objects, on the ground that said statement was made for the purpose of prejudicing the minds of the jurors against the defendant. By the Court: Objection overruled. (Defendant excepts.) By the Court: Gentlemen of the jury, no evidence of what somebody said or done is to be considered by you in the trial of this case. Consider just what the witness said; that is what you are to consider, not the remarks of counsel."

Two or three other witnesses testified that they had bought something that tasted like beer at the defendant's place, but refused to definitely fix the time.

As a witness in his own behalf, the defendant testified that he lived on his own farm consisting of 240 acres; that he had the liquor in question for his own personal use; that he had received four or five shipments of liquor in as many years for his own personal use, and the liquor in question was a part of one or two shipments that he had received in the last six months. He denied that he had ever sold any intoxicating liquor to any person.

James Stewart testified that he lived on the defendant's place, in a separate house for more than a year last past, and never knew of any person going there to buy liquor of him.

Will Carter testified that he had been working for the defendant for about eight months and never knew of him selling or furnishing liquor to any one.

Three or four farmer neighbors testified that they had known the defendant for from 7 to 15 years. They qualified as character witnesses, and testified that the defendant's reputation for truth and veracity and as to being an honest law-abiding citizen was good.

Two bankers and two merchants of Guthrie testified that they had known the defendant for several years and knew his general reputation for truth and veracity and as being an honest law-abiding citizen, and that such reputation was good.

[1, 2] Of the various errors assigned, we deem it only necessary to consider those relating to the charge of misconduct on the part of the assistant county attorney. The record discloses that the assistant county attorney in his argument to the jury made the following statement:

> "The county attorney of this county knew this defendant was guilty before he filed this information, or this case would never have been brought."

To which statement the defendant objected and excepted at the time on the ground and for the reason that said statement was prejudicial and made for the purpose of prejudicing the minds of the jury against the defendant. The court at the time instructed the jury not to consider anything outside the record in the case.

Considering the fact that there is a direct conflict in the evidence as to the guilt of the defendant, we think that the statement complained of could not be otherwise than prejudicial to the defendant.

It would seem from the record that the witnesses for the state had testified before a court of inquiry conducted by the county attorney who did not personally appear in the trial of the cause. The statement was, under the circumstances, highly improper and well calculated to bolster up the unsatisfactory testimony of the witnesses for the state. If, as his assistant stated, the county attorney knew that the defendant was guilty, he should have been called as a witness so that the defendant could have the benefit of confrontation and cross-examination. A prosecuting attorney should confine his argument before the jury to a fair discussion of the issues in the case, and improper remarks objected to at the time will be considered and construed in reference to the evidence. If it appears that the improper argument may have determined the verdict, a new trial should be granted. Watson v. State, 7 Okl. Cr. 590, 124 Pac. 1101; Mulkey v. State, 5 Okl. Cr. 75, 113 Pac. 533.

There were other improper statements made by the assistant county attorney during the progress of the trial which we think tended to deprive the defendant of a fair and impartial trial upon the law and the evidence in the case.

For the reasons indicated, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

Ex parte HIGHTOWER. (No. A-2879.)

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. June 6, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. HABEAS CORPUS 🔑27—GROUNDS—JURISDICTION OF COURT OR JUDGE.

The jurisdiction of a court or judge to render a particular judgment or sentence by which a person is imprisoned is a proper subject of inquiry on habeas corpus.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. § 22.]

2. JUVENILE COURTS—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Act of March 24, 1909, to establish juvenile courts and to regulate the jurisdiction and control of delinquent children, provides (sections 4413, 4414, Rev. Laws 1910) that county courts shall have jurisdiction of all cases coming within the provisions of the act, and that a special record book shall be kept by the court for all cases coming within the provisions of the act to be known as the "juvenile record," also a "juvenile docket," and for convenience the court in the control and disposition of such cases shall be called the "juvenile court."

3. INFANTS 🔑18—LIABILITY FOR CRIME—JUVENILE COURT ACT—JURISDICTION OF DISTRICT COURT.

Under the provisions of this act a child under 16 years of age cannot be guilty of the commission of a crime except in cases wherein it is shown and determined by the juvenile court of the county wherein the crime is alleged to have been committed that such child knew the wrongfulness of his acts at the time they were committed, and such a determination is a necessary prerequisite to the jurisdiction of the district court to try a child under the age of 16 years upon an information charging a felony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Infants, Cent. Dig. § 18.]

4. INFANTS 🔑16—LIABILITY FOR CRIME—JUVENILE COURT ACT.

This act contemplates an investigation by the juvenile court of complaints against children under 16 years of age with the view of determining whether or not the child committed the acts charged, and, if so, whether or not he knew the wrongfulness thereof in a criminal sense. And if, upon such investigation, the juvenile court finds affirmatively, it is then within its discretion to hold said child to be proceeded with in the manner provided by law in the court having competent jurisdiction of the offense, certifying to such court both finding as to probable cause, and that the child knew the wrongfulness of the acts complained of.

5. INFANTS 🔑16—LIABILITY FOR CRIMINAL ACT—FINDING OF JUVENILE COURT—EFFECT.

The finding of the juvenile court that the child knew the wrongfulness of his acts, and was capable of committing the offense, and did commit it, does not relieve the state of the burden of proving upon the trial that the child knew the wrongfulness thereof, as provided in Penal Code, subdivision 2, § 2094, Rev. Laws. The only effect the act in question has on said subdivision is to change the word "fourteen" to "sixteen," subsequent to the action of the juvenile court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Infants, Cent. Dig. § 16.]

Habeas corpus by Sarah Hightower, mother of Raymond Hightower, a minor, against the Warden of the State Prison. Writ allowed.

On November 28, 1916, there was filed in this court a duly verified petition for writ of habeas corpus, which, omitting title and verification, reads as follows:

"Your petitioner, Sarah Hightower, mother of Raymond Hightower, a minor, represents and states to this honorable court that he is restrained of his liberty and is unlawfully imprisoned and restrained at Granite, by the warden of the state prison at said place. The cause of said restraint according to the best knowledge and belief of your petitioner is: That at the time of the arrest, trial, and conviction of said Raymond Hightower, on the charge of the murder of one Proctor Green on the 23d day of September, 1912, he was arraigned before the Hon. Frank M. Bailey, and entered a plea of not guilty, as is shown by the record of the district court of Grady county, a copy of which is here attached and is marked Exhibit A as a part of this petition. That on the —— day of ——, your petitioner, Raymond Hightower, without the advice of a legal counsel, entered a plea of guilty, and that on said plea was sentenced to serve in the county jail of Grady county, Okl., until he arrived at the age of 16 years, and that he thereafter be confined in the state prison at Granite until he reaches the age of 21 years. That for some reason unknown to petitioner, said petitioner, Raymond Hightower, was not kept in said county jail, as is shown by the record of the district court, a copy of which is here attached, marked Exhibit B, and is made a part of this petition. That during the month of January said petitioner was brought before the district court without advice of legal counsel and entered a plea of guilty to manslaughter, and on said plea was sentenced to serve 7 years at hard labor in the state penitentiary, as is shown by the record of the district court, a copy of which is here attached, marked Exhibit C, and is made a part of this petition. But your petitioner alleges that said restraint is illegal and unauthorized, because at the time of said sentence said petitioner was under the age of 14 years, as is shown by affidavits Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, marked Exhibit D a part of this petition. Your petitioner further alleges that said restraint is illegal for the reason that the district court had no jurisdiction at the time said sentence was imposed on the said Raymond Hightower. That if any court had jurisdiction it would have been the juvenile court of Grady county, as shown in section 4412 of the statute of 1910 of the state of Oklahoma.

"Wherefore your petitioner prays your honorable court to grant a writ of habeas corpus, and that he be discharged without delay from such unlawful imprisonment.

"Sarah Hightower, Petitioner."

Omitting certificates and seal of the court clerk that the same are true copies, Exhibits A, B, and C read as follows:

"State of Oklahoma v. Raymond Hightower.

"Now at this time comes into open court the above-named defendant Raymond Hightower, in custody of the sheriff. And plaintiff, state of Oklahoma, being present by its attorney, John H. Venable, and defendant being present in person, and being duly arraigned and information read in open court, said defendant is given 24 hours in which to plead. Said defendant is thereupon remanded to the custody of the sheriff to await the further action of the court."

"District Court, 15th Judicial District, Grady County, Oklahoma.

"Now at this time comes into open court the above-named defendant Raymond Hightower, in custody of the sheriff. And plaintiff, state of Oklahoma, being present by its attorney, Oscar Simpson, and defendant being present in person and having been arraigned herein on a former day and having at this time entered his plea of not guilty herein, said defendant now withdraws his plea not guilty and enters a plea of guilty herein. Whereupon it is by the court ordered that he be confined in the county jail of Grady county, Oklahoma, until he arrives at the age of 16, and that he thereafter be confined in the state prison at Granite until he reaches the age of 21 years. Whereupon said defendant is notified of his right of appeal herein and is remanded to the custody of the sheriff."

"Exhibit C.

"The prisoner, the above-named Raymond Hightower, defendant, being personally present in open court, and having been legally presented by information for the crime of murder and arraigned, and said defendant having entered herein his plea of guilty to manslaughter, and being asked by the court if he had any legal cause why judgment and sentence should not be pronounced against him, and he giving no good reason in bar thereof:

"It is therefore considered, ordered, adjudged and decreed by the court that the said Raymond Hightower be confined in the state penitentiary at McAlester, in the state of Oklahoma, for the term of 7 years at hard labor, for said crime by him committed, said term of sentence to begin at and from the day of delivery to the warden, and that said defendant pay the costs of this prosecution taxed at $——, for which execution is awarded.

"It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed by the court that the sheriff of Grady county, state of Oklahoma, transport said Raymond Hightower to the said penitentiary at McAlester in the state of Oklahoma, and that the warden of said building do confine and imprison the said Raymond Hightower in accordance with this judgment, and that the clerk of this court do immediately certify under the seal of the court and deliver to the sheriff aforesaid two copies of this judgment, one of said copies to accompany the body of said defendant to the said penitentiary and to be left therewith at said penitentiary, said copy to be warrant and authority for the imprisonment of said defendant in said penitentiary, and the other copy to be the warrant and authority of said sheriff for the transportation and imprisonment of the said defendant as hereinbefore provided. Said last-named copy to be returned to the clerk of said court with the proceedings of said sheriff thereunder indorsed thereon. And thereupon the court notified the defendant of his right of appeal.

"Done in open court on this 11th day of January, 1913.

"No. 1465. In District Court. Judgment and sentence on plea of guilty. The State of Oklahoma v. Raymond Hightower, Defendant. Filed March 1, 1913. S. L. Newman, District Clerk."

Omitting situs and jurat of each, the affidavits attached are as follows:

"Sarah Hightower, of lawful age, being first duly sworn, deposes and says as follows: I am the mother of Raymond Hightower, who was born December 28, 1899, as shown on the family record of births; and that on the 23d day of September, 1912, the date of the charge against him for the murder of Proctor Green, the said Raymond Hightower's age was 12 years, 8 months, and 25 days. That on the 11th day of January, 1913, he, the said Raymond Hightower, was sentenced for manslaughter to the state penitentiary at McAlester for the term of 7 years at hard labor at the age of 13 years and 13 days."

"Millie Hightower, of lawful age, being first duly sworn, deposes and says as follows: I am the grandmother of Raymond Hightower, who was born on the 28th day of December, 1899, as shown on the family record of births; and that on the 23d day of September, 1912, the date of the charge against him for the murder of Proctor Green, the said Raymond Hightower's age was 12 years, 8 months, and 25 days. That on the 11th day of January, 1913, Raymond Hightower was sentenced for manslaughter to the state penitentiary at McAlester for the term of 7 years at hard labor at the age of 13 years and 13 days."

"Mrs. Laura Roberson, a white woman, of lawful age, being first duly sworn, deposes and says as follows: I was, on or about the 23d day of September, 1912, in charge of our grocery on the corner of First and Idaho at Chickasha, Okl., and witnessed a fight between Proctor Green and Raymond Hightower, when seemingly Raymond was whipped and ran to my store, the Green boy chasing him with an iron something like a car pin. I pushed Raymond in and kept Proctor out. Proctor said to Raymond, 'I'll get you out after while, and when I get you out I'll kill you.' But Raymond stayed in, and after a while Proctor went away, making threats. Raymond scouted out of the back door, and I did not see either of them until after the shooting. I was subpœnaed in the case, and would have made this statement in the court, but the case was dismissed without trial."

A writ of habeas corpus issued, directed to the respondent, Hon. Boone Williams, warden of the state reformatory at Granite, who on December 7th, the day it was returnable, through Sam Everett, assistant warden, produced petitioner in court, and at the same time filed his return thereto. The return shows that the petitioner is held by said warden on a commitment issued upon the judgment set forth in the petition. The material facts averred in the petition are undisputed therein. After hearing the evidence the decision of the court was announced by the presiding judge, wherein the writ was allowed and respondent was directed to deliver the petitioner into the custody of the sheriff of Grady county, who was directed to hold him in custody until discharged, or his custody changed by due course of law.

Robert L. Fortune, of Chickasha, for petitioner. S. P. Freeling, Atty. Gen., and R. McMillan, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DOYLE, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). Counsel for petitioner contends that upon the record showing that no preliminary complaint against him was ever filed in the county court of Grady county, and that no investigation was ever had before said court or the judge thereof sitting as a juvenile court concerning the charge of murder before the filing of the information in the district court of said county charging the petitioner with said crime, that said district court was without power or jurisdiction to arraign him upon said information or require him to plead thereto, and was without jurisdiction to render the judgment and sentence in execution of which under the commitment issued thereon the petitioner has since been and is now held in custody by the warden of the state reformatory. The act of March 24, 1909, creating juvenile courts, in part provides as follows:

"The words 'delinquent child' shall include any child under the age of sixteen years who violates any law of the United States, or of this state, or any city or town ordinance." Section 4412, Rev. Laws.

"The county courts of the several counties in this state shall have jurisdiction in all cases coming within the terms and provisions of this article." Section 4413, Rev. Laws.

"In all counties a special record book shall be kept by the court for all cases coming within the provisions of this article, to be known as the 'juvenile record' and the docket or calendar of the court upon which shall appear the case or cases under the provisions of this article, shall be known as the 'juvenile docket' and for convenience, the court in the trial and disposition of such cases, shall be called the 'juvenile court.'" Section 4414, Rev. Laws.

"Every child who shall have been adjudged delinquent, whether allowed to remain at home, or placed in a home, or committed to an institution, shall continue to be a ward of the court until such child shall have been discharged as such ward by order of court, or shall have reached the age of twenty-one years, and such court may, during the period of wardship, cause such child to be returned to the court for further or other proceedings, including parole, or release from an institution: Provided, however, that notice of all applications to the court for such parole or release shall be given to the superintendent of such institution at least ten days before the time set for the hearing thereof, or the consent, in writing, of such superintendent to such parole or release shall be filed. The court may, however, in its discretion cause such child to be proceeded against in accordance with the laws that may be in force governing the commission of crime." Section 4424, Rev. Laws.

[2-5] In the case of In re Powell, 6 Okl. Cr. 495, 120 Pac. 1022, this act is construed. Upon the question here presented it was said by this court, speaking through Armstrong, J.:

"The Legislature in its wisdom by this law says that a child under sixteen years of age cannot be guilty of the commission of a crime, except in cases where it is shown that such child knew the wrongfulness of his acts at the time they were committed. The acts committed by such child, which in an adult would be a crime, under this statute, constitute juvenile delinquency only, except in cases of a serious character, when the juvenile court is authorized by the act, supra, in its discretion, to cause such child to be proceeded against in accordance with the law that may be in force governing the commission of crime. Prior to the enactment of the law in question, the statutes provided: 'All persons are capable of committing crimes, except those belonging to the following classes: First. Children under the age of seven years. Second. Children over the age of seven years, but under the age of fourteen years, in the absence of proof that at the time of committing the act or neglect charged against them, they knew its wrongfulness.' Section 2034, Snyder's Stat. The juvenile court law under consideration, in effect, provides that children under the age of sixteen are incapable of committing crime. But, in order that no great wrong should be done to society, the Legislature took the precaution to provide that a child brought before the juvenile court on a charge of delinquency, such court might, in its discretion, cause such child to be proceeded against in accordance with the law governing the commission of crime. (See last clause in section 4414, supra.) This provision contemplates an investigation by the juvenile court of the acts complained of with the view of determining whether or not the child committed them, and, if so, whether or not he knew the wrongfulness thereof in a criminal sense. And should the court find affirmatively, it is then within its discretion, under the law, to hold such child to be proceeded with in the manner provided by law in a court having competent jurisdiction of the offense committed, certifying to such court both its finding as to probable cause, and that the child knew the wrongfulness thereof. The finding of the juvenile court, or the county judge sitting as such, that the child knew the wrongfulness of his act, and was capable of committing the offense, and did commit it, does not relieve the state of the burden of proving that the child knew the wrongfulness of his act at the time of the commission thereof, upon the trial before a jury in a court of competent jurisdiction, as provided in subdivision 2 of section 2034, Synder's Statutes. The effect the juvenile court law under consideration has on said subdivision is simply to change the word 'fourteen' to 'sixteen,' subsequent to the foregoing proceedings."

This is not a new provision. By the ancient Saxon law the age of 12 years was established for the age of possible discretion, when first the understanding might open; and from thence until the offender was 14, it was ætas pubertati proxima, in which the child might or might not be guilty of a crime, according to his natural capacity or incapacity. By the common law as it has stood at least ever since the time of Edward III, the capacity of committing a crime within certain limits of age is not so much measured by years and days, as by the strength of the delinquent's understanding and judgment. Bl. Comm. 23. In all such cases the evidence of that malice which is to supply age ought to be strong and clear beyond all doubt and contradiction. 4 Bl. Comm. 24. Under the provisions of this act, a child under 16 years of age cannot be guilty of the commission of a crime, except in cases where it is shown and determined by the juvenile court of the county wherein the crime is alleged to have been committed that such child knew the wrongfulness of its acts at the time they were committed, and such a determination is a necessary prerequisite to the jurisdiction of a district court to try a child under the age of 16 years upon an information charging a felony, and in addition thereto that the child so charged was by the judge of said court sitting as an examining and committing magistrate, held to answer before the district court. The return in this case shows that no such proceedings were had before the juvenile court of Grady county, and that no evidence was taken before said court or the judge thereof as to the petitioner's capacity to commit the crime charged in the information which was filed in the district court of Grady county charging the petitioner with the crime of murder. It follows that the district court of Grady county was without jurisdiction of said information, and was without jurisdiction to render the judgment and sentence under which the petitioner is now held in custody. It further appears from the record that the petitioner was convicted of the crime of manslaughter under said information upon his plea of guilty; that he did not have the benefit of counsel, and no evidence was taken as to the petitioner's capacity to commit the crime charged in the information, or the degree of said crime to which he entered his plea of guilty. The child's plea of guilty might be evidence that the petitioner committed the act charged, but was no proof of the capacity of the petitioner to understand the wrongfulness of the act charged at the time it was committed. The presumption of incapacity can only be rebutted by affirmative proof that the child had capacity to understand the wrongfulness of the act charged against him.

[1] By numerous decisions of this court it is held that the jurisdiction of a court or judge to render a particular judgment or sentence by which a person is imprisoned is a proper subject of inquiry on habeas corpus, and where it is shown by the return that the petitioner is detained by virtue of a commitment issued upon a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, such showing is prima facie only of the fact, and may be impeached by the record of the case, for the purpose of showing that the court or judge was without jurisdiction or power to render the judgment or issue the commitment, and where the record shows such want of jurisdiction to render the judgment or issue the commitment, the petitioner under such showing is entitled to his discharge.

For the reasons stated, we are of the opinion that the judgment and sentence of the district court of Grady county in this case is illegal and void, and that the execution of said judgment deprives the petitioner of his liberty without due process of law. It is therefore ordered that the petitioner be discharged from imprisonment under said judgment and commitment, and that he be remanded to the custody of the sheriff of Grady county to abide the further action of the juvenile court of said county.

SWAN v. STATE. (No. A-2552.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. HOMICIDE ⚿112(5) — SELF-DEFENSE—INTENT.

An instruction given by the court which charges the jury, "If you believe that the defendant armed himself and sought the deceased for the purpose of provoking and engaging in a difficulty, and in furtherance of such plan did invite and provoke a difficulty, and then and there shot and killed his adversary, the defendant cannot invoke the rights of self-defense," is fundamentally wrong. The difficulty must be prepared for, sought and provoked for, the purpose of and with the intent upon the part of accused to take the life of his adversary. It is therefore necessary, for the court, in submitting a charge of this character, to place the burden of the instruction upon the intent of the defendant at the time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 149.]

2. HOMICIDE ⚿309(3) — INSTRUCTIONS—DEGREES—EVIDENCE.

When there is no evidence which directly or indirectly raises the issue of negligent homicide or manslaughter in the second degree, instructions submitting the question of guilt or innocence of this crime should not be included in the charge of the court in submitting the issues to the jury. The charge of the court should give the law applicable to the issues raised by the pleadings and the facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 652.]

Appeal from District Court, Stephens County; Cham Jones, Judge.

Denny Swan was convicted of manslaughter in the second degree, and appeals. Reversed.

Womack & Brown, of Duncan, H. H. Brown, of Ardmore, and A. K. Swan, of Tulsa, for plaintiff in error. R. McMillan, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

ARMSTRONG, J. The plaintiff in error, Denny Swan, was tried in the district court of Stephens county on a charge of murder and convicted of manslaughter in the second degree. His punishment was fixed at two years in the state penitentiary. To reverse this judgment an appeal was duly brought to this court.

The evidence discloses the fact that Denny Swan, the plaintiff in error, and Bill Hodge, the deceased, were farmers and were engaged in the stock business in a small way; they lived in the same neighborhood near Ara, in Stephens county; they had been friends for some years; that a few weeks before the homicide ill feeling had grown up between them. They lived on adjoining farms and each had complained against the other on account of depredations stock had committed against their growing crops. Other matters also entered into the estrangement.

State's witness O. L. Turner was a farmer and stockman, who lived in the same community. He had rented a pasture from Swan. On the day of the homicide Hodge drove a number of cattle out of his field on to land of Swan and met Turner, who told him the cattle did not belong there. Swan came up and spoke to witness, and after a short conversation, turned to the deceased, Hodge, and said, "What the hell are you doing throwing those cattle over here on me?" Hodge replied that he thought they belonged to him. Swan made a sharp reply, which was not understood by the witness. Hodge answered by saying that Swan's cow had been depredating on him. Swan replied that he had yoked her, and deceased replied, "You did, but you were a long time about it." A few words more were passed between the two, and Swan said, "You God damned fellows have been punching me around a long time." Hodge replied, "What the hell have we been punching you about?" Swan said, "You accused me of horse stealing and a little of everything." Hodge replied, "You damn sure did steal a horse." Swan said, "I did not steal any horse." Hodge said that he did and he knew it. Swan said they had been trying to give him dirt a long time, but could not find anything to give him dirt about. Hodge said, "You have been gambling here a long time." Swan said, "Yes, by God, you have too," and Hodge said something about turning him in for it, and Swan said, "You would have to turn state's evidence if you did." Swan then complained that Hodge's hogs had been bothering him. Hodge said that his hogs had not been over there; that those were his neighbors' hogs. Swan said Hodge was a damned liar. They were about ten feet apart at the time. When Swan called Hodge a damned liar, Hodge did not say anything, but reached back as if to draw a gun. Witness saw the handle of the same plainly. It was a black handle. He put his hand on it. Swan leaned over and said, "What are you going to do?" and stepped back and shot. When the shot was fired Hodge's horse turned around, as did the horse of the witness. Both seemed to be on horseback. When witness looked around Hodge was falling off his horse. Swan was standing about where he was when he shot. Four or five shots were fired rapidly, so rapidly that the witness could not indicate how fast. He said he did not believe he could clap his hands as fast as the shots were fired. He rode up where Hodge had fallen and asked if he was hurt, but received no answer. About the time Hodge fell from his horse, Swan said, "Now try to make another gun play, God damn you." Witness told Swan he was going to get some one there, and he told him to get whom he pleased.

Witness Stewart testified that he lived in the neighborhood and that he went to the scene of the homicide and examined the body for wounds; that there were five wounds, one shot through the arm into the body and two through the body; that he found a pistol five steps east of where the body lay; that it was a 38-caliber Colt with a black handle lying on the ground with the right side up and cocked; that there was mud between the hammer and where the hammer goes in to shoot, and some mud on the handle; that it did not look like any one had bothered it; that it was lying just like it fell; that the ground was soft and it had been raining; that he saw no tracks around the scene of the killing and saw no imprints of shoes or boots.

Sam Sherrell testified for the state:

> That he was working about 190 steps from where the homicide occurred; that he saw deceased and Turner there on horseback; that he did not see Swan until after the shooting, and when the shooting took place, he ran up there and went up within 30 steps of them, turned around the corner of the fence, and went to the house; that he was afoot and running; that he saw the deceased fall from the horse. "Q. Describe to the jury how he fell? A. I will describe it just like I seen it. When the shooting was over I didn't know for a minute whether anybody was shot or not, because Hodge never fell off of his horse until the horse had taken a few steps down the fence. His horse turned and started off in a walk. He dropped his bridle reins that way. He went a little bit forward, his foot came out of the stirrup, his hand came back this way, and he went off backward. I saw the body when I got some closer to where it was. His head was right due east; he was on his side; his face turned north. I never went out there, never heard Turner say anything. When I first seen Swan he was standing there. Q. Did you hear him saw anything else? A. Yes, sir. Q. What was it? A. Well, sir, I seen Denny Swan, if he is the man that killed Will Hodge, the man that shot Will Hodge off of his horse, deliberately walk up to him, take his hand here, and folded his coat back, or held the scabbard in its place and taken something off of him, and turned to Turner and said, 'Why the hell don't you go on?' Turner jerked his horse and kicked him, and turned his horse southeast. Denny walked and throwed that pistol down there, and says, 'Damn you, take that.' Gentlemen, that is the truth. Meantime Turner turned right around up the fence up to the horse, up to the gate. Turner rode out on the west side of the body, Denny holloed to him, 'Is he dead?' Turner said, 'I think he is.' Denny says, 'That is all right if he is dead.' Mrs. Swan was at her mother's."

On cross-examination the witness testified that the defendant never had said anything to him about Hodge; that he had never threatened him in any way or said anything about the matter; that he did not see him to talk with him until after the examining trial; that he was in jail and he could not see him. He admitted that he told a different story at the examining trial and identified the statement that he gave the county attorney before the examining trial, which is as follows:

> "I saw some men talking about 300 yards away, but could hear nothing, heard shots, saw Hodge fall off horse, saw gun go back from his right hand. Flavious Hodge forbade me coming up there; worked for Swan's father. Denny telephoned have dinner ready for him and another man, about dinner that day."

The substance of this witness' testimony at the examining trial is as follows:

> "I was working in a clearing 290 steps away from where the killing occurred. I only saw two men on horses until the shooting was over. I heard the shooting. I saw Hodge fall off his horse. He fell back over his horse's hips. The horse turned this way, and he fell that way. I went to the house as quick as I could. I found Swan at the house. When I got there I found Denny telephoning. I said, 'Where are you going?' He said, 'I am going to Duncan.' Did not talk to Swan's folks that day, but did that night. I was terribly excited. I saw what I took to be a pistol fall to the ground. I did not go to the body; I went along the road close by a little while before it was taken up, and saw his face turned to the north, his head was pointed to the east, and saw out east of his head what I took to be a gun."

On redirect examination he said:

> "I was 200 steps away from the killing. I went up tolerably close to the body. As I went up to the house, Turner rode out there from the gate, and I asked him what it was. I got in about 40 steps of the body. Turner had rode out on the west side of it. Q. Are you going to swear that you saw a gun in that man's hand? A. Yes, sir."

A few other witnesses testified to matters of minor importance.

At the close of the state's testimony a demurrer to the evidence was interposed and a motion to advise the jury to render a verdict of not guilty was filed. Both were overruled and exceptions saved.

A number of witnesses testified in behalf of the defendant to facts tending to establish ill feeling between plaintiff in error and the deceased, the condition of the ground at the scene of the homicide, and the wounds on the body of the deceased. There was practically no conflict in this respect.

The plaintiff in error testified for himself: That he was 35 years old; that he had lived in the community 12 or 13 years on a farm there; that on the day of the homicide he saw Turner riding in the pasture about 100 yards away from his house, talking to some one; that when he got out in the yard he saw it was Hodge with him; that he went out to where they were and spoke to them; that after some conversation he asked Hodge if the cattle had been breaking in on him, and he said they had, and witness asked him what he was going to do with them, and he said he brought them up to throw them in, and witness asked him what he was going to throw them in there for and he said "that there was no son of a bitch's cattle going to eat up his crop, and I told him that my cattle had not bothered him, and he said I had a cow that had been breaking in on him, and I told him, 'Yes; but I had yoked her,' and he said, 'You did, but you have been a long time about it,' and there was something said about the cattle belonging in there, and I said, 'You fellows have been punching me around a long time,' and he said, 'What for?' and I said, 'You accused me of stealing a horse,' and he said, 'Yes; we did accuse you of it, and you stole it, and you know it,' and something was said about gambling and I told him he was threatening to have me arrested for gambling, and he said, 'Yes; you have been gambling a long time, but you are going to get the worst of it this time,' and I told him that if he turned me in he would have to turn state's evidence, that I had never gambled that he knew of unless he was with me at the time, and I told him that these cattle he claimed had been breaking in on him were Turner's and Humphrey's, that I had sold my stalk field to them, and I didn't want their cattle herd-lawed, and he said, 'I don't want to herd-law Turner's and Humphrey's cattle; your cattle are the cattle I am after,' and I said, 'If that is the case, it doesn't make any difference, because this cow I put the yoke on belongs to Turner, and I only had control of her,' and he said, 'If that is the fact, you lied to me.' Then I told him his hogs had been over there, they had been in the yard, and on the porch, and one of them had overturned a churn setting on the gallery, and broke it, and he said they were not his hogs and I called him a damned liar. Q. What did he do? A. He was sitting in this position, he was facing me, and he was on his horse, and as I called him a damned liar he reached his hand back this way, and at the same time he reached his hand back I leaned around like this, I had my hands up like this, and I leaned around that way and seen the gun he had hold of, and I stepped back this way, grabbed my gun, and shot him. Before I shot him I asked him what he was going to do. He made no reply. When I fired it throwed me in a position I would be with this gentleman here, maybe a little further, and as I shot my gun I did not realize the time it was taking, and when my gun was empty his horse had jumped to the fence and had whirled west, and as he run down the fence Hodge came back over his horse and fell over his right hip to the ground. Q. Why did you shoot Hodge? A. Because when he reached for his gun I felt that my life was in danger, and I did it to protect myself. Yes; I saw his gun, the handle of it when he laid his hand on it. I had seen him with a gun on divers occasions before that, and knew that he was in the habit of carrying one. George Rennie had told me of the threat Hodge had made about unloading his official gun in me before that. That was about Thanksgiving Day, the latter part of November. I could not say how long it took me to shoot my gun empty; a man might count two or three. Q. Do you know what Hodge was doing when you went to get your gun? A. He had his hand on it trying to pull it out. I thought he was going to kill me. I had my gun in my right pants pocket. I was in my shirt sleeves. Q. In that conversation down there before the shooting did Hodge curse you any? A. He called me a horse thief, and a liar, and intimated that I was a son of a bitch. When the shooting was over I turned and walked back to the house. In the meantime Turner rode around the corner of the fence and up to the gate, and I cut across and went up to where he and Hodge were. I had a conversation with Turner, I says, 'Shorty, what would you have done if it had been you?' and he said, 'I would not want anybody shooting at me.' I did not pick the pistol up nor make a statement that I did, nor that it was cocked. I saw the pistol. I noticed that the pistol was cocked. I did not go to Hodge's body nor disturb it in any way nor take anything out of his pockets. Q. What else did you tell Turner, if anything, when you got back to the house? A. I told him to go and notify Hodge's folks, and told him how to go."

Witness further said that he knew where the thicket was that Sam Sherrell was working at; that it was south of where the killing occurred, across a 10-acre block of land, 220 yards, and about 40 yards further south; that he never made the remark to Turner about going on that Sherrell testified to, or anything like it; that he had never done anything to Sherrell to intimidate him, never talked to him about his testimony in the case, did not see him after the shooting, until after he testified at the examining trial; that he was in jail from the time he gave up for 14 days.

On cross-examination witness testified in substance:

> "Hodge and I never had any trouble until about 30 days before the killing. That came up when he thought I had hired his hand away from him. He sent for me, and I went down to his house. He said he wanted to tell me that he had it in for me and was going to punch me. After that we had a talk about a horse collar, and he said, 'The less you come about here, the better it will be for you.' I said, 'All right,' and told him to stay off of my place."

There was also proof of violent threats having been made by the deceased against the plaintiff in error. The state offered in rebuttal evidence that the plaintiff in error had also made hostile statements against deceased.

[1] The first assignment of error we shall consider is based upon the contention that the court erred in giving instruction No. 15, which instruction is as follows:

> "You are further instructed, gentlemen of the jury, actual or positive danger is not indispensable to justify self-defense. The law considers that men threatened with danger are obliged to judge from appearances and determine therefrom the exact condition surrounding them, and if in such case, judging from the standpoint of the defendant, a person acts from an honest conviction induced by reasonable evidence, he will not be held criminally for a mistake as to the actual danger.
> "However, you are further instructed, gentlemen of the jury, that the right of self-defense is defensive, and not offensive, and no man may by this lawless act create a necessity for acting in self-defense, and thereupon assault and kill his adversary, and then invoke the right of self-defense.
> "And therefore, gentlemen of the jury, if from the evidence in this case you should believe that this defendant armed himself and sought the deceased for the purpose of provoking and engaging in a difficulty, and in furtherance of such plan did invite and provoke a difficulty, and then and there shot and killed his adversary, the defendant cannot invoke the rights of self-defense."

It is argued that there is no testimony tending either directly or from circumstances to show that the defendant armed himself for the occasion and sought the deceased for any purpose, much less to enter a quarrel with him and kill him, and that for this reason the instruction should not have been given; that the instruction is so worded as to be argumentative and unfair.

Without discussing these features, this instruction is fundamentally wrong, in that the latter paragraph, which is the gist of the same, makes no mention of the intent with which the difficulty must be provoked, and we find no place in the instructions where this defect is cured. The instruction says:

> "If you believe that this defendant armed himself and sought the deceased for the purpose of provoking and engaging in a difficulty, and in furtherance of such plan did invite and provoke a difficulty, and then and there shot and killed his adversary, the defendant cannot invoke the right of self-defense."

This is not the law. The difficulty must be prepared, sought, and provoked for the purpose and with the intent upon the part of the accused to take the life of the deceased.

In Turnbull v. State, 8 Okl. Cr. 459, 465, 128 Pac. 743, 746, we said:

> "When, in the trial of a person charged with murder, it becomes necessary for the trial court to instruct the jury on the doctrine of seeking or provoking the difficulty, and the proof discloses that the accused did any act or thing which he had a right to do, which could be reasonably construed by the jury to come within the general terms of the court's charge, it is necessary for the court to tell the jury what acts under the law would be justifiable, and discriminate as to acts unlawful and which would deprive him of the right of self-defense, leaving to the jury to determine whether or not, under the facts and the law, the acts [complained of] were lawful or otherwise."

In the same opinion we quoted from the Tennessee case of Foutch v. State, 95 Tenn. 711, 34 S. W. 423, 45 L. R. A. 687. We cannot improve upon the clear enunciation of the court in the Foutch Case, and therefore quote fully and adopt the following therefrom:

> "In order to make a man guilty of murder, who is the 'aggressor' or in 'fault,' or who 'provokes a difficulty' in which his adversary is killed, he must have provoked it with the intent to kill his adversary, or do him great bodily harm, or to afford him a pretext for wreaking his malice upon his adversary. * * * In order to deny to such party the right to rely on the plea of self-defense, it must appear that he was the 'aggressor' or 'in fault' or 'provoked the difficulty' in such way and with such intent as the law contemplates in the use of these terms. It is not every 'aggression' which produces a difficulty that is an unlawful one within the meaning of this phrase, nor is it every 'fault' which a man might commit that precludes him from defending himself when violently assaulted or menaced, nor is it every 'provocation of a difficulty' which robs him of the right of self-defense. Cases already cited and hereinafter cited illustrate the true meaning and show the sense in which these words must be understood. They are really intended to imply the same thing, and what they do mean may be best indicated by suggestion of some things they do not mean, taking them up separately. First, as to the 'aggressor': It is not intended that every one shall be held in law to be an 'aggressor' who says something provoking to another which does cause a difficulty, for oftentimes such an 'aggression' is a just one, and sometimes a necessary one; but, even when it is neither just nor necessary, the use of opprobrious language to another is not for this reason alone an 'aggression,' in the sense of the law, for no mere words, however opprobrious, will justify an assault, or the overt menace of an assault; and hence, if one only uses such words, and is assaulted or so menaced, he may defend himself; and the same thing is true of one in 'fault.' He might be in such and other supposable 'fault,' and yet not be deprived of a like right of self-defense; as, though one has threatened or abused him, he cannot go to him and assault him for it. So, when he uses to another opprobrious words, that other cannot assault him or menace him by overt act of violence, and deny him the right of defense. As to 'provoking a difficulty': It is not every provocation, just or unjust, which he may offer that will justify an assault upon him, or the menace of one from which he cannot defend himself; and to this also the limitations as to mere words used apply. After all the 'aggression,' the 'fault,' or the 'provocation' depends upon its character and its intent. If it is an assault, or the menace of one by an overt act, or the provocation of a difficulty with intent to inflict death or great bodily harm in the event it is resisted, made of malice to bring about that result and enable the provoking party to wreak his vengeance upon the assailant, that is an 'aggression' or 'fault' and a 'provoking of a difficulty' within the legal sense and meaning of the terms. If the 'combat is provoked,' or 'the occasion to kill is produced,' in the language of the charge, on this account, with this intent, and for this purpose, defendant cannot rely upon the plea of self-defense; otherwise he can. * * *"

See Aldrige v. State, 59 Miss. 250; Cartwright v. State, 14 Tex. App. 486; State v. Perigo, 70 Iowa, 657, 28 N. W. 452; Cotton v. State, 31 Miss. 504; Hash v. Com., 88 Va. 172, 13 S. E. 398.

The proof in this case discloses the fact that this homicide occurred upon the premises of the plaintiff in error; that the deceased was a trespasser in his pasture and driving stock into the same unlawfully; that the plaintiff in error had a right to be where he was; and that under the particular circumstances had a right to remonstrate with the deceased for turning the herd of cattle into his premises. It was vital to his defense that the jury be instructed properly on this proposition. To use the broad language of the court and leave out all question of the intent would practically be saying to the jury that if the plaintiff in error, by word or act, started the harsh conversation shown, he had lost his right of self-defense. There can be no question but that the plaintiff in error had a right to complain of Hodge for turning the cattle in on him and for being on the premises himself. This controversy began with just such complaint having been made, and the rapid exchange of bitter remarks which followed merged into the homicide. It therefore was necessary for the court to put the burden of this instruction upon the intent of the accused at the time and to protect him with a proper instruction explaining to the jury how far he might lawfully go under the circumstances before losing the right of self-defense.

[2] The next assignment complained of is based upon the action of the court in submitting manslaughter in the second degree over the objection and exception of the defendant.

A careful reading of the evidence discloses the fact that there is not a single element of manslaughter in the second degree in this case. The court had no right to submit that issue, and it was error so to do. It is the duty of the courts in trying homicide cases to distinguish under the evidence the degrees of homicide disclosed, and submit only such as the testimony tends reasonably to establish. The instruction of the court should be such that the jury in its wisdom could arrive at the proper determination of the legal issues. When there is no element of manslaughter disclosed by the proof, the court should not give an instruction defining or submitting such issue. The giving of this instruction in this case would be sufficient warrant for the reversal of this judgment. Weatherholt v. State, 9 Okl. Cr. 161, 131 Pac. 185; Ballard v. State, 12 Okl. Cr. —, 154 Pac. 1197. If there is evidence, even though slight, tending to establish manslaughter in the second degree, a reversal would not necessarily follow.

The only remaining assignment which we deem it necessary to refer to is based upon the improper conduct and argument of the special prosecutor. There are nine separate assignments in this connection. We do not feel called upon to enter into an extensive discussion of these assignments. Suffice it to say that, in our judgment, the fair and impartial trial, contemplated by law, could not reasonably be expected to result when conduct such as is complained of and disclosed by the record is indulged in.

It is the duty of the trial courts to confine counsel to proper and legitimate channels, and to so conduct the trial that animosity on the part of the officers of the court should have no weight in determining the great issues involved in a capital case.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to grant a new trial.

SHOEMAKE v. STATE. (No. A-2360.)

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. Oct. 30, 1915. Rehearing Denied Sept. 25, 1917.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Muskogee County; H. C. Thurman, Judge.

Boney Shoemake was convicted of violating the prohibition law, and appeals. Affirmed.

S. M. Rutherford, of Muskogee, for plaintiff in error. Chas. West, Atty. Gen., and C. J. Davenport, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

PER CURIAM. Plaintiff in error was convicted on an information charging the unlawful conveyance of 24 quarts of whisky from a point unknown in Muskogee county to a point about 30 feet northeast of the Midland Valley depot in the town of Porum. September 23, 1914, the court rendered judgment and sentenced him to be confined in the county jail for 30 days and to pay a fine of $50 and the costs. The evidence for the state tends to show that plaintiff in error left a train arriving at Porum from Ft. Smith with two grips containing whisky, and, when arrested, said "he had gotten the liquor for sick folks." As a witness in his own behalf, the defendant testified that when he got off the train he did not have any grips; that after walking eight or ten steps Deputy Sheriff McClelland "hollered" at him and said, "I will take those grips and you, too, to Muskogee," and witness answered, "What grips?" that he looked and saw two grips on the ground eight or ten steps from him.

Upon a careful examination of the record in this case, we are satisfied that none of the alleged errors are well taken. It was for the jury to determine to what extent they would give credit to the defendant's testimony.

Finding no error prejudicial to the defendant, the judgment will be affirmed.

SHEEHAN et al. v. KASPER. (No. 2256.)

(Supreme Court of Nevada. Sept. 5, 1917.)

1. Waters and Water Courses 🔑177(1)—Canal—Restraining of Destruction.

To entitle plaintiffs to judgment restraining defendant from destroying a canal, ditch, and power line, the canal must have had a valid existence, must have been owned by plaintiffs, who must have acquired a license to construct, maintain, and operate the branch ditch and power line irrevocable at defendant's will, and defendant must have been threatening to fill in and destroy the ditch and power line.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 260-262.]

2. Waters and Water Courses 🔑26—Conveyance of Right of Way.

The federal government, having passed title to plaintiff to a right of way for a canal by statute, could convey no title thereto when it conveyed title to a mill site; and the patentee of the land embraced in the mill site took title subject to the right of way for the canal, and the purchaser of the mill site acquired no greater right.

3. Corporations 🔑426(1)—Ratification of Acts of Agent.

The unauthorized act of the managing director of a company in granting a license became effectual when ratified by the company.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1596, 1702.]

4. Waters and Water Courses 🔑177(1)—Licenses—Presumption of Existence.

In suit to restrain defendant from destroying a canal, ditch, and power line, where the superintendent of the exploration company from which plaintiffs claimed a license to construct the ditch and power line knew of the construction from the beginning of operations, and no protest was made, the court will presume that plaintiffs had a license from the exploration company.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 260-262.]

5. Licenses 🔑58(1)—Parol License Without Consideration—Irrevocable Character.

An executed parol license, though without consideration, is irrevocable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Cent. Dig. §§ 116, 119, 121.]

6. Waters and Water Courses 🔑155—Mill Site—Bona Fide Purchaser—Notice.

Where a firm was in open and notorious possession and enjoyment of a ditch and power line for three or four years before defendant, who had lived in the vicinity of the property off and on for ten years, and continuously for one year, bought a mill site through which the right of way for the ditch passed, the firm's possession was sufficient to put defendant on notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 161-166.]

Appeal from District Court, Humboldt County; E. A. Ducker, Judge.

Action by J. Sheehan and John G. Taylor, copartners doing business under the name and style of Taylor & Sheehan, against S. B. Kasper. From judgment for plaintiffs, and an order denying his motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Salter, Robins & Frame, for appellant. Callahan & Brandon, of Winnemucca, for respondents.

COLEMAN, J. Plaintiffs brought suit to restrain the defendant from destroying a certain canal, ditch, and power line. From a judgment and decree as prayed, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, an appeal is taken.

Plaintiffs contend that they were, at the time the suit was instituted, and for about 50 years prior thereto they and their grantors and predecessors in interest had been, the owners of and in possession of a large tract of land known as the Taylor & Sheehan Ranch, and a certain canal, commonly known as and called "the Humboldt Canal," together with a strip of land 100 feet in width, extending 50 feet on each side of the center line of said canal, all situated in Humboldt county, Nev., during which time they had paid all taxes assessed thereon; that the Glasgow & Western Exploration Company was, in the year 1910, the owner of a tract of land consisting of about 179 acres, which it acquired as a mill site, and through which "the Humboldt Canal" flowed, and that plaintiffs acquired from said exploration company an irrevocable license to construct, maintain, and operate a certain branch ditch and power line over, upon, and across said mill site, which they constructed at a cost of about $45,000; that said Humboldt Canal, ditch, and power line were being used to divert certain waters of the Humboldt river that had been appropriated by plaintiffs with which to irrigate the growing crops on the land so owned by them, of the alleged value of $30,000; that thereafter, and in 1915, and while plaintiffs were in the possession of all the property mentioned, the defendant purchased said mill site and took a quitclaim deed thereto; that defendant threatened to fill in and destroy said canal and ditch and tear down and destroy said power line, and if not restrained would fill in and destroy the same, to the damage of plaintiffs; that defendant is insolvent and unable to respond to plaintiffs in damages. They also contend that they had the right to use "the Humboldt Canal" through which to divert the waters of the Humboldt river for irrigation purposes.

Defendant contests every contention of the plaintiffs, except the existence of their partnership, their ownership of the Taylor & Sheehan ranch, and their right to a portion of the waters of the Humboldt river for the irrigation of their lands.

[1] To enable the trial court to render judgment in favor of plaintiffs as prayed, it was necessary that it find, in addition to the admitted allegations of the complaint, that "the Humboldt Canal" had a valid existence, and that it was owned by the plaintiffs; that the plaintiffs acquired a license to construct, maintain, and operate the branch ditch and power line; that the same was not revocable at the will of defendant; and that the defendant was threatening to fill in and destroy said ditch and power line.

The learned judge before whom the case was tried in the district court filed a written opinion in the case, in which he says that evidence was received to the effect that the Humboldt Canal was started somewhere about the year 1862; that a right of way, as claimed by plaintiffs, was granted by the government to the Humboldt Canal Company for irrigation, and possibly other purposes, and makes his finding accordingly. As we read the record, the witness who testified concerning the grant intended to convey the idea that there was a special act of Congress granting the canal company a right of way, but no such act was offered in evidence or called to the attention of this or the trial court.

The evidence clearly sustains the findings and conclusions of the court; in fact, we do not think this finding is seriously questioned. However, the probability is that there never was a special act of Congress granting to any one the canal in question. It is more likely that the right of way over the public domain for the canal was confirmed in the owners thereof under the act of Congress approved July 26, 1866, which provides that:

> "Whenever, by priority of possession, rights to the use of water for mining, agriculture, manufacturing, or other purposes, have vested and accrued, and the same are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws, and the decision of courts, the possessors and owners of such vested rights shall be maintained and protected in the same." U. S. Rev. Stats. 2339; U. S. Comp. Stats. 1916, § 4647.

[2] But no matter whether the right of way for the canal became vested under a specific grant or was confirmed under that portion of the act of Congress quoted, we are clearly of the opinion that the contention of appellant that he acquired title to that portion of the canal which lies within the "mill site" under his deed from the exploration company is unfounded. The government, having clearly passed title to the right of way for the canal, could convey no title thereto when it conveyed title to the mill site. The patentee to the land embraced in the mill site took title subject to the right of way for the canal, and the defendant could and did acquire no better or greater right. Broder v. Water Co., 101 U. S. 274, 25 L. Ed. 790; Coffin v. Left Hand Ditch Co., 6 Colo. 443; Carson v. Gentner, 33 Or. 512, 52 Pac. 506, 43 L. R. A. 130; Osgood v. El Dorado Water Co., 56 Cal. 571-581.

We come now to the question of the license from the exploration company for the right of way for the branch ditch and power line. Mr. Taylor, one of the plaintiffs, testified concerning a conversation which he had with the managing director of the company, who was in actual charge of all of the company's affairs in 1910, when his firm was Taylor & Edson, at which time that official granted permission to his firm for the construction of certain works across the mill site, to be used in conducting the water for irrigation purposes. No particular line was contemplated or designated in the conversation between Taylor and the manager of the company for the construction of the works; the only restriction which was imposed being that the then existing plant and railroad should in no way be impaired or interfered with. Thereafter Sheehan purchased the interest of Edson in the then partnership of Taylor & Edson, and the firm became Taylor & Sheehan, the plaintiffs. After Sheehan entered the firm, the plan of irrigating the land which is now in existence was adopted.

[3] It is contended by appellant that there never was a license granted to either the firm of Taylor & Edson or Taylor & Sheehan, and that if such a license was granted to Taylor & Edson it was forfeited by Edson's sale to Sheehan; and that if, in any event, a license was granted, it was revocable, and that he had exercised the right of revocation. Appellant urges that the managing director of the exploration company had no power to grant a license. We do not deem it necessary that this question be determined, for the reason that, conceding that his action in that connection was in excess of his authority, we are of the view that the company ratified his action.

[4] As to the point that the sale by Edson of his interest in the partnership to Sheehan operated to cancel the license, we need only to say that under the facts and circumstances of this case the court will presume that that firm had a license from the exploration company. The record shows that the superintendent of the exploration company knew of the construction by Taylor & Sheehan, at a cost of about $45,000, of their branch ditch and power line and system, from the very beginning of the operations, and that the managing director was upon the premises several times and was told of and saw what was being done, and no protest was made. Subsequent to the construction by the respondent of the works, succeeding representatives of the company went upon the premises, knew of and saw the branch ditch and power line, and no protest was made. Finally, in 1913, one Joseph Ralph appeared upon the scene with a power of attorney, so comprehensive in its terms as to authorize him to do anything that could be done by the company. One of the provisions of that instrument reads as follows:

> "To complete or carry out or vary any contracts or engagements which the company has already approved of or agreed to or entered into, either verbally or in writing, without any person or body for the time being concerned being in any way obliged or permitted to require any evidence whatever that the company has either approved of or agreed to or entered into any such contract or engagement; and also to put an end to any contract into which the company may have entered, and if thought proper to enter into a new contract in lieu thereof."

While acting under this power or attorney, Mr. Ralph was upon the property at least six times, in company with the superintendent of the exploration company, and saw and talked with the superintendent of the company about the branch ditch and other works of the respondents. He made no objection to what had been done by the respondents, notwithstanding the fact that they were in possession of and operating the plant. The uncontradicted evidence is that the managing director of the exploration company, at some time after respondents had completed their branch ditch and power line, said their constructing of the same was "all right." The authorities hold that a license may result from approval of acts of the licensee after they are done, as well as from an express permission granted before they are done. Metcalf v. Hart, 3 Wyo. 513, 27 Pac. 900, 905, 31 Pac. 407, 31 Am. St. Rep. 122; Cumberland Valley Railroad Co. v. McLanahan, 59 Pa. 23-31; Walter v. Post, 13 N. Y. Super. Ct. 371. See, also, Occum Co. v. Sprague, 35 Conn. 496; Hickox v. Parmelee, 21 Conn. 90; Hansen v. Farmers' Co-op. Cr., 106 Iowa, 167, 76 N. W. 652.

[5] But appellant contends that, conceding that a parol license was granted to plaintiffs, there was no consideration therefor, and hence it is revocable at his pleasure. In considering this contention, there must be kept in mind the difference between an executed and an executory license. As to the latter class, so far as we know, the authorities are practically unanimous in holding that they may be revoked, but as to an executed parol license the authorities are divided. See 25 Cyc. pp. 646, 647; 17 R. C. L. p. 578; note to Rerick v. Kern, 16 Am. Dec. 497. Persuasive arguments can be urged to sustain both views, but the question was settled in this state in the case of Lee v. McLeod, 12 Nev. 284, contrary to appellant's contention, and no reason has been advanced which inclines us to overrule that case.

It is contended by appellant that he knew nothing of respondents' claim of a license at the time he purchased the mill site, and that consequently he ought to be treated as an innocent purchaser without notice. Appellant had lived in the vicinity of the property off and on for ten years, and continuously for one year. Respondents were in open and notorious possession and enjoyment of the ditch and power line at and for three or four years prior to the time appellant bought the mill site. This court, in Patchen v. Keeley, 19 Nev. on page 413, 14 Pac. 352, quoting from Judge Story's opinion in Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat. 105, 3 L. Ed. 398, says:

> "The law will never construe a possession tortious unless from necessity. On the other hand, it will consider every possession lawful, the commencement and continuance of which is not proved to be wrongful."

See, also, Bank of Italy v. Burns, 39 Nev. 326, 156 Pac. 932, 159 Pac. 863.

[6] The possession of plaintiffs was sufficient to put the defendant on notice.

Perceiving no error in the judgment, it is ordered that it be affirmed.

BREWER v. STATE. (No. A-2582.)

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. June 11, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⟹586, 590(2), 1151 — APPEAL—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—APPLICATION FOR CONTINUANCE.

An application for continuance is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and when such application is based upon the proposition that counsel have had insufficient time to prepare for trial, this court will review the record and consider all of the circumstances in connection with the employment of attorneys from the time the arrest was made; and when it is made to appear that capable lawyers have been employed, and have withdrawn from the case because fees were not paid, and that other capable counsel was employed, and a part of the fee paid some time prior to the calling of the case for trial, and the remainder on the date the same was called for trial, but that no effort had been made to prepare the case for presentation to the jury, a reversal will not be granted on the ground that the court abused its discretion in refusing a continuance for the term, which would amount to a delay of six months.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⟹1183, 1186(1)—CONVICTION WITHOUT FIXING PUNISHMENT — APPEAL — REVERSAL — MODIFICATION AND AFFIRMANCE.

(a) When a person is tried on a charge of murder, and convicted of manslaughter in the first degree, and the jury fails to fix the punishment, this court will review all of the record, with a view of determining the correctness of the findings of the jury, and, if the verdict is a correct and proper one, a reversal will not be granted on the ground that the punishment is excessive.

(b) When a review of all the record indicates that substantial justice would be conserved by modifying the punishment fixed by the trial court to a lesser term of years than that imposed, this court will make such modification, and affirm the judgment as modified. The entire record, the instructions of the court, and all of the circumstances disclosed, will be considered for the purpose of enabling this court to reach a just conclusion on this phase of the case.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⟹826, 843—TRIAL—TIME TO PREPARE INSTRUCTIONS.

Trial courts should give reasonable opportunity for counsel to prepare requests for instructions, and to examine and file exceptions to the instructions given, when in good faith counsel seek such opportunity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2008, 2024.]

Appeal from District Court, Wagoner County; George C. Crump, Special Judge.

William Brewer was convicted of manslaughter in the first degree, and appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Joseph S. Dickey, Jr., of Wagoner, for plaintiff in error. R. McMillan, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

ARMSTRONG, J. William Brewer, plaintiff in error, was tried in the district court of Wagoner county on a charge of murder, and convicted of manslaughter in the first degree. His punishment was fixed by the court at 25 years' imprisonment in the state penitentiary.

The homicide occurred at a hotel conducted by C. Silverhorn at Rex, in Wagoner county, on the night of December 24, 1914. It appears that the people in the community had gathered at the hotel for the purpose of having a Christmas tree celebration; that a dance was in progress in the dance hall; that 14 year old Red Pell had been annoying the deceased, whose name was Cartright; that he had been stepping on his feet and spitting on him. Cartright slapped the boy, who went into another room crying, and, upon inquiry, he said that he had been slapped by deceased. The plaintiff in error, Brewer, used vile language, and told the boy to tell Cartright to jump on somebody his size. Janie Pell urged the boy to carry the message to Cartright, which he did. Very soon the Pell boy came back from the dance room, and almost immediately Cartright came in, walked by those congregated, turned around, and asked who it was that wanted to clean up on him. All the witnesses for the state testified that Brewer said he could whip him, and struck Cartright simultaneously with the statement.

The plaintiff in error, testifying in his own behalf, denied striking the first blow. He says that Cartright came in and asked, "Where is the fellow that wanted to clean up on me?" and struck him; that he didn't know who Cartright was talking to at the time. In the scuffle that followed, the parties clinched and fell to the floor. Some effort was made to separate them. Cartright was apparently on top of the plaintiff in error, pounding him. Carl Silverhorn, a son of the proprietor of the hotel, pulled the deceased off of the plaintiff in error, whose face was bleeding when he got up. Mrs. Silverhorn, wife of the proprietor, came into the room and was talking to Cartright, and advised him to go back to the kitchen and wash the blood off his face. A shot was fired, and she started to leave. Two more shots were fired. Cartright followed her into the kitchen, and exclaimed that he was shot or killed, and asked that a doctor be called, which was done. He was sent to a hospital at Muskogee, where he died.

The state's witnesses all testified that Cartright was standing not over 10 feet away, talking to Mrs. Silverhorn, at the time he was shot; that the father of the deceased and other persons were endeavoring to control and hold him. The plaintiff in error himself testified that, when he got up, he drew his gun and saw Cartright coming towards him, as if to assault him the second time, and that he shot then. He says that he knew Cartright was in the habit of carrying a pistol, but did not say that he knew he was armed upon this occasion, or that he made any demonstration as if to use firearms or any other weapon.

The testimony of the plaintiff in error does not disclose a sufficient defense to a charge of murder. Taking his statement as true, this homicide amounted to manslaughter in the first degree. The jury convicted him of that offense, but failed to fix the punishment. A review of the assignments of error and an examination of the record, therefore, will be for the purpose of determining whether or not the conviction of manslaughter should stand.

[1] It is first contended that the court erred in refusing a continuance in this case. The affidavits of the plaintiff in error and his counsel were filed in support of the request for continuance. These affidavits disclose the fact that C. G. Watts, now a district judge, and S. M. Rutherford, of Muskogee, were employed by the plaintiff in error, and after some time they withdrew from the case because their fee was not paid. A short time prior to the trial Joseph S. Dickey, Jr., was employed. One hundred dollars was paid him on the fee, but the remainder was not paid until the day the case was called for trial. Mr. Dickey had made no effort to prepare for trial, because his fee had not been fully paid. Upon completion of the financial arrangements on the date assigned for trial, a motion for continuance was immediately lodged in the trial court and by the court denied. The cause was assigned for 1:30 in the afternoon, and the trial was begun and concluded. The record shows that all the witnesses desired by both sides were in attendance upon the court, and no contention is made that additional evidence in the defense of the accused could have been made available. The continuance asked for was for the term, which meant a delay of some six months. The motion for continuance is not based upon any statutory ground, but rather addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court. We are not prepared to say, after a careful review of the record, that the court abused his discretion in refusing to grant a continuance until the next term of court. The entire record is to be considered in this connection.

The cases cited and relied upon by counsel indicate that an injustice probably resulted by reason of the court failing to continue those cases. Not so in the case at bar. The verdict of the jury was just. The punishment inflicted by the court may be too severe, but this court can remedy that. No capable jury of honest men could be assembled who would have found a verdict of less than manslaughter in this case under the proof offered. If a delay had been sought for three or four days, in order to enable counsel to prepare to introduce his testimony, we would feel very much inclined to reverse this judgment. No such request was made of the trial court, and we are therefore not called upon to pass upon a record disclosing that condition.

[2] The remaining assignments of error are based upon criticisms of the instructions of the court. The court's instructions are subject to criticism. If this conviction had been murder, it would be necessary to reverse the judgment, on the ground that the instructions do not fairly submit the law of murder. As abstract propositions of law, the instructions in many respects are correct; but, as applied to the facts in this case, there are a number of criticisms which would not permit a judgment for murder to stand. Rules of law must necessarily be applied to the facts in the case they are intended to cover. No good purpose could be served by setting out the instructions at length and discussing them here.

[3] It is next contended that the court erred in refusing to give counsel an opportunity to prepare written requests for instructions at the close of the testimony. The record discloses the fact that the trial court, on the day before the case closed, advised counsel to have their instructions prepared; that, when the evidence was in and the case closed, defendant asked 10 minutes for this work. We think reasonable time should have been granted, but do not find that this is error sufficient to warrant a reversal of the judgment.

Having reviewed all the evidence offered in this case, the instructions of the court, and the proceedings attendant upon the trial, we believe that this judgment should be modified from 25 years to 15 years, and, as modified, affirmed.

It is so ordered.

HISAW v. STATE. (No. A-2461.)

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑639(2)—SPECIAL COUNTY ATTORNEY—POWER OF DISTRICT COURT.

The district court has authority to appoint a special county attorney to act in the place and stead of the regular elected county attorney where the latter is disqualified in any particular case. Aside from any statute, this power is inherent in a court of general jurisdiction.

2. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑639(2)—APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COUNTY ATTORNEY—RATIFICATION.

Where the regular county attorney is disqualified and a special county attorney is appointed by the regular district judge at his chambers in vacation, and said appointee thereafter qualifies according to law, and his appointment recorded in the court's criminal journal as a part of the proceedings in the particular case for which the appointment was made, and upon the trial the same judge over objection of the defendant recognizes the appointment made in vacation, and permits said special county attorney to proceed as the representative of the state in such case, there is a ratification by the court of the said appointment, which is tantamount to an appointment by the court in the first instance, where no other objection is urged except that the district judge was unauthorized to appoint in vacation.

3. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION 🔑137(1)—SETTING ASIDE INDICTMENT—GROUNDS—EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES.

The grounds upon which a criminal action may be dismissed or an indictment set aside are clearly enumerated in the Code. The fact that the county attorney or his substitute, after the finding of the indictment and prior to the trial, examines certain witnesses under oath in the absence of the accused and with the approval of the county judge is no ground for dismissing an action or setting aside an indictment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 480.]

4. Criminal Law 🔑629—Indictment and Information 🔑34(4) — Indorsement of Names of Witnesses—Service of List of Witnesses.

Subdivision 2 of section 1, c. 68, Session Laws 1913, permits the county attorney, on approval of the district or county judge where a felony case is pending against any person triable in that county, to call witnesses before him and have them sworn and their testimony reduced to writing at the cost of the county. The names of witnesses thus obtained should be properly indorsed upon the indictment and information, and in capital cases a list of those who are to be used in chief, together with their respective post office addresses, must be served upon the defendant at least two days before the case is called for trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1420–1429, 1432–1436; Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 141.]

5. Jury 🔑82(2)—Summons Upon Second Venire—Challenge to Panel.

The fact that, after a challenge to a panel had been sustained on account of the bias and prejudice of the sheriff whose deputies summoned the jurors, some of the persons composing it were summoned on a second venire by an unbiased and unprejudiced officer, is no ground for challenge to the second panel.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 307–309, 359, 367.]

6. Jury 🔑82(2)—Second Panel—Fair and Impartial Jury.

Where it is not made to appear that the defendant challenged any of such jurors individually for cause, or that he was required to exercise a peremptory challenge to any of them by reason of which his peremptory challenges were exhausted, this court cannot hold that a fair and impartial jury was not afforded in the trial, or that defendant's substantial rights were invaded by reason of the trial court permitting the names of such jurors to be placed in the trial box over his objection.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 307–309, 359, 367.]

7. Criminal Law 🔑814(15)—Instruction—Accomplice Testimony.

Where the facts are not disputed, and there is no evidence to show that any witness for the state is an accomplice, there is no error in refusing to give an instruction upon the necessity of corroborating an accomplice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1860, 1979.]

8. Criminal Law 🔑763, 764(1) — Instruction—Province of Jury.

Defendant requested the following instruction: "You are instructed that if during the course of this trial any evidence has been offered which is capable of two constructions, one favorable to the defendant and one unfavorable, that it will be your duty to give to such evidence the construction most favorable to the defendant." Held properly refused as invading the province of the jury in that it tended to deprive the jury of the right to determine the weight of the evidence and the inferences properly to be drawn therefrom.

9. Criminal Law 🔑1130(3)—Appeal—Brief—Evidence.

Where it is contended that incompetent evidence has been admitted over the objection and exception of the defendant, the brief must not only contain a statement of the evidence complained of, but counsel must also support their assignment of error with some argument and authority to convince this court that the defendant has been prejudiced by the trial court's rulings.

10. Remarks of Trial Judge—Reversal.

Record examined, and held, remarks of trial judge were not such as to authorize a reversal of this judgment.

Appeal from District Court, Haskell County; W. H. Brown, Judge.

Bob Hisaw was convicted of murder and sentenced to imprisonment for life, and appeals. Affirmed.

On the 13th of February, 1912, Virgil (commonly called Rex) Ray and his wife, Lizzie Ray, who had been married about a month previous to that date, separated. They had been living in a little one-room log house in the Hisaw neighborhood of Haskell county. Rex Ray was a tenant farmer, and prior to his marriage and up to the time of his separation had off and on worked for the defendant Bob Hisaw; the defendant being a farmer and stock raiser of that neighborhood. On the afternoon of February 13, 1912, Rex Ray and his wife and her father, Dick Odom, hauled what little household goods the Rays had up to old man Dick Odom's place. It was there that Rex Ray and his wife finally parted—Rex leaving there with a man by the name of Dink Dukes, another farm hand who had been working in that neighborhood, and when they left they said they were going across the river; this community being in the neighborhood of both the Canadian and Arkansas rivers near the junction of them. The general public never saw Rex Ray alive after dark of February 13, 1912. He was missed from that community. Along in April or May of that year it became rumored that Rex Ray had been killed and his body buried. On the 28th day of June, 1912, Dink Dukes appeared in Stigler, the county seat of Haskell county, and informed the officers that Rex Ray had been killed on the night of February 13, 1912, and his body buried near the Arkansas river in what was known as the Hisaw bottoms, and that Bob Hisaw had shot and killed Rex Ray while he was asleep in bed at the home of one Rile Odom, a brother of Ray's wife, and that Bill Hisaw came with Bob Hisaw when the killing occurred. Dink Dukes also stated that he could go with the officers and find the place where Rex Ray's body had been buried. A complaint charging Bob Hisaw and Bill Hisaw with the murder of Rex Ray was immediately filed by the county attorney of Haskell county, and warrants issued for their arrest. The officers carried these warrants with them when they went down with Dink Dukes to disinter Ray's body. On their way they stopped at the home of Bob Hisaw, but could not find either him or Bill. There had been a picnic in Stigler on that day, which Bill Hisaw was attending. As soon as he heard that Dink

Dukes had disclosed that Rex Ray had been murdered, and that the officers had gone to the scene to search for the body, he got a horse and immediately rode to Bob Hisaw's house, where he had been staying. The officers disinterred Ray's body, and found it wrapped in a blanket and quilt, dressed in a dark coat, an old blue shirt, either one or two pairs of trousers, and one pair of overalls. The flesh was partially decomposed, but a bullet hole was discovered in the head near the nose. These parties did not make a thorough investigation of the body because of its badly decomposed condition. The officers returned to Stigler, and thereupon Rile Odom and his wife, Mary Odom, were arrested in connection with Dink Dukes as being implicated in the murder. About a week or ten days later Bill Hisaw came to Stigler and gave himself up. A month or two thereafter he was tried for the murder and acquitted. Bob Hisaw was not arrested until about October, 1914, when he was captured in McCurtain county, Okl., on a farm about ten miles from the town of Valiant. He was at that time going under the name of R. A. Johnson. The trial of Bob Hisaw took place in December, 1914. Bill Hisaw, Rile Odom, Mary Odom, his wife, Emma Hisaw neé Odom, Lizzie Ray, neé Odom, the widow of Rex Ray, the old lady Odom, the mother, were all witnesses for the prosecution, and testified to a state of facts substantially as follows:

That Rex Ray separated from Lizzie Ray on the 13th of February, 1912, at old man Dick Odom's house, and left traveling a foot with one Dink Dukes. That he was dressed at that time in a dark coat, an old blue shirt, and a pair of overalls over a couple of pairs of trousers, wearing ordinary work shoes. Rile Odom says that he was at his father's house that day and learned of the separation of Rex Ray from his (Odom's) sister, and that along in the afternoon he started home riding horseback. That on his way home he overtook Rex Ray and Dink Dukes, and that they told him they were leaving the country, and were going across the river if they could find some place to ford that night. Odom says that he told them if they couldn't get across the river that night to come and stay all night at his house and wait until next morning and go across. He separated from them near the Hisaw store and post office, their intention being to ford the river, and his to return home. He says that about an hour, or near that time, after he returned home, that Rex Ray and Dink Dukes appeared at his house, stating that they could not find a way to ford the river that night. Odom lived in a small two-room log house not far from the west bank of the Arkansas river. They all went to bed in one room; Rex Ray and Dink Dukes and Rile Odom sleeping in one bed, Rile's wife, Mary, and her two children sleeping on another bed, and Emma Odom sleeping on a pallet close to these beds. They state: That about 12 o'clock that night somebody came to the front of their house and halloed "Hello!" That Rile Odom lighted a lamp and opened the door. That Bob Hisaw and Bill Hisaw came into the room. That as soon as he came in Bob stated, "There is going to be hell here in a few minutes." Rile says that he told Bob that he didn't want any hell there that night. That Bob immediately walked over to the bed in which Dink Dukes and Rex Ray were lying, turned the covers back, and with the remark to Rex Ray, "Wake up, old boy!" commenced to shoot him in the breast with loads from a pistol. That Bob Hisaw shot Rex Ray five times in the breast, and then stepped back from the bed toward the fireplace, remarking in substance to the effect, "Now, I guess you will burn my barn, and poison my horses, and sneak up behind me and cut my throat, and take me away from my little children," to which Rex Ray is alleged to have replied, "No, no, Bob," whereupon Bob said, "Well, I guess you need another," and reloaded his pistol, stepped back to the bed, and fired another load into Ray's head. The witnesses then say that Bob turned around to each of them with his drawn pistol, stating that if they said anything about it they would go the same way. He then directed Dink Dukes and Bill Hisaw and Rile Odom to help him put Ray's clothes on, which was done, and the body wrapped in a blanket and quilt, carried out and placed on a horse which Bob Hisaw led and Dink Dukes rode, holding the body in front of him across the horse, and Bill Hisaw walked beside the horse out to a field about 200 or 300 yards from Rile Odom's house, where the body was thrown into a gap and covered up with brush. Just when and by whom the body was buried does not appear from the record. Rile Odom did not accompany the parties away from the house. Some time after these parties left with the body of Rex Ray they again appeared at Rile Odom's house and washed their hands, stood around and talked, and finally Bill Hisaw and Bob Hisaw and Dink Dukes left. The next morning Rile Odom and his wife and children and Emma Odom all went up to old man Dick Odom's house. They stayed around there two or three days, and afterwards moved to a little house on Bob Hisaw's place, about a quarter of a mile from where he lived, and were still living there at the time of their arrest on the 28th day of June, 1912. Dink Dukes stayed around in that neighborhood for a while, and then disappeared. Bill Hisaw stayed on the farm there with Bob up until the day that Ray's remains were disinterred. Bob Hisaw also stayed there until that time. Old man Odom and his wife and Lizzie Ray testify that on the night of the 13th of February, 1912, Bob Hisaw and Bill Hisaw came to their house. That Bob asked if Rex Ray was there, and was told that he had left that evening. Bob was drinking, and had some whisky with him, and offered them a drink of whisky, and then left. This was about an hour before he is said to have appeared at Rile Odom's house. Dick Odom and Rile Odom lived about four miles apart. There is some evidence in the record to the effect that Bob Hisaw and Rex Ray had had some trouble over a hog which Bob had either lost or it had been stolen, and there is evidence to the effect that Rex Ray had made threats against Bob Hisaw just a short time before the homicide to the effect that there would be trouble between him and Bob if Bob came over to Rile Odom's to a dance that Rile intended to have, and danced with his (Rex Ray's) wife. It appears that Bob Hisaw and Rex's wife had been neighbors and friends ever since they were boys and girls together. There is also some evidence to the effect that Rex Ray had been married previous to his marriage to Lizzie Odom, and that his first wife had died mysteriously, and that Rex Ray was tried for killing her. This evidence, we presume, was admitted for the purpose of indicating that Lizzie Ray was afraid that Rex would kill her, and that she instigated her brothers and his friends to kill Rex and bury him. On the other hand, the theory of the state is that there was hard feeling between Bob Hisaw and Rex Ray, and that Rex had indicated that he intended to do Bob some injury both to his person and his property, and that Bob was infuriated thereby, and on this occasion was drinking, and concluded he would put Rex out of the way in order to prevent any future trouble. The jury adopted the latter theory of the killing, and there is ample evidence in the record to support the conviction.

The defense relied upon was an alibi, Bob Hisaw testifying that he was at home from a little after dark on the evening of the 13th of February, 1912, all the balance of the night, and that he sat up with a sick child of his until after midnight, and that his wife and Hiram Thomas and Jeff Rainwater, his cousin, and Idus George were all at his house that night sitting up with the sick child. He is corroborated by all of these witnesses, who were shown to be either relatives or very intimate friends of his, at whose places and with whom he counseled and conversed during the time he was scouting from the 28th day of June, 1912, up until October, 1914. Bob explains the fact that he went on the scout by stating that he had heard that the Odoms were going to testify that he killed Rex Ray, and that he did not know just when they would say it was done, and ran off until he could find out what their testimony would be. It appears, however, that after Bill Hisaw was tried and acquitted and the testimony of all these state witnesses became public, even after that time Bob returned to near the scene of the homicide and counseled and advised with those people who afterwards corroborated him in his alleged alibi. This was either late in the year 1912 or early in the year 1913, and yet after all that happened Bob again went on the scout and stayed for a period of over a year, and never did surrender himself to the officers.

This killing, according to the testimony of the state's witnesses, was as cold blooded, cruel, and malicious as any of which we have read. If there ever was a case deserving of the death penalty this is one. A defenseless man shot in the bed while asleep without warning, without opportunity to defend himself, or even to say good-bye, and then after the defendant had shot him five times, and after reloading his pistol, returned to the bed because he was still alive, and put a final bullet into his brain, and then, after threatening the lives of those who were present, compelled some of them to dress the corpse and help load him onto a horse and conceal him in a deep ravine near the Arkansas river, where he was afterwards buried.

MATSON, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1, 2] The regularly elected county attorney being disqualified by reason of having been employed by the defendant as counsel in his defense, prior to his election to the office of county attorney, the regular district judge of the district while holding court in another county in the district appointed Mr. Guy A. Curry, an attorney of the Haskell county bar, as special prosecuting attorney in this case. This appointment was made some two years after the return of the indictment; the special prosecutor being appointed merely for the purpose of preparing the state's case for, and conducting, the trial.

The counsel for defendant filed numerous motions and took various exceptions, all based upon the action of the district judge in appointing a special county attorney while not in open court in Haskell county. It is contended that our statutes require that a special or substitute county attorney must be appointed by the court, and that an appointment by the presiding judge in vacation is void, and all subsequent proceedings conducted by such an appointed special county attorney are an absolute nullity. Counsel cite the case of Dodd v. State, 5 Okl. Cr. 513, 115 Pac. 632, in support of their contention that this appointment was void. However, in the Dodd Case, the special county attorney was appointed by a district judge who had, prior to the appointment, become disqualified, and the special county attorney himself failed to properly qualify according to the laws of this state.

In this case it is nowhere contended that the district judge making the appointment was disqualified to act, nor that the special county attorney failed to take the required oath of office before acting. On the contrary, it is made to appear affirmatively that the district judge was qualified to make the appointment, and that before taking any action in the case the special county attorney properly qualified.

The sole contention in this case is that the appointment was void because not made in open court and the order entered upon the minutes. Section 1558, Rev. Laws 1910, provides:

> "The district court, whenever there shall be no county attorney for the county, or when the county attorney shall be absent from the court, or unable to attend to his duties, or disqualified to act, may appoint, by an order to be entered in the minutes of the court, some suitable person to perform for the time being the duties required by law to be performed by the county attorney, and the person so appointed shall thereupon be vested with all the powers of such county attorney for that purpose. Such attorney shall be paid a reasonable compensation for his services by the county for which he is so appointed."

The foregoing statute was intended to give the district court the power and authority to appoint temporarily a county attorney to act in the place and stead of the regular county attorney under the circumstances enumerated in the statute. Prior to the adoption of the Harris-Day Code the words "or disqualified to act" were not contained in this statute. They were inserted by the codifiers of that Code. Independent of the statute, however, the court would have the inherent power to appoint a special county attorney under any of the circumstances therein enumerated. It is essential to the very life of the court that the proper officers be in attendance upon it. The power to appoint such officers is necessary for the protection and existence of the court and absolutely essential to the administration of justice and the enforcement of all our laws. It would be an indefensible reproach upon our institutions if crimes should go unpunished and the public business remained unattended to for want of power in a court of general jurisdiction to appoint some one to supply the place of the regular elected officer when absent from court or disqualified to act. The courts of this state are not powerless to this extent. They have the right and power to preserve their life, and the machinery of the court cannot be kept in motion without its proper officers. It is therefore an inherent power of the presiding judge of the court to supply these officers when there is a temporary vacancy or a disqualification in any particular case. We conceive it our duty therefore to give the foregoing statute a broad, practical, and common-sense construction in order to carry into effect the purposes for which it was enacted, and to give expression to this inherent power of courts of general jurisdiction in this state. We admit that it was intended that the special county attorney should be appointed by the court; but should an irregularity in the appointment destroy its effect and render void all the acts of this special officer where it appears conclusively from the record that with the knowledge and consent of the court the officer proceeded to his duty? In this case while the original appointment was made by the judge in vacation, yet when the case was called for trial, and objection made to that appointment, the judge in open court before proceeding to the trial of this case announced that the appointment had been made by him, and permitted the special county attorney thus appointed to proceed as the representative of the state in this action. It is admitted also by counsel for the defendant that the regular county attorney was disqualified in this case; that the special county attorney who represented the state was qualified to act, and the very judge who made the appointment in vacation presided at the trial. It is our opinion, therefore, that the action of the trial judge in permitting the special county attorney to act under these circumstances amounted in itself to an appointment made by the court, and was a specific ratification by the court of everything that the presiding judge had done in vacation and at his chambers. The purpose of having the appointment made by the court is to permit a judicial determination of the fact that some ground exists under the statute which permits an appointment to be made. That such a ground did exist clearly appears from the record of the trial and proceedings in this case. The purpose of having the order of appointment noted in the minutes of the court is to supply a record thereof, and in our opinion it is a substantial compliance with that provision of the statute if the order of appointment be recorded on the journal of the court and made a part of the proceedings of the case, as was done in this instance. In the case of State v. Duncan, 116 Mo. 288, 22 S. W. 699, it was held:

> "Where there was no prosecuting officer in attendance on the trial, the court had the power, aside from Revised Statutes 1889, § 643, to appoint a temporary representative of the state; and the fact that, in the absence of the circuit attorney, the trial court permitted another to represent him was tantamount to an appointment."

And again, section 5908, Revised Laws 1910, provides:

> "If the county attorney fails, or is unable to attend at the trial, or is disqualified, the court must appoint some attorney at law to perform the duties of the county attorney on such trial."

The latter statute permits the court to appoint a special county attorney for the trial of any particular case where the regular county attorney is disqualified. These statutes are merely expressive of the inherent powers of a court of general jurisdiction, and when it is made to appear, as it does in this case, that a contingency arose under which it was proper for the court to appoint a substitute for the county attorney, although the appointment be made in vacation, if afterwards in open court the same judge recognizes the appointment and permits a qualified person to act upon the trial in the place and stead of the disqualified county attorney, there has been a sufficient compliance with the statutory requirements to validate said appointment.

[3, 4] It is also contended that the court erred in denying the motion to dismiss the action because the special county attorney held a court of inquiry in which certain of the witnesses for the state were examined under oath relative to the commission of this offense. Counsel for appellant have cited us to no statute which makes such action a ground for dismissing a criminal action or setting aside an indictment. The grounds upon which an action may be dismissed and an indictment set aside are clearly set out in the statute, and the fact that the county attorney or his substitute examines certain witnesses under oath in the absence of the defendant is not among the grounds enumerated therein. Subdivision 2 of section 1 of chapter 68 of the Session Laws of 1913 permits the county attorney,

> "on approval of the county judge or district judge, [to] issue subpœnas in felony cases and call witnesses before him and have them sworn and their testimony reduced to writing and signed by the witnesses at the cost of the county. Such examination must be confined to some felony committed against the statutes of the state and triable in that county, and the evidence so taken shall not be receivable in any civil proceeding."

We are not concerned with the wisdom or policy of this statute. That was a matter for the Legislature to determine, and, having determined that such examinations were necessary in felony cases, it becomes only the province of this court to construe such statute and pass upon its constitutionality if questioned. In this case it is not contended that the statute is unconstitutional, but only that the county attorney is powerless to hold such an examination in the absence of the defendant, or his counsel, and that his action in so doing is prejudicial to the substantial rights of the defendant in that it has a tendency to intimidate the witnesses thus examined and compel them to testify to facts which they otherwise would not. We cannot appreciate the logic of the reasoning that such an examination would be prejudicial to the substantial rights of a defendant. Upon the trial of a criminal case defendant has a constitutional right to be confronted with the witnesses against him, but prior to the trial the Legislature has the power to provide for the discovery of evidence showing the commission of crime. Neither the defendant, nor his counsel, have the right to be present at a grand jury investigation. It ofttimes happens that after an indictment has been returned, or a preliminary examination into a felony has been had, the county attorney hears of other evidence which, if true, would be valuable in the trial of the case, and for the purpose of permitting the county attorney to examine the witnesses, where such reports come to him, who are supposed to have knowledge of those facts, it is essential to the administration of justice, and the Legislature has seen fit so to provide, that when the district or county judge approves thereof that those witnesses be examined under oath and at the expense of the county. In a capital case it is essential that the county attorney indorse the names of these witnesses upon the indictment or information and serve a list of them with their respective post office addresses upon the defendant at least two days before the case is called for trial. The defendant therefore is provided with a means by which he may be informed as to what witnesses will be used by the state, and in that way have access to determine what their testimony will likely be. This is a privilege that is accorded him by the Constitution, and there was full compliance with that provision in this case. The defendant upon the trial had the right to be confronted with these witnesses who were thus examined in his absence. He had the right to fully cross-examine them as to anything that happened at the proceeding wherein the county attorney had examined them, under oath, and if they had been intimidated or compelled by the county attorney to make disclosures which were not true, or if any undue influence had been exerted upon them at such examination, those matters were proper to be elicited upon the examination at the trial. The objection here interposed, therefore, in our opinion, is directed more to the credibility of witnesses thus obtained, and does not contravene any of the constitutional or statutory rights of the defendant. The court did not err, therefore, in overruling the motion to dismiss the action and set aside the indictment on this ground. Other alleged errors are assigned as causes for reversal based upon the invalidity of the appointment of the special county attorney, but in view of what we have heretofore said it is unnecessary to discuss these assignments.

[5, 6] The regular panel of jurors being insufficient from which to select a jury to try this case the court issued an open venire, directed to the sheriff, for 25 qualified men, to be selected from the body of the county. The defendant contended that these jurors should have been drawn from the regular jury box. This contention is without merit, for the statute specifically provides that:

> Under circumstances such as this "the jury may be completed from talesmen, or the court may direct that an open venire be issued to the sheriff or other suitable person, for such number of jurors as may be deemed necessary, to be selected from the body of the county, or from such portion of the county as the court may order." Section 3693, Rev. Laws 1910.

However, when the special panel of jurors summoned by the sheriff were returned into court, counsel for the defendant moved to quash the panel, upon the ground that the sheriff was disqualified to act, being a probable witness for the state in the case and having offered a reward for the apprehension of the defendant. The court sustained this motion. Thereupon it was agreed between counsel for the defendant and the special county attorney that Mr. Neil B. Gardner should be appointed as a special officer to bring in another jury. The court appointed Mr. Gardner, and he took the required oath in the presence of the court, and received instructions from the court. Mr. Gardner was to serve an open venire of 30 names, and summoned as a part of the panel 18 of the jurors who had previously been summoned by the sheriff. There was no collusion between the sheriff and Mr. Gardner in summoning these particular jurors. The record discloses that Mr. Gardner summoned them without any knowledge that they had theretofore been summoned by the sheriff, without any directions from the sheriff or any other person to summon those particular persons, but that they were mostly farmers living in various parts of the county, some of whom he met upon the streets and some around the courthouse; that in addition to these men he went out over the county and summoned 12 more qualified men. The record also shows that Mr. Gardner made no improper remarks to any of these jurors at the time they were summoned.

Counsel for the defendant interposed a motion to quash the entire panel summoned by Mr. Gardner, which motion was by the court overruled, and thereupon counsel objected to the placing of the names of these 18 jurors, who had previously been summoned by the sheriff, into the jury box for the trial of this case. This motion was also overruled by the court and exceptions taken by counsel for defendant. Both the quashing of this second panel and the action of the court in permitting the names of these 18 jurors to be placed in the box are alleged as grounds for reversal of this judgment. In our opinion, these contentions are without merit. It is not ground for quashing the entire panel that some of the jurors on the panel had been previously served by an officer held to be disqualified to act. When brought into court on this panel they were served by a qualified officer, and one whom both the state and the defendant had agreed upon. The entire panel may only be quashed when it is served by an officer who is disqualified within the meaning of section 5848, Revised Laws 1910, which provides:

> "When the panel is formed from persons whose names are not drawn as jurors, a challenge may be taken to the panel on account of any bias of the officer who summoned them, which would be good ground of challenge to a juror. Such challenge must be made in the same form, and determined in the same manner as if made to a juror."

Was it error, however, for the trial court to permit the names of these jurors to be placed in the box and used upon the trial? Was the action of the court in so doing prejudicial to the substantial rights of the defendant? None of the conditions which were shown to exist in the cases of Harjo v. State, 1 Okl. Cr. 590, 98 Pac. 1021, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1013, and Schuford v. State, 4 Okl. Cr. 513, 113 Pac. 211, are shown to exist in this case. In the Harjo Case it was shown that the officer who summoned the talesmen did not act impartially, but would only select those whom he thought were favorable to the prosecution. In the Schuford Case after the sheriff was disqualified the special officer summoned the very jurors that the sheriff had theretofore summoned, and this was done by express direction from the sheriff. This, of course, was practically a resummoning of the same jury by the sheriff. Not so in this case. These 18 men who were summoned by the special officer were summoned by him without any direction of the sheriff, or without any knowledge on the part of the sheriff that they were being summoned a second time or without knowledge by the special officer that the sheriff had previously summoned any of them. If they were disqualified it was not because of any improper conduct on the part of the officer in summoning them. In our opinion, they stood upon the same basis as any other member of this special panel that was brought in by a qualified officer. If defendant had any legal ground for challenge it was to the individual juror and not to the panel, and after these names were permitted to be placed in the box it was the duty of counsel for defendant to challenge them as individuals. This was not done. Therefore any objection to these individual jurors on the ground that they had previously been served by a disqualified officer was waived. In the case of People v. Vincent, 95 Cal. 425, 30 Pac. 581, the only instance which, after a diligent search, we can find where the exact question here passed upon was ever decided, it was held:

> "The fact that, after a challenge to a panel had been sustained on the ground of bias and prejudice of the deputy sheriff summoning the jurors, a few of the persons composing it were summoned on a second venire, is no ground for challenge to the second panel, but the objections should be made to the individual jurors."

We hold, therefore, that the trial court did not err in overruling the challenge to the panel of jurors served by the special officer, and also that by reason of the failure of the defendant to object individually to the 18 men who had previously been served by the sheriff on the ground that they were disqualified to act he has waived the error, if any, occasioned by the trial judge permitting the names of these men to be placed in the jury box. So far as is disclosed by the record in this case, each of the men who served upon the jury, out of the 18 complained of, were accepted as individual jurors without further objection by the defendant. Neither does the record show that the defendant exhausted all of his peremptory challenges to individual jurors, or that he was required to exercise a peremptory challenge to any of the jurors previously summoned by the sheriff. Under such circumstances this court cannot hold that a fair and impartial jury was not afforded the defendant in the trial of this case.

[7] It is also contended that the court erred in refusing to give instructions Nos. 2 and 3 requested by the defendant, which are as follows:

> 2. "You are instructed that a conviction cannot be had upon the testimony of accomplices unless they be corroborated by such other evidence as tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely show the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof."
> 3. "In this connection you are instructed that an accomplice is one whose connection with the commission of the crime is such that he could be indicted for the offense of which the accused is being tried."

If there is doubt as to whether from the evidence a witness is or is not an accomplice, then the trial court should define an accomplice and leave the determination of that fact to the jury, together with a proper instruction that the defendant cannot be convicted upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. In this case, however, it was not error for the trial court to refuse to give these requested instructions. We have carefully examined the evidence adduced both by witnesses on behalf of the state and by those for the defendant, and it nowhere appears that any of these witnesses for the state were accomplices under our statutes. The testimony shows that perhaps some were accessories after the fact, and were guilty of a separate and distinct offense from that for which the defendant was tried. Under our Code all persons who are concerned in the commission of a crime whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense or aid and abet in its commission, though not present, are principals. Section 2104, Revised Laws 1910.

> "All persons who, after the commission of any felony, conceal or aid the offender, with knowledge that he has committed a felony, and with intent that he may avoid or escape from arrest, trial, conviction, or punishment, are accessories." Section 2105, Revised Laws.

There is no evidence in this record to the effect that any of the witnesses who testified for the state either aided, abetted, or encouraged the defendant to commit this crime, although some of them were present when the crime was committed, and after its commission aided and abetted the defendant in concealing the same. Had there been a question of doubt as to whether the evidence shows that these parties were or were not accomplices, then the court should have given the instructions requested, or proper ones along the same lines; but where the fact is not disputed, and there is no evidence to show that any witness for the state was an accomplice, there is no error in refusing to give an instruction upon the necessity of corroborating an accomplice.

[8] It is also contended that the court erred in refusing to give the following instruction:

> "You are instructed that if during the course of this trial any evidence has been offered which is capable of two constructions, one favorable to the defendant and one unfavorable, that it will be your duty to give to such evidence the construction most favorable to the defendant."

This instruction was properly refused because it invaded the province of the jury and tended to deprive the jury of the right to determine the weight of the evidence and the inferences properly to be drawn therefrom. In the case of Dunn v. State, 125 Wis. 181, 102 N. W. 935, the court said:

> "The court was requested to instruct the jury: 'Where evidence is offered which is susceptible of two constructions, one of which tends to guilt and the other to innocence, it is the duty of the jury to adopt the latter.' We are satisfied that this request does not embody a correct rule for the guidance of the jury in considering the evidence before them. It would amount to a direction to the jury that any evidentiary fact submitted to their consideration must be considered as tending to prove innocence if it can possibly be so construed. This would deprive juries of the right to give to evidence the significance which they find and believe to be its natural and reasonable interpretation, in view of all the facts and surrounding circumstances of the case. The duty of interpreting evidence and drawing inferences therefrom in criminal trials is peculiarly within the province and the good judgment of the jury, and should not be infringed upon by artificial rules for determining its weight, and limiting the inferences they might reasonably draw therefrom."

See, also, Kennedy v. State, 40 South. 658.[1]

[9, 10] Counsel for appellant also contend that there was error by the trial court in admitting certain incompetent and irrelevant evidence, and in making certain remarks which are alleged to be prejudicial to the accused. There is embodied in the brief long excerpts from the testimony of several of the witnesses, but it is nowhere pointed out by counsel why the admission of this evidence was incompetent or irrelevant. No reasons are given why the trial court should have rejected the same or wherein the remarks of the trial court injured the accused. Counsel leave it up to this court to guess that the admission of this evidence was prejudicial, and that the remarks of the trial court were injurious. We have examined this entire record, read the evidence carefully, and given due consideration to all the remarks made by the trial court; we cannot say that there was error in this particular which would authorize this court to reverse this judgment.

After a full and careful consideration of all the points urged by counsel for the appellant and assigned as reasons for a reversal of this judgment, we conclude that none of the errors complained of were of such a fundamental nature or so prejudicial as to deprive the accused of that fair and impartial

STATE v. McCULLOUGH. (No. 20702.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Indictment and Information 🔑137(1)—Quashing Information—Formal Defect.

Rule followed that an information charging a criminal offense cannot be quashed for a mere formal defect which does not prejudice the substantial rights of the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 480.]

2. Indictment and Information 🔑161(1)—Trial Amendment—Discretion of Court.

Rule followed that an information may be amended during the trial on mere matters of form, at the discretion of the court, when the rights of the defendant are not prejudiced thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 516, 522.]

3. Indictment and Information 🔑161(4)—Name and Title of Prosecuting Attorney—Amendment.

In the text of an information, the prosecuting attorney gave his name and official title, but at the conclusion of the charge his official title alone appeared, and his signature was inadvertently omitted. Held, the defect was one of form, and the information could not be quashed for such defect, and the county attorney's signature could be supplied, with leave of court, at any time during the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 518.]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

4. Indictment and Information 🔑52(2)—Verification by Third Party—Verification by County Attorney.

Where an information was positively verified by another person, it did not require a verification by the county attorney on his mere "information and belief."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 165, 166.]

Appeal from District Court, Sedgwick County; Thornton W. Sargent, Judge.

Ada McCullough was convicted of maintaining a liquor nuisance, and she appeals. Affirmed.

J. C. Milton, of Wichita, for appellant. S. M. Brewster, Atty. Gen., and Ross McCormick, Glenn Porter, and H. C. Castor, all of Wichita, for the State.

DAWSON, J. The defendant was convicted of maintaining a liquor nuisance and her appeal relates to the fact that the county attorney had inadvertently neglected to sign the information and was permitted to sign it after the jury was impaneled.

The information reads:

"I, Ross McCormick, county attorney of Sedgwick county, etc., come now here and give the court to understand and be informed: * * * [Here follows the charge.] * * * Contrary to the form of the statutes, etc. ———, County Attorney."

There was a positive verification of a private citizen appended to the information.

[1-3] The motion to quash raised all manner of objections to the information except the only pertinent one—the want of the county attorney's signature. It was no abuse of the court's discretion to permit the county attorney to attach his signature when this mere formal defect was specifically pointed out. In the text of the information, the defendant was advised that the lawful official, Ross McCormick, county attorney, was the relator who was setting the machinery of the law in motion against her. So did the words "county attorney" at the conclusion of the charge. The defendant does not show how the want of this signature prejudiced her in the slightest degree.

Many graver informalities have been held insufficient to disturb judgments where the court had no doubt about the justice of the net result. See State v. Cooper, 31 Kan. 505, 3 Pac. 429; State v. Bugg, 66 Kan. 668, 72 Pac. 236; State v. Coover, 69 Kan. 382, 76 Pac. 845. Under the inhibitions of the Criminal Code, § 110 (Gen. St. 1915, § 8024), the court could not have sustained the motion to quash; and the defect, being only one of form and not of substance, could be supplied at any time during the trial. Crim. Code, § 72 (Gen. St. 1915, § 7982).

[4] Since the information was positively verified by another person, it did not require a verification by the county attorney on his mere "information and belief." State v. Brooks, 33 Kan. 708, 7 Pac. 591.

The judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

HODGE v. BISHOP et al. (No. 20918.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Appeal and Error 🔑1194(2)—Mandate of Supreme Court—Construction.

A mandate from the Supreme Court directing a trial court to adjudicate a certain matter does not direct that any particular judgment be rendered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4651–4655.]

2. Appeal and Error 🔑907(2)—Judgment Without Support in Findings—Reversal.

A judgment will not be reversed on the ground that it is not supported by, or is contrary to, the findings, where the judgment is the only one that can be rendered consistent with the findings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2899, 2911–2913, 2915, 2916.]

3. Appeal and Error 🔑1039(1)—Harmless Error—Omission to File Late Pleading.

It is not reversible error to refuse to permit a belated pleading to be filed, when the pleadings on file present all the issues necessary for a complete determination of all matters in controversy.

4. Appeal and Error 🔑1001(1)—Finding of Jury—Setting Aside.

It is not error to refuse to set aside a finding of a jury, where the finding is supported by evidence.

Appeal from District Court, Reno County.

Action by L. D. Hodge against Warden Bishop and Flora Bishop, with counterclaim by defendant Flora Bishop. Judgment for plaintiff in part and for defendants in part, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

C. M. Williams, of Hutchinson, Sam Jones, of Lyons, and D. C. Martindell, of Hutchinson, for appellants. F. L. Martin, Carr W. Taylor, Van M. Martin, and John M. Martin, all of Hutchinson, for appellee.

MARSHALL, J. This is the second appeal in this case. Hodge v. Bishop, 96 Kan. 419, 151 Pac. 1105. The cause was remanded, with directions to the trial court to adjudicate the counterclaim of the defendant Flora Bishop. Immediately after the cause was remanded, the plaintiff asked permission to file an amended answer and cross-petition to the counterclaim of defendant Flora Bishop. This permission was refused. No additional evidence was introduced. The trial court specifically approved the findings of the jury that had been made before the first appeal. These findings were as follows:

"Q. No. 1. Did defendant pay the rent according to the agreement with the plaintiff? A. No.

"Q. No. 2. How much, if anything, did defendant owe plaintiff for rent at the beginning of this suit? A. $400.

"Q. No. 3. Did L. D. Hodge, in January, 1907, say to Warden Bishop that if he found any land in Arkansas that suited him for a farm, for himself and wife, that he could sell that land in controversy and put the proceeds into Arkansas land? A. No.

"Q. No. 4. Did L. D. Hodge, in February, 1907, say to Warden Bishop and his daughter, Florence Bishop, that if they would pay him two-fifths of the crop and $100 per year for two years, and afterwards a less rent, during his natural life, that they could go upon the land in controversy and improve it and make a home for them? A. Yes.

"Q. No. 5. Did Warden Bishop and Florence Bishop in pursuance of said proposition go upon said land in controversy, and pay two-fifths of the crop and $100 per year for two years as rent for said land? A. Yes.

"Q. No. 6. Did L. D. Hodge in 1910 say to Warden Bishop and Florence Bishop that he would only require an annual rent for said land in controversy of one-third of the crop raised upon said land? A. Yes.

"Q. No. 7. Did L. D. Hodge in 1911 say that he would only require the said Warden Bishop and Florence Bishop to pay as rent for said land the remainder of his life the one-third of the crop raised upon said land in controversy? A. No.

"Q. No. 8. Did Warden Bishop and Florence Bishop go upon the land in controversy in pursuance of the proposition of L. D. Hodge made in February, 1907, that if they would pay him two-fifths of the crop raised upon said land and $100 per year for two years, and afterwards a less rent during his natural life, take possession of the same and make lasting and valuable improvements on said land? "Q. No. 11. Did Warden Bishop deliver to J. W. Brinkerhoff a check for the sum of $103 to pay L. D. Hodge for any balance due said Hodge for rent of said land at the time of the giving of said check? A. Yes.

"Q. No. 12. Did Warden Bishop agree to pay L. D. Hodge the sum of $4 per acre for all land growing cane? A. No.

"Q. No. 13. Was the check given to said J. W. Brinkerhoff, attorney for L. D. Hodge, sufficient in amount to pay said Hodge all rent due him at the time of the giving of said check? A. No."

The court made additional findings of fact as follows:

"That it was agreed by the parties that if the defendant desired to move away from said land at any time before the death of the plaintiff that the plaintiff would pay the defendants for the improvements made by the defendants on said land.

"That the defendants at no time agreed to live on said land until the death of the plaintiff or for any definite time, and they had a right to move off of the land at any time they should choose and collect from the plaintiff full payment for the expenses of their improvements, and the court finds that under the contract the defendants have the right to make such improvements on said farm as are suitable to make it a home for the defendants, and that the defendants have a right to occupy said land for a home throughout the lifetime of the plaintiff, and that they have a right to vacate said farm at any time and collect the cost of their improvements, and that if they occupy the same until the death of the plaintiff that his estate will then be indebted to the defendants for the value of said improvements, said value to be determined as to the date that they were made, and the defendants, having the use of said improvements, are not entitled to collect interest.

"The court finds that the plaintiff did not agree or promise that the title of said land should pass to the defendant Flora Bishop at plaintiff's death or at any other time. Any expression by plaintiff of his intentions that said land should be Flora's did not amount to an agreement that it should be Flora's, and plaintiff was not bound by said statements."

On these findings of the court and the jury judgment was rendered as follows:

"That upon the counterclaim of the defendants, Flora Bishop and Warden Bishop, that their equitable right under their verbal contract with the plaintiff is held and declared to be a lease for and during the life of the plaintiff, unless they voluntarily vacate and surrender the possession of the land in controversy; * * * that by the terms of said lease, the defendants are to pay and deliver to the plaintiff, one-third of all crops grown upon said land delivered upon the market; that the defendant shall have the right to use and occupy all of the said premises and the improvements thereon upon the payment of one-third of the crops as rent until the death of the plaintiff, unless they voluntarily vacate the same; that at the expiration of said lease by the death of the plaintiff or by the vacation of the premises there shall be due the defendants, Warden Bishop and Flora Bishop, for the improvements upon the said premises, the sum of $1,800. Said sum shall not be augmented by interest or decreased by depreciation of the value of the improvements, and the rights of the said defendants under the said lease are hereby quieted against the claims of the plaintiff, which are contradictory or adverse thereto."

[1] 1. The defendants insist that the court erred in overruling their motion for judgment on the findings of the jury. They contend that judgment should have been rendered in their favor in obedience to the judgment of this court on the former appeal. The order of this court was not that judgment be rendered on the findings nor that any particular kind of judgment be rendered. The order was that the trial court adjudicate the counterclaim of Flora Bishop.

[2] 2. All parties to this action complain of the judgment rendered by the trial court. The defendants insist that the district court erred in rendering judgment that the defendants had only a lease on the land in controversy during the life of the plaintiff, and erred in not rendering judgment that the defendants had an equitable interest in the real property and would have the légal title thereto on the death of the plaintiff. They further complain that the court erred in overruling their motion to set aside the conclusions of law.

The plaintiff contends that no judgment should have been rendered in favor of the defendants.

The validity of the judgment depends on the findings. These were based on the evidence introduced on the trial, and, except in one particular not material at this time, that evidence has not been abstracted. It is presumed that the findings of the court were supported by the evidence. The findings are not contradictory; they are consistent with each other. The judgment that was rendered was the only judgment that could have been rendered under the findings made by the jury and by the court.

[3] 3. The plaintiff asks a review of the order denying his application for leave to file an amended answer and cross-petition to the counterclaim of the defendant Flora Bishop. The plaintiff's petition was filed September 15, 1913. Warden Bishop's answer was filed October 17, 1913. In that answer Warden Bishop set out the interest claimed by Flora Bishop in the land, and asked that she be made a party to the action. The plaintiff replied to the answer of Warden Bishop. Flora Bishop was made a party defendant, and afterward filed her interplea, in which she adopted the allegations of the answer of Warden Bishop, although the interplea was not filed until after the cause had been tried. The plaintiff, by Warden Bishop's answer, was informed of the claims and interest of Flora Bishop. The issues between the plaintiff and Warden Bishop were such that the facts in regard to those issues could not be ascertained without at the same time showing the interest of Flora Bishop in the land.

Under these circumstances it was not reversible error for the trial court to refuse to permit the plaintiff to file an amended answer and counterclaim as against the interplea of Flora Bishop.

[4] 4. The plaintiff moved the court to set aside the finding of the jury, numbered 6, on the ground that there was no evidence to support it. An order denying that motion is assigned as error. The plaintiff abstracted that portion of the evidence which tended to support this finding of the jury. The evidence thus abstracted amply supports the finding. Under that evidence it was not error to deny the motion to set aside the finding.

The judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

STRAMEL v. HAWES. (No. 20923.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

ATTORNEY'S LIEN—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence examined, and found to sustain the judgment.

Appeal from District Court, Edwards County.

Action by Anton Stramel against A. B. Hawes, in which an attorney's lien upon the funds recovered by defendant in the hands of the clerk of the district court was sustained in favor of F. Dumont Smith, motion for new trial overruled, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. L. Slaughter and M. A. Merten, both of Kinsley, for appellant. F. Dumont Smith, of Hutchinson, for appellee.

BURCH, J. The proceeding was one for the enforcement of an attorney's lien on funds in the hands of the clerk of the district court, recovered by the defendant in the case of Stramel v. Hawes, 97 Kan. 120, 154 Pac. 232. After a hearing, the lien was sustained. A motion for a new trial was filed, and, because it was suggested that the district judge was prejudiced, the motion for a new trial was heard by a judge pro tem. The matter was practically retried, and the motion for a new trial was overruled. The chief contention of the appellant is that the employment was covered by a written contract in which the lien claimant's compensation was fixed. The evidence, which need not be recited, failed to sustain the contention.

There is nothing else in the case, and the judgment of the district court is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

TAYLOR v. THISLER. (No. 20408.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

1. FRAUD 🔑66—ACTION FOR DAMAGES—SPECIAL FINDINGS—CONSTRUCTION.

The proceedings examined, and held, that special findings of fact show that the plaintiff's claim respecting the nature of the transaction out of which the action arose was rejected by the jury, and the defendant's claim was accepted; that the effect of the findings was not impaired by any matter made the basis of an assignment of error; and that they are conclusive upon the rights of the parties.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑302(3)—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—OPENING CASE—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

Where plaintiff during argument filed a written application to open the case for the admission of newly discovered evidence and included a request for cross-examination of defendant with respect thereto, which application was not verified, and on the motion for a new trial the newly discovered evidence was not produced by affidavit, deposition, or oral testimony of any witness, it cannot be determined that the overruling of the request for further cross-examination was an abuse of the trial court's discretion.

Appeal from District Court, Dickinson County.

Action by Nancy E. Taylor against Otis La Porte Thisler, Jr. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. S. Roark and Thomas Dever, both of Junction City, for appellant. G. W. Hurd, Arthur Hurd, and Bruce C. Hurd, all of Abilene, for appellee.

BURCH, J. The action was one for damages for false representations relating to the quantity of land embraced in a farm which the plaintiff purchased from the defendant. The verdict and judgment were for the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals.

[1] The case is a very simple one. The plaintiff's claim was that she bargained for a definitely represented number of acres at a stated price per acre. In payment for the land, the plaintiff transferred to the defendant a promissory note which she owned for $15,000, secured by mortgage. The face and the value of the note equaled the price of 150 acres of land, the represented quantity, at $100 per acre, the agreed price. This claim was supported by testimony. The defendant's claim was that he traded the farm without regard to acreage or price per acre, for the note and mortgage. This claim was also supported by testimony. With the verdict for the defendant the jury returned special findings of fact in which the essential features of the negotiations were found to be in accordance with the defendant's claim and so demolished the foundation for the plaintiff's lawsuit.

The plaintiff had a daughter, Mrs. Wibkin, who was her adviser and helper in trying to find a farm. Mrs. Wibkin visited the defendant's land several times, conducted negotiations for it, and otherwise acted for the plaintiff. On one occasion, Mrs. Wibkin went with the defendant to see the land. She inquired about the acreage, and the defendant said his deed called for 150 acres. Subsequently the plaintiff, an agent, Boles, who was acting for both the plaintiff and the defendant, Mrs. Wibkin, and the defendant, all met at the city of Chapman and went from there to look at the farm. Mrs. Wibkin and the defendant rode in the same buggy. She asked if the defendant was sure about the acreage, if he was sure "it was that much," meaning 150 acres. The defendant replied he did not know, he had never surveyed the place, and had no way of knowing except by the deeds; if she thought the acreage would not hold out, he had spent enough of his time and was willing to drop the deal. After inspecting the farm, the four persons mentioned returned to Chapman and went to the hotel there. The defendant narrated what occurred at the hotel as follows:

> "During the time we were there, they were talking about the acreage, and said it didn't hardly seem that there was that much land there, and wanted to know if I would be willing to pay for a survey, or half a survey, I don't remember which. I told them at that time I would not, and if they wanted to survey it they did it at their own risk; it wouldn't make any difference in my trade either way; I was simply trading them this farm of mine for the mortgage that they had on property in Junction City."

In getting a full description of land from the defendant, the mutual agent, Boles, asked him how many acres there were. The defendant replied there were supposed to be 150 acres; the deed and abstract called for 150 acres. At the request of Mrs. Wibkin. Boles made an investigation of the number of acres in the farm, by inquiring of old residents and by telephoning the county clerk. On the trip to the farm from Chapman, Boles rode in the same conveyance with the plaintiff. He narrated the conversation at the hotel in Chapman. The material portion of his testimony follows:

> "However, she asked Mr. Thisler about the acreage. She asked Mr. Thisler if he was sure there was 150 acres. He says: 'I don't know.' She says: 'Will you survey it?' He said: 'No.' She said: 'Will you stand for half of the survey?' He says: 'Mrs. Taylor, I will make a trade with you for your mortgage. If you want to survey that land, you can do so. It is no difference to me whether the acreage runs over or not. I am simply trading for the mortgage.'"

The defendant testified that he did not know, and had never attempted to ascertain, the number of acres in the farm; that he did not at any time, either to the plaintiff or to Mrs. Wibkin, fix a price on the farm by the acre; and that no acre price was ever mentioned between them.

The plaintiff testified the trade for the $15,000 note and mortgage had been talked about before she went to Chapman. She had no conversation with the defendant prior to the one which occurred at the Chapman hotel. She asked the defendant if he was sure there were 150 acres in the farm, besides the railroad and other abatements, and he said there were. He said there were 150 acres. He gave her his price there at Chapman. He told her the price was $110 per acre, and she agreed to take the land at $110 per acre. There was some talk about a survey, and the agent said the snow was too deep. She did not see the defendant again until the deed was drawn. Mrs. Wibkin narrated what occurred on that occasion as follows:

"Q. When was the third conversation? A. I think when the deal was made.

"Q. Where was that? A. At my mother's house.

"Q. Who was present? A. Mr. Thisler and Mr. Boles and myself and Mr. A. P. Trott.

"Q. What was said at that time? A. She said she would take the land. Mr. Thisler said he would take this mortgage in payment.

"Q. The deal had been made so far as the terms were concerned, and they just met there to draw the deed? A. The deal wasn't made that night. Mr. Trott was there to witness the signature.

"Q. I say, the deal had been made and the terms agreed upon before that? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And they just met at that time to close it up? A. Yes, sir."

The jury accepted the testimony on behalf of the defendant, and found specially that the defendant offered to sell the land to the plaintiff for the lump sum of $15,000, that he received no consideration other than the $15,000 note and mortgage, that he told the plaintiff she could have the land surveyed, that he would trade it to her for the mortgage regardless of the number of acres, and that the plaintiff closed the deal without a survey. There were just two versions of the transaction which closed the trade, a positively stated number of acres at a definite price per acre, and a trade of the farm for the mortgage regardless of acreage and price per acre. Both versions could not be true, and there was no basis in the evidence for a third version. The findings are incompatible with the plaintiff's version. They are in exact accord with the defendant's version and in harmony with the general verdict for him. Therefore the controversy over the nature of the trade is at an end, unless something be discovered to impair the effect of the findings.

There was no instruction to the jury which induced the jury to accept the defendant's version of the transaction rather than the one proposed by the plaintiff.

There was a finding that the defendant represented the farm to contain "150 acres more or less." The finding negatives the plaintiff's claim that the defendant stated positively, in answer to pointed questions, that the farm certainly contained 150 acres. The finding is perfectly consistent with the finding and the evidence that the defendant was trading regardless of acreage. No witness attributed to the defendant the precise words of the finding, and it is clear the jury intended to indicate the indefiniteness of quantity expressed by the defendant's statements referred to above; the phrase "more or less" being picked up by the jury from some deeds offered in evidence. The jury found the defendant owned all the land described in the deed to the plaintiff. It is quite immaterial whether the finding be correct or not. Some special questions submitted by the plaintiff were not propounded to the jury. If they were all answered according to their form favorably to the plaintiff, it would make no difference in the result.

[2] While the cause was being argued, the plaintiff filed a written application to open the case for the admission of some newly discovered evidence, the tenor of which was stated. The application was not verified and was overruled. At the hearing on the motion for a new trial, the newly discovered evidence was not produced, by affidavit, deposition, or oral testimony of any witness, as the Civil Code, § 307 (Gen. St. 1915, § 7209) requires. Greer v. Mercantile Co., 86 Kan. 686, 121 Pac. 1121. Included in the application was a request for cross-examination of the defendant with respect to the newly discovered evidence. Whether or not the case should be opened for the further cross-examination of a witness was a matter within the discretion of the trial court. Since the evidence has not yet been vouched for by affidavit, deposition, or oral testimony of any witness, it cannot be said that the court abused its discretion. Furthermore, the tenor of the newly discovered evidence was that the defendant had represented to the county officials that his farm contained 141 acres instead of 150 acres, and that he had made this representation for the purpose of furnishing data for the assessment and collection of taxes. If the evidence were true, it would make no difference in a lump trade of the land regardless of acreage for a note secured by mortgage.

The deed which the plaintiff accepted was in effect a quitclaim deed, and furnished no contract ground of liability on the part of the defendant for any deficiency in the quantity of land described.

The plaintiff devotes seven pages of the abstract to a "schedule" of rulings adverse to her, relating to the admission and rejection of evidence. Apparently, the plaintiff scheduled all rulings adverse to her, without attempting to discriminate between those which were correct and incorrect, material and immaterial, prejudicial and unprejudicial. The court has looked into the matter just far enough to see that no claim of error can be made with any degree of sincerity respecting ruling after ruling on page after page, and the court is not inclined to conjecture concerning what the plaintiff relies on.

Some other subjects are presented in the briefs, but it is not necessary to extend this opinion to cover them, because they do not relate to anything which would impair the validity of the findings. The transaction was not of the kind upon which the plaintiff predicated her right to recover. The jury so found upon evidence which it chose to accept in opposition to other evidence. With the nature of the transaction established, the rights of the parties were established.

The judgment of the district court is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

SEGELBOHM v. WALDNER et al.*

(No. 20920.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

1. Tenancy in Common 🔑15(1)—Possession of One Tenant—Notice of Adverse Possession.

The ordinary rule that the possession of one tenant in common is the possession of his cotenant in common does not apply where the one holding the title and possession openly and notoriously asserts and exercises such acts of exclusive ownership and exclusive right of disposition as to show clearly and convincingly that the property is being held adversely to any claim of his cotenant to an interest therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Tenancy in Common, Cent. Dig. §§ 42, 48.]

2. Tenancy in Common 🔑15(4, 5)—Possession of One Tenant—Notice of Adverse Possession—Limitation of Action.

Where one tenant in common conveys his interest in real estate to his fellow tenant in common, upon an oral agreement that if the grantee should sell the property the grantor was to receive his share of the proceeds, and the latter bequeaths the property to his wife by will, in which testament he asserts that it was exclusively the fruits of his own and his wife's labors, and charges the property with a bequest in favor of a church to be paid when she sells the property, and the will is probated, and the wife enters into possession and remarries, and conveys part of the property to her second husband, and later she and her second husband convey part of the property to a third party—all these acts and circumstances constitute open and notorious notice to the grantor that the property is being held adversely to his claim of interest in it, and, where he takes no steps to assert his interest or to maintain his rights for more than fifteen years thereafter, his action is barred by the statute of limitations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Tenancy in Common, Cent. Dig. §§ 45, 46.]

Appeal from District Court, Johnson County.

Action by Josef Segelbohm against Edward Waldner, Michael Krockover, and others. Judgment for defendant Krockover against plaintiff, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

George Horn, of Kansas City, Mo., and John T. Little and C. B. Little, both of Olathe, for appellant. W. L. Wood, of Kansas City, Kan., and S. D. Scott, of Olathe, for appellees.

DAWSON, J. The plaintiff, Josef Segelbohm, claimed a half interest in a tract of land in Johnson county, and brought this action for partition, possession, and for rents and profits.

In 1886, Josef Segelbohm and his uncle, Michael Rosenberg, jointly acquired the property in dispute; the latter holding the legal title. Later, in 1889 and in 1890, written instruments were recorded in the office of the register of deeds, signed by both Rosenberg and Segelbohm, which disclosed that the parties were tenants in common and that each held an undivided half interest in the property. In 1894, Segelbohm departed for Europe; but before leaving he executed and delivered to Rosenberg a quitclaim deed, which, in addition to the ordinary recitals, contained the following:

> "The object of this instrument is to convey all interest of said grantor in said real estate and especially the interest acquired by agreement dated November 16, 1886 referred to in contract between Michael Rosenberg and Josef Segelbohm recorded February 1st, 1889, in book 63 page 4 in said Johnson county and also to especially convey any interest acquired by said last named contract recorded in book 63 page 4 aforesaid and to release the same of record."

In 1898, Rosenberg made a will bequeathing all his property, and specifically mentioning the property involved herein, to his wife, Annie Rosenberg. He charged this particular property with an item of $500 in favor of a Jewish Church, to be paid when his widow should sell it. The will in terms declared that all his property was the fruits of the joint efforts of himself and his wife. Some time later, Michael died, and his will was probated, and pursuant thereto his widow entered into possession. She married Michael's brother, Alexander Rosenberg, in October of the same year, 1898, and on her wedding day conveyed part of the property to Alexander. In 1899, Alexander and Annie conveyed part of the property to a trust company. In 1899, Annie and Alexander were divorced; and in 1900 she was married to the defendant Michael Krockover; and in 1912 she died after bequeathing all her property to Krockover.

Segelbohm filed this action against Krockover and others on September 1, 1914. Among the trial court's findings of fact are:

> "VII. About the first of October, 1894, Josef Segelbohm was about to make a trip to Europe to stay for some time, and, in order to place the title of the said lots so that Michael Rosenberg could sell the same if he had an opportunity, an oral agreement was entered into between Josef Segelbohm and Michael Rosenberg that said Josef Segelbohm should make a quitclaim deed of his interest in said real estate to Michael Rosenberg, and that, if Michael Rosenberg should make a sale of said land, he would send Josef Segelbohm's part of the proceeds of said sale to him, and, in accordance with said oral agreement, Josef Segelbohm, a single man, made a quitclaim deed of said lots to Michael Rosenberg on the 8th day of October, 1894, which was filed for record on October 12, 1894, in the office of the register of deeds of Johnson county, Kan., and Josef Segelbohm soon thereafter went to Europe and remained there for nearly a year, and afterwards returned to Kansas City, Mo. * * *

"XVI. Since the death of Michael Rosenberg in 1898, the plaintiff, Josef Segelbohm, has not been in possession of any part of the said real estate and has not made any improvements thereon, and has received none of the rents or profits from said lands, and has not asserted or attempted to assert any rights of ownership over said property. Said Josef Segelbohm has been a resident of Kansas City, Jackson county, Mo., at all times since some time in 1895.

"XVII. After the death of M. Rosenberg, Annie Rosenberg made statements to outside parties that Joe (meaning the plaintiff) owned an interest in said land."

The trial court likewise made certain conclusions of law:

"I. Prior to November 28, 1890, M. Rosenberg held an undivided one-half interest in the land, in trust for Josef Segelbohm, under an express trust.

"II. By the release executed November 28, 1890, and the quitclaim deed executed October 18, 1894, Josef Segelbohm released the previously existing trust.

"III. The oral contract entered into at the time of making the quitclaim deed October 18, 1894, was an attempt to create an express trust by parole, and is void.

"IV. The making and probating of the will of M. Rosenberg in 1898 was a repudiation of any existing trust and started the statute of limitations.

"V. Admissions made orally to third parties by Annie Rosenberg after the death of M. Rosenberg, and not communicated to Josef Segelbohm, did not toll the statute of limitations.

"VI. Plaintiff's action is barred by the statute of limitations.

"VII. Plaintiff is guilty of laches.

"VIII. Defendant Krockover is entitled to judgment against the plaintiff."

[1, 2] It will thus be seen that the learned trial court found three distinct but insuperable legal barriers to the plaintiff's claim to an interest in this property—the statute of trusts and powers, the statute of limitations, and laches. Any one of these, if pertinent, will sustain the judgment. Let us test the decision by the use of the simplest first, and this is the 15 years' statute of limitations. Civ. Code, § 15 (Gen. St. 1915, § 6905). When Rosenberg made his will bequeathing this particular land to his wife and charged it with an item of $500 in favor of the church to be paid when his widow should sell the property, in the same instrument asserting that the property was exclusively the fruits of his own and his wife's industry, those acts were a clear repudiation of his holding an interest in the property as a trustee or tenant in common for the benefit of his nephew Segelbohm, if such trusteeship or tenancy in common then existed. This occurred in 1898. His will was probated on April 12, 1898. Those facts were notice to Segelbohm that the property was being openly and notoriously held adversely to his pretensions as a tenant in common. Black v. Black, 64 Kan. 689, Syl. ¶ 2, 68 Pac. 662; Donaldson v. Jacobitz, 67 Kan. 244, 72 Pac. 846; Duphorne v. Moore, 82 Kan. 159, 107 Pac. 791; Walline v. Olson, 84 Kan. 37, 113 Pac. 426. See, also, Underwood v. Fosha, 96 Kan. 549, 551, 152 Pac. 638, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 265. That was more than 15 years before Segelbohm began to assert his interest. The other conveyances to third parties which were made over 15 years prior to the commencement of this action were to the same effect. While the ordinary rule is that the possession of one tenant in common is the possession of all his cotenants and as between them no statute of limitations is involved yet the general rule is otherwise where the one holding the title and possession openly and notoriously asserts and exercises such acts of exclusive ownership and exclusive right of disposition as to show clearly and convincingly that the property is being held adversely to any claim of his cotenant to an interest therein. Here there was no concealment in any of these transactions which might make the general rule inapplicable. Disavowal of cotenancy was made by Michael Rosenberg in his will in 1898. Notice of this was given to plaintiff when the will was probated. Disseisin of plaintiff occurred when Rosenberg's widow entered under Rosenberg's probated will the same year. Other acts of disseisin of plaintiff were the later conveyances of the property in derogation of plaintiff's claim of right therein. The oral evidence of witnesses relating to statements made by Rosenberg's widow, not made in the presence of plaintiff, did not change or cure that disseisin. See Schoonover v. Tyner, 72 Kan. 475, 479, 84 Pac. 124; Cribb v. Hudson, 99 Kan. 65, 160 Pac. 1019. It seems clear that the plaintiff's action was barred by the statute of limitations. While laches is usually involved in questions affected by the statute of limitations, it may sufficiently bar a recovery on a period of time of less duration; but neither laches nor the effect of the statute of trusts and powers need to be considered; nor is it necessary to consider whether other provisions of the statute of limitations, of shorter duration than 15 years, would control this case.

The judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

KLIESEN v. EQUITY EXCHANGE & MERCANTILE ASS'N. (No. 20907.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑187—ACCEPTANCE OF INSTALLMENT—EFFECT.

In a contract for the purchase of property on installments, time being made the essence, the acceptance of payment of the second installment five days late did not operate as a waiver of prompt payment of the next and last installment.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑93—FAILURE TO PAY INSTALLMENT—RESCISSION.

The last payment having been due five days, the vendor notified the bank through which the payment was to be made not to receive it and proceeded to notify the purchaser that he would cancel the contract. Held, that he had a right to rescind.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑98 — RESCISSION BY VENDOR — RESTORATION OF PAYMENTS.

Having within a few days after such notice and refusal offered to return the money received on the contract and demanded possession which was refused, and having in his petition tendered back all payments less rent, the plaintiff thereby sufficiently offered to place the purchaser in statu quo, although the notice contained nothing on that subject.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 163–165.]

Appeal from District Court, Gray County.

Action by W. P. Kliesen against the Equity Exchange & Mercantile Association. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John Harper, of Cimarron, and F. L. Martin, Van M. Martin, and John M. Martin, all of Hutchinson, for appellant. Madison & Van Riper, of Dodge City, for appellee.

WEST, J. The plaintiff sold the defendant certain elevator property for $3,550, payable $500 cash, $1,550 within 30 days, and $1,500 within 90 days. It was stipulated that the vendor should not be required to furnish an abstract of title, but was to turn over upon final payment deeds from former owners, and a warranty deed executed by him was to be placed in escrow at a certain bank to be delivered upon final payment as stipulated. Time was made the essence of the contract. The purchaser paid the $500 cash, went into possession, and paid the $1,550 five days after it was due; payment being indorsed by the cashier of the bank August 7th, making it six days late. The last payment was due October 1st. A check for the amount was mailed to the bank October 6th. On October 5th, the plaintiff informed the bank that he would cancel the contract and directed it not to receive the money or to turn over the deed. On the morning of October 6th, according to the plaintiff's testimony, he left at the elevator a written notice that he had canceled the contract. On the 8th, the bank acknowledged receipt of the check and advised that the plaintiff had directed that it be not received. The notice left at the elevator was received by the defendant's manager according to his testimony on the 9th, and was as follows:

> "Gentlemen: Have canceled contract to pay for elevator at Copeland. This is the request of a number of the stockholders. I do not want to take advantage of you for your money. All I ask is rent for the elevator and I will give the stockholders their stock for the balance of the money you paid me for rent. Please clean up and turn over next Monday."

Certain personal property was involved in the sale, but by agreement this was taken out of the case. The court found for the plaintiff, and the defendants appeal, and urge that such finding was erroneous and that rescission under the circumstances is inequitable.

It was admitted that within a few days after the 8th of October, and before filing suit, the plaintiff offered to return the money received upon the contract and demanded possession of the property, which offer and demand were refused. The petition tendered the return of the money received less the value of the use of the property. The plaintiff testified that two or three days after the payment was due he learned that there was some misunderstanding among the farmers.

> "I went down there, and was there until the 5th, and I phoned to the bank and asked them if they had received the money, and they said they hadn't, and I told them to not receive it: that I would cancel the contract. * * *"

It is complained that the plaintiff's attitude was not that he desired rescission, but a cancellation of the contract, which meant forfeiture to him of what had been paid; but in his offer before beginning the suit and in his petition he claimed nothing but his rights under a rescission.

[1] It was pleaded and is urged as a defense that the receipt of the second payment five days late amounted to a waiver of time as an essential element. But Cyc. thus lays down the rule:

> "Although time is of the essence of the contract, waiver of default in payment as to one or more installments does not operate as a waiver of the right to insist on payment of subsequent installments as provided in the contract or prevent the vendor from rescinding or declaring a forfeiture for failure to do so. * * * The effect of the acceptance is exhausted upon the payment made, and, as to those following, the provisions of the contract are left to operate with unimpaired force." 39 Cyc. 1395.

In Long v. Clark, 90 Kan. 535, 135 Pac. 673, it was said in relation to waiver of the right to insist on a forfeiture stipulation:

> "It is a general rule that no mere indulgences or silent acquiescence can be construed as a waiver of the right unless some element of estoppel is involved in the transaction." Syl. 2.
> "But mere indulgence in a delay, or the acceptance of one installment of the price after it becomes due, does not, as a matter of law, waive prompt payment of subsequent installments, where no element of estoppel is involved." Black on Rescission and Cancellation, § 215, p. 569.

Even forfeitures will be enforced when time is of the essence of the contract, unless to do so would be grossly inequitable. National Land Co. v. Perry, 23 Kan. 140; Shade v. Oldroyd, 39 Kan. 313, 18 Pac. 198; Cue v. Johnson, 73 Kan. 558, 85 Pac. 598.

In Peterson v. Davis, 63 Kan. 672, 66 Pac. 623, it was held that provisions making the time of payment of the purchase price of real estate of the essence of the contract are "to be respected and enforced by the courts like any other stipulation between the parties." In Long v. Clark, the purchaser was to make final payment within six months or forfeit the $400 theretofore paid. An extension of 30 days was granted, but default occurred and continued. After some months, tender was made of the balance due and refused. The purchasers were held not entitled to specific performance, but were allowed to recover $400 of what had been paid, while the vendor was permitted to retain the other $400 as liquidated damages. Reference was made to McAlpine v. Reicheneker, 56 Kan. 100, 42 Pac. 339, wherein a larger sum was forfeited. See, also, Drollinger v. Carson, 97 Kan. 502, 155 Pac. 923.

[2, 3] The parties saw fit to make time essential, as they had a right to do. The last payment was several days too late, and the plaintiff was not obliged to accept it. There is no forfeiture feature, and there is nothing inequitable in giving force to the contract and as a result of the default in payment to put the parties in statu quo as the trial court did.

> "Where time is of the essence of a contract, and one of the parties fails to perform his part of the agreement punctually, at or within the appointed time, the other party, not being himself in default, will thereupon have the right to rescind the contract and treat it as at an end, which right will be recognized and enforced by the courts, unless the circumstances of the particular case show that it would be grossly inequitable to do so." Black on Rescission and Cancellation, vol. 1, § 216, p. 571.

The judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

STATE v. ORTH. (No. 21223.) *

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

RAPE ⇐52(1), 54(1), 59(2, 11)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

In a prosecution for statutory rape, the evidence and instructions are examined, and it is held, that the evidence is sufficient to sustain the conviction, and that the instructions are not subject to the general criticisms leveled against them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. §§ 71, 72, 76, 83.]

Appeal from District Court, Sedgwick County.

Felix Orth was convicted of statutory rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Dempster O. Potts and W. P. Campbell, both of Wichita, for appellant. S. M. Brewster, Atty. Gen., and Ross McCormick and J. W. Adams, both of Wichita, for the State.

PORTER, J. Felix Orth was charged with statutory rape and convicted on each of four counts in the information. The court sentenced him to the reformatory at Hutchinson for a period of from 5 to 21 years on each count, the sentences to run concurrently. He appeals.

Lena Hermes, the prosecuting witness, is the daughter of a family living in the same neighborhood with the defendant's family. The parents are prosperous farmers and neighbors. The families attend the same Catholic Church, and until the charge was made against the defendant were on friendly terms. The young people attended the same social affairs, and Felix had been keeping company with Lena from some time in the summer or fall of 1914, calling upon her at her home, taking her to parties, and driving around with her at night. On March 30, 1915, she was 18. On November 11, 1915, she gave birth to a child. Until the physician came, none of the family or friends knew her condition. She told the doctor that Felix Orth was the father of the child. The doctor and her father went to the Orths late that night and informed the father of Felix. The young man was sent for and was severely censured by his father for his conduct. He went with the doctor to the home of the prosecuting witness and talked to her alone. She testified that he promised to marry her as soon as she had recovered. He admitted the promise, but said that, after thinking about the dates when he was with Lena and what the doctor had told him about the child, he concluded he was not its father and decided not to comply with his promise. He left home and went to Oklahoma. Lena's brother followed him there, compelled him to return, and he was arrested.

The doctor's testimony is that he said to the defendant:

> " 'Felix, Lena Hermes is the mother of a little child, and she accuses you of being the father.' He said, 'Well, that cannot be, because it cannot be more than 8 months, possibly 8½ months.' I says, 'You admit you had intercourse.' He said, 'Yes.' "

He testified further that Felix's father said in the presence of Felix, "It surprised me that he was hanging around there for so long, and then quit all of a sudden," and that after calling his son hard names he said, "He has got to marry her." The doctor, when asked about the development of the child, answered that, as near as he could judge, "it was about three or perhaps four weeks less than nine calendar months."

As to the conversation with the doctor, the defendant testified:

> "When they came over there, the doctor asked me if I had intercourse with her, and I told him, 'Yes.' He asked me how long ago, and I said, 'About six or seven months.' 'Well,' he says, 'that would make it just about right,' or something like that. I was so scared I didn't know."

He admitted having sexual relations with the prosecuting witness on three different occasions, but denied that he had such intercourse before Easter, 1915, and said he had figured from that time that the child could not be his, because the doctor had said that it was about an eight months' baby. The evidence was conflicting, but apparently the jury refused to accept the defendant's version as to his relations with the prosecuting witness. We are satisfied that there was sufficient evidence to sustain the judgment.

A general complaint is made of the instructions which relate to reasonable doubt and to the credibility of the witnesses. These instructions were what may be termed stock instructions given in every criminal case. They are criticized in the brief from various philosophical and psychological viewpoints. No authorities are cited, and it is not deemed necessary to comment upon the criticism of instructions which have so often been approved.

Complaint is made of an instruction in which the court, after stating the date when the prosecuting witness gave birth to the child, used this language:

> "The question therefore is: Who is the father of this child? Evidence has been introduced tending to show that about the time she became pregnant she had sexual intercourse with persons other than Felix Orth, who denies that he had sexual intercourse with her at that time. The evidence as to her having sexual intercourse with persons other than Felix Orth was introduced solely for the purpose of showing who was the father of her child and whether Felix Orth had sexual intercourse with her before she became 18 years of age."

In this instruction the court charged that "the fact, if it is a fact, that others had sexual intercourse with her before that age, would not be an excuse" or a defense for the defendant. This instruction is complained of because it is said that it "sent the jury off on a cold trail, and they never got back"; that the parentage of the child was not the controlling question in the case; and it is further contended that the instruction misstates the facts as to the evidence, because the court ruled out all testimony offered by defendant for the purpose of showing that the prosecuting witness had sexual intercourse with other persons.

It seems the court did rule out all direct evidence of that character, although attempts were repeatedly made to get it into the record; and one witness for defendant testified to conduct of the prosecuting witness, the only purpose of which was to raise a doubt in the minds of the jury as to her chastity and her relations with persons other than the defendant. The same witness testified that the brother of the prosecuting witness had threatened to see that the witness was sent to the penitentiary if he went on the stand and swore that he had had intercourse with her. We think the court did not err in referring in the instructions to this character of testimony. As to the first criticism of the instruction, it is true that the parentage of the child was only incidentally a question in the case; but it is obvious that the jury could not have been misled by the instruction.

The court instructed that:

> "The uncorroborated testimony of the prosecuting witness, Lena Hermes, if it is uncorroborated, is sufficient, if believed by the jury, to convict the defendant."

The instruction was a proper one, and, besides, the evidence of the prosecuting witness was corroborated to some extent by the admissions of defendant as to his relations with her and admissions made by him in the presence of other persons, as well as by other circumstances in the case.

We find no error in the instructions, in the admission of evidence, nor in the ruling of the court excluding the testimony of other young men in the neighborhood who were asked about their relations with the prosecuting witness.

The judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑222(2) — FEDERAL EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—RECOVERY.

A laborer was cutting boards in two with an ax when he was directed by his foreman to break them by fastening one end of each in a tripod and stamping on the other end. Theretofore he had cut them with an ax provided by his employer. In breaking as thus directed, he was in a few minutes injured by a splinter from one of the boards flying and striking him in the eye. The foreman testified that he did not want the plaintiff to break them that way because he was liable to hurt himself. The jury, in addition to a general verdict for the plaintiff, found, among other things, that the method thus directed and used was more dangerous than the one the workman had been following, that he did not know the method directed was dangerous, and that its danger was not apparent and obvious to a man of his intelligence. Held that, as he did not realize and appreciate the danger of obeying the order, he is not barred of recovery on account of assumption of risk.

Burch, Porter, and Dawson, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from District Court, Wyandotte County.

Action by Jose Duran against the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. R. Smith, O. J. Wood, A. A. Scott, and Harlow Hurley, all of Topeka, for appellant. E. S. McAnany, M. L. Alden, and W. C. Rickel, all of Kansas City, for appellee.

WEST, J. The plaintiff was a common laborer in the defendant's repair shops. Workmen were dismanteling a passenger coach, and the boards removed therefrom were required to be broken up for use in the furnace. The plaintiff began cutting them with an ax, when, as he testified, the foreman came along, took the ax out of his hand, threw it to one side, placed one of the boards under the crosspieces of a tripod under the coach in some way not made clear by the record, and broke it by stamping his feet on it, and told the plaintiff to do it that way and to hurry up. The plaintiff broke the boards that way four or five minutes, and in breaking one of them which was very brittle the splinters flew up and hit him in the face, one of them in the eye. The evidence of another witness was to the effect that the foreman came around where the plaintiff was breaking the boards with the ax, and said:

> "Well, that is too slow, I am going to show another and better way to do it. We have lots of work to-day, and you need to work a little faster."

The foreman testified that the plaintiff had always used the ax before that time to cut up these boards, that about five minutes before the accident he had been there and the plaintiff was breaking them in the tripod, that he told him to quit it, that he did not seem to obey his orders. In response to the question, "Why did you want him to quit breaking them in the tripod? he answered, "Well, I knew it was wrong to break them in the tripod because he was liable to hurt himself."

The action was under the federal Employer's Liability Act (Act April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65 [Comp. St. 1916, §§ 8657-8665]), and the jury were instructed that the plaintiff assumed the ordinary risks and hazards of his employment, that is, such risks and dangers as are open and obvious to a person of ordinary discretion, intelligence, and foresight. and that if they believed from the evidence that the risk and danger of injury by a flying splinter was so open and obvious that in the exercise of ordinary care and caution for his own safety the plaintiff would have known of such danger and been able to have avoided the same and escaped injury, and that such danger was one of the ordinary risks and hazards of the employment in which he was then engaged, they must find for the defendant. Further that, if the foreman directed the plaintiff to cease using the ax and to break the boards in the manner alleged which was more dangerous, then the plaintiff would be entitled to recover, unless the danger and hazard in doing the work in that manner was so open and obvious to a person of his apparent intelligence and discretion that he must be held to have assumed the risk. There is no complaint of this instruction. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, and, in answer to special questions, found that splinters are occasionally thrown off or fly when dry boards are broken; that the plaintiff did not know that they are frequently thrown off: that axes had been furnished and kept for use in cutting or breaking up such scraps of lumber.

> "(8) Was it more dangerous to break the scraps of lumber by stepping thereon, than it would have been to use an ax in cutting or breaking the same? Ans. Yes.
> "(9) Was the danger of splinters flying and striking the plaintiff when a board was broken by stepping thereon apparent and obvious to casual observation? Ans. No, not to a man of plaintiff's apparent intelligence.
> "(10) If you find that the defendant was guilty of any negligence that caused the injury to the plaintiff, state fully of what that negligence consisted. Ans. Failure to stop plaintiff from breaking the boards in the tripod.
> "(11) Had the defendant instructed the plaintiff to break the board by stepping thereon, as he was doing, at the time he was injured? If so, what agent of the company had so instructed him? Ans. Yes. Jesse Dix, foreman in charge of the Mexicans.
> "(12) Did the plaintiff know that it was dangerous to break boards by bending or stepping on same? Ans. No."

The defendant moved for judgment on the findings, which was overruled. A motion for new trial was also overruled, and defendant appeals.

Our ordinary knowledge of the effects of chopping kindling is invoked in behalf of the proposition that splinters will frequently fly from dry boards when broken either by the foot or by an ax. There is a difference between breaking boards with an ax and cutting them in two with an ax. Plaintiff testified:

> "The lumber had to be cut before I could burn it, because the furnace tender didn't want it to come that length. I got an ax in the shop to cut it with. I started cutting the boards with the ax."
> On cross-examination: "Jesse Dix (the foreman) was the one that told me to break the boards, not to chop them. * * * I had been engaged in cutting boards some time before the accident."

He also testified that it was the usual way to take the ax and chop them, and that Mr. Dix had never objected to his using an ax before that day.

> "The boards usually cut were many times dry and many times wet. I had never noticed any splinters flying before. * * * I had broken six or seven with my foot before I was hurt. No splinters flew from those six or seven boards. They were all dry boards."

The foreman testified that he did not want Duran to break the boards in the tripod, and that he had told him to use the ax; that it had always been the custom to use the ax.

> "Two axes were kept for that purpose. I never instructed the plaintiff in any way to break boards by stepping on them. He knew enough to go and get the ax and start to cut them. That is what he did. * * * He had always used the ax to cut these boards before that time."

This evidence was corroborated by the witness Alonzo, and the jury evidently believed their version of the matter rather than the foreman's.

From the plaintiff's evidence and the finding of the jury, we have the case of a Mexican laborer of meager intelligence, used to cutting the boards with an ax, hurriedly ordered by his foreman to break them in a way which by the testimony of the foreman himself was likely to cause him injury. Promptly obeying, the workman received the wound in his eye. The sole defense argued is that the danger of flying splinters was so apparent that he must be held to have assumed the risk.

"The danger arising from breaking boards with either an ax or his feet was one of the ordinary risks of the plaintiff's employment as a common laborer, and for an injury from such cause there can be no recovery," defendant says, and cites Walker v. Scott, 67 Kan. 814, 64 Pac. 615; Gillaspie v. United Iron Works, 76 Kan. 70, 90 Pac. 760; Railway Co. v. Weikal, 73 Kan. 763, 84 Pac. 720; Railway Co. v. Stone, 77 Kan. 642, 95 Pac. 1049; Railway Co. v. Mealman, 78 Kan. 496, 97 Pac. 381; Riverside Iron Works v. Green, 79 Kan. 588, 100 Pac. 482.

In the Walker Case, the employé, who had repeatedly insisted that there was danger of a cave-in, nevertheless went to work in the trench and was held to have assumed the risk. The syllabus limited the application of the rule to the cases in which the dangers are open to common observation, as fully known to the workman as to his employer, and in which "he is capable of knowing and measuring the dangers of such employment." The facts and findings here do not bring this case within the rule thus announced. Weikel was holding a torch for a machinist working on a steel shaft of certain hoisting machinery, using a chisel from which a chip flew striking the torch holder in the eye. The court said he was a young man of intelligence and experience who had worked at the place for some time and must have observed—which his own testimony showed—that chips would fly from a chisel. Gillaspie was injured in a similar way. The court said:

"His opportunity for observation was ample, and his observation was in fact both comprehensive and accurate. He saw and knew the condition of the snap, and knew the causes which had operated to produce the condition in which he found it." 76 Kan. 72, 90 Pac. 761.

In the Stone Case, the plaintiff, having been directed to change the water in an engine, was fatally scalded by reason of a defective blow-off pipe. Because of his knowledge of the pipe—greater than that of any other person—he was held guilty of contributory negligence. Mealman was held to have assumed the risk of using a hand car with a defective brake, because he not only knew all about it, but had without complaint or criticism of its condition called the attention of his foreman thereto and continued to use it. Green was injured by a defective gangplank. He was held to have assumed the risk for the reason that he knew all about the condition of the gangplank over which he had been passing for 10 days without complaint or promise of repair.

In Brizendine v. Railroad Co., 96 Kan. 691, 153 Pac. 495, it was decided that, although the plaintiff had reasonable means of knowledge of the machinery and its condition, the finding of the jury that he did not realize the danger of the situation placed the case within the frequently announced rule that such appreciation must exist in order for assumption of risk to bar recovery. The decisions there cited and followed fully sustain such holding.

Here the jury have, in effect, found that the plaintiff with his degree of intelligence and his opportunity neither knew nor comprehended the danger of doing the work in the way directed by his foreman. Assumption of risk is a legitimate defense in such actions (Barker v. Railway Co., 88 Kan. 767, 129 Pac. 1151, 43 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1121); but we cannot, in the face of the record, assume or take judicial notice that the danger of obeying the order received was apparent and so appreciated or realized by the injured workman that he should fail of recovery because of the risk assumed by such obedience.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

RIDPATH v. CLAUSIN. (No. 13719.)

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Spokane County; Wm. A. Huneke, Judge.

Action by Sarah Ridpath against C. B. Clausin, receiver of the E. J. Hyde Jewelry Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. M. Simpson, of Spokane, for appellant. Samuel R. Stern, of Spokane, for respondent.

MAIN, J. This is the second appeal in this case. The opinion upon the former appeal is reported in 88 Wash. 185, 152 Pac. 711. The facts are there stated in detail, and need not be here repeated. Upon the first appeal, the judgment of the superior court, which had been in favor of the plaintiff, was reversed, and a new trial directed. The second trial in the superior court resulted in a judgment in favor of the defendant. It is from this judgment that the present appeal is prosecuted.

Upon the retrial, the law, as stated in the opinion upon the first appeal, was applied, and the plaintiff was denied a recovery, because the evidence failed to show that she had been damaged. It seems unnecessary to again enter upon a review of the case. Upon the facts, as they appear in the present record, and the law, as stated in the former opinion, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover.

The judgment will be affirmed.

In re RICHARDSON'S ESTATE.
BOOTH et al. v. RICHARDSON et al. (No. 13645.)

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, King County; R. B. Albertson, Judge.

Will contest by William F. Richardson and others against A. A. Booth, as executor of the estate of Frances H. Richardson, deceased, and another. From an order setting aside the probate of the will, and appointing an administrator of the estate, the executor and another appeal. Affirmed.

Robert F. Booth, Henry W. Pennock, and Halverstadt & Clarke, all of Seattle, for appellants. Edward Judd and Wardall & Wardall, all of Seattle, for respondents. William F. Richardson, of Seattle, pro se.

MOUNT, J. This is a will contest. Mrs. Richardson, during her lifetime, executed a will on July 30, 1915. A. A. Booth was, by the terms of this will, made executor, with full control of the property, valued at about $30,000. The executor was directed to pay such income and proceeds of the property to Mr. Richardson, husband of the testatrix, during his lifetime, "as in the judgment of said executor may appear necessary and proper." The will provided that, upon the death of Mr. Richardson, the residue of the estate was to be distributed to certain named legatees, among these being Seattle School District No. 1. On October 20, 1915, Mrs. Richardson, in her own handwriting, revoked the will in the presence of two witnesses.

On December 7, 1915, Mrs. Richardson died in the city of Seattle. Thereafter the will was admitted to probate, and subsequently this contest was filed by Mr. Richardson, upon the ground that the will was revoked by Mrs. Richardson. It was conceded, at the trial, that Mrs. Richardson regularly executed the will, and also that afterwards she executed a revocation of it. But it was contended that she was incompetent to revoke the will at the time she executed the revocation. That was the sole question presented to the trial court. After hearing the evidence upon that question, the court concluded that Mrs. Richardson was competent at the time of the revocation, made findings to that effect, set aside the probate of the will, and appointed an administrator of the estate. This appeal is prosecuted from that order.

The only question presented here is one of fact, whether Mrs. Richardson was competent to make or revoke her will at the time of the revocation. This was a much-disputed question. The trial court was apparently controlled by the testimony of friends, who were with Mrs. Richardson, more or less constantly, about the time she wrote and executed the revocation, and who testified that she understood what she did, and the effect of the revocation, rather than by the statements of doctors, who saw her infrequently about that time, and who expressed the opinion that she was incompetent. The appearance of the revocation itself, written by Mrs. Richardson in her own handwriting, indicates that she knew what she was about. After reading the record quite carefully, we are of opinion that the trial court arrived at a correct conclusion.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

MARCHETTI v. SAN FRANCISCO OYSTER HOUSE. (No. 13258.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 20, 1917.)

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, King County; Everett Smith, Judge.

Action by Roger Marchetti against the San Francisco Oyster House. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Tucker & Hyland, of Seattle, for appellant.

PER CURIAM. Roger Marchetti, the plaintiff, brought an action against the defendant corporation, San Francisco Oyster House, basing his cause of action upon a contract of employment evidenced by the record of a resolution entered in defendant's minute book, as follows:

> "Resolved, that Roger Marchetti be employed as counsel for the company, and that he receive for his services as secretary and counsel of the company the sum of $25 per month."

This minute was signed by Jack Barberis, president, and by Roger Marchetti, secretary; those two being the only stockholders and officers in the corporation, Barberis holding 99 shares and Marchetti 1 share.

The plaintiff claimed the sum of $725 for salary and $91.05 for advances made the defendant, less payments received in the sum of $141.25, leaving a balance due plaintiff of $674.80. The defendant answered there was but $275 due plaintiff on account of salary, inasmuch as he had been discharged after a service of 11 months, on which defendant should be credited in the sum of $211 for moneys paid plaintiff. By way of cross-complaint, defendant alleged plaintiff was indebted to it in the sum of $212.10 for meals, board, and room, in the sum of $86 for moneys converted, and in the sum of $5 for money loaned. The reply admitted the indebtedness of plaintiff for the item of $86, but denied all other allegations of the cross-complaint. On the trial the plaintiff admitted the counterclaim of $212.10 for meals furnished. The cause was tried to a jury, which returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff for $216.40.

The defendant appeals, assigning as error, first, the denial of its motion for an instructed verdict for defendant; and, second, the giving of the following charge to the jury:

> "It will first be your duty to determine whether or not there was a contract made between the plaintiff and defendant corporation in the month of December, 1911. If you determine there was such a contract made, what was that contract? Was it a contract, as claimed by the plaintiff, at $25 for services as secretary and attorney for the corporation, and not terminable at any agreed time whatever? Or, if there was a contract made for a period not to exceed one year?"

We do not find any error in the record under these assignments. There was sufficient evidence to carry the case to the jury, and the instruction was proper, under the issues and evidence in the case.

The judgment will be affirmed.

NORTHERN PAC. RY. CO. v. CONCANNON et al. (No. 9771.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 6, 1917.)

En Banc. On remand from the Supreme Court of the United States. Affirmed.

See 239 U. S. 382, 36 Sup. Ct. 156, 60 L. Ed. 342; 75 Wash. 591, 135 Pac. 652.

Geo. T. Reid, J. W. Quick, and L. B. Da Ponte, all of Tacoma, for appellant. Gordon, Easterday & Askren and Huffer, Hayden & Hamilton, all of Tacoma, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Upon the facts as stated in the opinion filed in this court on October 7, 1913 (75 Wash. 591, 135 Pac. 652), and after reargument upon the record, we affirm the finding of the trial judge that respondent Concannon had acquired title, to that part of the right of way of appellant now occupied by him, by adverse possession prior to the 28th day of April, 1904.

The judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

BEVARD v. SKIDMORE-PATTERSON COAL CO. (No. 21291.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

MASTER AND SERVANT ⚿373—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—PLACE OF INJURY—"ON OR IN OR ABOUT A MINE."

The defendant operates two open-pit coal mines, known as the east mine and the west mine, which are about a quarter of a mile apart. They are separated by an interurban railway, which passes within about 30 yards of the west mine. A workman in the east mine was ordered by his foreman to go on a necessary errand to the west mine. When crossing the railway track the workman was struck by a car, and sustained injuries which proved fatal. In an action for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, the petition, which was otherwise sufficient, presented the foregoing facts. Held, a demurrer to the petition was rightfully sustained, because the accident did not occur "on or in or about a mine," within the meaning of section 5900 of the act.

Appeal from District Court, Cherokee County.

Action by Mrs. J. T. Bevard against the Skidmore-Patterson Coal Company. Demurrer to plaintiff's petition sustained, and she appeals. Affirmed.

C. A. McNeill, of Columbus, and Maurice McNeill, of Kansas City, Mo., for appellant. Skidmore & Walker, of Columbus, for appellee.

BURCH, J. The action was one for compensation for the death of a workman. A demurrer was sustained to the plaintiff's petition, and she appeals.

The petition disclosed that the defendant operates two open-pit coal mines, referred to as the east mine and the west mine, which are a quarter of a mile apart. Between the two mines and about 30 yards east of the west mine lies the interurban railway track of the Joplin & Pittsburg Railway Company. The railway had been in operation about 10 years before the mines were opened, and cars passed the west mine at intervals of 30 minutes throughout the day. The workman was a coal shoveler at the east mine and did such other work as was required of him. He was ordered by his foreman to take a coal drill from the east mine to the west mine and there procure a different tool. When crossing the railway track, he was struck by a car, under circumstances which are not described, and sustained injuries which proved fatal. There was no allegation in the petition that the workman took a previously defined route between the two mines, or a connecting way, or a course of travel bearing any relation to the business of working the two mines. There was no allegation of any joint system of operation extending over the two mines, or of any nexus between them. There was no description of the mines which indicated that mining operations or mining hazards overflowed either of the pits in the direction of the railway track.

The first section of the Workmen's Compensation Act reads as follows:

> "If in any employment to which this act applies, personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of employment is caused to a workman, his employer shall, subject as hereinafter mentioned, be liable to pay compensation to the workman in accordance with this act." Gen. St. 1915, § 5896.

The plaintiff argues the case as if it were controlled by the specification, "accident arising out of and in the course of employment." Adopting this theory provisionally, there can be no doubt that the accident arose in the course of the workman's employment. When he was injured, he was in the act of performing a duty within the scope of his employment and expressly enjoined upon him by his foreman.

Whether or not the accident arose out of the employment is debatable. "Out of" and "in the course of" employment are distinct things and must not be confused. An accident may occur in the course of employment and still have no causal connection with it, so that it may be said the accident arose out of the employment. The accident must occur because of some peculiar danger incident to the particular employment, and it might be urged here that the employment did not constitute proximate cause. Being run down by a car on an interurban railway track was not a special danger peculiar to the business of mining or to the conduct of a mine employé going from one mine to another with a drill. Precisely the same peril would confront a farm hand going from the country to town with a basket of fresh eggs and vegetables. Agricultural pursuits and employments incident thereto are exempt from the provisions of the act because they are nonhazardous (section 5900), and it would require considerable sophistication to differentiate between the causal connection of employment and accident in the two instances. Indeed, the accident was just as likely to happen to one who was not an employé at all.

A leading English case sustaining the suggested view is that of Dennis v. A. J. White & Co. (1916) 85 L. J. K. B. 862. In that case a plumber's mate employed by a firm of builders was told to go on a bicycle and get some plaster. As he was crossing Sloan Square, in London, a motor car collided with him. He used the bicycle on an average about once a day. Following the judgment of the House of Lords in the case of Plumb v. Cobden Flour Mills Co. (1913) 83 L. J. K. B. N. S. 197, it was held that the accident did not arise out of the employment.

A carefully considered American case which cites pertinent authorities is that of Hopkins v. Michigan Sugar Co., 184 Mich. 87, 150 N. W. 325, L. R. A. 1916A, 310. In that case the decedent was the defendant's chief engineer, having charge of the installation of machinery in and the operation of six plants in different cities which he was obliged to visit. Having spent the day at a branch plant, he returned by train to the city in which the principal plant and his office were situated, and, while preparing to take a street car, slipped and fell on icy ground. It was held the accident did not arise out of his employment.

In the case of Foley v. Home Rubber Co. (N. J. Sup.) 99 Atl. 624, the expression "arising out of" employment was given a very much broader interpretation than in the Michigan case. Foley was a special traveling salesman who, in the course of his employment, found it necessary to visit his employer's London office. He took passage on the Lusitania, and lost his life when the ship was torpedoed by a German submarine. The court held that the common perils incident to travel inhere in employments necessitating travel by sea or by land, that the manner in which the accident is brought about is not at all of the essence of the matter, and that the fact that the Lusitania was lost through an extraordinary peril did not make such peril any less a cause of accident arising out of Foley's employment.

The question just discussed need not be decided, because the provisional theory of the case takes into account only a portion of the workmen's compensation act. The opening words are, "If in any employment to which this act applies." It is necessary to inquire, therefore, to what employments the act applies. The inquiry is answered as follows:

> "This act shall apply only to employment in the course of the employer's trade or business on, in or about a railway, factory, mine or quarry, electric, building or engineering work, laundry, natural gas plant, county and municipal work, and all employments wherein a process requiring the use of any dangerous explosive or inflammable materials is carried on, which is conducted for the purpose of business, trade or gain; each of which employments is hereby determined to be especially dangerous, in which from the nature, conditions or means of prosecution of the work therein, extraordinary risk to the life and limb of the workman engaged therein are inherent, necessary, or substantially unavoidable." Gen. Stat. 1915, § 5900.

Looking further into the act, a mine is defined as follows:

> "'Mine' means any opening in the earth for the purpose of extracting any minerals, and all underground workings, slopes, shafts, galleries, and tunnels, and other ways, cuts and openings connected therewith, including those in the course of being opened, sunk or driven; and includes all the appurtenant structures at or about the openings of the mine, and any adjoining adjacent work place where the material from a mine is prepared for use or shipment." Gen. Stat. 1915, § 5903.

In framing the act, the Legislature made use of the British Workmen's Compensation Act of 1897, section 7 of which contained the following provision:

> "This act shall apply only to employment by the undertakers as hereinafter defined, on or in or about a railway, factory, mine, quarry, or engineering work. * * *" Statutes 1897, 60 & 61 Victoria, c. 37, p. 57.

Before the Legislature adapted to its purposes the words, "on or in or about," they had been interpreted by various courts of the United Kingdom. Many of the decisions are enlightening because of their perspicacity.

In the case of Fenn v. Miller, 69 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 439, it appeared that a workman was employed to cart water to a mortar mill driven by a steam engine, from a brook which was from 150 to 200 yards from the mill. When proceeding with a cart of water from the brook toward the mill and when about 40 yards from the brook, the cart horse ran away and the workman was injured. The mill and engine constituted a factory, and the question was whether or not the accident occurred in employment about a factory. Lord Justice Smith said:

> "The county court judge has held, as I understand, that inasmuch as the word 'about' is an elastic word, he is entitled to find that a distance of 110 yards is 'about' the mill as being 'in close propinquity' to it, as I interpreted the meaning of the word in Powell v. Brown, or as being 'physically contiguous' to it, as Lord Justice Collins expressed it in the same case. * * *
> "In Powell v. Brown, an accident happened to a workman engaged in loading a cart belonging to the owners of a factory. The cart was standing in a street close to the entrance to the factory yard, at a place where the factory workmen were habitually accustomed to take timber out of the factory and load it on the factory carts. The question was whether the employment of the workman was 'about' the factory within the meaning of the act, and the court held that the word 'about,' following the words 'on or in,' was an enlarging word. The Legislature thought that the first two words were not large enough to cover all that they were intended to include, and therefore added the word 'about' to enlarge the locality of the accidents included within the act, and so as not to limit the locality to the words 'on or in.' The expression I used was that the word 'about' meant that the employment might be in close propinquity to the factory, and Lord Justice Collins used very similar words—namely, 'physically contiguous to the factory.' There the county court judge had found that the workman was engaged 'about' the factory at the time of the accident, and that finding was right according to the meaning placed by this court on the word 'about.'
> "In Chambers v. Whitehaven Harbour Commissioners, again, this court held that the words of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, pointed to locality. After reading them, I there said: 'The meaning is that at the time of the accident the workman must be employed about one of those specified localities; the locality of the accident must be within the purview of the section.' And afterwards: 'Therefore, in order to bring a particular case within the purview of the act, the employment must be on, in, or about the named locality at the time of the accident.'
> "There was also the case of Lowth v. Ibbotson, in which a carter in the employment of a miller was injured while delivering sacks of flour from a cart at a distance of a mile and a half from the mill. The county court judge held that he was not at the time of the accident employed 'about' the mill, and this court did not interfere with that finding because it appeared to us to be quite right." Page 440.

Lord Justice Collins said:

> "In my judgment, the word 'about' in the section with which we are dealing is a geographical expression denoting physical contiguity. On the other hand, it is not, I think, used in the sense in which we use it when we speak of a workman being about the business of his employer. There is a broad distinction between the two meanings of the word. A factory assumes the carrying on of a business, and I should say that a carter fetching coals to the factory is 'about the business of' the factory, but is clearly not during his journeys to and fro 'about' the factory. * * *. I should say that where the main purpose of the business carried on in a factory involved the use of land outside the physical limits of the factory, persons so employed outside the factory limits would be employed, not on or in, but about the factory. An illustration of this is to be found in the facts of the case of Powell v. Brown.

* * * To my mind the act does not apply to persons employed about the business of a factory, where such employment does not involve physical contiguity to the factory within such limits as are reasonably necessary for the ordinary business carried on there. * * *" Page 441.

In the case of Coylton Coal Co. v. Davidson, 42 Scot. L. R. 596, it appeared that a carter in the employment of the coal company at one of its pits went with his cart along a private road belonging to the company to a point at which it joined a public road, a distance of 259 yards from the pit, crossed the public road, 22 yards in width, passed through a gate into a railway company's premises, and at a point 123 yards beyond the gate proceeded to load on his cart a quantity of timber from a railway wagon. While engaged in this work he was accidentally injured. The question was whether or not the accident happened on or in or about a mine, within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1897. The Lord Justice-Clerk said:

"The carter had left the mine, and although still on business for the mine owner was doing the ordinary work of a carter at a place where no dangers connected with a mine were to be encountered. He had not only left the neighborhood of the mine, but he had left the property of the mineowner, had gone to the other side of the road and entered a place which belonged to another owner, and which was itself a place to which the act applied in respect that the owners of that place carried on another dangerous business, for any accident in which the owners were liable to their own employés. How in these circumstances it could possibly be held that he was still at a place which was 'about' the mine which he had left I am unable to understand. He would have been a trespasser where he was, unless he had gone there on business connected with the railway company, and could not have said, if asked to state his business or to quit the premises, that he was about his master's mine. His only right to stay could be because his master had business with the railway company. But this might equally apply ten miles off or twenty miles off from his master's premises." Page 598.

Lord Kincairney said:

"The question for us is whether the place of the accident was about the company's mine in the sense of the seventh section of the Workmen's Compensation Act. * * *

"None of the dangers incident to a mine could be said to attach to the place of the accident.

"The sheriff-substitute has decided on the ground that the place was connected by use with the pit, but although without such connection it is possible that the statute might not have applied, still it was necessary that the workman should not only be engaged in the course of his employment but also that he should be engaged about his mine." Pages 598, 599.

In the case just referred to, Lord Stormonth Darling delivered the following opinion:

"Speaking solely for myself, I should have thought, if the question had been open, that there was much force in the argument urged by Mr. Campbell to the effect that section 7 of the act refers not to the locality of the accident but to the kind of employment which is to give a right to compensation. The first section has been described by the House of Lords in Lyson's Case, [1901] App. Ca. at page 85, as 'the affirmative or leading enactment,' and it declares that 'if in any employment to which this act applies personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment is caused to a workman, his employer shall, subject as hereinafter mentioned, be liable to pay compensation.' The leading idea of the statute, therefore, is to give compensation to workmen for injury arising out of their employment, even when the employer is entirely free from blame. But inasmuch as the act was not intended to apply to every kind of employment, it becomes necessary to define the employment to which it did apply, and I should have thought that the sole purpose of section 7 was to do so. When the section speaks of employment 'on or in or about' a railway, factory, mine, quarry, and so on, I should have thought that it introduced the idea of locality only as a means of describing particular trades or occupations, and not in order to restrict the area within which accidents occurring in the course of these particular trades were to give rise to a right of compensation. Such a construction of the statute would undoubtedly have enlarged its scope, but it would at least have avoided the obvious anomaly of allowing compensation for injury when sustained by a workman at one part of a job and refusing it when sustained at another part, although the whole job was ordered by his employer and the employer was equally free from blame throughout. Why so much importance should have been attached to the locus of the accident itself I do not know, for a workman is just as much in his master's employment, acting in the course of that employment, when he is loading goods for him at a distance from his master's premises as when he is delivering the goods at his master's door.

"But I am convinced that it is now too late to go back on the series of cases both here and in England, where the words 'on or in or about' in section 7 have been read as referring to the workman's actual presence at the time of the accident. * * *" Page 599.

The statute of this state quoted above (section 5900) answers conclusively for this jurisdiction the question in his lordship's mind why so much importance should have been attached to the locus of the accident. The act is a restricted one. Employments especially and inherently dangerous to life and limb, and none other, were included. The hazards were the necessary and peculiar hazards attending railroading, factory work, mining, and the like. There is no anomaly in distinguishing between trainmen and yardmen working on or about a railroad, and railroad employés working in a distant office building where they are as secure from the peculiar hazards incident to railroading as the employés of a bank. Likewise, a factory drayman, when in the course of his employment elsewhere than at the factory, is no more exposed to extraordinary risk from the nature or condition of the work carried on there than a grocer's drayman. Consequently, the act was extended, not to employment in the course of the employer's business generally, or wherever conducted, but the employer's business at designated places. The superficies of a mine was particularly described (section 5903), and to ignore the plain limitation to locality would be to ignore the principle of classification which lies at the foundation of the act.

The "on or in or about" limitation has been dropped from the British Workmen's Compensation Act, except with respect to premises on which a principal undertakes to do work which he procures to be executed by subcontractors, and has been omitted from American statutes framed in the light of recent models. The omission accounts for the dearth of helpful American authorities. The radical enlargement of the scope of Workmen's Compensation Acts which the omission accomplishes has been sufficiently indicated.

The court concludes that the word "about," as applied to a mine, fixes the locality of the accident for which compensation may be recovered, and that the accident must occur in such close proximity to the mine that it is within the danger zone necessarily created by those peculiar hazards to workmen which inhere in the business of operating the mine. If the accident occur outside this zone, the distance from the mine, whether very near or very far, is immaterial. In this case the workman was a messenger who had left one mine on an errand and had not arrived at the other. He was injured on the premises of the railway company, which lay between the two mines. The statute defines the term "railway" to include interurban railways (section 5903), and as in the Coylton Coal Company Case, referred to above, the workman could not have accounted for his presence on the railway track, a place itself within the statute, by saying he was about his mine. The petition stated no facts from which it may fairly be inferred that the employés and passengers of the railway company are exposed to the peculiar perils to which mine employés are exposed, and the court declines to assume such to be the fact.

The plaintiff cites the case of Sedlock v. Mining Co., 98 Kan. 680, 159 Pac. 9. In that case the sole question was whether or not the accident arose out of and in the course of employment. The workman was injured in a mine, and the court had no occasion to consider the provision of the statute which is decisive of this case.

Because the petition did not disclose that the accident occurred in or about a mine, the petition failed to state a cause of action, and the judgment of the district court is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

PATTERSON v. UNCLE SAM OIL CO.

(No. 20681.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

JUDGMENT ⟹143(10)—DEFAULT—ABSENCE OF DEFENDANT'S ATTORNEY—SETTING ASIDE.

On the facts stated in the opinion, held, that the trial court erred in overruling the motion to set aside a judgment rendered in the absence of defendant's attorney, and in denying a new trial, although the absence of defendant's attorney at the time of the trial was occasioned by his negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 281.]

Appeal from District Court, Sedgwick County.

Action by Hortense Patterson against the Uncle Sam Oil Company. Default judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to grant a new trial.

Redmond S. Brennan, of Kansas City, Mo., for appellant. Dedrick & Dedrick and Adams & Adams, all of Wichita, for appellee.

PORTER, J. In this case, the only question to be determined is whether the action of the trial court in refusing to set aside a judgment rendered against the defendant on default was, under the circumstances, reversible error.

Hortense Patterson on the 24th of April, 1915, sued the Uncle Sam Oil Company in the district court of Sedgwick county to recover damages alleged to have been sustained through the explosion of kerosene oil in a lamp. The petition alleged that defendant is a corporation with an established place of business in the city of Wichita; that it had been engaged in the wholesale and retail oil business there and kept large quantities of coal oil and gasoline in storage tanks; that its agents and servants mixed and mingled a large quantity of gasoline with a large quantity of coal oil; that defendant being fully aware that the fluids had been so mixed and mingled, and that the mixture would be used in lamps for illumination, and the merchants and storekeepers would sell it for that purpose, and with full knowledge of the dangerous condition and character of the mixture, sold large quantities thereof to a retail grocer in the city of Wichita, who in turn sold a two-gallon can thereof to the plaintiff for a high grade of coal oil. The petition then alleges the explosion of some of this oil in a lamp at the plaintiff's residence by which she received the injuries complained of. The petition concluded with a prayer for $3,000 damages and costs. It appears, also, that her husband brought suit about the same time against the defendant to recover damages for the loss of services of his wife occasioned the same accident. The answer contained a general denial, to which a reply was filed.

On the 9th of November, 1915, the case came regularly on for trial; notice thereof having been posted in the courtroom. The counsel then appearing for the defendant had his office in Kansas City, Mo. In his absence, the case was called for trial and judgment rendered against the defendant for the sum of $2,000 and costs. On the next day, the attorney for the defendant, who had prepared the answer and had expected to try the case, learned of the fact of the judgment, and within three days of the time the judgment was rendered filed a motion for a new trial on all the statutory grounds; among others, "unavoidable casualty and misfortune preventing the defendant from defending the cause." The motion was supported by the affidavit of the attorney reciting the facts as to his want of notice, and stating that he had recently been attorney in a case pending in the same court in which one Jackson sued the defendant, and he had been informed by the clerk of the assignment of the case for trial in sufficient time to enable him to appear; that, upon his representation that he had another case set for trial in Oklahoma on the same date, the judge of the court had courteously postponed the trial of the Jackson case to a later date in order to accommodate him. He alleged that in the present instance he relied upon the custom of the court and of the clerk, and expected to be notified of the assignment of this cause in sufficient time to enable him to appear, and that if he had been notified by telegraph or telephone he would have appeared within a few hours after such notice. He further alleged that the plaintiff's attorney knew his address, had been in correspondence with him, and had offered to settle this case, together with the action brought by plaintiff's husband for $1,000, and, knowing his address, had failed to give him any notice or opportunity to appear and defend. The affidavit stated that the defendant has a valid defense to the cause of action and was at all times ready to try the case when notified.

It appears from the record that the stenographer was not asked to take any notes of the evidence, and that the case was tried without a jury, and on a very slight showing on the part of the plaintiff. Whether there was any evidence at all to show that the defendant had at any time sold a mixture of coal oil and gasoline as alleged in the petition does not appear from the record.

Affidavits were filed contesting defendant's right to a new trial and showing that no general custom or rule obtained in the district court of Sedgwick county requiring notice of the assignment of cases for trial to be given to nonresident counsel. The motion for a new trial was filed within three days after the rendition of the judgment. At the hearing of the motion, the judge stated that it cost the county $75 a day to keep a jury, and further that he believed he had saved the defendant $1,000, inasmuch as he rendered judgment for only $2,000, although the sum prayed for as damages was $3,000. It appears that the defendant then offered to pay into court $75 to reimburse the county and to pay any costs imposed by the court if a new trial were ordered.

It is very clear that the attorney then representing the defendant was negligent in not having some arrangement through local counsel or with the judge or the clerk by which he would be notified when the case would be set for trial. Ordinarily, the negligence and failure of an attorney to look after a cause will be imputed to the party who employs him. On the other hand, it is very clear to our minds that a great injustice has been done the defendant. If this were an action upon a promissory note to which the defendant had no substantial defense or had set up some mere technical defense, the facts might warrant the strict enforcement of court rules. However meritorious the plaintiff's claim in this case may be —and upon that we express no opinion—the action is one of a class wherein charges are frequently trumped up and relied upon as a basis to recover damages. Of course, no reasonable person believes that a reputable business concern like the defendant is guilty of all the things charged in the petition; that it knowingly mixed and mingled kerosene and gasoline and wantonly put it on the market to be sold and used for kerosene, as is repeatedly alleged in the petition. If a similar action had been brought against a business concern located at Wichita represented by resident counsel, it is conceivable that the same situation might arise. In such a case, if it were shown that defendant's attorney had been caught unawares and was unavoidably absent when the case was called, that defendant had a meritorious defense, it would seem harsh and unjust to deprive the defendant of a right to a trial on the merits, although his attorney was wholly at fault. It is not even suggested that the fact defendant is a foreign corporation represented by counsel living in another state furnishes any ground for a different rule.

Defendant's counsel should have taken measures either by the employment of a local attorney to keep informed when the case would be reached for trial, or have made some other arrangements with officers of the court to that effect. It is necessary that the courts should adopt rules for the dispatch of business, and it rests in the sound judicial discretion of the trial judge when to enforce those rules with strictness and when to waive them in the interest of justice; but it should always be borne in mind that courts are established in the first place to do justice, and not merely to enforce rules of practice and procedure. The terms of court in Sedgwick county, except in the summer months, are close together. A continuance of the case, if it could not have been tried again at the same term, need not have occasioned very great delay; and, as against the slight inconvenience to the plaintiff by a continuance, there should have been taken into consideration the great injustice to the defendant from the refusal of another trial. We think that in exercising its discretion the trial court failed to give sufficient weight and consideration to the rights of defendant and the requirements of justice, and therefore that a new trial should have been ordered.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to grant a new trial upon terms to be imposed by the court. All the Justices concurring.

SMITH v. PARMAN. (No. 20894.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION 🔑42—IMMUNITY FROM CIVIL LIABILITY—CITY ATTORNEY.

A city attorney, while engaged in the prosecution of a person charged with the violation of an ordinance, is entitled to the same immunity from civil liability with respect thereto as ordinarily attaches to the office of a public prosecutor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Cent. Dig. §§ 83–86.]

2. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION 🔑42—PERSONS LIABLE—PUBLIC PROSECUTOR.

Irrespective of his motives, a public prosecutor cannot be held liable in a civil action on account of having instituted or maintained a prosecution in that capacity for an alleged violation of the criminal law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Cent. Dig. §§ 83–86.]

Appeal from District Court, Cowley County.

Action for malicious prosecution by Charles W. Smith against John Parman and others. Case dismissed as to defendant Parman, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. T. Atkinson, of Arkansas City, for appellant. John Parman, of Arkansas City, for appellee.

MASON, J. Charles W. Smith brought an action against John Parman and others charging them in several counts with having brought malicious prosecutions against him under the ordinances of a city of the second class. Parman filed a plea in abatement alleging that, at the time of the conduct on his part of which the plaintiff complained, he was the city attorney and was acting in that capacity. The trial court held the plea to be good and dismissed the case as to Parman. The plaintiff appeals. It is conceded that Parman was the city attorney at the time the prosecutions complained of were brought. The method by which that circumstance is brought to the consideration of the court is not important. The case involves the question whether a city attorney is liable in damages to the person injured if he maliciously and without probable cause institutes a prosecution against him under an ordinance.

[1] 1. The statute provides for the appointment of a city attorney, but does not define his duties. Gen. Stat. 1915, § 1684. Doubtless, from the practice in this state the duty of prosecuting violators of the city ordinances is implied from the mere name of the office. In the brief of the appellee a copy of an ordinance is set out giving the city attorney control of such prosecutions. While this is not formally in the record, the accuracy of the copy is not questioned. We regard the city attorney, while engaged in the prosecution of persons charged with offenses against the ordinances, as entitled to the same privileges and immunities that ordinarily attach to the office of a public prosecutor. A proceeding of that kind is essentially a criminal action. Neitzel v. City of Concordia, 14 Kan. 447.

[2] 2. In one of the few discussions by textwriters of the liability of a public prosecutor to an action for malicious prosecution, it is said:

> "A prosecuting attorney, being a judicial officer of the state, is not liable in damages for acts done in the course of his duty, although willful, malicious, or libelous."

This text is obviously based upon Griffith v. Slinkard, 146 Ind. 117, 44 N. E. 1001; the other cases cited in connection with it not bearing directly upon the matter. The reference to the prosecutor as a judicial officer might seem open to question. Much of his work is advocacy. But the important matter of determining what prosecutions shall be instituted is committed in a considerable degree to his sound judgment, and in the exercise of that function he acts at least in a quasi judicial capacity. Judges are exempt from civil liability for official acts even if corruptly done; the reason being that the independence of their conduct is thereby promoted, to the benefit of the public. 15 R. C. L. 543; 23 Cyc. 567, 568; 17 A. & E. Encyc. of L. 725. Grand jurors are given the same immunity with respect to indictments returned by them, for a similar reason. 20 Cyc. 1356; 17 A. & E. Encyc. of L. 1302. The public prosecutor, in deciding whether a particular prosecution shall be instituted or followed up, performs much the same function as a grand jury. If, while he has a question of that kind under advisement, he is charged with notice that he may have to defend an action for malicious prosecution in case of a failure to convict, his course may be influenced by that consideration, to the disadvantage of the public. Communications made to a public prosecutor relating to offenses against the law are treated as privileged, because "persons having knowledge regarding the commission of a crime ought to be encouraged to reveal to the prosecuting attorney fully, freely, and unreservedly the source and extent of their information." Michael v. Matson, 81 Kan. 360, 366, 105 Pac. 537, 540 [L. R. A. 1915D, 1]. We think the reason for granting immunity to judges and grand jurors applies with practically equal force to a public prosecutor in his relations to actions to punish infractions of the law. There is no great danger that abuse of power will be fostered by this exemption from civil liability, for the prosecutor is at all times under the wholesome restraint imposed by the risk of being called to account criminally for official misconduct (Gen. Stat. 1915, § 3588), or of being ousted from office on that account (Gen. Stat. 1915, § 7603).

The judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

McHENRY v. KANSAS CITY. (No. 21197.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Municipal Corporations ⟹812(2)—Personal Injury—Notice of Injury—Statute.

Under section 1460 of the General Statutes of 1915, before commencing an action for personal injuries against a city of the first class conducted under commission government, it is necessary, within four months, to file a written statement with the city clerk, giving the time, place, and circumstances relating to the injuries sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1697.]

2. Municipal Corporations ⟹812(6)—Personal Injury—Notice—Sufficiency.

The written statement of injuries, which is required by statute as a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action against a city for such injuries, must be sufficiently accurate that the city will not be misled thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1701.]

3. Municipal Corporations ⟹812(7)—Personal Injury—Notice—Discrepancy Between Notice and Petition.

Where a petition alleged that plaintiff sustained injuries by a fall on a public sidewalk and alleged that the accident occurred on January 19, 1916, and a copy of the statutory written statement attached to the petition recited that the injuries were sustained on January 12, 1916, the discrepancy between the dates is one of substance tending to mislead the city, and not a mere defect in the form of the statement, and a demurrer to the petition should be sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1702.]

Appeal from District Court, Wyandotte County.

Action by Marie McHenry against the City of Kansas City, Kansas. Demurrer to petition overruled, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded, with instructions to sustain the demurrer to plaintiff's petition.

H. J. Smith, Lee Judy, and Thomas M. Van Cleave, all of Kansas City, Kan., for appellant. Milton Schwind, of Kansas City, Mo., and Paul H. Ditzen, of Kansas City, Kan., for appellee.

DAWSON, J. The plaintiff brought this action for damages against the city of Kansas City on account of injuries which she suffered by falling on a public sidewalk which the city had knowingly and negligently permitted to remain for a long time covered with ice. Her petition alleged that she received these injuries on or about January 19, 1916, and it concluded with the following allegation:

> "Plaintiff further alleges that within four months after said injury complained of she filed with the city clerk of Kansas City, Wyandotte county, Kan., a statement setting forth the time, place, and circumstances of the injuries complained of; that plaintiff failed to state therein the exact date of injury. A copy of said statement is attached to this petition, marked 'Exhibit A.'"

Exhibit A, in part, reads:

> "Statement. In re: Marie McHenry v. Kansas City, Kansas.
> "The undersigned claimant states that on or about the 12th day of January, 1916, * * * she * * * slipped and fell on the sidewalk striking the bottom of her spine and coccyx on the ice and hard sidewalk; * * * that the ice had been on said sidewalk for a long period of time prior to the time plaintiff was injured, and a dangerous and defective place existed for pedestrians at said place, etc."

The city's demurrer being overruled below, the cause is here for review.

It will be noted that the statement giving notice to the city of the plaintiff's injuries recites that the accident occurred on or about January 12, 1916. Her petition alleged that it occurred on January 19, 1916.

[1, 2] The statute requiring that the city be notified as a condition precedent to the maintenance of such an action as this reads:

> "No action shall be maintained by any person or corporation in any court for damages on account of injury to person or property unless the person or corporation injured or damaged shall, within four months thereafter, and prior to the bringing of the suit, file with the city clerk a written statement, giving the time and place of the happening of the accident or injury received, and the circumstances relating thereto." Gen. St. 1915, § 1460.

[3] The statement requires that the time of the accident be given. This is only fair. The city should have an opportunity to investigate the facts and merits of the claim, and to prepare its defense against demands which are false, frivolous, or extravagant. For the purpose of such an investigation, an accurate statement of the time is material and important. It is an element of substance and not of mere form in the making of the statement required by the statute. This court is always lenient and liberal as to mere matters of form, and will overlook a defect in the statutory statement which does not or cannot mislead the city. Cook v. Topeka, 75 Kan. 534, 90 Pac. 244. But here the gross discrepancy between the date of the accident and the date alleged in the statement could not fail to prejudice the city and to mislead and frustrate it in any independent investigation of the facts which it may have undertaken. Naturally, the city officials would inquire as to the existence and quantity of ice on the sidewalk on January 12th. The accident occurred seven days later. With our variable Kansas winter climate, it is entirely unlikely that the weather conditions of January 12th would be the same as those of January 19th.

Liberality and leniency may excuse defects in the statement as to the accuracy of the circumstances under which the alleged injuries were sustained, and even a loose description of the place, as in Cook v. Topeka, supra, may be overlooked; but it is not easy to see how a gross discrepancy as to the time of the accident can be excused. The time—not necessarily the hour, but the date—is well known by the plaintiff. Therefore the statute requiring the statement to give the time must be complied with. To say that the claimant may name a false and misleading date instead of the correct one—here the discrepancy was a week—"is not," as the Connecticut Supreme Court says, "to construe the statute, but to repeal it." Gardner v. City of New London, 63 Conn. 267, 28 Atl. 42. In that case, the statutory statement gave the date of the injury as May 5th. The correct date was May 2d, and it was held that the plaintiff could not recover. In City of Fort Wayne v. Bender, 57 Ind. App. 689, 105 N. E. 949, the notice of the injury stated that it occurred on April 18th. The petition and the evidence established that it occurred on April 28th. Judgment for plaintiff was reversed. Other cases to the same effect are Ouimette v. City of Chicago, 242 Ill. 501, 90 N. E. 300, and Carter v. City of St. Joseph, 152 Mo. App. 503, 133 S. W. 851. In Taylor v. Peck, 29 R. I. 481, 72 Atl. 645, a variance of one day between the date alleged in the notice and the date shown by the evidence was held fatal to a recovery. We note that in Murphy v. City of St. Paul, 130 Minn. 410, 153 N. W. 619, a misstatement of one day in the date given in the notice was held not fatal to a recovery. That was a case where the injury was caused by a defective sidewalk. Perhaps a distinction could be based on that point. A defective sidewalk would remain defective until the fact of the defect could be investigated. Ice on a sidewalk would only remain until the weather moderated. See note in Ann. Cas. 1913A, 671.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to sustain the demurrer to plaintiff's petition. All the Justices concurring.

STATE v. KING. (No. 21249.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. JURY 🔑131(15)—EXAMINATION OF JURORS—QUESTION.

On the voir dire examination of jurors in a prosecution for murder, counsel for defendant asked a juror whether, in case the evidence showed that about six months before the crime was committed the defendant was intoxicated and made a threat against the deceased, that would be "evidence in your mind that he was guilty of the crime charged against him." Held, that an objection to the question was properly sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. § 579.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1172(2)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTION.

Besides giving the usual instruction that the jury might properly consider the interest of any witness in the result of the trial as affecting his credibility, the court also instructed:

"You are further instructed that the defendant is a competent witness in this case, and you must consider his testimony in arriving at your verdict; but, in determining what weight and credibility you will give to his testimony in making up your verdict, you may take into consideration, as affecting his credibility, his interest in the result of the case, and that he is the accused party on the trial, testifying in his own behalf."

Held, that while, ordinarily, the giving of such an instruction under such circumstances is not approved, it cannot be regarded as error, since it was natural for the jury to consider the defendant's interest in the result, as well as their duty to consider it in determining the credit to be given to his testimony.

3. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑775(2)—INSTRUCTIONS—ALIBI.

The instructions relating to the defense of an alibi examined, and held sufficient.

4. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑824(5)—INSTRUCTIONS—DEFENSE.

In a prosecution for murder, defendant offered evidence tending to show that, because of the crippled condition of his right hand, it was a physical impossibility for him to hold and discharge an automatic pistol in the manner charged in the information and as testified to by witnesses for the state. No special instruction submitting this defense was asked. Held, that it was not error to fail to give an instruction directing the jury's attention specially thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1999.]

5. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑941(1)—NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS—IMPEACHING EVIDENCE.

On the facts stated in the opinion, there was no error in overruling the motion for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2328, 2330.]

Appeal from District Court, Sedgwick County.

Frank King was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. McGill, Chas. B. Hudson, and Clyde M. Hudson, all of Wichita, for appellant. S. M. Brewster, Atty. Gen., F. P. Lindsay, of Topeka, and Ross McCormick, Glenn Porter, and H. C. Castor, all of Wichita, for the State.

PORTER, J. The appellant was convicted of the murder of one William Sutton. The abstract he presents is very incomplete and inadequate, but there is a statement that the appellant is without means, and that his counsel was obliged to pay the expense of the appeal, and for that reason did not abstract all the evidence, or all the proceedings. We are not informed as to the degree of murder of which defendant was convicted; and only fragmentary and unrelated portions of the evidence are furnished, although there is a contention that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict and judgment. A supplemental abstract on behalf of the state affords no additional information, except the statement that shortly after the crime was committed nine suspected persons were arrested, charged with the murder, and were given preliminary examinations; that Tom Peel and the appellant were bound over and charged jointly with the crime; that they demanded separate trials; that Peel was acquitted; that at the first trial of the appellant the jury disagreed, and on the second trial he was convicted.

William Sutton was murdered in his grocery store at night by persons who were attempting robbery. Mr. Wilheit, who was in the store at the time, was shot by one of the robbers and seriously injured. He was a witness for the state, and described some of the circumstances and conditions at the time and place of the murder, and testified that the robbers had handkerchiefs across their faces, and he did not recognize either of them. It is contended that he was called as a witness for the sale purpose of affecting the sympathy of the jury, because of his crippled condition. It is sufficient to say that there is no merit in the contention.

Mr. Routan and Mr. Younkin, two other clerks, were in the store and testified. Their testimony is that both of the robbers had handkerchiefs about their faces. Younkin identified the appellant as the one who fired the shot which killed Sutton. He testified that the weapon used was an automatic pistol, which appellant held in his right hand, and witness did not notice anything peculiar in the way the weapon was held, but that appellant was not assisted by the left hand in discharging it. His testimony is that he had known the defendant as a customer during the winter before the crime was committed and had waited on him several times. On the occasion of the murder he recognized appellant as some one he had seen, but could not recall his name until he thought about it afterwards. The court sustained objections to some questions asked of this witness on cross-examination, which furnishes a basis for a contention of error; but a careful examination satisfies us that the court did not unduly limit the cross-examination.

[1] On the examination of the jurors, counsel for appellant asked one of them, in substance, the question whether, in case the evidence showed that about six months before the crime the appellant was intoxicated and was in the company of his wife, and said "he was going to get Mr. Sutton," would that be evidence in your mind that he was guilty of the crime charged against him? The court properly sustained an objection. The juror could not give an intelligent answer to such a question, without knowing in advance what the court would instruct him in regard to his duties as a juror in considering and weighing the evidence. Nor would any answer he might give to the question be of assistance in disclosing his qualifications to sit as a juror. If such a question were proper, then any evidence which either party thought might be offered could, with equal propriety, be submitted in advance to a juror, and his opinion asked as to what effect it would have on his verdict, in the event he was accepted as a juror.

[2] The court gave the usual instruction that the jury are the exclusive judges of the weight of the evidence, the credibility of the witnesses, and might properly consider the interest of any witness in the result of the trial as affecting his credibility. The court also gave the following instruction:

> "You are further instructed that the defendant is a competent witness in this case, and you must consider his testimony in arriving at your verdict; but, in determining what weight and credibility you will give to his testimony in making up your verdict, you may take into consideration, as affecting his credibility, his interest in the result of the case, and that he is the accused party on the trial, testifying in his own behalf."

It is claimed that this was prejudicial error, and specially so in view of the fact that the court had already given the usual instruction just referred to. A similar instruction has been condemned by other courts, and in a number of states has been held reversible error. Madison v. State, 6 Okl. Cr. 356, 118 Pac. 617, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 484. It has also been held objectionable by the Supreme Court of Illinois in a number of cases, on the ground that it has a tendency to lead the jury to treat the testimony of the defendant differently from that of other witnesses. People v. Gerold, 265 Ill. 448, 107 N. E. 165, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 636, and cases cited in the opinion. In State v. Gray, 90 Kan. 486, 135 Pac. 566, it was held that it was not error to refuse an instruction specially cautioning the jury to consider the interest, bias, or prejudice of witnesses for the prosecution in a liquor case, who were connected with or in the employ of the State Temperance Union and had visited the defendant's place for the purpose of procuring evidence. The reasons given in the opinion are that:

> "Care should be taken to avoid magnifying or minifying improperly the testimony of any witness or class of witnesses. No good reason to specially caution the jury appeared, and the general charge was sufficient"—citing State v. Spiker, 88 Kan. 644, 129 Pac. 195.

See 90 Kan. 487, 135 Pac. 566.

In the latter case it was held that there was no reason to specially caution the jury as to the testimony of the two principal witnesses in behalf of the state; it being claimed that the witnesses were persons who had made purchases of intoxicating liquors from the appellant for the purpose of procuring evidence. In State v. Buffington, 71 Kan. 804, 81 Pac. 465, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 154, it was held that:

> "An instruction that 'the defendant is a competent witness in his own behalf, and you have a right to consider his evidence and are to give it such faith and credit as you believe it entitled to receive,' when considered in connection with other instructions given, did not imply that any consideration of defendant's evidence was optional with the jury." Syl. 5.

Ordinarily no good reason can be suggested why defendant's testimony should be singled out specially by an instruction of this character, and more particularly where the court gives the usual instruction as to all the witnesses. Every one knows, however, that jurors, like most all persons who hear an accused testify in his own behalf, naturally take into consideration the very things which the court called attention to in the instruction. In People v. Herrick, 59 Mich. 563, 26 N. W. 767, the instruction to consider the relation the defendant bears to the case was held not error, since that was what any jury would in fact do in such a case; and in Minich v. People, 8 Colo. 440, 9 Pac. 4, the court held that the jury was not only at liberty to consider the interest, but it was their duty to do so. Substantially the same instruction was held not to be error in State v. Bursaw, 74 Kan. 473, 87 Pac. 183. While the giving of the special instruction complained of is not approved, we do not regard it as prejudicial error, since it was proper and natural for the jury to consider the defendant's interest in the result, in determining the weight and credibility of his testimony.

[3] The appellant produced some testimony tending to prove that he was not in Wichita on the night of the murder, and there is a contention that the court failed to instruct upon the defense of an alibi; but in one instruction the court charged that it was the duty of the jury to acquit if they believed from the evidence that defendant was not present at the time the offense was committed, and in another charged that the burden of proving his presence at the time and place devolved upon the state. Instruction No. 12 concludes with these words:

> "So that if, after a full and fair consideration of all the facts and circumstances in evidence, you have a reasonable doubt as to whether the defendant was at the place of the alleged crime at the time of its commission, or was at another place, you are bound to give the defendant the benefit of such doubt and acquit him."

We confess our inability to understand the statement in appellant's brief that the court gave no instruction on the question of an alibi, or the basis for the contention that instruction No. 12 is insufficient. There was no request for any special instruction.

[4] Two physicians testified that the appellant was crippled in the right hand, the thumb being entirely off, and in their opinion that he could not discharge the pistol in the manner described by the witnesses for the state. Another witness, who was not a physician, testified to the same effect. The evidence raised an issue of fact for the jury to pass upon, and there is no force in the claim that the conviction should be set aside as contrary to the undisputed evidence. No instruction was requested submitting this defense, and in view of the general instructions it was not error for the court to fail to give a special one in regard to this claim of defense.

[5] On the hearing of the motion for a new trial, counsel offered to show by a witness that he was employed by the county to investigate the circumstances of the crime; that he talked with Routan, and asked him for a description of the parties who were in the store when Sutton was killed, and that Routan said he was so scared at the time the store was being robbed he could not give an accurate description of the robbers, and did not believe that he would be able to positively identify the men; further, that Routan gave him a different description of the men from that testified to at the trial. The only purpose the evidence could serve would be to impeach Routan as a witness, and no foundation was laid for that purpose at the trial. He was not asked anything about these statements, and therefore the evidence was not such as to entitle the defendant to a new trial.

At the hearing of the motion it was shown that during the progress of the trial one of the jurors went to sleep or dozed; that the court spoke to and admonished him at the time. The juror testified that he only dozed for a second or two, and thought it was the only time he did so during the trial, and he believed he had not missed any of the testimony. The trial court passed upon the evidence, and considered that appellant's rights had not been prejudiced by the occurrence, and we do not think the matter of sufficient importance to call for further comment.

We have considered carefully a number of assignments of error which are not argued in the brief of appellant. We find no substantial ground for reversal, and the judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

STATE v. HARRIS. (No. 21236.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION ⟹190 — INDICTMENT—CONVICTION FOR ATTEMPT TO COMMIT STATUTORY RAPE.

Under a charge of statutory rape, a conviction for an attempt to commit the offense—not an assault with intent to commit—can be had, although no specific acts towards the commission of the full offense are set out.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 596–603.]

2. RAPE ⟹53(1)—ATTEMPT TO COMMIT STATUTORY RAPE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

A girl 12 years old, corroborated as to certain parts of her story, testified to a completed offense. Held, that in view of all the evidence conviction of an attempt to commit the offense was not error.

3. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑483—RAPE 🔑38(1)—ARGUMENTATIVE EVIDENCE — IMMATERIAL EVIDENCE.

Medical evidence touching the possibility of self-inflicted or accidental injury which, if expert at all, was merely argumentative, was properly rejected. Likewise evidence touching the possibility of distinguishing between certain kinds of blood stain—the stained clothing involved herein not having been preserved or described.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1071, 1075; Rape, Cent. Dig. §§ 48, 50.]

4. RAPE 🔑38(1)—EVIDENCE—COLLATERAL ISSUES.

Evidence that the defendant's wife and the mother of the injured girl frequented certain Mexican quarters, and received visits from the men there, and that the wife of the defendant ran away with a Mexican, was offered to show a conspiracy between the two women to get rid of the defendant. Held, that such evidence was properly rejected because involving a collateral issue, and because it would tend only to affect the credibility of the wife who was not a witness and the other woman whose impeachment was not attempted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. §§ 48, 50.]

Appeal from District Court, Chase County.

Earl Harris was convicted of an attempt to commit statutory rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Dennis Madden, of Emporia, for appellant. S. M. Brewster, Atty. Gen., Charles E. Davis, of Cottonwood Falls, and H. E. Ganse and R. M. Hamer, both of Emporia, for the State.

WEST, J. The defendant was charged with statutory rape on a girl 12 years old. He was convicted of an attempt to commit the offense, and appeals, assigning as errors the rejection of certain evidence, giving and refusing certain instructions and the denial of a new trial.

[1] The girl testified to the completed offense and told of certain laceration. Her mother testified to the latter and to blood stains on clothing which was burned. Under the rule already declared by this court a conviction for an attempt—not assault with intent to commit—could be had under the charge of the full offense without the allegation of any specific act towards its commission. In re Lloyd, Petitioner, 51 Kan. 501, 33 Pac. 307, and State v. Guthridge, 88 Kan. 846, 129 Pac. 1143.

[2] Attention is called to State v. Mitchell, 54 Kan. 516, 38 Pac. 810. But there the girl was of age and told a preposterous story entirely uncorroborated, and it was held that a conviction for an attempt only would not be permitted to stand. Here the story, while remarkable, was not impossible, and there was corroboration, which things, added to the tender age of the child, take this out of the rule of the Mitchell Case.

[3] Medical evidence as to the possibility that the injury was self-inflicted or accidental and as to the possibility of distinguishing between different kinds of blood stain was rejected, but without error, because the one if expert at all was merely argumentative, and the other was immaterial, as the stained clothing had not been preserved, and no attempt to describe it was made.

[4] To establish the theory that the defendant's wife had conspired with her sister-in-law, the girl's mother, to get rid of the husband, so that the two women could associate with certain Mexicans, the defendant offered to show by the city marshal that the two associated together and visited certain Mexican quarters, and were visited by the Mexicans, and that the defendant's wife ran away with one of them just before the trial. The girl's mother testified that her sister-in-law was at her house sick when the offense occurred, and that the defendant ate supper there. The defendant was not permitted to testify that his wife went away with a Mexican. The rejected evidence was not only calculated to bring in a collateral issue, but even if admitted would not have tended materially to show that the girl's father, who swore to the complaint, was induced or inspired thereunto by his wife through the instigation of the defendant's wife, and even if he were the defendant's guilt or innocence would not thereby be established or affected—merely the credibility of the wife, who was not a witness, and the mother, whose impeachment was not attempted.

It was not necessary to instruct concerning an overt act towards the commission of the full offense more definitely than was done. The charge given fairly and correctly gave the law of the case.

The judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

RODARMEL v. CAREY SALT CO.

(No. 20915.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑382 — INJURY TO SERVANT — VALIDITY OF RELEASE — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

Under section 5922 of the General Statutes of 1915, any release of liability by a workman or any agreement for or award of compensation to a workman made under the act is void as against the workman unless it is filed by the employer in the office of the clerk of the district court of the county where the accident occurred within 60 days after it is made.

Appeal from District Court, Reno County.

Action for compensation by Clarence H. Rodarmel, employé, against the Carey Salt Company, employer. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

C. M. Williams, of Hutchinson, for appellant. B. A. Earhart, of Hutchinson, for appellee.

JOHNSTON, C. J. In this action, Clarence H. Rodarmel asks for compensation from his employer, the Carey Salt Company, for an accidental injury to his leg and hip received while he was in the employment of the company. More than two months after the accident occurred, the parties arrived at an agreement and settlement of the compensation plaintiff was to receive for his injury. Payment of the amount agreed upon was made, and the following release was executed:

> "Received of the Carey Salt Company $133.00 making in all, with the weekly payments received by me and the money paid by the Carey Salt Company to the Stewart Hospital and Dr. Brownlee, $287.25, such being the final payment for compensation under Kansas Workmen's Compensation Act and for all damage and injury from the accident which occurred to me August 13, 1915, in the machine shop of the Carey Salt Company and while in their employ."

Afterwards he brought suit, alleging that he had sustained a permanent injury; that an agreement had been made between them that defendant was to pay hospital and medical bills and compensation at $12 per week until he was able to resume work, plus $5 per week for his board during that time; that defendant had paid $133 as wages and board and $154.25 for hospital and medical bills; but that since that time no further payments had been made by defendant. The answer of the defendant set up the settlement, payment, and release. In reply, the plaintiff alleged that the defendant had not filed the agreement and release from liability with the clerk of the district court, as required by the Workmen's Compensation Act. The case was submitted to a jury, and the court instructed that an agreement and release is not binding and effective unless it is filed in the office of the clerk of the district court within 60 days after it is made. It was conceded that the release executed was not filed as required by the act. The jury found that plaintiff was totally incapacitated for 25 weeks by reason of the injury, for which they allowed him $9 per week, and that thereafter there was partial incapacity for 104 weeks, and for that time they awarded him $4.50 per week.

The question presented on appeal is: Did the settlement and release conceded to have been legally made become a nullity through the failure of the defendant to file it with the clerk of the district court? The Workmen's Compensation Act then in force provided that:

> "It shall be the duty of the employer to file or cause to be filed every release of liability hereunder, every agreement for or award of compensation, or modifying an agreement for or award of compensation, under this act, if not filed by the committee or arbitrator, to which he is a party, or a sworn copy thereof, in the office of the district court in the county in which the accident occurred within sixty days after it is made, otherwise it shall be void as against the workman," etc. Gen. Stat. 1915, § 5922.

As will be seen, the provision covers every release of liability and every agreement for or award of compensation, and provides that, if it is not filed in the office of the district court within 60 days after it is made, it shall be void as against the workman. Whether the purpose was publicity for the protection of the employé, or security for employers, or to serve some beneficial public purpose, it was competent for the Legislature to provide that such releases and agreements should be made a matter of record. In case it is not filed, the agreement and release is ineffectual and the parties are set back where they were before a settlement was negotiated. No rights are therefore sacrificed, and the requirement that it shall be filed of record is not a burdensome one.

We think the court ruled correctly, and therefore its judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

WESTLING v. ATCHISON, T. & S. F. RY. CO. (No. 20777.)*

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Master and Servant ⟹278(18)—Action Under Federal Employers' Liability Act—Evidence—Negligence.

The evidence reviewed, and held to support the plaintiff's claim that the death of her husband was caused by the negligence of the defendant in the manner alleged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 969, 971.]

2. Master and Servant ⟹278(18) — Injury to Servant—Evidence.

Instructions examined, and no error found therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 969, 971.]

Appeal from District Court, Cowley County.

Action by Elsie Westling, administratrix of the estate of Charles Westling, deceased, against the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. R. Smith, O. J. Wood, A. A. Scott, and Harlow Hurley, all of Topeka, for appellant. C. L. Swarts and Jackson & Noble, all of Winfield, for appellee.

WEST, J. Plaintiff recovered a judgment for $12,000 for the death of her husband under the federal Employers' Liability Act (Act Cong. April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65 [U. S. Comp. St. 1916, §§ 8657-8665]); he having been killed by a fall from the tender of an engine on which he was fireman, the allegation being that the fall was caused by violently and suddenly and without notice jerking the tender, throwing the deceased therefrom. The defendant appeals. The complaints presented in the brief are that there was no evidence of mismanagement of the engine and that instruction No. 8 was bad. The answer presented a general denial and plea of assumption of risk.

[1] On behalf of the defendant, a railway mail clerk, a conductor, a brakeman, a rear brakeman, engineer, and two passengers all testified, in substance, that there was no violent jerking or rough handling of the train. The engineer testified that he saw the deceased standing on the coal tender about two or three feet from the side of the tank, that when he missed him he started back, and found him lying about 200 feet from the west end of the curve over which the train had passed. On redirect examination he testified:

> "When I am drifting down the way I was, I have perfect control of the train with the air. I had no trouble stopping. After I saw the fireman was gone, I didn't stop immediately. I looked for him around the train before I stopped. It would take about ten seconds to stop the train, if I wanted to. The reason I didn't stop instantly was because I thought he might be on the train. At the time I looked back and saw him standing on the car in the tender, I hadn't reached the point of the curve. The curve is just about at the public crossing. Just as I released the air I looked back. He was standing there when I had released the air. I just glanced up and saw him. At that time there was no jar or jerk."

A witness for the plaintiff testified that:

> He was riding on the train with his wife. "A sudden lurch of the train attracted my attention at the time. The train stopped after running one-half to three-quarters of a mile after the lurch. The conductor and brakeman got off the train, walked forward, and then ran back. The train was backed up to where the fireman was found. The fireman was dead when found. The fireman was found at about the same place the lurch occurred. We were lurched or jerked back to our seats. It was a sudden starting and stopping. This lurch would have thrown a person standing in the aisle of the coach from their feet. The passengers in the coach remarked that the lurch was very sudden."

A former section foreman of the company, who was on the train, testified:

> "After I left Chautauqua Springs that day, there came a sudden jerk, forward and back. I supposed it was the air brake. It was a sudden quick jerk, forward first, and then jerked backward. It was something very uncommon for a train to do, running like that; it was running 15 or 20 miles an hour. This jerk was of a nature sufficient to call my attention to it. I have been jerked around that way on side tracks, but I never was jerked that way while riding in a coach. When the jerk first happened, I thought it was a car off. The jerk was something unusual in my experience. A man standing in the aisle would have had to grab at something to have stood on his feet. * * * This sudden jerk was the same place where the man was found. The jerk that I have mentioned produced excitement among the passengers."

This witness' wife testified concerning the jerk:

> "It was something very unusual, that I had never had while riding on a train. The jerk went on for a while. It finally stopped. This jerk was the only jerk I experienced while on the train. I heard something said by some one while I was on the train with reference to the jerk. This jerk, it was sudden; I feared it was a wreck." "This jerk was so sudden that I felt it was a wreck, and that was the first thought that came to me, and I went to praying."

A daughter of the witness just mentioned testified:

> "After the train left Chautauqua, there was a very severe jerk. Any one standing would have had to hold onto something to stand on his feet. I was sitting with my mother in the rear coach. It was before the train stopped. After this severe jerk, the train ran a ways and stopped."

Special questions submitted by the plaintiff were answered to the effect that the fireman was thrown off the tender by reason of the sudden and violent jerk of the train, caused by the operation or management of the engine. Questions submitted by the defendant were answered to the effect that the deceased had had five years' experience as a trainman, and had been over the run 26 times a week; that the danger of standing upon the coal in the tender was as apparent to him as to defendant or its other employés in charge of the train; that he was capable of knowing and measuring the danger thereof; also that the negligence of the defendant caused or contributed to the death, that it consisted of a sudden jerk of the engine, and that the deceased was not guilty of contributory negligence. In view of the evidence referred to and the findings, the first contention of the defendant that there was no evidence of mismanagement, or of any unusual jerk or lurch to the tender, and no evidence to support the findings, cannot be sustained. Certainly the testimony on the part of the plaintiff was sufficient basis for finding and concluding that the death was caused by being thrown from the tender on account of the sudden jerk of the engine.

[2] It is argued that the eighth instruction was vicious, because inferentially authorizing the jury to find for the plaintiff if he fell by reason of a lurch or jerk, regardless of whether such lurch or jerk was ordinary or extraordinary, or whether or not caused by the negligence of the engineer in the management of the engine. It is said that it presented the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, and gave the jury license to find that evidence of a jerk necessarily meant a jerk caused by the negligence of the engineer. The instruction complained of stated that the plaintiff relied upon a chain of facts and circumstances which she claimed were sufficient to charge the defendant with wrongfully causing the death of her husband, and as constituting negligence on the part of the defendant, and continued:

> "A given fact may be proven by circumstances, as well as by direct testimony, and in this case, if you believe the facts and circumstances proven are consistent with each other, and inconsistent with any other reasonable hypothesis than that the defeased fell from said train by reason of a lurch or jerk, if you find that any such lurch or jerk was made, and was thereby killed, then you would be justified in finding that the deceased fell from such train by reason of such lurch or jerk."

It is stated in the plaintiff's brief that in the other instructions the court explained to the jury that, before the plaintiff could recover, she must prove negligence on the part of the defendant, and show that it and its employés did not exercise ordinary care in the management of the train, and that by reason of the want of ordinary care the fireman was thrown from the tender and killed. Assuming this to be correct, the charge thus given, when connected with the quoted portion of instruction No. 8, seems fairly and correctly to have stated the law of the case, that in order for the plaintiff to recover the jury must believe from the evidence and all the circumstances shown that the lurch was caused by the negligence of the defendant in the operation of its train, and that the fall from the tender was caused by the lurch. See Philadelphia & R. Ry. Co. v. Maryland (C. C. A.) 239 Fed. 1.

The judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

FRITTS v. REIDEL et al. (No. 20738.)*

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. JUDGMENT ⟹190—MOTION FOR JUDGMENT —VACATION.

Where a defendant is permitted to file an amended answer after his adversary's motion for judgment has been sustained, the granting of such permission is, in effect, an informal setting aside of the order sustaining the motion for judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 351.]

2. ATTACHMENT ⟹349—REDELIVERY BOND—SUFFICIENCY OF ANSWER.

An answer pleading a defense to an action on a redelivery bond examined, and held sufficient against a motion for judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attachment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1257-1271.]

3. ATTACHMENT ⟹352—REDELIVERY BOND—ACTION — INSTRUCTION — WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

Where the terms of a written redelivery bond are simple and easily understood, and the defense sought to be made against it is one of fraud and misrepresentation, in that the bondsman could not read, and that he had signed it in reliance on the explanation of its terms made to him by the agent of the party seeking to enforce it, and that the bond contained terms not explained to him, the trial court should instruct the jury that the evidence to maintain such a defense should be clear, decided, and satisfactory (Bank v. Reid, 86 Kan. 245, 120 Pac. 339); and the ordinary stereotyped instruction that a "preponderance of the evidence" will defeat a recovery is insufficient, where a more precise statement of the law of evidence relating to a defense based on allegations of fraud and misrepresentation to defeat a written instrument is requested.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attachment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1304, 1305.]

Appeal from District Court, Sheridan County.

Action by V. A. Fritts against Joe Reidel and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and new trial awarded.

John R. Parsons, of Wakeeney, for appellant. W. H. Clark, of Hoxie, for appellees.

DAWSON, J. This was an action on a bond for the redelivery of a mare, which the plaintiff had subjected to an attachment in an action before a justice of the peace. When the justice gave judgment for plaintiff, the attached property was ordered to be delivered to the constable and sold. The mare was withheld and its delivery refused. The defendant bondsman answered that he could not read the English language, and that he had signed the bond at the request of plaintiff's attorney, who at the time told him:

> "All it will mean is that you simply stand as surety that this mare will be here at this place [the debtor's farm] on the day of the trial next Wednesday. * * * That the defendant never knew, until he was sued on said bond, what said bond contained or what said bond meant; * * * that the said redelivery bond signed by him is entirely different from the said oral contract agreed upon by and between said attorney and agent of plaintiff, as to what said bond was to contain and as to what said bond was to mean when reduced to writing; that after said oral contract was made, as to what said bond was to mean as aforesaid, the said attorney did willfully and fraudulently substitute an entirely different contract from the oral contract and agreement made before the signing of the said bond, as to what the said bond when reduced to writing was to contain and was to mean; and that the defendant, without any knowledge whatever of the said fraud on plaintiff's part, signed said redelivery bond in good faith, relying on the honesty of the plaintiff's agent and attorney," etc.

The conditions of the bond were:

> "Now, we, the undersigned, are held and firmly bound to said constable, in the sum of $500, that we will safely keep said property and return the same upon the close of the trial of the above-entitled action, if the same shall be ordered by said court to be returned to said constable or his successors; if these conditions be performed, then this bond be void, otherwise to remain in full force and effect."

The defendant prevailed. The plaintiff assigns errors.

[1] Plaintiff first complains that the defendant was allowed to file a second amended answer, after plaintiff's motion for judgment had been sustained. While apparently no motion was filed to set aside the judgment, the defendant's application to file his answer alleged:

> "That the said defendant has paid the cost ordered to be paid in said action, and that this defendant has a good defense to this cause of action as set out in said defendant's amended answer, which defendant prays leave to file now in this court. That this defendant has never delayed the trial of this cause of action on purpose or otherwise, and is now ready and will go into trial of this action at this term of court, if permitted to file his said amended answer."

⟹For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*Rehearing denied July 11, 1917.

It was on this showing that the defendant was permitted to file his second amended answer, and the permission thus given amounted to an order setting aside its previous order sustaining the motion for judgment already entered. This, in effect, was what was done; somewhat informal, and perhaps irregular, but it does not rise to the gravity of reversible error. The court undoubtedly had power to set aside its previous order, and the allowance of belated pleadings was within its discretion. Bank v. Badders, 96 Kan. 533, 152 Pac. 651.

[2] The second amended answer pleaded a defense sufficient to withstand the motion for judgment lodged against it. Plaintiff argues that defendant was presumed to know the law and his legal obligation thereunder. Very true, but the defendant was not bound by the terms of the bond and their legal consequences if he was misinformed of the extent of his obligation by plaintiff's attorney and relied thereon, and did not knowingly or understandingly sign the bond. Perhaps that was not true, but it can hardly be said that his plea did not raise at least a narrow issue of fact for the consideration of the jury, and it could not be arbitrarily overridden on a motion for judgment; nor would it have been proper for the court to usurp the jury's functions by directing a verdict.

[3] Error is assigned on one of the instructions, the substance of which was that it devolved upon the defendant to show by a preponderance of the evidence that the contract (bond) sued on had been fraudulently substituted for another—the one explained to the defendant by the plaintiff's attorney, and that—

> "if he did show by a preponderance of the evidence that the contract sued on had been substituted fraudulently for another which he had meant to sign then the defendant was entitled to judgment."

Plaintiff contends that this instruction was wrong; that the court should have instructed the jury that the evidence of substitution should be clear, decided, and satisfactory. The latter is the correct doctrine applying to cases where a defense of fraud is sought to be maintained against a written obligation signed by the party to be charged therewith. This phase of the law is fully discussed and the cases reviewed in Bank v. Reid, 86 Kan. 245, 120 Pac. 339. Counsel for plaintiff called the trial court's attention to this legal principle before the jury were instructed, and also on the motion for a new trial. Herrald v. Paris, 89 Kan. 131, 130 Pac. 684. The decisions in Hockett v. Earl, 89 Kan. 733, 133 Pac. 852, and Hewey v. Fouts, 91 Kan. 680, 139 Pac. 407, did not intend to modify the general and salutary rule that the consequences attaching to written obligations are not to be lightly sworn away by parol testimony. The terms of the redelivery bond were simple and easily understood. According to defendant's evidence pertaining to what plaintiff's attorney said to him in explaining the nature and terms of the bond, the most that could be said is that the explanation was a little crude and incomplete. There was not much more to the obligation than plaintiff's attorney explained to him. There was no showing that the defendant bondsman made even the slightest attempt to see that the terms of the bond—even so far as he did understand them—were complied with. So far as we can discern from the record, the defendant made default on the bond, even to the extent he intended to be bound. The instruction given did not correctly define the extent of the burden devolving on the defendant before he could defeat his written obligation, and this court is in serious doubt about the justice of the net result.

Therefore the judgment is reversed, and a new trial awarded.

JOHNSTON, C. J., and BURCH, MASON, WEST, and MARSHALL, JJ., concurring.

PORTER, J., concurring specially, holds that, on the defendant's own evidence, the statement of plaintiff's attorney was in substantial accord with the simple terms of the bond, that defendant established no defense, and that judgment should be ordered for plaintiff.

MARKS v. FIRST NAT. BANK OF ROSEBURG.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. June 19, 1917.)

1. Appeal and Error 🔑237(5) — Reservation of Grounds for Review.

Where plaintiff made no motion for a directed verdict and did not otherwise raise in the lower court the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict for defendant, the appellate court will not review the sufficiency thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1302.]

2. Appeal and Error 🔑181 — Questions Not Raised Below—Review.

In the absence of some action in the lower court raising and reserving other questions, review is limited to jurisdictional questions and the sufficiency of the allegations of the complaint; Const. Amend. art. 7, § 3 (see Laws 1911, p. 7), not abrogating this statutory rule of appellate procedure.

3. Banks and Banking 🔑154(7) — Recovery of Deposit—Assignment.

In an action by plaintiff in his own behalf and as assignee of three of his relatives to recover from defendant bank an alleged balance of their deposit, exclusion of check drawn by a relative in favor of plaintiff was proper in view of L. O. L. § 6022, providing that a check is not an assignment of the deposit to the payee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 522-525.]

4. Banks and Banking 🔑154(3)—Deposit —Action—Waiver of Demand.

Where defendant bank denied its liability, no demand was necessary in an action to recover an alleged deposit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 508-511.]

Department 1. Appeal from Circuit Court, Douglas County; G. F. Skipworth, Judge.

Action by H. P. Marks against the First National Bank of Roseburg. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

This is an action brought by plaintiff on his own behalf and as assignee of three of his relatives, to recover alleged balances of their deposits with the defendant. The answer denies the material allegations of the complaint and alleges affirmatively that the deposits claimed had been withdrawn from the bank by T. R. Sheridan, pursuant to authority given him by plaintiff and his assignors. The answer also sets up the defense of account stated. Issue was joined on the affirmative allegations of the answer, and the cause was tried before a jury which found for the defendant. Judgment was entered on this verdict, and plaintiff appeals.

George Jones, of Roseburg (John T. Long, of Roseburg, on the brief) for appellant. O. P. Coshow, of Roseburg, for respondent.

McCAMANT, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] There are but three assignments of error. The one most insisted on is the entry of judgment for the defendant, plaintiff insisting that there is no evidence to support the verdict. Plaintiff made no motion for a directed verdict, nor did he otherwise raise in the lower court the question on which he now relies. It has been repeatedly held that the jurisdiction of this court is appellate and its province is to correct the errors of the circuit court. If the circuit court has committed no error, this court cannot reverse its judgment. In the absence of some ruling in the circuit court on the question relied on, there is nothing on which error can be predicated. Shmit v. Day, 27 Or. 110, 116, 39 Pac. 870; United States Mortgage Co. v. Marquam, 41 Or. 391, 405, 69 Pac. 37, 41; Stoddard Lumber Co. v. Oregon-Washington Co., 165 Pac. 363, decided May 29, 1917.

[2] The only exceptions to this rule are jurisdictional questions and insufficiency of the allegations of the complaint. Shmit v. Day, 27 Or. 110, 116, 117, 39 Pac. 870. It has been expressly held that this court will not consider the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict in the absence of some action in the circuit court raising and reserving the question. Shmit v. Day, 27 Or. 110, 116, 39 Pac. 870; Nunn v. Bird, 36 Or. 515, 520, 59 Pac. 808. A different rule would be unjust to the adverse party and unfair to the trial court. It often happens that the evidence is insufficient in some respect which can be readily supplied. In such case, it is within the discretion of the trial court to open up the case and receive the missing evidence. A litigant should not be denied the benefit of such procedure by a rule which permits an appellant to contend in this court for the first time that the evidence of his adversary is insufficient to support a verdict.

It is contended that the above rule has been modified by the amendment to article 7 of the Constitution, adopted in 1910 (Laws 1911, p. 7). Section 3 of the amended article authorizes this court to modify a judgment in certain cases, but it does not abrogate the salutary rule of appellate procedure hereinbefore set out.

[3] Error is also assigned on the exclusion by the lower court of a check drawn by E. C. Marks in favor of plaintiff. The check was offered to prove the assignment to plaintiff of the cause of action alleged in the second count of the complaint. A check is not an assignment of the deposit to the payee. L. O. L. § 6022; United States National Bank v. First Trust Bank, 60 Or. 266, 272, 119 Pac. 343. The evidence offered was therefore immaterial and was properly excluded.

[4] Plaintiff testified on cross-examination that he made several demands on Sheridan for his money. On redirect he was asked:

> "Were you making demand upon Mr. Sheridan, or were you dealing with Mr. Sheridan as an individual or as president of the bank?"

On objection by the defendant, the court excluded the testimony sought to be elicited.

We think that the ruling was right. Where, as in this case, a bank disputes its liability to a depositor, no demand is necessary to support the depositor's action. First National Bank v. Peck, 180 Ind. 649, 659, 103 N. E. 643; Pratt v. Union National Bank, 79 N. J. Law, 117, 120, 75 Atl. 313; Holden v. Farmers' National Bank, 77 N. H. 535, 538, 93 Atl. 1040, L. R. A. 1915E, 309; Donijanovic v. Hartman, 169 Mo. App. 204, 211, 152 S. W. 424. It appeared that the demands made on Mr. Sheridan were by letter, and plaintiff testified that the letters were addressed simply to T. R. Sheridan. What was in plaintiff's mind as to the capacity in which he addressed Mr. Sheridan was clearly not evidence. Furthermore, it appeared that plaintiff demanded his alleged deposit from S. A. Sanford, cashier of the defendant. This was sufficient if a demand had been necessary.

We find no error, and the judgment is affirmed.

HOLDEN et ux. v. A. F. COATS LUMBER CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. June 19, 1917.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES 🔑179(3)—FLOODING LAND—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In an action for damages caused by changing the channel of a river by digging a ditch across the open end of a horseshoe bend and flooding plaintiffs' land, evidence that the stockholders of both the defendant corporations were identical and that their subscriptions in each corporation were in exact proportion, and that the secretary of both corporations was identical, and that the manager of the defendant lumber corporation was a director of the defendant boom corporation, and was active in negotiations whereby it was sought to obtain plaintiffs' consent to the digging of the ditch, and that the foreman of the actual work of digging the ditch was an employé of the lumber corporation and received his pay from it, and that the boom corporation derived the funds with which to carry on its work from the heaviest stockholder in the lumber corporation and from the lumber corporation, without other evidence of the debts than promissory notes and open account, and that the boom corporation had not handled any logs other than those belonging to the lumber corporation, was admissible as tending to prove the liability of the lumber corporation for acts of the boom corporation in digging the ditch.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 249, 263.]

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT 🔑24—EXISTENCE OF AGENCY—JURY QUESTION.

Evidence held to warrant submission to the jury of the question whether defendant boom corporation which dug the ditch was the agent of the defendant lumber corporation in doing so.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 722, 723.]

3. TRIAL 🔑62(3)—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—DISCRETION OF COURT.

The court did not abuse its discretion in permitting the plaintiffs to testify upon rebuttal in regard to the nature and extent of the damage done by the high water, where it appears that this evidence goes to meet unexpected evidence offered by defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 150.]

In Banc. Appeal from Circuit Court, Tillamook County; George R. Bagley, Judge.

Action by A. E. Holden and wife against the A. F. Coats Lumber Company and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Plaintiffs are the owners of 30 acres of farming land in Tillamook county through which the Tillamook river flows, and in its course through the land it makes what may be called a horseshoe bend. The substance of the complaint is that the two defendant corporations wrongfully and without plaintiffs' consent entered upon their land and changed the channel of the river by digging a ditch across the open end of the horseshoe bend and dumping large quantities of earth and rock into the bed of the stream, thereby flooding their land and washing away the soil to their damage in the sum of $2,500. The A. F. Coats Lumber Company, answering separately, denied the allegations of the complaint. The Coats Driving & Boom Company in its answer admits the digging of the ditch, but denies that it acted wrongfully or without the consent of the plaintiffs, and denies that injury resulted therefrom. It then alleges that the ditch was dug with the consent and approval of plaintiffs, and was, in fact, an actual benefit and protection to plaintiffs' land, that the ditch was dug in a careful manner, of sufficient capacity to provide for carrying the ordinary flow of the river, but that during the winter seasons of 1915 and 1916 an unusual and extraordinary flow of water occurred in the river, and extraordinary storms and rainfall ensued, raising the waters of the stream to an unusual height, and that, if plaintiffs' land was flooded and damaged, it was not because of any act of defendants, but because of the unusual floods. A reply being filed, a trial was had, resulting in a verdict and judgment for plaintiffs in the sum of $585, from which defendants appeal.

Veazie, McCourt & Veazie, of Portland, and H. T. Botts, of Tillamook, for appellants. S. S. Johnson, of Tillamook, for respondents.

BENSON, J. (after stating the facts as above). There is a large number of assignments of error, but they may be logically discussed in two groups: Objections to the admissibility of certain evidence; and objections to certain instructions to the jury based upon such evidence.

[1, 2] The theory upon which plaintiffs presented their case was that the boom company was the creature of the lumber company, and simply an instrument in its hands, whereby it performed some of its desired ends. It is conceded that the actual work which resulted in the alleged injury was performed by the boom company. Upon the other hand, the defendants insisted that the lumber company could not in any event be held liable for a tort of the other corporation. In support of their contention the plaintiffs called as a witness one B. W. Miller, who testified that he was secretary of both corporations; that during the year 1915 "the Coats Driving & Boom Company was a logging corporation putting in logs to supply the A. F. Coats Lumber Company's mill in Tillamook." This witness also used the following language:

> "The A. F. Coats Lumber Company contemplated that they would have to have logs to run their mill, and in order to do that they bought a certain tract of timber at the head of Buley creek, and it was deemed the most practical way to get them out to have a company that would attend to that part of the work of driving and booming the logs."

The articles of incorporation of both companies were offered in evidence, from which it appears that the lumber company had a capitalization of $50,000 and the boom company a capital stock of $2,000. The minutes of the first meetings of both organizations were introduced, from which it appears that the stockholders of both were identical, and that their subscriptions of stock in the smaller company were in exact proportion to their holdings in the larger. It further appears from the evidence that O. A. Shultz, manager of the lumber company, and a director of the boom company, was active in the negotiations whereby it was sought to obtain plaintiff's consent to the digging of the ditch; that one Peter Jackson, a foreman in the actual work of digging the ditch, was an employé of the lumber company and received his pay from it; that the boom company derived the funds with which to carry on its work, including some miles of logging railroad and equipment, from A. F. Coats, the heaviest stockholder in the lumber company, and from the lumber company itself, without other evidence of debt than promissory notes and open account; and that the boom company had not handled any logs other than those belonging to the lumber company. All of this evidence was admitted over the strenuous objection that none of it tended to prove any liability upon the part of the lumber company. With this contention we cannot agree. It is probably true that no one item thereof is sufficient evidence upon which to base a verdict, but each detail certainly constitutes a circumstance throwing light upon the situation, and when combined they make a sufficient record to justify submission of the question to the jury.

The objections to the instructions, with a single exception, are predicated upon the admissibility of the evidence already discussed, so we need not consider them further.

One instruction, however, is based upon the theory that there was evidence that the earth and rock were dumped into the river by one or both of the defendants; whereas the defendants insist that there is a failure of proof in this respect. An examination of the bill of exceptions discloses abundant evidence that it was done by the boom company in the progress of its work, and therefore the instruction was not erroneous.

[3] It is also urged that the court erred in permitting the plaintiff A. E. Holden, to testify upon rebuttal in regard to the nature and extent of the damage done by the high water, but an examination of the record discloses that this evidence goes to meet unexpected evidence offered by defendants, and, in our judgment, the court did not abuse its discretion in permitting it.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

(84 Or. 583)

LINDSTROM v. NATIONAL LIFE INS. CO. OF UNITED STATES.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. June 19, 1917.)

1. INSURANCE 🔑379(4)—AVOIDANCE—ESTOPPEL—PHYSICIAN'S FALSE ANSWERS IN APPLICATION.

If an applicant for life insurance makes truthful statements to medical examiner, who, without applicant's knowledge, changes answers to questions in application to make it appear that insured is a safe risk, insurer will be liable on the policy issued in consequence of the deceit of its agent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1011–1015.]

2. INSURANCE 🔑641(1)—ACTION ON POLICY—REPLY—KNOWLEDGE OF FALSE STATEMENTS IN APPLICATION—"COLLUSION."

In action on a life policy, reply stating that insured signed application without "collusion" with medical examiner did not allege insured's lack of knowledge of physician's statements therein, the word "collusion" meaning a secret agreement and co-operation for a fraudulent or deceitful purpose; a playing into each other's hands; deceit; fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1554, 1626, 1628, 1629.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Collusion.]

3. INSURANCE 🔑665(3)—ACTION ON POLICY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—KNOWLEDGE OF FALSE STATEMENTS IN APPLICATION.

In an action on life policy evidence held to justify inference that insured truthfully answered medical examiner's questions, and the latter changed answers in application without insured's knowledge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1711–1716.]

4. PLEADING 🔑433(7)—"AIDER BY VERDICT."

The absence from a written statement of facts constituting a cause of action or defense of a material averment will not be supplied by a verdict, but such finding will cure a defective statement in a pleading, the principle of the rule being that, where pleading is sufficiently general to comprehend matter so essential to be proved that, had it not been given in evidence, the jury could not have found the verdict, the want of the statement of such matter in express terms will be cured by the verdict, because evidence of the fact would be the same whether the allegation is complete or imperfect; but, where a material allegation is wholly omitted, it cannot be presumed that any evidence referring to it was offered on the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 1464.]

5. PLEADING 🔑436—AIDER BY VERDICT—ACTION ON LIFE POLICY.

In action on a life policy, where reply stated that medical examiner's misstatements in application were made without "collusion" instead of that they were made without insured's knowledge, a verdict for plaintiff cured the imperfection, since, if the matter had been called to the attention of the trial court, an amendment would probably have been allowed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 1482, 1483.]

6. FRAUD 🔑41—ALLEGATIONS IN GENERAL.

A pleading alleging fraud must aver falsity of representations, defendant's knowledge thereof, that they were made with intent to defraud, and that the party seeking relief relied thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 36, 37.]

7. INSURANCE 🔑641(1)—ACTION ON POLICY—SUFFICIENCY OF REPLY — FRAUD INDUCING RELEASE.

In action on life policy the reply was insufficient to show that beneficiary was fraudulently induced to execute alleged release, where it failed to charge that insurer knew falsity of representations, or that they were recklessly made, or that they were made with intent to deceive.
